TO THE

THE INTRODUCTION.

IN the previous Account, which I would lay before the Reader of this Work, I ſhall confine my ſelf to the following Particulars: The Occaſion; the Method and Stile of it; the Principles upon which I proceed; the Materials, wherewith I have been furniſhed; and the Defects relating to it, which, I am ſenſible, are ſtill to be ſupplied.

1. It has been often reckoned among the Things that are wanting in our Hiſtorical Libraries, that none of our Hiſtorians have undertaken to write a Life full of ſo many and great Events, as that of Cardinal Wolſey, in any Degree of Extent proportioned to the Number or Importance of them. As there never was perhaps any Perſon in the World, below a Crowned Head, who lived in greater Splendour, neither has any other Life of a Subject, for the Space of Twenty Years, afforded a more wide or memorable Scene of Action. To write his Story, during that Period, not to mention the general Affairs of Europe wherewith it is neceſſarily connected, would be, in Effect, to exhibit to the Reader the brighteſt Part of the Reign of Henry the Eighth; whom few of our Monarchs have exceeded in Riches, Power, or Dignity; and who, with all his perſonal Failures, and political Errors, muſt ſtill be numbered among the greateſt Sovereign Princes. If I have ſometimes, in any occaſional Character of him, advanced certain true, but which may appear more bold, Reflections, it was done purely for the Sake of Truth; In Regard to which, it is often highly requiſite, the very Vices of Princes, living, or deceaſed, ſhould be mentioned by Way of Caution to ſucceeding Princes; provided this be done with all the Tenderneſs and Decency, that the Nature and Deſign of ſuch a Liberty, in mentioning them, will poſſibly admit. A Liberty, of abſolute Neceſſity indeed, to render Hiſtory, in the principal Characters of it, more uſeful to the World: Future Ages, being leſs intereſted in former Tranſactions, will make a Judgement of them, not according to the partial Regards, whereby Truth had ſometime been oppreſſed, or Juſtice over-ruled, by

ſuperior Force; but according to the naked Evidence, and true Reaſon of Things. For where People are not perſonally affected, or altogether corrupt, they will ever, out of a natural Propenſity, when particular Reaſons of Intereſt and Dependency ſhall ceaſe, declare on the Side of Virtue and Honour. Yet if the Love of Truth has, at any Time, conſtrained me to mention certain Errors relating to the Conduct of Henry the Eighth; Beſides what has been alledged to ſupport my Claim to a reaſonable Privilege common to all Hiſtorians, I am able to juſtify my ſelf, in reſpect to this very Caſe, by the Authority of a great Prelate; to whom we owe the celebrated Hiſtory of the Reformation: Yet in which there are as free and plain Truths, if not expreſſed with more Freedom and Plainneſs, than any, wherewith I apprehend my ſelf juſtly chargeable in this Work; the learned Hiſtorian, ſpeaking concerning the Innovations with Reſpect to Religion, which had been introduced under the Reign of that Prince, hath theſe Words: "In the whole Proceſs "of theſe Changes, the King's Deſign ſeems to have been to worry the "Court of Rome, and to cudgel the Pope into a Compliance with "what he deſired." He afterwards repreſents his Majeſty as addicted to the moſt extravagant Opinions of the Romiſh Church, and exhibits a Catalogue of his Vices and Cruelties, but without mentioning the Præmunire among them. He obſerves, indeed, that Falſehood was a Vice wherewith this King could not be charged; And yet it happens, that one of the moſt notorious Inſtances of this Vice, wherewith he could ſtand chargeable, is charged upon him by this learned Prelate himſelf; where he ſays, That the King took Advantage from ſome Eruptions in the North, to break the Indemnity, he had before proclaimed to thoſe in the Rebellion; even tho' they could not be found guilty of thoſe ſecond Diſorders. If this was not Falſehood, except the learned Hiſtorian would confine the Idea of Falſehood to Matters of private Promiſe or Contract, and not to Breach of publick Faith, the Word has loſt its proper and genuine Signification. This Prince is farther repreſented, by the ſame Hand, as boyſterous and naturally impatient; as ſubject to Vanity, and a high Conceit of his Learning and Wiſdom; and as one of the moſt uncounſellable Perſons in the World. Several of theſe Expreſſions are ſtronger and more free, than any, which I have employed. And if I am not ſo happy, as this celebrated Hiſtorian may appear to be, in an elegant and pure Stile, I have at leaſt endeavoured to expreſs my ſelf in as ſoft and diſtant Terms, whenever I have had Occaſion to mention any irregular Character, or unjuſt Action.

But I return, from theſe incidental Reflections, to obſerve the Motives, upon which I was more eſpecially induced to write the Life of Cardinal Wolſey; The principal of which, for I ſhall not here deſcend to enumerate them all, were, Firſt, his great Encouragement of Learning; not only as he was a Patron in general to Men of any Diſtinction in the learned World, but in particular (tho' Cambridge ſhared in the Effects of his Favour and Beneficence) to the Univerſity of Oxford; where, beſides his more publick Benefactions, he laid the Foundation of a Work, which, had it been perfected and continued upon his Plan, would have exceeded any Work of the ſame Kind, that Hiſtory records, ſince the Foundation of the World: And which, notwithſtanding the Depredations it has ſuffered, ſtill retains many ſenſible Marks of its primitive Grandeur, and Magnificence. Neither may it be improper here to mention his other College of Ipſwich, which fell with him; and the College of Phyſicians in London; the Preamble to which recites, the Erection of it was principally owing to the Cardinal's Advice. To which I ſhall only add, that he had alſo deſigned to found a Society for the Canon and civil Laws. Which, had he proceeded to finiſh it, would, we may juſtly preſume, have diſcovered that Greatneſs and Extent of Mind, wherewith all his other Deſigns were formed and executed. Secondly, a Deſire of doing Juſtice to his injured Memory. There have been few Perſons, if any, to whom Mankind has been obliged for any conſiderable Benefactions; that have met with ſuch ungrateful Uſage in Return of them, as Cardinal Wolſey. It may be queſtioned whether, in all the Hiſtories that are extant, a like Inſtance can be found, in any Nation, of ſo general a Prejudice, as that under which his Name has ſuffered? It will therefore naturally be expected, that ſome Account ſhould be given of ſo uncommon a Caſe; and the moſt probable Grounds, into which I am able to reſolve it, are, that He had the Misfortune to diſoblige, or rather highly to provoke the two contending Parties into which, during the laſt Period of his Adminiſtration, the Kingdom was very much divided: So that the Hiſtorians, on both Sides, have in general tranſmitted his Name down to Poſterity, with equal Rancour, and Bigotry to the Party, which they profeſſed to eſpouſe. Thoſe of the Romiſh Perſuaſion hated him, as he had promoted the Divorce with much Zeal and Aſſiduity; and on Account of his diſſolving ſeveral Monaſteries, though with a Deſign of applying them to more beneficial Uſes. And ſeveral of the Clergy, both regular and ſecular were irritated againſt him for his Endeavours, to introduce a more ſtrict and regular Diſcipline among them. The Reformed, on the other Hand, were his Enemies for adhering ſtrictly to the Doctrine and Communion of the Church of Rome; for his oppoſing the Growth of Lutheraniſm at home, and abroad; eſpecially the capricious and tumultuous Proceedings of the Anabaptiſts, and of other Viſionaries in Germany. However deſirous he was to reform ſcandalous Diſorders and Irregularities in the eccleſiaſtical State, yet he ever ſtrenuouſly aſſerted both the Principles and the Hierarchy, which were then eſtabliſhed by the ſupreme eccleſiaſtical, and civil Authority.

Now if it be ſo difficult in certain Caſes to diſcover the true Characters of Men, in a publick Scene of Life, with whom we have been contemporary: If Flattery doth ſo diſguiſe human Actions, that the Names of Virtue and Vice, when applied to them, are not only confounded, but really transferred: If the very Senſes of Men are ſo groſsly impoſed upon, that the moſt vile and infamous Facts are repreſented to publick View under bright and favourable Colours, while thoſe founded on real Virtue and Merit are openly traduced: If the Rage and Artifice of Faction have Power to transform Perſons and Things, in ſuch a Manner, that even they, who look on, are not always able to diſcover the Illuſion, or have ſome common Intereſt in promoting it: It is leſs Matter of Surpriſe, if we cannot readily come at the true Character of a Perſon, ſince whoſe Birth above two hundred Years have paſſed; and whom, almoſt all our Hiſtorians, however oppoſite and divided on other Accounts, have yet agreed to aſperſe and depretiate. It happens, notwithſtanding, there are remaining certain authentick Monuments, relating to him, which do not depend on the Credit of either Party; and, eſpecially, in the Archives of the Univerſity of Oxford, which will give him a greater Name in future Ages, than if Statues had been erected to him, thro' all Parts of the Kingdom, or a thouſand different Medals been ſtruck in Honour to his Memory.

Thirdly, A Deſire of reſolving the Grounds of the Reformation, into a regular, and eccleſiaſtical Method of Procedure; according to the primitive Conſtitution, and true Rights of the chriſtian Church; and to the End, I might ſay ſomething towards obviating that moſt vile and abſurd Imputation caſt upon us by the Papiſts; as if the reformed Religion, introduced at the Reformation, had been wholly Parliamentary: Or, as if we had proceeded towards introducing it, with certain German, and other foreign Sectaries, without any Authority, either from God or Man.

2. In Reſpect to the Method, I have divided my Work into three Parts, according to the three moſt conſiderable Periods, proper to give us an Account of the Cardinal's Riſe; his Adminiſtration; of the Occaſion and Circumſtances of his Fall. The Memoirs, wherewith I have been ſupplied relating to his private Life, have not enabled me to obſerve an exact Order of Time, under that Partition of it. But from the Time of his being made Archbiſhop of York, I have for the moſt part at the Head of the ſeveral Chapters referred to the Year or the Years, wherein the Facts happened, which are mentioned in them. Yet, that I might not too much confound civil and eccleſiaſtical Affairs, but ſeverally purſue the Connection of them, 'till they were brought to ſome proper Iſſue, I have been ſometimes obliged to depart from the Rules of a ſtrict chronological Order.

3. What

3. What I have principally proposed in Reference to my Stile, is Perspicuity. If in any Place I am not sufficiently clear, this Defect is owing either to the Want of proper Terms in the English Language, or to an Incapacity in my self of properly applying them. Strong and significant as that Language, in general, is, the Expressions in it are sometimes very æquivocal and indeterminate; and even many of those, which are of most common Use. To avoid Ambiguity, which is justly supposed one of the greatest Faults in Writing or Speaking, I apprehended it preferable to use more Words, tho' they would lengthen the Period, and, in some Measure, render the Cadence of it, on that Account less agreeable. However, I had rather incur any Censure, which may simply respect my Manner of Expression, than that of Obscurity. Yet, I have also had some Regard to the Purity of my Diction. And in Order to preserve it, have been particularly careful not to introduce any foreign Words, where there was not an absolute Necessity, which rarely happens, of importing them. For tho' our Language is rather strong, than copious, yet except in Relation to technical Terms, in which Respect, all Languages are more or less defective, there is scarce any Thing, which may not be expressed in English, by those, who know the Force and Beauty of that Tongue, not only with Vigour and Propreiety, but with a certain Degree of Delicacy. So that if it were cultivated with the same Care, and under the like Influence, as that of a neighbouring Kingdom hath been, there is Reason to believe, it might be rendered much more expressive, and, at the same Time, not less beautiful. And therefore in an Age, wherein Learning is so much encouraged, and the proper and publick Rewards of it are only conferred on learned Men of the first Distinction; it might well become the Character of some publick Spirit, that proper Persons should be employed to compose an English Grammar, to which their Number and Capacity would give a more authentick Sanction. I shall only add, upon this Article, that besides my Care, in Reference to those general Characters of Stile, I have endeavoured, in the following Work, to express my self according to that Stile, which is properly Historical. For a sensible Difference in the Manner of Expression, ought always to be observed, according to the Diversity of the subject Matter, upon which an Author proposeth to treat. But how I have conformed to this Rule, on the present or on any other Occasion, must be submitted to the Judgement of my Readers.

4. The Principles, upon which I proceed, may in general be reduced under the Heads of Morality, or Religion. For tho' several political Reflections, will naturally be expected to occur in a Work of this Nature, and my Readers will not find themselves, in that Respect, wholly disappointed; yet, it is readily acknowledged, all my Reflections are founded,

founded, ſuch as they are, upon the true Maxims of moral Virtue, or what I really apprehended to be ſo. I am ſenſible the Meaſures which have generally obtained in the Courts of Princes, and ſometimes in the Courts of chriſtian Princes, are not to be too ſtrictly examined by theſe Maxims. But ſince Truth is not to be tried by Precedents, but Precedents by Truth; I am not at all diſcouraged from aſſerting, as I have more than once occaſionally done in this Hiſtory, that there can be no political Wiſdom ſeparate from the ſtated Meaſures of Piety, Juſtice, and Honour: And that all Attempts contrary to thoſe Meaſures, to ſay nothing of the natural Effects, which in the ordinary Courſe and Event of Things are obſerved to attend them, do, in a ſpecial Manner, provoke God Almighty to viſit ſuch Bodies politick, as may have Recourſe to them, by ſome ſevere providential Judgement.

It is neceſſary, I ſhould ſupport ſo bold an Aſſertion, and wherewith ſeveral Nations may, poſſibly, be affected, by ſome plain, clear, and convincing Reaſons; And I ſhall produce one; which I might challenge all the Politicians, upon Earth, to anſwer.

God deſigned Man for ſocial Life; and has accordingly endowed him with Diſpoſitions and Capacities proper to that End. They, who are divided in Opinion concerning the original Form of civil Government, or the Meaſures of Obedience due to civil Governours; are yet generally agreed, that civil Government is the Ordinance of God, appointed for the common Good, and Benefit of Mankind. Upon this Conceſſion I argue, that when Men have Recourſe to ſinful Meaſures, on any Account, to ſerve ſome ſuppoſed Intereſt of civil Society, they do in Effect declare, That God cannot attain his End in appointing ſuch Society, without employing thoſe Means and Inſtruments, which operate directly in Breach of his Laws: Which is to ſay (than which ſcarce any Thing more blaſphemous can be ſaid) that God, in order to accompliſh one of his moſt excellent and beneficial Deſigns, hath need of the ſinful Man; In ſhort, that it may be convenient, in certain Caſes towards rectifying the Defects, and ſerving the Ends of his Government more effectually, to take Arms and rebel againſt him, under an Umbrage of his own Authority.

God indeed does not always viſibly interpoſe, at preſent, to puniſh ſuch open Defiance of his Power and Soveraignty. This is an Argument that he is patient; but no Argument, that he will always be provoked; or that his abuſed Lenity will not end, one Time or other, even in this Life, (which is the only Scene of Reward or Puniſhment to political Bodies) in a Vengeance ſo much more terrible and ſevere.

Not

Not only my Political, but my Reflections, in general, are founded upon the Principles of Morality; and tend in one Degree or other to eſtabliſh them. It has been the Opinion of ſome Perſons, that an Hiſtorian hath nothing to do, but to relate Matters of Fact well choſen, in a good Method, and proper Stile. Without enquiring, what Grounds of Succeſs an Hiſtory might poſſibly have, which ſhould proceed intirely upon that Plan, it is readily acknowledged, I have not confined my ſelf to it. I was rather willing, towards advancing the Cauſe of Virtue, ſometimes to take an Occaſion of going a little out of my Way: And, provided, I might conduct my Reader, by any uſeful Digreſſion, to the Diſcovery of ſome moral Truth, I have made my Courſe, after the Manner of thoſe Rivers, whoſe Channels are continually winding.

The principal End of Hiſtory is to inſtruct; and this End may, in a Senſe, be attained by a bare Recital of Facts, upon which every Reader is at Liberty to draw proper Inferences, for his own Uſe. But becauſe there is ſo great a Difference in the Capacities of Men; and they, who have a competent Strength, do yet very often want Attention and Liberty of Mind: It may be of good Service, if an Author ſometimes deſcends, to make thoſe Improvements, (if the ſubject Matter may afford a juſt Occaſion for them) which his Readers are, in one Reſpect or other, leſs qualified to make for themſelves. I will add, that as an Author is preſumed to have conſidered the Facts, which he relates, more particularly, with the true Motives, the proper Tendency, and the ſeveral Conſequences of them: He may, for the ſame Reaſon, be thought capable of raiſing certain occaſional Obſervations upon them, which might not ſo readily have occurred, even to Perſons of much ſuperior Capacity in all other Reſpects.

Beſides the Reaſon of the Thing for intermixing both political and moral Reflections with hiſtorical Facts; Many of the moſt celebrated Hiſtorians have taken this Method: And it may be queſtioned, whether there is one Hiſtorian extant in the World, of any Conſideration or Authority, in whom we may not diſcover ſeveral Exemplifications of it?

And what indeed can be a more proper Method of inſtructing Men, if Inſtruction is really the main End of Hiſtory, than by drawing for their Uſe, the Rules of Life, from ſuch Characters or Events as have really happened in Life? Even fabulous Hiſtories have been publiſhed upon a View of promoting moral Virtue, and the common Duties and Intereſts of ſocial Life, with good Succeſs. But the Impreſſion from

Facts

Facts, that have really occurred, and from former living Examples, especially of great and eminent Persons, who are the principal Subjects of History, must necessarily operate, when well and seasonably applied, with much greater Force.

Yet if any Person will still prefer a simple and dry Narrative of Facts as more agreeable to the strict critical Rules of writing History, I would not be thought to prescribe to Him. He is under no Necessity, after this Premonition, of proceeding to read a Work, which he must necessarily be obliged to condemn.

With Respect to the Principles of Religion, I have industriously avoided all Appearances of dogmatising, whenever I have had Occasion to mention such controverted Points, which do not directly, or by necessary Consequence, affect the Church, considered as a Society. But under that Notion of it, I apprehended a more free and open Declaration of those Principles, without which the ecclesiastical State cannot subsist, absolutely necessary. For how great Indulgence soever may be granted to Men in respect of speculative Opinions or Doctrines, which do not visibly tend to destroy Peace and Order in the christian Society; yet if we argue from the Design of God in founding that Society, except the Rules of preserving Peace and Order in it are sufficiently ascertained, this Consequence, which by no Means ought to be admitted, will follow; that God, in his last Revelation of his Will to Mankind, has proposed an End, which he has not afforded to them any competent or sufficient Means of attaining.

What I here principally intend may perhaps appear in a stronger Light, if applied to the Nature and Constitution of civil Communities. As to such Opinions of Men, wherewith the Rights and Interests of the State are not affected, they are generally at Liberty to follow and profess their private Opinion. Nay Men are every Day permitted to debate the Sense of the Laws in Force, and to divide in their Opinion concerning it, before the proper Judges of the Laws, and sometimes before the Legislature it self. But should any Number of Men pretend to deny the Title of the Prince, the Jurisdiction of the Court, or the Legality of the Constitution it self; and should thereupon openly contend, that some other Form of Government ought to be introduced, and then actually endeavour to introduce it: No Society, upon Earth, could long or regularly subsist, that should grant a Toleration to those, who should so openly contemn and oppose the Authority of it. In short, no Number of Men ever were, or ever will be acknowledged as true Members of any regular Society, who pretend to govern themselves independently of it; or in Opposition to the Authority of those, who have a Right to preſide in it. Thus with reſpect to the ſeveral Doctrines of Religion, Chriſtians, who err in the Simplicity of their Hearts, may innocently divide in Opinion: But they have not, neither is it reaſonable they ſhould have, the ſame Liberty, with reſpect to the Terms of Communion; or to thoſe ſocial Duties, which are abſolutely neceſſary to preſerve the Peace, and Order of the chriſtian Community. Otherways the Church cannot be, what the Prophet has repreſented it; The City, which Men call the Perfection of Beauty, the Joy of the whole Earth.

This gives us an Idea of the Church worthy of his Wiſdom and Goodneſs, by whom it was founded. An Idea agreeable to thoſe Sentiments of it, which we find in all the learned and genuine Members of the Church of England, from the Time of the Reformation. And by adhering to which great Numbers of Proſelytes have been continually made to it from Popery. But conſidering certain ſtrange and capricious Notions lately advanced, which repreſent the Church not as a City at Unity with it ſelf, but as a Kingdom divided againſt it ſelf, it is leſs Matter of Surpriſe, that ſo many Converſions have been made to Popery; even under all the Pains and Penalties, and Diſqualifications, inflicted upon Perſons of that Communion. Whether it be from a Pretence, that Men will chuſe to be of a bad Religion, rather than of no Religion; and ſooner unite themſelves to a Society, where Order and Diſcipline are maintained by a ſtated Authority; than to a Society, if it be poſſible to form any regular Notion of ſuch a Society, which is governed by no Authority? Without entering into a Diſcuſſion of ſuch abſtruſe Notions, I ſatisfy my ſelf in ſuperſtructing, according to my mean Abilities, upon the Foundation which the Apoſtle has laid; where he declares, that God is a God of Peace, and not of Confuſion, in all the Churches of the Saints. And He, who knows how to deduce a Train of juſt Conſequences from this plain Truth, may eaſily anſwer, and in a narrow Compaſs, the numerous Volumes, that have been written, with a Deſign of ſubverting all eccleſiaſtical Order.

In ſpeaking of the Authority, wherewith the Church of Chriſt upon Earth is veſted, I have thought it incumbent on me to aſſert the Dignity, and eſpecially the Succeſſion of the chriſtian Prieſthood. For towards the Support of any ſtanding Society, it is principally requiſite, that they who are to adminiſter and officiate in it, ſhould ſucceed regularly to their Charge. And, therefore, all wiſe Governments, to prevent thoſe Diſorders, which may happen, in Caſe of a controverted Title, or any tumultuary Election, have been particularly careful to determine the Method of Succeſſion; and to ſpecify what Perſons are to ſucceed, and according to what proper Qualifications. This is juſtly conſidered as a Point of the higheſt Wiſdom and Importance in all human Conſtitutions. And yet the all-wiſe God is profanely repreſented, as having founded a Society, wherein he hath deſigned certain ſelect Perſons ſhould adminiſter and officiate; and at the ſame Time, to have made no certain Appointment, what Perſons ſhould be authorized to ſucceed, and how their Powers ſhould be conveyed, or by what Hands?

To obviate a Prejudice ſo derogatory to the Honour and Wiſdom of God, I have in Particular aſſerted the Rights of the epiſcopal Order; thoſe Rights, which the Clergy ought not to give up, or by a criminal and inſidious Silence, to ſuffer, that others ſhould give up, without being found falſe Witneſſes to God.

Yet it has been my conſtant Endeavour to do Juſtice to the Character of all Perſons, without Regard to their private Opinions, true or falſe; or to the Intereſts of any Party civil or religious. I have not concealed the Vices of the Cardinal, where-ever he appeared to be charged with them upon good or ſufficient Grounds. I ſhall rather perhaps, even by ſome of his Enemies, be thought to have done an Injury to his Memory, by repreſenting him as an Uſurper of the Biſhoprick of Tournay, before the Biſhop elect of that Place, was legally or canonically deprived. But if I have ſaid any Thing upon that, or any other Occaſion, derogatory to the juſt Rights of the civil Magiſtrate, with Reſpect to the Deprivation or Election of Biſhops, I ſhall very readily, upon Conviction, acknowledge my Errour. Biſhop Burnet cites a Paſſage with Approbation that may, on this Occaſion, be very properly applied, wherein the Author has delivered himſelf with a Freedom and Spirit, that might have become the Ardor of a primitive Father. Speaking concerning the Concordate made by Francis with Leo the Tenth. He hath the following Words. "By this the Church of France from "being a Queen, became, as Biſhop Gaudeau expreſſes it, a Slave: "And he adds, our Fathers have groaned, and all that love the Or-"der of the Houſe of God will ſtill groan, as long as Elections con-"tinue to be put down; and we muſt needs enter into the Sanctuary "by way of the Court. Theſe Promotions have been always fatal to "the Church. And the Biſhops, that the Court has made, have been "ordinarily the chief Advancers of Schiſm, Hereſies, and of the Op-"preſſion of the Church. One cannot read Nazianzen's Verſe of the "Prelates of his Time, without being ſtruck with Horrour, and forced "to acknowledge, that a ſecular Temper is entirely contrary to the "epiſcopal Spirit. Princes chuſe ſuch Men for that Charge, which "may be their Slaves, and in all Things obſequious to what they pre- cc ſcribe; who may lie at their Feet, and have not ſo much as a cc Thought contrary to their Commands. Introd. to the 3d Vol.

But notwithſtanding any Cenſure, I have freely paſſed upon the Cardinal's Conduct, where there appeared juſt Cauſe of making it, I have endeavoured in ſeveral Inſtances, to vindicate him from ſuch Calumnies, wherewith he hath been unjuſtly traduced by others. And upon this Account, the following Work will perhaps be thought more apologetical than may conſiſt with the Idea of a juſt Hiſtory. But the falſe Judgements, that have been made of the Cardinal by Writers of both Parties, rendered ſuch a Method more neceſſary; and all candid Readers, if they cannot ſtrictly approve, will, for that Reaſon, be more inclined to excuſe it. However I had rather ſuffer Reproach for having offended againſt the Laws of Criticiſm, or becauſe I have gone a little out of my Way from Motives of Humanity and Juſtice, than have the Reputation of Writing a more correct Hiſtory, according to thoſe ſtrict Rules, which ſhould oblige me to reſiſt aud ſtifle thoſe Motives. If I have erred, as to this Particular, my Error has been on the charitable Side, and I will make no farther Apology for it.

In drawing all my other Character, I have conformed to the ſame Rule; and kept to the good natur'd Side, as they call it, where I apprehended there was any Ground for following ſo agreeable an Impulſe. But Truth ought not to be ſacrificed, againſt the plain Evidence of Things, to any Conſiderations whatever. And therefore where I have been obliged, in Regard to it, to relate Facts, or to mention perſonal Qualities, which I ſhould otherways have been inclined to diſſemble or conceal, I have carefully avoided all harſh and ſhocking Expreſſions: In which there is ſomething indeed ſo unſuitable to the Character of an Hiſtorian, who is obliged to have the Manner of a Court continually in his Eye, that they cannot be endured, even when we ſpeak concerning the meaneſt People, or any Facts of ordinary Occurrence. The delicate Ear, and polite Taſte of the Age will not ſuffer them on any Accomnt. But they are no where more inſupportable and unbecoming than in Clergymen, whoſe Profeſſion obligeth them, on all Account, to the ſtricteſt Meaſures of Decency, and who are preſumed, from the Advantages of a learned and ingenuous Education to underſtand the Rules of Writing juſtly, and to judge with Candour. If ſome Writers of this Order, have been at any Time ſo far tranſported beyond the calm and ſedate Temper proper to them, that they have uſed an Aſperity of Stile, accompanied with an Emotion inconſiſtent with ſuch a Temper, this may be aſcribed to a mere Exceſs of Zeal for ſome particular neceſſary Article, for which they thought it incumbent on them to contend more earneſtly. It is however more deſireable, that they Clergy in their Writings would treat all Perſons, and eſpecially one another, with Candour, and the Spirit of Meekneſs. This would be an excellent Means of preventing one Occaſion of an unjuſt Prejudice againſt the Clergy, wherewith we have often known them publickly reproached, as if they, who ſhould be preſumed to have the moſt generous, the moſt open, and extended Views; ſhould yet frequently appear to be acted with more ſelfiſh, mean, and narrow Principles.

If I have been any where miſtaken in relating Matters of Fact, or in forming wrong Conſequences from them, to the Prejudice of Truth, and eſpecially to the Character of any Perſon or Perſons incidentally mentioned by me, I deſire, to aſſure the Reader my Errour hath never proceeded from any formed or ſiniſter Deſign, but from Want of better Information; from Weakneſs or Ignorance; or ſome other Inſtance of human Frailty, to which he may think fit to impute it; rather, than from any Motive in it ſelf really criminal. And having in the firſt Book made an Inſinuation, as if the ignominious Uſage Mr. Wolſey met with from Sir Amias Pawlet, might poſſibly have proceeded from ſome particular Prejudice of that Knight to his Order; tho' this was only a bare and diſtant Suppoſition, yet I readily acknowledge it ought not to have been made, concerning a Perſon, from whoſe general Character I could have no certain Grounds to make it; and whoſe Deſcendents have ſucceſſively had the Reputation of diſtinguiſhing themſelves with a laudable Zeal, for the Rights and Dignity of the ſacerdotal Function.

There is another Miſtake, which tho' it doth not affect the Character of the Perſon, whom my Authorities have mentioned under the Name of Sir John Nefant, yet ought to be rectified. The Name of the Knight here deſigned was Nanfan, a Gentleman of Worceſterſhire, not as I ſuppoſed of Somerſetſhire, his Seat being upon the Borders of Herefordſhire. His Arms as I have been informed by a good Hand, may ſtill be ſeen in the Windows of the Hall of that Seat, and ſeveral of his Deſcendents are now living.

I ſhall always be ready to acknowledge and correct any other Miſtake, wherewith I may be chargeable, either concerning Perſons, Facts, or Principles. Truth, is what I ſeek; what I deſire to prefer, and to which I ſhall never repent either of my having made any Sacrifice, or of expoſing my ſelf to any future Cenſure; which yet I am ſenſible, from the Liberty I have taken in receeding from certain common modern Opinions, I ſhall, with ſome Perſons, be in Danger of incurring. I have endeavoured to confute ſuch Opinons, which, however popular, appeared to me ill founded, without paſſing any uncharitable Cenſure upon thoſe, who adhere to them. If I may, at any Time, be thought to have expreſſed preſſed my ſelf with more Severity againſt particular Perſons, on Account of ſome erroneous Perſuaſion, I ſhall only be ſuſpected to have done it, where a Defence of the ſtanding inviolable Principles of Morality became neceſſary; or the true and ſolid Foundations, upon which alone the civil and eccleſiaſtical State can be eſtabliſhed, were in Danger of being ſubverted. In ſuch Caſes, if in any, a greater Aſperity of Expreſſion, which yet I am not conſcious I have any where uſed, would appear at leaſt more excuſable to thoſe, who have any true Regard for the Intereſts of moral Virtue, of the Common-wealth, or of Religion.

Thirdly, The Materials, wherewith I have been ſupplied. To theſe the Reader will be particularly referred. The greateſt Number of them were taken from the Bodleian and Cottonian Libraries; many of them out of a manuſcript Volume of Letters and Negotiations from that of Yelverton; of which I have had the continual Uſe, by Favour of the Right Honourable the Earl of Suſſex; the Noble Lord, to whom my moſt humble Acknowledgements are made, in the Account annexed, concerning my Deſign in this Work, which was formerly printed. I had alſo, through the Permiſſion and Goodneſs of his Grace the Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, free Acceſs to a very valuable Collection of Diſpatches in Manuſcript in the Library at Lambeth, ſeveral of which are both in that of Lord Suſſex; and the Harleyan Library, to which rich Treaſure of Learning and Antiquity, I had alſo an Opportunity, at any Time of having Recourſe. Neither ſhould I omit to mention, that I was favoured with a Permiſſion to conſult ſeveral Libraries in the two Univerſities; but muſt ſatisfy my ſelf with a general Acknowledgement of the great Civilities which I received from many Perſons of Diſtinction, and from private Friends, in both Places; who readily afforded me all the Aſſiſtances for which I applied; and directed me to many, for which I ſhould not otherways have had any Thoughts of applying. As to particular Perſons, who were pleaſed to oblige me with any conſiderable Informations relating to my Deſign, I have on proper Occaſions, reſpectively made my Acknowledgements to them. But I ſhould eſpecially incur the Reproach of being ungrateful, If I were not to mention how much I have been aſſiſted by the diligent and faithful Collections of Mr. Maſter in Manuſcript, belonging to Jeſus College in Oxford, of which, by the favourable Conceſſion of that Society, I have had the conſtant Uſe here in Town. Lord Herbert appears to be indebted for a good Part of his Hiſtory to thoſe Collections. In the original Copy of that Hiſtory preſerved in the ſame Library, and which, for ſome Time, was alſo in my Cuſtody, I obſerved ſeveral Remarks, Interlineations and Additions in Mr. Maſter's Hand. Yet his Lordſhip has either omitted ſeveral Things, which appeared to me very material in that Collector's Extracts; or they have been inserted by him, after his Lordship's History was finished. I think it incumbent on me here to observe, that I have often cited Mr. Master as a good Authority, without consulting the Original from which he copied; or searching the Offices out of which he collected; having found on all the Occasions which I took of comparing him with Mr. Rymer, that he was very just and exact in all his Transcripts. There is no Necessity for my mentioning what Notices I have received from the common printed Historians, concerning the Transactions of the Time to which I confine my self. Had I enlarged my Plan in the Method pursued by some of them, and descended to those minute Circumstances, wherewith they abound, relating to the Ceremonial observed at Enterviews, Processions, Tilts and Tournaments, instead of one Volume, I could easily have composed several. I was so far from wanting Materials of any Kind, except the original legatine Powers of the Cardinal, that the greatest Difficulty I found was in reducing those, wherewith I was furnished, upon more important Subjects, into a proper Compass. I have even obliged to abridge (which was one Reason of my delaying the Publication of this Work longer than I designed) several Chapters which I had prepared for the Press, and to omit several Passages in the Life, and several Records in the Collections, which I had designed to insert. I have also omitted, in order to keep my self within Bounds, to make use of several Informations from particular Friends, that would have been very acceptable to the Publick. Who yet, I hope, upon this Acknowledgement will pardon that Omission, which I could not have otherwise pardoned to my self. This Volume after all consists of a much greater Number of Sheets, than can, according to common Computation, be afforded at the Price of the Subscription, and especially including the Charge of the Prints; which, for Reasons wherein I am not concerned, were not, or could not be finished within the Time proposed for Publication of this Book: To which Occasions for the Delay of it, I shall only add, that I waited a considerable Time for the Cardinal's first legatine Powers from Rome, which I did not at last receive; but I the less regret that Disappointment, as I found Copies of several subsequent Powers in Mr. Rymer, which are very probably of the same Import, as to the main Articles of them, with his first Powers.

But, tho' I have not wanted a sufficient Number of Materials to give that Extent to my Work, which was originally designed; I am sensible, it would have been much more perfect, if I had embraced the Opportunity, which a very learned Prelate now in Exile generously offered to me, of compiling it, in his House: The World might then have expected a Composition, that I should not have been suffered to publish, without those Advantages, which would at least have given a Sanction very favourable favourable to it. I ſhould, under ſuch a Direction, not only have had the Benefit of many curious and deep Reſearches into eccleſiaſtical Antiquity, but of the beſt and moſt uſeful Inſtructions, both in reſpect to the Matter and the Conduct of my Work. But as ſome Accidents rendered it impracticable for me to accept an Offer that appeared equally advantagious, and honorary to me, I had not thoſe Aſſiſtances, which were expected from a Perſon, able, as I had Grounds to believe, above any other, to direct me in a Work, which He had ſometime Thoughts of undertaking himſelf.

I ſhall not incur any Cenſure for paying a Debt of Gratitude to a learned Prelate, under his preſent Circumſtances; or for celebrating thoſe great Talents, wherein, as a Perſon of Capacity and Letters, his moſt inveterate Enemies will allow him to excel. And the Principles which I have here, and upon all Occaſions advanced, muſt, I aſſure my ſelf, neceſſarily free me from all poſſible Suſpicion of having a Deſign, to ſay or ſuggeſt any Thing, that may have the leaſt Tendency to favour Sedition or Diſloyalty in any Kind. But it is ignoble and unjuſt, becauſe Men are charged with high Crimes, either to refuſe them thoſe grateful Acknowledgements which are due to their beneficial Actions, or to deny their extraordinary and diſtinguiſhing Abilities on other Accounts.

4. Laſtly, The Defects ſtill to be ſupplied. It is evident from what has been ſaid above, that this Account of Cardinal Wolſey's Life is far from being of equal Extent with the Subject. A Subject, which takes in as great a Variety of important and memorable Events for the Space of twenty Years, as perhaps ever happened in the ſame Compaſs of Time, ſince the Creation of the World. So that a Work of this Nature, if the Plan of it were laid as wide, as the Materials that may be found to conſtruct upon it, might admit, would be too much enlarged for any one Perſon to undertake. Much leſs could I apprehend my ſelf, under ſo many Diſadvantages and Defects, equal to ſuch a vaſt Deſign. I was willing notwithſtanding to ſay ſomething, tho' after a very imperfect Manner, concerning a native Subject of this Kingdom, to whom the learned World is ſo much indebted, if not more indebted than to any other Patron of Learning in any Nation. I ſhould think my ſelf however ſufficiently rewarded, if what I have ſaid might contribute to excite any abler Hand to do Juſtice to the Subject. And who ſo proper for ſuch a Work, as ſome Member of that learned and flouriſhing Society, which Cardinal Wolſey himſelf founded, and which hath continually produced Perſons of the greateſt Abilities for learned Undertakings, in every Kind. Till ſomething of that Nature be attempted, I may poſſibly take an Opportunity of putting the Materials, I have by me, and which could not, for the Reaſons I have given, be at preſent employed, into ſome regular Form. And I ſhould then make it my Endeavour to obſerve and correct any former Faults, which may have been committed by me, either through Miſtake, or for Want of better Information. No Perſon can oblige me more, than by a free and ingenuous Diſcovery of any Error or other Defect, which may deſerve his Notice. And when I am favoured with any Repreſentation of this Kind, I ſhall ſhew that Regard to it, which becomes a Lover of Truth; and I promiſe to give up any Thing, which I cannot ſupport upon good and evident Reaſon.

But I ſhall not detain the Reader any longer in this Place; where I deſignedly omit ſeveral Things, that might properly have been mentioned. Yet the Omiſſion of which he may, if he thinks fit, in ſome Meaſure ſupply, by peruſing the following Account mentioned before, concerning my Deſign, and Method in this Work.

Prints of certain Coins, from different Preſſes of the Cardinal, at York, and Durham; each of which, exhibits the Cardinal's Hat, with the initial Letters of his Name.

Some

Some ACCOUNT of this WORK formerly Publiſhed.

THE principal Deſign of HISTORY is to repreſent the Characters of Men; the State of Religion and Learning; the Importance and Variety of Cauſes, of Counſels and Events, in the publick Adminiſtration.

The Life of Cardinal WOLSEY, tho' reducible, in a ſtrict Senſe, under that Diſtinction or particular Branch of Hiſtory, which is termed Biography, does yet neceſſarily take in theſe ſeveral Particulars, and render them the proper Subjects of Inquiry to the Hiſtorian.

As the chief Direction of civil Affairs was, ſucceſſively, for many Years, committed to him, frequent Occaſions will offer themſelves, upon which, I ſhall be obliged to mention Perſons of the firſt Quality and Character, in civil Life; eſpecially thoſe who had a nearer Relation to the Court, or acted more immediately in Dependance of this Miniſter.

His high Poſt and Authority, his numerous as well as great Preferments in the Church, will render it neceſſary for me to conſider the Policy of the eccleſiaſtical State, at that Time; with the ſeveral Changes which happened to it; eſpecially, from the Period of his preſiding, by Virtue of his Legatine Powers, at the Head of it; during the Exerciſe of them; and in Conſequence of their expiring.

If he was not a Perſon of the firſt Diſtinction in the Republick of Letters, it may, however, be truly affirmed, he did not want a competent Degree of Learning to qualify him for a juſt and honourable Diſcharge of thoſe important Offices, which he ſuſtained, both in Church and State. It muſt be acknowledged, at leaſt, that he was one of the greateſt Patrons of Learning, which this, or any other Nation has produced.

The Reaſon of my doing this Juſtice to his Memory, will appear from the ample and opulent Foundations of his two Colleges; from ſeveral Lectures founded by him in the Univerſity of OXFORD, and the Methods which he employed, with Succeſs, in Order to reſtore the GREEK TONGUE in that ancient Seat of Learning: To which I may add, his Deſign, a Deſign worthy of a great Mind, to cauſe all the Manuſcripts in the Vatican to be tranſcribed, for the Service of his Country.

Yet he has left us no printed Remains, except a ſhort Preface, before one of the firſt Editions of Lily's Grammar, compoſed by him for the Uſe of his School at Ipſwich, which will be added in the Appendix. That Part of Learning, which he is ſaid principally to have cultivated, was Theological and Scholaſtick: Yet, he does not affect, in any of his Letters, whereof I have a pretty large Collection, to diſcover the leaſt Tincture of his Converſation with the Schoolmen; but ſeems wholly to confine himſelf in them, whether as a Miniſter or a Prelate, a Patron or a Friend, to his proper Character, and the Buſineſs before him, without ſeeking Occaſions, out of his Way, of ſhewing his Erudition, in any Kind.

If ſome of his Letters are interſperſed with Latin Phraſes, or, perhaps, with whole Periods in that Language, we are not to attribute it to any particular Affectation in him of Writing after that Manner; but to the Poverty of his native Tongue; and to a Practice, which, for that Reaſon, might then more commonly obtain. A Practice, now exploded, on Account of the many Improvements, which have been ſince made, both in reſpect to the Strength, and the Beauty of the Engliſh Diction.

Whatever his Qualifications were, in his Capacity of a Scholar, it appears to have been his principal End in the ſeveral Preferments, which he poſſeſſed in the Church, to appropriate the Revenues ariſing from them, not towards aggrandizing his private Family, but for the Benefit of the Church; in particular, by giving ſuch Encouragement to Learning and learned Men, as might contribute moſt effectually to do real Honour, and Service to Religion.

The Conſideration, therefore, of the State of Learning, at that Time, eſpecially, in both our famous Univerſities, with ſome Account of ſeveral learned Men reſiding in them, and in other Parts, will have a direct and viſible Connexion with his Hiſtory.

It is further requiſite in a Hiſtorian to conſider, in all the Variety of them, thoſe obvious, and ſo far as they are really diſcoverable, thoſe ſecret Cauſes, to which the Actions, that he relates, owe their Origin. Theſe Cauſes are ſuch as ariſe either from the external Motives of Intereſt, Ambition, Honour, or Reſentment: Or from thoſe, which in Contradiſtinction to them, are reputed internal, as operating more directly, from the Impulſe of natural Temper, and Inclination; or from the Force of ſome reigning and habitual Paſſion. Tacitus is allowed to excel in diſcovering and happily deſcribing the former of theſe Motives to human Action; Saluſt in accounting, after a juſt and elegant Manner, for the Latter of them. Certain Facts which I ſhall be obliged to recite, are ſo important, and reſolveable into ſo many important Motives, that they will afford proper and ample Matter of Reflection, in both Reſpects.

In examining, amidſt this Variety, what the main and original Springs of Action were, I have conſulted the beſt Hiſtories of the Time to which I confine my ſelf, that are extant, with ſeveral other curious Memoirs, not yet publiſhed. In ſome Caſes, where the Evidence, as to the true Cauſe, was leſs clear or perſuaſive, I have taken the Liberty of making probable Conjectures; which a Hiſtorian has, I conceive, a Right to do; provided, he propoſeth them only as Conjectures, from which the Events ſuppoſed to follow may be deduced after a natural and juſt Manner.

It is difficult, in many Caſes, to aſſign the true Motives, upon which private Men act, or form the Rules of their Conduct. But the Difficulty is ſtill much greater, in accounting for the ſecret Movements of State, which depend upon foreign, and ſometimes upon very remote Influences, and an intricate Combination of Intereſts. In ſuch Caſes, there is a Neceſſity of conſidering final Cauſes, if we would be qualified to make a right Judgement, concerning the Intention of thoſe, who ſit at the Helm of Affairs. And as we know by the Effects, and by them only, in many Reſpects, yet with a ſufficient Degree of Evidence, what the Sovereign Being, and Governour of the World intends, both in the Works of Nature and Providence; ſo we may frequently judge, with a Certainty that excludes all reaſonable Doubt, from many Events in civil Life, from what Principles they flowed, and what put the Agents of them originally in Motion.

But the greateſt Light into the Deſigns and Projects of State, is from private Letters and Inſtructions, the Knowledge of which will depend, where the Originals of them cannot be had, from authentick Copies. Theſe, with great Variety of which I have been ſupplied, afford the proper Materials for a true Hiſtory, and give it all the Advantage, both in reſpect to Uſe and Ornament, whereof it is capable.

It is obſervable, that the Cardinal, in all his Letters and Inſtructions, is very open and particular, if he was not rather too diffuſe. And though his Diction ſometimes appears negligent, and more ſo, than ſuits with the Dignity of his Character, intermixed, according to the Cuſtom of that Age, with Sentences of Latin; yet his Senſe is always good, and full to the Purpoſe. He is particularly careful to expreſs himſelf, after a Manner which might prevent any ambiguous Conſtruction of his Orders; and ſeems to have abhorred that mean Artifice of miſleading foreign or ſubordinate Miniſters, by doubtful Hints, into Errors; dangerous, if Things ſhould not ſucceed well, to their own Safety or Reputation; but which, in Caſe of ill Succeſs, would ſtill afford a ſecure Retreat to the Authors of them.

Tho' he had a prompt Wit, on any Emergency, and did not want Spirit; yet, in all his Diſpatches, he uſed thoſe Precautions which plainly diſcover, he was far from affecting to involve Matters, merely for the Sake of making bold and dangerous Experiments, or for the Reputation of an extraordinary Addreſs and Dexterity, in extricating himſelf, in Caſe they did not ſucceed. If ſome very great, and able Miniſters, have been more enterprizing upon ſuch a View, it may be queſtioned, whether, in this particular Inſtance, they did not rather give a Proof of their Courage, than of a conſummate Prudence.

As to Events, or Matters of Fact which are reported to have happened, it is more eaſy to judge, whether they really did happen, and in what Manner. And yet the Accounts, which different Authors give, both in reſpect to certain Actions, and the Circumſtances of them, are ſo various, that there is ſometimes great Difficulty in reconciling them; and, in order to diſcover on which Side the Truth lies, we are obliged to queſtion the Fidelity of the Relators, and our Suſpicions concerning it, lead us, by Degrees, to queſtion the Truth of the Fact it ſelf. The only Way to free us from theſe Suſpicions, the Way I have endeavoured to take, is to conſult the beſt Authorities; to lay Things fairly together; to examine their ſeveral Circumſtances according to Evidence, and to That only: And when we have done, there is ſtill large Scope for Variety of Reflections upon the Tendency, the Importance, and Conſequences of them. As to which, the Hiſtorian is at Liberty, whether to render himſelf uſeful, or agreeable; provided his Obſervations are ſuch, as naturally ariſe from the Facts he has been conſidering, and are made with Candour and Honeſty; Qualities, of which all Authors make ample Profeſſion, but how juſtly, muſt be left to the Determination of their Readers.

This may be ſufficient to give the Reader a general Idea of my Deſign, and to ſhew, upon what Subjects I chiefly propoſe to entertain him. And as ſomething has been occaſionally inſinuated, concerning the Means, which I have endeavoured to employ, towards proper Information in this great Work, it may now be convenient to obſerve, by what Meaſures I would principally regulate my ſelf, in the Purſuit and Conduct of it.

The firſt Rule which I preſcribe to my ſelf, is, to conſider the real Character of thoſe Perſons, whom I ſhall have Occaſion to mention, without Regard to their different Opinions, or to any Cauſe, or Party whatever, to which they were differently attached. It is equally culpable in a Hiſtorian to throw Dirt upon all thoſe, who are not of his own Way; and to juſtify, perhaps to applaud his Friends, where they are not really defenſible. Many Hiſtorians, both of the Romiſh, and reformed Perſuaſion, in accounting for that great Revolution, which happened in the Church, during the Reign of Henry the Eighth, are concerned in this Reflection. And, when it ariſes from a juſt Occaſion for it, the very End and Deſign of Hiſtory is, in great Meaſure, defeated. Where there is a notorious Partiality, in reſpect to the Perſons of Men, People will be very difficultly perſuaded, there can be any certain Dependance on the Relation of Facts; or that any Regard is to be had to the Conſequences drawn from them, but what invincibly diſcover themſelves by their own Light and Evidence. The Hiſtorian is no longer capable of adding the leaſt Weight or Authority to what he reports. If on one Hand we reproach the Papiſts, with the flagrant Calumnies and Falſifications of a Harding and a Saunders, they object to us, in Return, and upon the ſame Heads, the Works of Fox and Bale. On which Side ſoever the Advantage may lie in ſuch Recriminations, the Cauſe of Truth is not properly affected. The Reaſons for the Reformation ſtill ſubſiſt, whatever becomes of the perſonal Characters of thoſe, who have either written in Defence of the Perſons by whom it was promoted, or of thoſe who ſtrenuouſly, and with equal Zeal, oppoſed it. And though every Man has, notwithſtanding, a Right to be truly repreſented in his Character; yet that Right is founded in a common Principle of Juſtice, which is equally due on both Sides,

Sides, and not in a partial Regard to the Credit, or Intereſts of either Side.

There are, we charitably hope, ſome Perſons who have Honour and Probity, of all Perſuaſions; Prejudices of Education, and Circumſtances of Life; Method of Study, or Choice of particular Books; Reaſons of Dependance and Gratitude; of Friendſhip and Alliance; of Hope and Fear; have too viſible a Power, if not of conſtraining us directly to make wrong Judgements, yet of propoſing Things in a falſe Light, that at laſt inſenſibly miſleads us into them. So that Perſons of many excellent and ſuperior Qualities, both intellectual and moral, are yet ſometimes obſerved to be moſt unhappy, not only in the Choice of their Party, of their Friends, and Converſation; but, where an Error in Choice is attended with moſt dangerous Conſequence, of their very Religion. We ought nevertheleſs duly to acknowledge to them thoſe good Qualities, wherein they excel; and they, who would confine all Merit within their own Pale, diſcover a Narrowneſs of Mind, which is not to be endured in private Converſation; but muſt neceſſarily deſtroy all Credit of a publick Hiſtory, by rendering it ſuſpected even to Perſons of the greateſt Candour and Ingenuity.

Yet I am ſenſible, a Hiſtorian that would avoid the common Defects, in this Kind, of thoſe, who have gone before him, muſt expoſe himſelf to many Inconveniences. I am not intimidated with any ſuch Apprehenſion. There is ſomething grateful and entertaining in reflecting upon the very Diſappointments which the Love of Truth has occaſioned, and That gives a generous Pleaſure, or rather a Taſte of celeſtial Pleaſure to the Mind, which the World cannot give. Whatever Rules other Hiſtorians have preſcribed to themſelves, I ſhall always deſire to follow the Light of Truth, and think it an Honour to be found the Laſt in her Retinue.

For this Reaſon, in particular, tho' Cuthbert Tonſtal Biſhop of Durham, vigorouſly oppoſed the Reformation, and lived and died in the Communion of the Church of Rome, I acknowledge him to have been One of the greateſt Ornaments of that Age; whether we conſider him in the Capacity of a Gentleman, or a Scholar, of a publick Miniſter, or an Eccleſiaſtick of the firſt Order.

For the ſame Reaſon, tho' Fox, the Author of The Acts and Monuments, laboured very much, both in Defence of the Reformation, and of the chief Inſtruments by which it was promoted, I ſhall not think my ſelf obliged to vindicate him, where his Zeal carried carried him to any Exceſſes, that either diſcovered too great Partiality to the Reformed, or too violent a Prejudice againſt thoſe, who oppoſed the Reformation.

Truth, in her native Simplicity, is too amiable to need any falſe Colours; which ſerve only, at the beſt, when they are taken off, to ſhew Falſehood more odious and deformed. And therefore, I cannot think, with all Submiſſion to ſome great Names in our hiſtorical Libraries, that to blacken or applaud Men becauſe they were of this or that Side of the Queſtion, and for no other Reaſon, has really done any true Honour or Service to the reformed Religion.

What have either the perſonal Vertues or Vices of Men to do, in a ſtrict and impartial Search after Truth? The Grounds of the Reformation are the ſame, whether the Conduct and Spirit of Martin Luther, admit of a juſt Vindication or not. And whether he, or Henry the Eighth, might be more juſtly compared to a Poſtilion in his waxed Boots and oiled Coat, laſhing his Horſes through thick and thin, and beſpattering all about him. Though Biſhop Burnet, in the Preface to his Hiſtory of the Reformation, where he cites this Simile, from an ingenious Author, thinks it more applicable to that Prince; and I ſhall not diſpute the Grounds of his Opinion.

Wicked Men are very often ſubſervient to the Deſigns of God, in effecting the wiſe and good Ends of his Providence. It is his peculiar Glory to bring Good out of Evil, and Order out of Confuſion. Were ſome of the greateſt Revolutions in the World, to depend upon the perſonal Motives, Characters, or Conduct of the principal Agents, it would be much more difficult to account for them upon any true Principles, either of Piety, or Juſtice.

God forbid, that ever the Intereſts of Religion ſhould depend on any Qualifications, good or bad, of particular Men in any Station of Life. And yet, probably, for which Reaſon I have inſiſted longer on this Article, it was with a falſe View of doing ſome Service to the reformed Religion, that the Memory of Cardinal Wolſey, whoſe Power and Poſt in that Church which oppoſed it was ſo great, has been moſt injuriouſly treated.

Another Rule, which I have preſcribed to my ſelf, is, to keep as much as poſſible, in controverted Points, to the Character of a Hiſtorian; eſpecially, in reſpect to thoſe three great Articles, which I ſhall be obliged to conſider after a more copious and diſtinct Manner;

Manner; the Supremacy; the Divorce; the Power of alienating Lands, that have been appropriated to pious or religious Uſes. I have neither Authority nor Inclination to dictate, upon theſe nice Points: And therefore ſhall endeavour to propoſe the Arguments and Facts relating to them, on both Sides, in the beſt Light I can, without pretending to interpoſe my private Opinion. I here diſclaim all Right to the Office, whether of a civil, or an eccleſiaſtical Judge. Let the Reader, as the Evidence on each Side appears more ſtrong or convincing, judge and determine for himſelf.

Yet, where the Nature of the Subject, or the Notoriety of any ill Action or Deſign, may require a more ſevere Cenſure, I ſhall not be afraid to expreſs my ſelf with a Zeal becoming my proper Character and Profeſſion. Satyr, when under a due Regulation, when employed with Decency, in a reſpectful, and where it is requiſite, in a diſtant Manner, may be of very good Uſe; and the Time and Tranſactions of which I write, will afford too much and too frequent Occaſion for the Uſe of it: Yet, it is far more agreeable and human to excuſe the Defects or vindicate the Honour of great Men, than to animadvert upon them for great Crimes. A particular Tenderneſs is due to the Memory of the Dead, who are no longer capable of making their own Defence; and, in whoſe Favour, Poſterity do not much affect to intereſt themſelves; eſpecially, concerning Matters, which have no Relation to preſent Diſputes, nor Correſpondency with any modern Schemes in the civil, or eccleſiaſtical State.

Setting theſe Conſiderations aſide, few Men have ſo great Regard for native Truth, as to give themſelves much Trouble in their Inquiries, concerning the real Character of thoſe, who have long ſince quitted the Stage of Life. Hiſtorians therefore, from a common Principle of Humanity and Juſtice, are to uſe greater Caution and Candour in the Judgement which they make of ſuch Perſons, whether in reſpect to their perſonal Qualities, or to their exterior Conduct.

In conſulting my Authors, I have, without calling any Man Maſter, had a due Reſpect to their Judgement, and the Reputation which they bear in the World. It has ever been my Care to repreſent their Senſe truly, tho' in my own Terms, where ſome ſpecial Reaſons did not oblige me to an Exactneſs in my Citations from them. I was willing my Work ſhould loſe ſome Embelliſhments, for the Sake of an even and uniform Stile; as to which, I think, Perſpicuity one of the greateſt Recommendations, eſpecially in relating Matters of Fact, where the Honour or Intereſts of any Perſon

Perſon or of ſeveral Perſons may be affected, all Ambiguity of Expreſſion is highly culpable. I have, upon this Conſideration, rather endeavoured to expreſs my ſelf in a clear and ſignificant, than in a ſublime Style; which, tho' it might appear to ſuit better with the Importance and Dignity of my Subject, is not ſo inſtructive or uſeful to all Readers. I thought it incumbent on me to render a Work, which has received ſo general Encouragement, of as general Uſe, as it was in my Power to make it. Some Parts of it relating to ſpeculative and controverted Points, being more dry and ſcholaſtick, it was neceſſary, in order to carry the Reader through them with leſs Difficulty and Trouble, that I ſhould render them, ſo far as I was able, more ſmooth and eaſy. Yet, where the Nature of my Subject required that my Style ſhould be more maſculine and elevated, I have endeavoured to expreſs my ſelf after a Manner proper to the Occaſion.

I have been no leſs careful to repreſent the Characters, than the Senſe of my Authors in a true Light. Where I found Reaſon to depart from them, I have done it with due Regard to their different Capacities and Stations in Life. If I am ſometimes ſo unhappy as to diſſent from the learned Author of The Hiſtory of the Reformation, it is not with any Deſign to detract from the Merit of that Work, which has met ſo general Approbation; or, to leſſen the Eſteem which is due to a Perſon, diſtinguiſhed by many ſuperior Talents natural and acquired, and who ſeems to have wanted but one Qualification to entitle him to the firſt Rank, among the moſt celebrated Hiſtorians both antient and modern: But I took this Liberty out of pure Regard to Truth, and, I hope, with all the Decency that the great Diſtance at which I ſtand from a Perſon of his high Order, may juſtly require.

The Circumſtances of Time for which that learned Hiſtory appears to have been more eſpecially calculated, deſerve alſo to be conſidered. The popiſh Plot was then at the Height, which had put the Nation into ſuch a Ferment, and given People ſuch terrible Apprehenſions from a popiſh Succeſſor, that it was convenient Popery ſhould be dreſſed up in the moſt frightful Colours. Under ſuch Circumſtances, a ſtrong Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion might naturally occaſion ſome Warmths, and ſlight Overſights, which could not otherwiſe eaſily have eſcaped from ſo able a Writer, and ſo well furniſhed with the proper Means of Information.

I have preſumed to take the ſame Liberty, and upon the ſame Motive, in conſulting the excellent Hiſtory of Henry the Eighth, by Lord Herbert, one of the moſt perfect Works in its Kind that is extant. His Style is generous, clear, and manly; his Facts well choſen, and from the beſt Authorities; his Reflections proper and gentile: There is an Air of Quality in what he ſays, and he ſeems to write and think with equal Freedom. He diſcovers, for the moſt Part, great Impartiality: And tho' he ſometimes animadverts with Severity enough, upon the Cardinal, founding his Charge upon Matters of Fact, the Truth of which was thought ſufficiently eſtabliſhed by common Fame and Belief: Yet, he frequently takes Occaſion to do Juſtice to him, in mentioning his great Qualities. Where that noble Lord, amidſt ſuch a Variety of Conſultations, Facts, and Events which he relates, appears to have commited any Miſtakes, I ſhall not be chargeable with Want of juſt Reſpect to his Character, in making, with all Submiſſion, ſuch Obſervations upon them, as are proper; and which his own free Way of Thinking and Writing may more particularly ſeem to authorize.

One Inſtance, relating to this Part of his Character, I ſhall beg Leave to obſerve, on Occaſion of the Speech he has publiſhed by Way of Anſwer to One which Fiſher, Biſhop of Rocheſter, had made in Defence of the Rights and Privileges of the Church: His Lordſhip has not informed us, where he found this Speech, from which moſt of our modern Free-thinkers ſeem to copy, or who was the Author of it. But I have diſcovered a full and ſatisfactory Reply to it, with the Matter of which his Lordſhip might readily have been furniſhed out of the ſame Repoſitory where he had that Speech; tho', after his Lordſhip's Example, I have humbly taken the Liberty to put it in a modern Form.

I have alſo endeavoured to follow that noble Lord, in one Method of his excellent Hiſtory, by reducing, as much as poſſible, my Narrative into a juſt Series of Time; except in that Part relating to the Cardinal's more private Life, concerning which, we have very few Memoirs, and ſcarce any, but what we owe to Mr. Cavendiſh, one of his Domeſticks, who wrote his Life, the different Editions and manuſcript Copies of which I have, during that Period, conſulted: And have put Things in the Order according to which they then occurred, without being able to determine exactly, the Time when they happened, except in ſome few Inſtances.

Some of my Authors, who have ſet Things in a better Light, obſerved a more exact Method, and made more juſt and uſeful Obſervations, have yet a great many Defects to be ſupplied, upon my Scheme, which is to write a compleat and continued Hiſtory of the Cardi-

Cardinal: And here, my great Aſſiſtance was expected from Mr. Cavendiſh; but the Account which he has given of his Patron, tho' in many Reſpects highly valuable, is far from being ſo full or particular as might be deſired: And there is little or nothing conſiderable in it, relating to the Affairs of the Church, or foreign Negotiations, of which this great Miniſter had, under the King, the principal, or rather, indeed, the ſole Direction.

So that in order to a more diſtinct and compleat Hiſtory of Cardinal Wolſey, than had hitherto been undertaken by any one Author, or even could be collected from all the printed Authors which are extant; it was neceſſary for me, and here lay the main Difficulty, to conſult whatever Memoirs in Manuſcript, I could have Recourſe to, and from which I might receive any good or certain Intelligence.

I ſhall beg Leave, before I conclude, to take Notice of one Charge in particular, lately communicated to me, ſo much to the Cardinal's Diſadvantage, that nothing can, or ought to be ſaid in his Defence, ſhould it, upon Enquiry, really appear to be well founded.

It is reported, then, and the Tradition is entred by a late Clerk of the Houſe of Lords in one of their Journals, that the Cardinal deſtroyed ſeveral Records of that Houſe.

But in Anſwer to this, I think, one of the moſt ſtrong negative Proofs may be alledged that any pretended Fact can, in any Caſe, be well ſuppoſed to admit. And that is, from the Silence concerning a Crime of ſo high a Nature, in the Articles of Impeachment againſt the Cardinal: Wherein the Advantage was taken of every little Eſcape in his Conduct, to inflame the Houſe; and ſeveral Things appear to have been mentioned merely with that Deſign, and rather by Way of an accumulative Charge, than as containing any juſt Matter of Accuſation, which could render him obnoxious to the Laws.

It is not probable; it is to the laſt Degree improbable; it is morally impoſſible; that the Enemies of the Cardinal, conſidering the Diſpoſition which the Houſe was in at that Time, would have omitted to charge him with a Fact, had there been any good Foundation for it, which concerned the Honour and Dignity of the Houſe; and to which no Anſwer could be given; which, therefore, muſt neceſſarily have affected the Cardinal more, than all the other Articles beſides, from which he was acquitted. I humbly propoſe it to be conſidered, Whether many other Imputations, under which the Cardinal's Memory hath ſuffered, and that do not even appear to be founded on any Tradition, written or oral, ſo plauſible as this, may yet have, at the Bottom, any better Grounds to ſupport them.

I thought my ſelf more indiſpenſably obliged to mention this Charge in Regard to the very worthy and learned Gentleman, by whom it was communicated to me, John Anſtis Eſq; Garter King at Arms; who has been pleaſed to favour me with ſeveral other curious Memoirs; and particularly, with his own Remarks, upon a Draught of the Houſe of Lords, as they ſat in the Reign of Henry the Eighth: Tho' I have not been able to obtain a Permiſſion for making the leaſt Acknowledgement of this Kind to him. And therefore do not know, whether I ſhall ever be pardoned for adding what yet I cannot omit to mention, that he is at preſent himſelf preparing to publiſh an hiſtorical Work, which will be as much or more for the Honour of the Engliſh Nation, than any ſuch Work that hath been yet publiſhed; and which, for the vaſt Treaſure of Learning wherewith it is replete, will ſurpriſe the World; eſpecially, as coming from a Gentleman of a Converſation perfectly free and diſengaged, and whoſe Time is ſo much employed in diſcharging the moſt friendly and ingenuous Offices of ſocial Life.

Memoirs concerning Him from his Birth, to the Time when he was made Archbishop of York.

CHAP. I.

1. A Presumption. 2. Concerning the Birth of the Cardinal. 3. That the Copy of a Will, added in the Collections, is the Copy of his Father's Will. 4. He is sent to School. 5. And very young to the University of Oxford. 6. Whether a Butcher's Son. 7. A Passage from Fuller's Church-History. 8. He made Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon, and Schoolmaster there. 9. His Government in the Ch[urch]. 10. A Trad[ition]. 11. The [Living] given him by Sir Amias Paw[let]. 12. He is shortly after made Chaplain to Archbishop Bean. 13. His Resentment, when Counsellor, of the Indignity done to Him by Sir Amias, with the Method which that Knight took to mitigate his Displeasure. 15. Whether He did not carry his Resentment too far.

1. THE MEMOIRS, which are preserved to us, relating to the private Life of that Person, whose History I have undertaken to write, are very few, in Comparison of what might have been expected, considering the publick Character, and the high Posts, both in Church and State, which he afterwards sustained. For it is natural to enquire concerning the Origin, the Circumstances, and Conduct of all great Men, before the Period of their Elevation; to the End we may be capable of Judging, with more Certainty, whether, and how far, it was owing to perſonal Merit; or, if we are not rather to aſcribe it to a Conflux of fortunate Incidents, but in the chriſtian Dialect, to certain happy and favourable Diſpoſitions of Providence, which does even ſometimes appear to lay a Train for the Advancement of particular Perſons; a Train, which, they have nothing to do, but to follow directly, towards the Accompliſhment of every Thing they can propoſe to themſelves, in this World.

The Cardinal himſelf has been thought by ſome Perſons chargeable with a Negligence, not eaſy to be accounted for, that, being ſo great a Patron of Learning, and having the beſt Pens in Europe at Command, he did not employ any of them to tranſmit a juſt and faithful Account of his Conduct to Poſterity; future Ages would naturally have a Curioſity to know every Part, and Incident of a Life ſo full of great and memorable Events; the Life of a Perſon, whoſe high Station and Employments had drawn the Eyes of his own, of foreign, and diſtant Nations upon him.

Mr. Cavendiſh, indeed, who was in the Cardinal's Retinue, and by his Office always near to his Perſon, has left us ſome very valuable Memoirs relating to him; and it is owing to that Gentleman, that ſome of thoſe few Remains are preſerved, concerning his private Life, which I am now preparing to lay before the Reader. Yet it appears evidently from two Places in the Life of the Cardinal by Mr. Cavendiſh, [a] that it was written under the Reign of Queen Mary. It is not therefore probable, that Domeſtick wrote it by the Cardinal's Direction, or at his Inſtance. So faithful a Servant would not have delayed the Execution of his Maſter's Will ſo long, and to an Age, which muſt have been, at that Time, very far advanced. It muſt however be acknowledged, that the Account given by Mr. Cavendiſh, with what I have been otherways able to collect, is very ſhort and deficient, in Reſpect of what I might have had reaſonable Hopes of finding, upon ſo great and important a Subject.

2. Thomas Wolſey, afterwards Archbiſhop of York, Chancellor of England, Cardinal Prieſt of St. Cicily, and Legate à Latere, was 1471. born at Ipſwich in Suffolk, in the Year of our Lord 1471, and as that [b] learned Antiquary Mr. Fullman relates, in the Month of March. He was deſcended, according to ſome of our beſt [c] Hiſtorians, from poor but honeſt Parents, and of good Reputation, Inhabitants of that Place; the common Tradition is, that he was the Son of a Butcher. But I can diſcover no more authentick Grounds for ſuch a Tradition, than for the other Report, that his Parents were in mean and indigent Circumſtances. It appears, on the other Hand, from the Will added in the [d] Collections, that his Father was ſeized of an Eſtate, which, in the Poſſeſſion, at that Time, of a Plebeian, was very conſiderable; that he had ſeveral Lands and Tenements by a Tenure, which gave him a diſcretionary Power in transferring them; and laſtly, that he made certain pecuniary Bequeſts to his Family and Friends, of no ſmall Value, according to the Proportion which Money then bore to the preſent Rate, and Affluence of it.

3. This Will of [e] Robert Wolſey of Ipſwich is dated September the 21ſt, in the Year 1496, and the Reference in it to his Son Thomas, who, it is ſuppoſed was bred a Scholar, and deſigned for a Prieſt, renders it not ſo much probable, as a Matter paſt all Doubt, if we may judge from the Circumſtances of Time and Place, or from the Agreement of Names and perſonal Characters, that this Robert, was, in Truth, the Father of Thomas, afterwards Cardinal Wolſey. Who, as he had no eccleſiaſtical Perferment, 'till the Time of his being inſtituted to the Rectory of Lymington, in the Year 1500, may very well be preſumed to have taken Orders ſhortly after the Date of this Will; being at the Time when it was executed, in the twenty fifth Year of his Age. Beſides, had there been any other Wolſey deſigned for Holy Orders, of the ſame Name, Place, and Age, with the Cardinal, it is highly credible ſome Account of him would have been preſerved in Hiſtory, or by Tradition, by Reaſon of his having, at leaſt, ſome diſtant Relation, in theſe ſeveral Reſpects, to ſo very eminent a Perſon. By this Will, we farther diſcover, that his Mother's Name was [f] Joan, and that, in all Probability, he had neither Brother nor Siſter then living, there being no Mention of other Children, nor the leaſt Proviſion made in the Will for any other.

e In the Original his Name is written Wuley, from which Variation in the Spelling, ſome Perſons perhaps may take Occaſion to object, that notwithſtanding the Concurrence of other Circumſtances, which render it highly probable this was the Will of the Cardinal's Father, yet after all it might be the Will of ſome other Perſon. To obviate this Pretence, it will be ſufficient here to remark, that in two authentick Inſtruments directed to the Cardinal from Rome at different Times, his Name is exactly written as in the Will.

Alexander Epiſcopus ſervus ſervorum Dei dilecto Filio Thomæ Wuley Rectori Parochialis Eccleſiæ de Lymington. Rym. Ann. 17 H. 7. Tom. 12. 183.

There is alſo a Diſpenſation from Pope Julius II. for a third incompatible Preferment, addreſſed to the Rector of Lymington, and wherein his Name is written after the ſame Manner, Rym. Tom. 13. p. 217.

f Robert and Joan are mentioned as the Father and Mother of the Cardinal, in a Bull of Indulgences, to thoſe who ſhould viſit the Cardinal's College, another ſtrong circumſtantial Evidence, which ſeems to put the Matter out of all Doubt, that this was in Truth the Will of the Cardinal's Father. V. Rym. Convent. Tom. 14. p. 254.

4. He very early discovered a docile and apt Disposition for Learning, which encouraged his Parents to send him to School, and to give him such an Education, if we may judge of their Design in it by the Event, as might prepare him for the University. We know nothing particularly, as to the Manner of his Instruction or Behaviour at School; the Place where he was taught we may probably conclude to have been Ipswich, but the Name and Character of his Master, are altogether unknown. Yet it may be presumed, from the quick and extraordinary Proficiency which so very young a Scholar made under him, that he was well qualified for the Charge he had undertaken, but no less pleased to observe, that a Youth of such pregnant Parts, or rather, considering his tender Age, of so surprizing a Capacity, was committed to his Care.

5. For he was so early sent to the University of Oxford, that he took his Batchelor's Degree in Arts there, when he was fourteen Years Old: At an Age, when few Members now of the most forward Capacity, and with all the present, and commonly speaking, much superior Advantages of Education, are known to be admitted. So that he soon got a Name of peculiar Distinction, in that famous Seat of Learning, and was commonly termed, the Boy Batchelor. Cavendish seems to insinuate, that he was sent thither, not at the proper or sole Expence of his Father, but by Contribution of certain Friends. Yet it appears from his Father's Will, there is no Necessity of making any such Supposition. It is more probable, this Writer did here too easily give into the Belief of some common Report, or did not take the requisite Care to inform himself exactly, concerning the Truth of it.

6. It is granted, that the Circumstances of the Cardinal's Father, considerable as they have been represented, in his Way of Life, yet were not inconsistent with his Ptofession, as a Butcher, if he was really one. But since there is no good Evidence, that he was one; none, but what is founded in common Tradition; why should that Tradition have any better Grounds, than the Report no less general, if it has not been more credited by Historians, concerning the mean and indigent Condition of his Parents? Wood himself represents, as if it was with some Difficulty, his Parents maintained him at the University, with the Assistance of his Friends; yet this Author denies, he was a Butcher's Son; tho' it cannot be dissembled, that, both in the Cardinal's Life-time, and since his Death, this Relation has often been objected, as Matter of Reproach to him; but certainly upon very unjust Grounds, even if the Fact, upon which it was objected, had been really true. It is an Happiness indeed to be well-born; but should any Writer be now so audacious as to assert, that Birth is necessary to qualify a Man for a Distinction in civil Life, or even for the first Posts or

Titles

Titles of Honour, he might eaſily be confuted, and, in ſome Parts of the World, by Variety of Inſtances. Without determining any Thing therefore in a Point, which many Perſons may think of no great Concernment, whether true or falſe, to the Cardinal's Honour, the Reader may make a Judgement of it for himſelf, as he apprehends the Evidence more or leſs cogent.

7. I ſhall only obſerve farther upon the Queſtion, that Fuller in his Church-Hiſtory, if his Authority is of any Weight to determine it, may be cited for the Affirmative. He obſerves, that to humble the Cardinal's Pride, ſome Perſon or other had ſet up on a Window belonging to his College, a painted Maſtiff-dog gnawing the Spade-bone of a Shoulder of Mutton, to remind him of his Extraction, being the Son of a Butcher. He thinks it improbable, as ſome have fancied, that this Picture was placed there by the Cardinal's own Appointment, to be a Monitor of Humility to him. Now, admitting the Fact to be really true, yet unleſs it was done, by the Cardinal's Appointment, which, in the Judgement of this Writer, is not credible, no certain Inference can be drawn from it, relating to the [g] Cardinal's Birth.

8. Soon after he had taken his Degree of Batchelor in Arts, and made an extraordinary [b] Progreſs in Logick and Philoſophy, he was elected Fellow of Magdalen-College in Oxford, and had not long been Maſter of Arts, before the Care of the School adjoining to that [i] College, was committed to him; where he was charged with the Education of three young Gentlemen of noble Birth, Sons to the Marqueſs of Dorſet, who at Chriſtmas ſent for them, with Mr. Wolſey, to celebrate that Feſtival, at his Seat in the Country; where obſerving the great Improvement which his Sons had made under their Maſter, and being pleaſed with his Manner and Converſation, he preſented him, as a Reward of his Service in that Capacity, to the Rectory of Lymington in Somerſetſhire, which happened to be vacant at that Time, and was in his Lordſhip's Patronage.

9. So ſoon as he had received the Preſentation, he took care to qualify himſelf for the Cure to which it entitled him, by procuring, with all convenient Speed, the Inſtruments, and paſſing through the ſeveral Forms pre-required, to put him in Poſſeſſion. He was inſtituted to this [k] Living on the Tenth of October 1500, 1500.

in the Twenty-ninth Year of his Age, and four Years after the Death of his Father. At which Time he was Burſer of Magdalen-College, when, according to Wood, the great Tower there was finiſhed.

10. But there is an oral Report in that Society, that Mr. Wolſey, during the Time of his executing that Office, involved himſelf in ſome Difficulties, which obliged him to retire from the College; not on Account of any unhappy Accident or Miſconduct relating to his private Affairs, but by Occaſion, as 'tis ſaid, of his applying the Treaſure of the College towards erecting that noble Tower, without the proper or ſufficient Warrant. Some have pretended, that he even made uſe of violent Methods, to furniſh himſelf from the [l] Treaſury with Supplies neceſſary to carry on that Deſign. But had there really been any good Foundation for ſo high a Charge, and of ſo heinous a Nature, it is very probable one or other of the Cardinal's Enemies, would, in his Life-time, have openly objected it to him; which yet we do not find any of them has pretended to do. Neither is it in the leaſt credible, that a Perſon of his great Views, would have been guilty of a Fact, that could not be concealed, and which, if once known, would be a continual Bar to him, in all his future Pretenſions to Favour or Preferment. It is more likely, if he did uſe any forcible Means, to come into the Treaſury, he apprehended himſelf at leaſt unjuſtly oppoſed, and contrary to ſome previous Truſt, which the Society had repoſed in him; yet wherein they might afterwards think convenient, by Reaſon of the growing unexpected Expences of the Building, that he ſhould be reſtrained.

11. I think my ſelf more at Liberty to make theſe reaſonable Conjectures, as nothing has yet appeared upon any authentick Record, or in any Writing whatever in that Society, to aſcertain this Charge. However I thought it incumbent on me, in Quality of an impartial Hiſtorian, to make a Report of the Fact, ſo far as I have been able to procure any Information concerning it. There is, at leaſt, more Candour in conſidering that noble Structure as an early Eſſay of the Cardinal's great and enterprizing Mind, than as an Occaſion of his perpetrating a ſcandalous Crime, for which there is no good, or competent Proof.

12. He had not long reſided at his Living of Lymington, before Sir Amias Pawlet, a neighbouring Knight, put an Affront upon him, very unſuitable to his Character, as a Scholar, and a Prieſt, and who had now, in thoſe Parts, a proper and ſettled Cure of Souls. What his real or pretended Crime was, upon which Sir Amias committed him to the Stocks, none of my Authors, who mention the Story, have related; or whether this Diſgrace was a mere arbitrary Effect of ſome perſonal Prejudice, which that Knight had to [m] Mr. Wolſey, or to his Order? Whatever might be the Occaſion of this Inſult, it contributed to render the Rector of Lymington ſo uneaſy in his Cure, probably by leſſening that Authority, without which the paſtoral Office can never be well or ſucceſsfully diſcharged, or even by expoſing him ſometimes openly to rude Treatment from ignorant and ill-bred People, that he thought it adviſeable, at that Time, to change the Place of his Reſidence, and to remove where he might find a more fit Opportunity of diſtinguiſhing himſelf, and perhaps of making his Fortune, by appearing in a better Light.

13. And he was not deceived in his Meaſures, for ſhortly after Archbiſhop Dean received him into his Service, as one of his domeſtick Chaplains: But it does not particularly appear upon what Inducement, or by whoſe Recommendation: Yet he did not long enjoy that Archbiſhop's Patronage, who died on the fifteenth Day of February, in the Year of our Lord 1502-3; ſo that Mr. Wolſey was made Chaplain to him, if not immediately upon his withdrawing from Lymington, yet in a ſhort Time after. [n] Biſhop Godwyn reports, but erroneouſly, that he reſigned that Living, on Occaſion of the Indignity done to him by Sir Amias Pawlet, for he kept it 'till the [o] Year 1509, when he was Dean of Lincoln. In which Year his Succeſſor was inſtituted to Lymington, on the Second of July. From theſe Calculations of Time, we may infer, that his Diſgrace by Sir Amias happened about the Year 1501. 1501.

14. This Knight had Reaſon however afterward to put an Action, wherein he ſhewed ſo little Regard to the ſacred Character, into his penitential Offices. For the Cardinal, when he was made Lord Chancellor, ſtill retaining the Impreſſion of an Injury ſo diſgraceful to him, and which perhaps he had done nothing to provoke, ſent for Sir Amias Pawlet, and after a ſevere Expoſtulation with him, concerning the ill Treatment he had formerly received at his Hands, ſtrictly enjoined him not to go out of Town without ſpecial Licenſe. For five or ſix Years the Knight was confined by the Chancellor's Order in the Temple, where he ſought to mitigate the Reſentments of this great Miniſter, and to prepare a Way for the Recovery of his Liberty, by adorning the Gatehouſe next to the Street with his Arms, his Hat, and other Badges of Diſtin-

m There is a traditionary Report which I ſhall not diſſemble, That Mr. Wolſey when Rector of Lymington, being at a Fair in the Neighbourhood of that Place, drank to an Exceſs, which not only gave Offence, but ſome Occaſion of Diſorder; upon which, Sir Amias Pawlet, as Juſtice of the Peace, thought fit to proceed againſt him in the Manner here ſpecified: But whether the Report might not be raiſed to excuſe an Action of this Knight, which could not, I conceive, be well juſtified; or whether Mr. Wolſey, being of a free, open, and ſocial Temper, was not poſſibly overtaken with a Fault, for which he might deſerve to be animadverted upon, but in a Way more reſpectful to his ſacerdotal Character, are Queſtions, which I ſhall not by any Means take upon me abſolutely to determine.

ction proper to him as Cardinal. But whether the Cardinal was appeas'd by this Sacrifice; whether the Knight was at laſt freely diſcharged, or on Account of any other Submiſſion, doth not diſtinctly appear; this is certain, that Sir Amias continued ſeveral Years under Confinement, before his Diſcharge could be effected.

15. Some have thought, that a Chancellor of England, an Archbiſhop of York, and a Cardinal, ought to have forgotten an Injury, tho' of a moſt provoking Nature, done many Years before, to a private Pariſh-Prieſt: And there is no doubt, had the Injury been meerly perſonal, it would have been more becoming a great and generous Mind to have buried it in Oblivion. But the Cardinal thought perhaps the Order it ſelf ſuffered, by an Outrage attended with the laſt Circumſtances of Infamy; and ſo it might appear to him not altogether improper or unreaſonable, that ſome Animadverſion ſhould be made upon it, tho' at that Diſtance of Time, by a Perſon of his Authority; in Caſe, as the Laws then ſtood, he had really any Authority to that End: Tho' admitting indeed that he had, it may ſtill be a Queſtion, whether he did not extend it too far, both with Reſpect to the Nature, and the Duration of the Knight's Puniſhment.

1. THE Death of the Marqueſs of Dorſet, which happened about that Time, might be another Occaſion of Mr. Wolſey's Removal from Lymington. He appears throughout his whole Conduct, to have been a Perſon of enlarged Views, and great Deſigns, which he was naturally formed with all the proper Qualities, to excecute. The principal Support of his Hopes being now taken away, by the Death of a Nobleman of that Diſtinction, who might have been an Inſtrument of facilitating his Advancement to the firſt Poſts in the Church, he might think it very reaſonable to project new Methods of puſhing his Fortune, in ſome other Scene of Life.

2. We

2. We have already obſerved one Advantage which he had towards effecting his Aims, and rendering himſelf more conſpicuous, by his Reception into the Family of Archbiſhop Dean; which, according to the Author of the [p] Britiſh Antiquities, ſeems rather to have been owing to his perſonal Addreſs, and Inſinuation, than to any foreign Inſtances. Upon the Death of that Primate, he found Means of applying himſelf to Sir John Naſant Treaſurer of Calais, and of being employed by him in a Way, very favourable to his Deſigns. Sir John being a Gentleman of Somerſetſhire, it is not improbable Mr. Wolſey had contracted ſome Acquaintance with him, during his Reſidence in that County. Whatever might be the Grounds, upon which Sir John was pleaſed to entertain him, it proved very happy for him, that he was taken into the Service of one ſo much diſpoſed to promote his Intereſts. This Knight being debilitated with Age, and other Infirmities, committed the Direction of the Poſt wherewith he was intruſted, to Mr. Wolſey's Care, giving thereby at once an ample and open Teſtimony, as well concerning the Probity, as the Capacity of the Perſon deputed by him.

3. Sir John was at laſt reduced by Age and Sickneſs to ſo ill a State, and rendered ſo incapable of attending his Charge perſonally, that he moved for Leave, which was granted, to return into England; where, for the Sake of his Health, and in Regard to his paſt Services, he was permitted to reſide. Here his Sollicitations, in Favour of Mr. Wolſey, were never intermitted, till he had procured him, by his Intereſt at Court, to be made one of the King's Chaplains: Who, having once got an Eſtabliſhment there, and neither wanting Application nor Abilities for the greateſt Employments, eaſily opened a Way to that Height of Power and Greatneſs, to which he afterwards climbed.

4. In the Year 1506, he was inſtituted to the Rectory of Redgrave, in the Dioceſe of Norwich: As appears from a [q] Copy of his Inſtitution, tranſmitted to me by that curious and learned Antiquary Dr. Tanner, to whom I am alſo indebted for the Copy of his Father's Will. He was preſented to this Rectory, by the Abbot, the venerable and religious Abbot, as he is ſtiled, of St. Edmundbury, the Patron of it. But it does not appear whether he owed this Preferment to any perſonal Intereſt, which he had with that Abbot, or to the Recommendation of his Friends at Court. 1506. Jan. 8.

r What I ſhall preſently cite from Archbiſhop Parker, in a marginal Note, concerning the Cardinal's elegant Manner and Dreſs, might probably contribute not a little to enforce that natural Dignity which I am here proceeding in ſome Meaſure to deſcribe.

Favour and Eſteem, which is every where of great Force to that End, but eſpecially in the Courts of Princes. I do not mean a free and generous Aſſurance, whether in Speaking or Acting, which is a Qualification more common, as well as neceſſary to thoſe, who, in that Scene of Life, would not be treated with Diſregard or Neglect; and may for the moſt Part, by Converſation and Uſe, in ſome competent Meaſure, be acquired; but I ſpeak concerning a natural Dignity of Manner or Aſpect, that no Art can imitate, and which no Rules or Method of Practice will ever be able perfectly to form. An Advantage, which alone ſupplies the Want of many, and is, with a moderate and ordinary Share of Underſtanding, ſometimes of greater Importance to a Man, who breathes the Air of a Court, than all the other ſhining Qualities there would have been without it. I mean, that Aſcendant, for ſo I take the Liberty of calling it, which commands without ſpeaking, and at Sight, gains our Approbation, before we know, or can conſider the Reaſons of our giving it. Cæſar found it, on continual Occaſions, of great Service to him, and particularly when under the diſadvantagious Circumſtances of a Captive in the Hands of rugged and intractable Pyrates. And the ſuperiour Genius, which Anthony was told, always leſſened his Dignity in the Preſence of Auguſtus, was nothing but this Quality, of which, upon a Congreſs between theſe two great Men, Auguſtus ever appeared to be poſſeſſed in a more eminent and conſpicuous Degree. It may be termed a viſible Spirit of Authority and Dominion, wherewith Nature has diſtinguiſhed ſome particular, but few Perſons: And which is ſometimes obſerved to ſhine, even in People of a lower Rank, with a Gracefulneſs and Luſtre, that is ſurpriſing. But in Conjunction with other valuable Qualities, eſpecially of a ready Wit, of a lively and bold Imagination, it gives Laws, it governs, and domineers at Pleaſure. When it ſpeaks, as with theſe Advantages it always ſpeaks well, all Men are ſilent, and inclined to ſubmit to its Deciſions, without examining the Reaſons of them, as to an Oracle; or to ſome innate extraordinary Power, that has a Right to dictate. One, who has the Aſcendant, if in ſhort he does not always find Things, as he commonly will, ready done to his Hands, has ſo great Opportunities of facilitating the Execution of his Deſigns, that he cannot eaſily fail of Succeſs. It was this Power, which diſarmed the Soldier, who was ſent with expreſs Orders, and came with a full Reſolution, to aſſaſſinate C. Marius. It is neceſſary to a General at the Head of an Army; and, eſpecially, to Princes, in whom we therefore expreſs it by a peculiar Character, That of Majeſty. It was frequently ſeen in the ancient Senate, and afterwards in the Emperors of Rome, ſome of which might probably owe their Elevation to it. But perhaps it hath no where diſcovered it ſelf more eminently, or in more Inſtances than in the Britiſh Senate.

6. I have the longer inſiſted on this natural Prerogative, as it appears, ſo far as we are able to judge of the Cardinal's Manner, and the wonderful Facility, wherewith he continually brought his Deſigns to bear, to have been one of the ſuperior Diſtinctions, in his Character. And it is not improbable, his Superiority, in this Reſpect, might afford the real Occaſion for a common Prejudice, which has been entertained againſt him, as if he was naturally of a Temper proud, inſolent, and over-bearing. For, notwithſtanding there is a very ſenſible and wide Difference between ſuch a Temper, and that innate Authority, of which I have been ſpeaking; yet the Generality of the World, judging more by Appearances, than by the true Reaſon and Meaſure of Things, may eaſily confound Qualities in themſelves really oppoſite, but which, at firſt View, bear ſome Reſemblance of one another. They who have drawn the Cardinal in Colours, or taken thoſe Prints of him which ſtill remain, ſeem to have had a particular Deſign of giving him this Air; but it is no where expreſſed with ſo much Life, Power, and Grace, as in the excellent Statue by Mr. Bird lately done, and erected in Chriſt-Church at the Expence of the Right Reverend the Lord Biſhop of Wincheſter, Sir Jonathan Trelawny.

7. After Mr. Wolſey was made Chaplain to the King, according to Lord Herbert Chaplain in the Houſehold, having frequent and juſt Occaſion of being in the Preſence, and of ſaying Maſs in the King's Cloſet, he endeavoured to improve theſe Honour's and Advantages to their proper Ends. And was careful to addreſs himſelf to thoſe, who were obſerved to have the greateſt Weight and Authority at Court, and to be moſt in the King's Favour. He endeavoured, particularly, and with Succeſs, to inſinuate himſelf into the good Graces of Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter, at that Time Lord Privy Seal, and of Sir Thomas Lovel [s] Chancellor of the Exchequer, [t] Treaſurer of the Houſehold, [u] Preſident of the Council, and [x] Knight of the Garter, afterwards [y] Conſtable of the Tower, and [z] Maſter of the Wards. This great Man, obſerving his uncommon Capacity and Diligence, not only thought him worthy of Preferment, but of being employed in the important Affairs of State. And it was not long before they had a proper Occaſion, whereof I ſhall give an Account in the next Chaprer, of doing

1. THERE was a Treaty of Marriage at that Time depending between the King, and Lady Margaret Ducheſs Dowager of Savoy, only Daughter of Maximilian the Emperor; concerning which, in an Interview between theſe two Potentates, ſome Overtures had been formerly made. The King, adviſing with Biſhop Fox, and Sir Thomas Lovel, about an Embaſſy to the Emperor relating to that important Article, they took the Opportunity of recommending Mr. Wolſey, as a proper Perſon to be employed, in negotiating it.

2. Several Conventions relating to this Treaty, are recited at large by [a] Mr. Rymer, but not as negotiated between the Emperor Maximilian, and Henry the Seventh of England: But between Henry, and Philip King of Caſtile, Brother to the Lady Margaret; to the Conditions whereof, the principal Import of this Embaſſy might be to gain Maximilian's Conſent and Approbation.

3. The King being deſirous to confer perſonally with Mr. Wolſey, who had been ſo advantagiouſly recommended to him, and that he might make ſome Judgement of his Abilities from his own Knowledge and Obſervation, commanded him to be brought into his Preſence, and having propoſed ſeveral Things to him relating to Affairs of State, diſcovered him to be a Perſon of ſo prompt a Wit, and withal of ſo excellent an Underſtanding, that he thought him fit for the Charge to which he had been recommended, and that required great Nicety and Addreſs in the Conduct of it: And thereupon ſpeedy Orders were given that he ſhould prepare for his Journey.

4. Whilſt his Inſtructions were drawing up, he had frequent Acceſs to the King and Council, to whom he continually gave freſh Proofs of his Capacity for political Affairs. Having received his Diſpatches, he ſet forward from Richmond; about Four in the Afternoon he came to London, where he found a Barge from Graveſend, that lay ready to receive him. In leſs than three Hours he was at Graveſend, where he ſtayed no longer than while Poſt-horſes could be provided for him to Dover; where he arrived the next Morning, and immediately took the Opportunity of a Paſſage-boat that was juſt going to ſet Sail for Calais; to which Place he came long before Noon: And proceeded forward with ſuch Expedition, as brought him that Night to the Imperial Court, which was then in Flanders.

5. The Emperor having Notice, that a Perſon was come with Credentials, and in Quality of an Embaſſador from the King of England, immediately gave him Audience. His Imperial Majeſty readily embraced ſo proper an Occaſion of ſhewing his Regard to that wiſe and great Monarch, and his good Ally. Tho' it is probable the Affair in particular, wherewith Mr. Wolſey was charged, might alſo contribute to make the Way to his Audience more open and eaſy. It is an Argument, the Buſineſs in general upon which his Maſter had impowered him to treat, was very acceptable, that his Propoſals were ſo ſoon received, and every Article of them approved.

6. However that Treaty came, in the Event, to nothing; for it being protracted from Time to Time, by Reaſon of the King's Infirmities, who was now in the Twenty-ſecond Year of his Reign, not only much afflicted with the Stone, but alſo, at certain Intervals, with the Tyſick, he ſeemed rather to turn his Views towards another World, and upon doing ſome [b] charitable Works preparatory to it, than to think of celebrating the Rites of Marriage, notwithſtanding all the Overtures which had been made, and concluded, to that End.

7. But to return to the Progreſs of this Negotiation. Mr. Wolſey having opened his Credentials to the Emperor, made it his humble Requeſt, for Reaſons reſpecting the ſpecial Service of both

Courts,

Courts, that his Return might be expedited. To which Requeſt the Emperor was ſo favourable, that the next Morning he received his Diſpatches, wherein every Thing was agreed to, that had been propoſed on the Part of his Maſter. Upon this he immediately took Poſt for Calais, conducted by ſuch Perſons, as the Emperor had appointed to attend him, on the Way.

8. He came to Calais at the Opening of the Gates, where he found the Paſſengers ready to put to Sea, in the ſame Boat, which lay ſo conveniently for him, when he arrived, in his Way forward, at Dover, to which Place he returned about Ten before Noon. And Poſt-horſes being there ready for him, he came that Night to the Court at Richmond. Where taking his Repoſe, after ſo fatiguing a Journey, 'till the next Morning, he then prepared to throw himſelf at the King's Feet, as he came firſt out of his Bedchamber, to hear Maſs in his Cloſet. The King not expecting to ſee him there, and ſuppoſing he was not gone upon his Embaſſy, gave him a ſevere Rebuke for his Neglect of the Orders wherewith he had been charged; upon which, to the King's great Surprize, he addreſſed himſelf in the following Words. "If it may "pleaſe your Highneſs, I have been already with the Emperor, "and diſpatched your Affairs, I truſt with your Grace's Contentation." And then he preſented his Letters from the Emperor.

9. The King diſſembling, for the preſent, his Admiration at the extraordinary Diſpatch and quick Return, which Mr. Wolſey had made, asked him if he had received no Orders by a Meſſenger that had been ſent after him; and who, it was ſuppoſed, might overtake him before he got out of London; he told his Majeſty he had met with ſuch a Meſſenger, upon the Road, in his Return, who acquainted him with what he had in Command from his Majeſty; but that himſelf, when at the Imperial Court, having preconceived the Subject-matter of it, as abſolutely neceſſary to his Majeſty's Service, had preſumed, of his own Accord, to ſupply the Defect of his Credentials, in that Particular; and becauſe he had herein exceeded his Commiſſion, he humbly implored his Majeſty's moſt gracious Pardon.

10. The King, being pleaſed with the Expedient, and, in general, with the Succeſs of his Negotiation, excuſed a Temerity, which on other Occaſions has ſometimes proved fatal to thoſe who have taken upon them to execute certain Projects, to which their Orders did not extend, and who could perhaps have pleaded Reaſons of Neceſſity or Advantage, of equal Force with thoſe, upon which Mr. Wolſey had been induced to make ſo bold an Effort of his Zeal for the King's Intereſt's. Yet he had not only Aſſurances of Pardon, but the Royal Thanks for a Service, which, as to the Manner of it, is rarely to be drawn into Imitation, and never without great Danger.

11. The King for that Time diſmiſs'd Mr. Wolſey, to the End he might take ſome Refreſhment after his Journey, and commanded him to attend when Dinner was over. In which Interval, it is no unreaſonable Conjecture, that a Perſon animated with his Views and Spirit, inſtead of conſulting his Eaſe, and the Appetites of Hunger or Thirſt, would rather take the Opportunity, if he had not ſeen them before, of waiting on his two Patrons, and of recounting to them the Circumſtances and Succeſs of an Embaſſy, wherein he had the Honour to be employed, upon their Recommendation. And they could not but be highly pleaſed to find, by ſo happy an Experiment, that they were not miſtaken in their Opinion of him; nor had led the King into any Miſtake, by the Repreſentations, which they had made in his Favour. Cavendiſh reports they expreſs'd their Satisfaction at his Conduct in a very obliging Manner; and particularly commended his Wit for the Means he found of ſupplying what was omitted in his Inſtructions.

12. Mr. Wolſey was ready, at the Time appointed, to report his Embaſſy, which he did ſo diſtinctly, with ſo good a Grace, and in ſo proper and [c] eloquent a Manner, that he received the Applauſe of the whole Council, and was conſidered by them as a Perſon, who, in every Reſpect, had given Proofs of a Capacity, equal to his Addreſs and Diligence. The King was, on all Accounts, ſo well ſatisfied with him, that the Deanery of Lincoln being at that Time vacant, his Majeſty of his ſole royal Pleaſure, and without any Mediation of the great Men at Court, immediately made him a Grant of that Dignity. It was in the Year 1508, on the Second of February when he was made Dean of Lincoln. He was inſtituted there by Proxy May 25, 1509; ſo that his [d] Supplication for his Degree of Batchelor in Divinity in the Univerſity of Oxford, April 24, 1510, wherein he is mentioned as Dean of Lincoln, was before his Inſtallation there in Perſon, which was not 'till the 21ſt of Auguſt 1511. [e] On the 20th of February in the ſame Month when he was promoted to the Deanery of Lincoln, he was made Prebendary of Walton Brinhold, in that Church wherein he had alſo ſome Time the Prebend of Stow.

merly his Chaplain. He might ſuppoſe himſelf, by the Aſſiſtance of ſo able and active a Perſon, in a better Condition, to obviate the Deſigns of his potent and perpetual Rival, the Earl of Surrey; and by that means hinder his Lordſhip, who was then Treaſurer, from filling the Court with his own Creatures and Dependants. Though this Deſign of Biſhop Fox did not appear ſo openly, as in the Beginning of the next Reign, when with the Aſſiſtance of Sir Thomas Lovel, he made freſh Inſtances in favour of Mr. Wolſey to the young King.

14. During the ſhort Time that Henry VII reigned after Mr. Wolſey's Promotion to the Deanery of Lincoln, I have not met with any private Records or [f] publick Memoirs, which give any Light into the Hiſtory of his Life. It has been commonly indeed reported, and ſeveral Writers have mentioned it as a Thing paſt all Doubt, that he was made Almoner and Privy-Counſellor to that King, but the Truth of the Facts does not appear, or of either of them, from any publick [g] Inſtrument: And as to the ſpecifick Time when theſe Honours were conferred on him, there is ſtill as great Uncertainty.

1. MR. Wolſey, after the Death of his royal Patron Henry the Seventh, ſoon found Means of inſinuating himſelf into the Favour of his Son and Succeſſor. The Reaſons, upon which Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter firſt introduced him to Court, and placed him in a Light proper to his aſpiring Genius, ſtill ſubſiſted; and his Capacity for Affairs of State appeared ſtill more conſpicuous, the more he was converſant or employed in them. He had now, indeed, drawn the Eyes of the Court upon himſelf, and was in ſo great Reputation and Eſteem, that he became in good Meaſure capable of puſhing his Fortune, on the Merit of his own Character. But what principally tended to facilitate his Advancement, was his happy Addreſs to thoſe Inclinations of the young King, which he obſerved to be moſt predominant in him. He had alſo the Art of attaching thoſe ſo effectually to his Intereſts, in whoſe Company the King, as being of the like Age and Diſpoſition, did moſt delight, that they were always ready to forward his Views, and to do him the beſt Offices in their Power: Being of a gay, facetious, and open Temper, he would divert himſelf with them, in ſuch Exerciſes, as were moſt agreeable to the Levity and Paſſions of Youth, and which, if what [b] Polydore Virgil relates be true, did not perfectly ſuit with the Character of a Clergyman, eſpecially of a Prieſt who was poſſeſſed of the firſt Dignity in the Church (for ſo the Deanery of Lincoln was then thought) next to that of a Biſhop; for he would deſcend, as that Author reports, to ſing, to laugh, to rally, and even to dance with them, as if for the Time he had quite laid aſide his proper Character, and that Severity of Behaviour, which became both his Order, and his Station in the Church. It muſt however be obſerved, that amidſt all theſe Irregularities, which, if juſtly charged upon him, I would by no Means undertake to defend or excuſe, he was careful when any proper Occaſion offered, to inſtil wholſome Inſtructions into the Mind of the King, as well in Reſpect to his perſonal as political Conduct, and highly tending, on both Accounts, to his Advantage and Improvement.

2. Mr. Wolſey having by theſe Methods rendered himſelf very acceptable to the King, his Majeſty ſoon took an Occaſion of giving him a moſt ample Teſtimony of his royal Favour and Munificence. For ſhortly after the Attainder of Sir Richard Empſon, a Grant from the Crown was made to him of ſeveral Lands and Tenements ſituate in the Pariſh of St. Brides, by Fleetſtreet, which the Prior of the Convent there, had ſometime conveyed over to that Knight, and which did now, by his Forfeiture, devolve to the Crown. In the ſame Grant are included an Orchard and twelve Gardens, which the Prior of Saint John of Jeruſalem, and his Fraternity, had alſo made over in Form to Sir Richard Empſon for the Term of ninety-nine Years. For which Term the Premiſſes, that had been in his Poſſeſſion, are granted to Mr. Wolſey, his Heirs and Aſſigns; the King expreſsly diſclaiming for himſelf, and his Succeſſors, all Right and Title to them, in Virtue of the ſaid Forfeiture, without any Reſerve whatever of Rent, or Acknowledgement to the Crown.

3. This Grant bears Date the eighteenth Day of October 1509, and Mr. Wolſey is mentioned in it as [i] Counſellor and Almoner to the King; ſo that Biſhop Burnet is miſtaken in his Calculation of the Time, when he was made Almoner, in ſuppoſing it was about the Year 1512: But it is more unaccountable that Mr. Fullman in his Remarks upon the Hiſtory of the Reformation, ſhould make it a Queſtion whether Mr. Wolſey was really Almoner at that Time.

1510. 4. In 1510 [ii] he was preſented by the King to the Rectory of Torrington in the Dioceſe of Exeter, being then Batchelor of Divinity; and on the 17th of February following, was made Canon of the Collegiate-Church of Windſor; and about the ſame Time [k] Regiſtrary of the moſt noble Order of the Garter.

1512. 5. In 1512 [kk] he was preferred by Archbiſhop Bambridge to the Prebend of Bugthorp in the Church of York, wherein he ſucceeded Dean Harrington of that Church; and did alſo in [l] February following ſucceed the ſaid Harrington in that Deanery: About which Time I find an original [ll] Letter from the Archbiſhop, then reſiding as the King's Embaſſador at Rome, under this Direction, but in a different Hand: To my right entirely beloved Broder in Chriſt Mr. Tho. Wulſeye the King's Almoner, and Dean of my Church at York. In the Cloſe of this Letter, the Archbiſhop deſired the Continuance of the Almoner's kind and loving mynde towards him, and his Cauſes. And there are other Expreſſions in it, from which it appears, the Almoner was then a Perſon of conſiderable Weight at Court, and capable of doing his Friends Service with the King. So that notwithſtanding he had not yet attained that Height of Power, to which he afterwards arrived, yet he was continually making nearer Advances towards it, and had a great Share in the King's Confidence, and the publick Adminiſtration; 'till by Degrees, at laſt, in the Year 1515 the whole Direction of Affairs, both in Church and State, was in a Manner committed to him. It may, however, be proper, to give us a more juſt Idea of his Abilities, and a better Light into the Reaſons of his Conduct, to conſider in both Reſpects the Situation of Affairs, and ſome of the principal Events, wherein he was intereſted before that Period.

6. In Reſpect to the State of the Nation, upon the Demiſe of King Henry the Seventh, we find his Son, a young Prince of an active and enterpriſing Spirit, aſcending the Throne, and in Poſſeſſion of a large Treaſure which his Father had amaſſed, amounting to the Sum of Eighteen hundred thouſand Pounds, a larger Fund than any King of England had ever ſeen at one Time in his Exchequer before. Another extraordinary Advantage which Henry the Eighth had, upon his Acceſſion to the Throne, above many of his Predeceſſors, was a clear, undiſputed, and univerſally acknowledged Title. The contending Houſes of York and Lancaſter, whoſe different Claims to the Crown had, for many ſucceſſive Reigns, occaſioned a vaſt and almoſt continued Flow of Blood, were united in his Perſon, by the Marriage of the Princeſs Elizabeth, eldeſt Daughter of Edward the Fourth, to Henry Earl of Richmond his Father the late King; but who for Reaſons either of Policy, or an irreconcileable Prejudice to the Houſe of York, would never recogniſe his Queen's Title, tho' his own was defective, even as derived from the Lancaſtrian Line itſelf. Henry the Eighth had not only a Soul which animated him to great Atchievements, but a Body formed to ſuſtain Labour and Hardſhip; of a regular and majeſtick Shape, and apt to give ſttong and awful Impreſſions of that Authority, wherewith he was inveſted: With theſe Advantages of Body and Mind, which he owed to Nature, he was diſtinguiſhed by a great many acquired and excellent Endowments. He underſtood Latin very well; had made conſiderable Progreſs in Theology and Philoſophy; and was ſo great a Maſter of Muſick, that he compoſed two intire Maſſes, which were frequently ſung in his Chappel: But being inflamed to a high Degree with the Thirſt of Glory, he much addicted himſelf to the martial Exerciſes then in Faſhion, wherein his Strength and Dexterity rendered him continually ſuperior to his Competitors; ſo that, at Juſts and Tournaments, he even carried away the Prize from Perſons highly celebrated for their Skill and Reputation in ſuch Kind of Atchievements. Yet it muſt not be diſſembled, that as his great Talents had accidentally an ill Effect in expoſing him to the Arts of Flattery, againſt which the Wiſdom and Experience of Age, do often prove too inſecure a Guard; ſo he was ſuſceptible of other Temptations more incident to the common Paſſions and Ardour of Youth, eſpecially in Perſons fired with the Luſt of Ambition: So that his Courage did not ſeem to be altogether without ſome latent Mixture of Cruelty, which, in the Sequel of his Reign, more openly diſcovered it ſelf; and his good Diſpoſitions towards improving himſelf in the more uſeful and polite Parts of Learning, were attended with certain Symptoms of Opiniatry, and a viſible Impatience of being oppoſed, whether in Reſpect to his Sentiments, or his Inclination. If he ſometimes gave proper and ample Teſtimonies of a magnificent Spirit, he has been charged, on other Occaſions, as being not only of a different and leſs generous Diſpoſition, but rather inclined to Avarice; which he diſcovered by the more violent Methods, that were ſometimes taken by him, of extorting Money from his Subjects. Without deſcending into the Detail of his Character, there was found ſo great a Variety in it, of good and leſs commendable Qualities, that it ſometimes appears hard to determine, if we may judge from his natural Temper, which of them operated with more Force: Tho' were we to make a Judgement concerning them, from what happened in the following Part of his Reign, and in particular from the Treatment which moſt of his royal Conſorts, which ſome of his Friends and principal Favourites, and eſpecially his great and faithful Miniſter, Cardinal Wolſey, met with, it ſeems to be leſs Matter of Diſpute, on which Side his Qualities did really preponderate.

7. I thought proper to obſerve this in general, concerning the Character of Henry the Eighth, that it might appear, how far the Perſon, whoſe Hiſtory I am Writing, might be ſuppoſed to act in the Direction of Affairs under him, from his own Judgement, or Reaſons of State; and how far, with Regard to the Temper or Inclinations of his Maſter.

8. Henry VIII, when he firſt took the Reins of Government into his Hands, was alſo very happy in a wiſe and faithful Council, ſelected from among thoſe who had been in the greateſt Confidence with Henry the Seventh, by Advice, or upon the Recommendation of that virtuous and prudent Lady, Margaret Ducheſs of Richmond, Grandmother to the preſent King. But the two Perſons to whom the Adminiſtration of Affairs, was principally committed, were Thomas Howard Earl of Surrey, afterwards Duke of Norfolk, and Richard Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter; the former of them being at that Time Lord Treaſurer, the other Secretary of State and Lord Privy Seal. It has been obſerved before, that certain Animoſities between theſe two great Men, did probably give the firſt Occaſion upon which Mr. Wolſey was introduced to Court. Some have thought their mutual Jealouſies and Altercations proceeded from a Deſire, which each of them entertained of having, or, at leaſt, of being thought to have, the greateſt Share in the King's Favour. Whatever might be the Origin or End of their Emulation,

Emulation, it was too viſible they ſought all Means of doing reciprocal ill Offices, and, had that been practicable, of ſupplanting one another. They often quarelled, and by the Interpoſition of the King, or of common Friends, had, to Appearance, been reconciled; but ſome latent Impreſſions of former Injuries ſtill remained, which were ready upon any ſleight Provocation to break out, and openly diſcover themſelves. My Lord Privy Seal did not want ſpecious Grounds upon which to charge the Treaſurer. He repreſented to the King, that the great Sum left by his Father had been miſapply'd and exhauſted; that in the Diſpoſition of the King's [m] Bounty, the Earl conſidered nothing ſo much, as how he might beſt advance his own Fortune, or provide for his Friends; and that all his Actions and Deſigns pointed one Way or other at his own Intereſts. The Treaſurer urged in his own Defence, that he had diſpoſed of the King's Money, in Purſuance of his Majeſty's ſpecial Order and Appointment, and that the Secretary envying him the Glory of his Majeſty's Favour, did, for that Reaſon, accuſe, and endeavour to diſgrace him. The Truth is, the patrimonial Eſtate of the Earl had been much impaired by the civil Wars in the foregoing Reign, when himſelf was for ſome Time made a Priſoner: And his Conduct, in making Uſe of his great Power and Intereſt at Court towards retrieving the Fortunes of his Family, had nothing in it extraordinary or unprecedented. And tho' he was later in Credit than the Biſhop of Wincheſter, yet being a Man of Spirit, and having an excellent Underſtanding, he eaſily found Means of ſerving himſelf and his Friends, notwithſtanding all the Obſtacles which that Prelate could throw in his Way, who yet was a very wiſe and able Counſellor, and thoroughly acquainted with all the Myſteries of State. But as with Stateſmen the true Reaſon is generally diſſembled or concealed, it is not impoſſible, that the Imputations caſt upon the Treaſurer by the Privy Seal, might not ſolely proceed from a Motive of doing the King, or the Nation Service, but in ſome Degree out of Oppoſition to the Deſigns of the Earl, who had not only enriched himſelf, but his whole Family; filled the Court with his Creatures, and every where ſettled ſuch Dependencies as rendered him formidable to thoſe, who were not upon good Terms of Amity or Alliance with him: And of this the Biſhop was ſo apprehenſive, that he thought it neceſſary to introduce a Perſon to Court, if ſuch a One could be found, of a bold and active Spirit, of a ready Wit, and inſinuating Addreſs, who might in Time, ſerve as a Counterpoiſe to the Treaſu-

m The Conſumption of the King's Treaſure, is not ſo directly charged by Biſhop Burnet, upon the Earl of Surrey, *as upon the King himſelf. rer's rer's Power and Greatneſs, and at laſt perhaps be the Inſtrument of procuring his Removal; and the Event ſhewed, that the Biſhop, in recommending Mr. Wolſey, upon this View, was not miſtaken in his Man.

9. The Beginning of this Reign, was very happy and auſpicious upon another Account. The Nation then enjoyed perfect Tranquillity at home, and was in Friendſhip and Alliance with all the neighbouring Potentates. The good Diſpoſition which the People were in, upon the King's ſucceeding to the Crown, was very much improved by his calling a new Parliament; this they looked upon as a good Earneſt of his Intention to exerciſe a legal Government, and of his having a juſt and tender regard to the Rights and Liberties of his People; in the Poſſeſſion of which, they will never think themſelves perfectly ſecure, while they are by any Means precluded from ſending their Repreſentatives frequently to Parliament. But the Proceeding of the King, in relation to Empſon and Dudley, ſtill endeared him the more to his Subjects, by giving them a greater Idea of his Juſtice; as the Execution of his Father's Will, by which Reparation was offered to thoſe who had ſuffered by the rigorous Proceedings of thoſe Men, tended very much to demonſtrate his Clemency and Goodneſs. For beſides the Promiſe of Reſtitution where the Rights of any of his Subjects had been unjuſtly invaded, he publiſhed, under certain Reſtrictions, an Act of Indemnity, but the Benefit whereof did not extend to thoſe two notorious Inſtruments of Violence and Oppreſſion in the former Reign. Though they acted by Virtue of the King's Warrant, in reviving certain obſolete Laws, and in taking the Advantage of thoſe Pains and Forfeitures, which had been incurred by ſeveral Offences againſt ſuch Laws; and tho' they endeavoured to excuſe the Rigour of their Proceedings, both upon a Pretence of publick Good, and the King's ſpecial Service and Intereſt; yet this Defence, however it carried ſomething of a ſpecious Appearance in it, was not admitted as reaſonable or ſufficient: And the Clamour of the People againſt them being general, and running very high, eſpecially from thoſe who had been perſonally aggrieved, it was thought adviſeable in the Beginning of this Reign, in order to render the firſt Proceedings of it more popular, to make them a Sacrifice to the Demands of publick Juſtice. For it appeared, their general Commiſſion from the King, upon which they pretended to juſtify themſelves, was not only executed with a Severity contrary to all equitable Conſtruction, but that they had, in many Reſpects, exceeded the Powers of it, and abuſed their Authority in open Violation of the Laws. What rendered them ſtill more obnoxious to the Publick, was, That tho' they had, by their rapacious Fines or other Mulcts, brought large Sums of Money into the King's Exchequer; Yet they had taken care, by many private and

ſometimes by more open Means of Conveyance, to enrich themſelves to a Degree, that was become highly invidious; and the more ſo, on Account of the ſmall Fortune to which they were both of them originally born: Dudley indeed was better deſcended, and a Gentleman; but Empſon, though raiſed at laſt to the Order of Knighthood, was only the Son of a Sievemaker. Upon the Death of Henry the Seventh, who had employed them both in the ſame Service, as Men learned in the Laws, and protected them as acting by his Direction, and in Subſerviency to a Paſſion for accumulating Money, which was thought to be too predominant in him; they met with a Fate common, under a Change of Government, to Favourites, chargeable with abuſing the Truſt or Powers veſted in them, under a former Adminiſtration. For the Reſentments of an oppreſſed or injured People, always ariſing from the ſame reaſonable Grounds, will ever put them upon the ſame Methods of ſeeking Redreſs, and, where it is practicable, of avenging themſelves upon the unjuſt Authors of their Ruin or Misfortunes.

10. The loweſt and moſt ignorant Part of Mankind have a natural Idea of Probity and Juſtice, and in Particular of the Neceſſity which lies upon the civil Magiſtrate, of acting conformably to them, in Order to preſerve the Peace and Happineſs of Society, and to ſecure the Rights and Liberties of private Perſons. However Men have differed in determining the Meaſures of civil Obedience to the ſovereign Power, or in what Hands ſoever they have thought that Power ſhould be ultimately lodged; yet they have all agreed in deteſting Tyranny and Oppreſſion, as contrary to the primary End and Inſtitution of civil Government, which is, confeſſedly on all Sides, for Protection and Security of the Subject, not for Deſtruction. And therefore, if ſome have thought that the Perſon of the ſupreme Magiſtrate is ſacred and inviolable, and upon no Pretence of Male-Adminiſtration whatever to be reſiſted, it is not in Favour of illegal and unjuſt Force, which they abhor and condemn; but becauſe Order requires, that there ſhould be a laſt Reſource of Power ſomewhere, and that Men ſhould know diſtinctly, and in ſome regular Method, where to find it. But no ſuch Method can be found in popular and tumultuary Proceedings, where the Frame of Government is unhinged; or, where every Man aſſumes the Character of a Judge, and a Right, without any legal Reſtraint, to do that which ſeems good in his own Eyes. It is not then, as hath been ſometimes diſingenuouſly inſinuated, to ſupport or encourage a tyrannical Government, that this Notion has been advanced; but to prevent the barbarous and dreadful Effects of Tyranny, when the ſovereign Power devolves, or is pretended to devolve, on a confuſed and diſorderly Multitude. Since there is a Mixture of Imperfection in every Government ment, ariſing from the preſent imperfect State and Corruption of Mankind, that Model ſeems preferable, which, all Things conſidered, offers the leaſt Violence to Order, and to the eſtabliſhed Laws. If, at certain Conjunctures, and in the natural Courſe of Things, the Danger of ſuffering by unjuſt and illegal Force is unavoidable, from the Prince on one Part, or the People on the Other; it ſeems more eligible, and for the greater Benefit of Society, that a Power of doing Miſchief ſhould be lodged in One, than in many Hands. The Proſpect of Redreſs by the Death of a ſingle Tyrant, by the Change of his Miniſters or his Meaſures, is much more open, than where ſeveral diſtinct Heads, eſpecially if they act in Concert, have eſtabliſhed ſo many Dependencies, or erected ſo many diſtinct Colonies, in Subſerviency to the common Tyranny, throughout all Parts of a Nation.

11. Theſe Reflections are not altogether foreign to the Caſe of Empſon and Dudleigh: Though there was no Way of coming at them by the Perſons, whom they had ſo generally aggrieved and injured, under the Reign of that Prince, who employed and protected them; yet, no ſooner were they left to ſtand upon their own Defence, without his Protection, or theſe other adventitious Helps which ordinarily accompany the Sunſhine of royal Favour, but they felt themſelves oppreſſed, and at length, overwhelmed by a greater Weight, than they were by any Means able to ſuſtain. And the People, who are never better pleaſed than when publick Juſtice is done upon mercenary and rapacious Miniſters, had the Satisfaction in a ſhort Time of ſeeing them both brought to condign Puniſhment, and ſeveral of their inferior Agents and Abettors to open Shame and [n] Diſgrace.

12. Our Affairs at that Time, if we conſider them in Reſpect to foreign States and Alliances, were alſo in a very happy Situation.

13. Maximilian the Emperor was glad, on many Accounts, to preſerve the Alliance which he had entered into with ſo conſiderable a State as England, but eſpecially, that he might better ſecure to himſelf and his Houſe, Burgundy and the Low-Countries, of which he was poſſeſſed in Right of Mary his Wife, Daughter to Charles the Bold. For as it was thought impolitick in the Court of England under the former Reign, and not very conſiſtent with the Character of Wiſdom, for which Henry the Seventh had acquired ſo great Reputation, that a Ceſſion of thoſe Countries was ſo eaſily conſented to in Favour of a neighbouring Prince, and otherwiſe very Potent; ſo it was certainly very adviſeable for him, by a Renewal or Continuance of former Treaties, to prevent any Mea-

ſures that England might take towards retrieving that Error in Politicks. Though there was indeed one political Reaſon reſpecting both Powers, why the [o] Amity between them ſhould be preſerved, founded on the mutual Advantage, which their Ships had reſpectively of trading, or in foul Weather of repairing to the Ports and Havens on each Side. Theſe Reaſons of Amity between Maximilian and our Court, had been corroborated by a late Treaty of Marriage, which yet after ſeveral Conventions to that End came to nothing, between Charles Grandchild and Heir of Maximilian, and the Lady Mary Siſter to the preſent King of England. But tho' this Treaty had not the Effect propoſed, yet in the Progreſs of it, Occaſion was adminiſtred of ſeveral Overtures towards Peace and Alliance between theſe two Potentates in other Reſpects, to which, on both Sides a proper Sanction was given.

14. The Intereſt's of Maximilian, and of his Daughter Margaret Ducheſs of Savoy and Regent of the Low-Countries, were ſo complicated and inſeparable, that an Alliance with her naturally followed upon the Conventions which were made with his Imperial Majeſty. And yet there were Reaſons alſo reſpecting the perſonal Qualities and Conduct of this Lady, whoſe Vertue, Wiſdom, and Diſcretion, had gained her great Reputation, why the Court of England ſhould deſire to cultivate a good Correſpondence with her.

15. Lewis King of France, the Twelfth of that Name, had great Reaſon too for keeping himſelf at that Time upon good Terms with England. He was not only engaged in War with ſeveral Powers in Italy, where he was puſhing the Deſigns of his Ambition with all the Force he could raiſe, but he was making an Attempt to annex for ever the Dukedom of Bretaign, which he claimed in Right of his Wife, to the Crown of France. And as it was another Imputation upon the Conduct of our Court in the late Reign, that they had ſuffered that Dukedom, ſo near to this Iſland, and of ſo great Conſequence to us whenever we might think fit to make a Deſcent upon France, to be united with that Crown, it was very natural for ſo wiſe and jealous a Prince as Lewis the Twelfth, to conſerve the Peace with us, at leaſt 'till the Union, which he had ſo ardently deſired and projected, ſhould be more effectually eſtabliſhed.

16. The Reaſon on our Part why we had entered into a Treaty, which not only ſtrengthened an old Enemy by the Acceſſion of a neighbouring Country, but rendered us leſs capable of annoying him in Caſe of a Rupture, by depriving us of their Aſſiſtance, who had formerly been and were ſtill well diſpoſed to be our Confederates, can only be aſcribed to the ill State and Condition of our Affairs at Home, to which they had been of late Years reduced by our many inteſtine Diſſentions. Lewis however was ſo ſenſible of the Advantage which he had obtained from us, and ſo ſedulous to prevent any Occaſion of our diſturbing him in the quiet Poſſeſſion of it, that on the 23d of March after the King's Acceſſion, he procured a Treaty of Peace and firm Friendſhip to be made with England, which on the twentieth Day of June following was formally ratified. In which Treaty he not only acknowledgeth himſelf [p] Debtor to the Crown of England for the Value of a Hundred and twenty thouſand Crowns, but accountable for the [q] Expence which Henry late King of England had been at, in Defence of his Claim to the Dukedome of Bretaign in Right of Ann Relict of Charles late King of France, and now married to himſelf. So that it appears, Henry the Seventh did not ſo much concur by a ſubſequent Conſent, that Bretaign ſhould be annexed to the Crown of France, as that he antecedently and directly aſſiſted his Brother Lewis to that End.

17. Ferdinand King of Arragon, in his own Right, and of Caſtile in Right of his Wife Iſabel during her Life, had Reaſons for maintaining a ſtrict Union with England, not only in Regard to the Intereſts of his Daughter Catherine, Relict of the late Prince Arthur, and after his Death eſpouſed and now married to the preſent King; but from a Proſpect, wherein the Event ſhewed he was not deceived, of Aſſiſtance from his Son-in-Law, in Caſe of a Rupture with France. For when the War afterwards broke out between thoſe two Powers, the King of England ſent under the Command of Thomas Grey Marqueſs of Dorſet (who was accompanied by ſeveral Noblemen and other Perſons of Diſtinction) about Ten thouſand Souldiers to the Aid of Ferdinand, among whom there are computed by the Spaniſh Hiſtorians to have been Five thouſand Archers. But, the Event of this Expedition was not ſo glorious to England, as might have been expected, from the Bravery of her Troops, and the Reputation of her former Atchievements; becauſe tho' Ferdinand found the Engliſh Troops of great Service to him, yet preferring his private Schemes to the Good of the common Cauſe, the Engliſh General did not think it adviſeable to concur with him in all the Operations of War, which he had projected.

But

But without putting future and remote Caſes, to which ſo wiſe and politick a Prince as Ferdinand, may naturally be ſuppoſed to have had Regard in preſerving Peace with England, the Eſpouſals of his Daughter Katherine to the young King, was of itſelf a powerful Inducement, why he ſhould take all proper Meaſures to that End, and even make ſo near and ſacred an Alliance the Foundation of a more ſtrict and inviolable Friendſhip. Accordingly he took an early Occaſion, after the King's Coming to the Crown, to ſend certain Miniſters with full [r] Powers, and ample Inſtructions, to renew the Treaty both concerning Peace, and the Marriage, with our Court. In their Commiſſion that Prince ſeems to ſpeak from the Heart, and to expreſs the Sentiments of a Father, as well as of a Friend and Ally: But he is ſo particularly taken up with the Affair of the Marriage, that he makes all the Conceſſions by way of diſclaiming whatever Right might in future Time be pretended by Spain to her Dowry, or to any Part of it, that the Court of England could poſſibly deſire. He declares in the moſt plain and undiſguiſed Manner, it is his Will and Pleaſure, that the former Treaty relating to Peace and Marriage, and every Article of it ſhould continue in force and be ratified anew: And if any contingent unforeſeen Circumſtances ſhould make it requiſite, that certain new Articles ſhould be added, the better to explain or corroborate the Former, or to effect, that the main Deſign of the Treaty ſhould be more fully or perfectly executed, then they are empowered to agree to an Addition of thoſe Articles. More ſtrongly to cement the Union between thoſe two Crowns, by the Blood of Spain and England, the Commiſſioners have it in Charge, to renew and confirm the Treaty of Marriage between Charles Prince of Caſtile, and the Lady Mary the King's Siſter, and to make any new Conventions which may cauſe it to operate effectually. And here I ſhall take Leave to obſerve, on occaſion of a Queſtion which Biſhop Burnet makes [ſ], Whether Queen Catherine was Princeſs of Wales, that ſhe is expreſsly ſtiled ſo in this Commiſſion [t].

18. James the Fourth King of Scotland, was not only in a Treaty of Peace and Alliance with King Henry, but his Brother-in-Law by the Marriage of Margaret his Siſter. But ſome Umbrage notwithſtanding had been taken in the Cloſe of the late Reign, on account of the great Attachment which the Court of Scotland ſhewed to that of France, and the ſtrict Correſpondence which was then kept up and obſerved between them: Yet ſome time before the Death of Henry the Seventh, theſe Jealouſies were diſpelled, and a good Underſtanding re-eſtabliſhed between James, and that Prince his Father-in-Law; ſo that his Son had been but a very ſhort Time in Poſſeſſion of the Throne, before James ſent Letters of Congratulation to him, and cauſed the Treaty of Peace with him to be renewed. The Oath which was made the 29th of Auguſt 1509, in his Name, by Andrew Biſhop of Murray, as to the Form and Tenour of it, appears ſomewhat remarkable: And the King the ſame Day took an Oath to the ſame Effect, towards preſerving Peace and Friendſhip on his Part, at his [w] Mannour of Hanworth, after which, proper Inſtruments were then and there ſigned and atteſted. And upon the Tenth of September following a Commiſſion was made to Sir Robert Drury, Sir Marmaduke Conſtable, and one Batemanſon Doctor of Laws, to treat with the King of Scotland or his Commiſſioners, concerning any ſuch Matters of Complaint, Injury or Offence, as might have happened in Breach of the Treaties at the Time ſubſiſting between the two Nations.

19. Julius the Second of an active and martial Spirit, then ſat in the Papal Chair: But he was ſo far from giving the King any Cauſe of Umbrage from that Quarter, that he took all proper Methods to engage his Friendſhip and Alliance. Fearing the further Progreſs of the Arms of Lewis King of France, who had then entered ſome Part of Italy, he thought it might be of the greateſt Importance to him, if he could by any Means bring our King over to his Intereſts, or perſuade him to make War upon France, and by that Means cauſe a Diverſion of the French King's Forces then in Italy, towards the Defence of his own Dominions. Julius upon this View, who took that Name in Honour to the Memory of Cæſar, and not without ſome Emulation, as it has been thought, in Reference to that of his Predeceſſor Alexander the Sixth, makes his Compliment to the King by ſending his Majeſty a golden Roſe dipp'd in Chriſm, and perfumed with Musk, directed to Archbiſhop Warham, who had Inſtructions to preſent it to the King at High Maſs with the Pope's [x] Benediction, with a Letter full of Complaints againſt the French King, and repreſenting him as one, who had no Regard either for God, or a good Name or Conſcience, and, among other Invectives, whoſe Deſign was to lay the Foundation of his Empire, in the Uſurpation and Conqueſt of all Italy. And therefore he employeth the moſt proper and forcible Topicks of Perſuaſion to move the King to engage in his Cauſe, he exhorts him by the Mercies of Chriſt, and the Merits of his famous Anceſtors, who had never forſaken the Church in Diſtreſs, and laſtly, by the ſtrong Tye of his filial Obedience, that he would enter into the Italian League, of which they had conſtituted him the Head.

20. The King thus inſtigated by the Pope, to go into the Confederacy againſt France, and more by his own Ambition to aſſert his Title to that Crown, ſent Chriſtopher Bambridge Archbiſhop of York in Quality of his Ambaſſador to Rome, to concert proper Meaſures with his Holineſs, concerning the Operations of War, and other Projects to be agreed upon towards promoting the common Cauſe. This Prelate acquitted himſelf in negotiating the Buſineſs about which he was ſent, and in his Conduct towards the Pope, ſo much to his Satisfaction, that he ſoon conferred on him a Cardinal's Hat; in Gratitude for which Honour and Dignity he was more earneſt in his Inſtances to the King on the Pope's Behalf. He begged of his Majeſty, that he would conſider the Danger and Diſtreſs which the Holy Father was in; that he would not deſert the Head of the Church in his Extremity, who had deſerved ſo well of the common Cauſe of Chriſtianity, nor ſuffer him to be oppreſſed by the Violence and unjuſt Force of wicked[y] Men. Theſe Repreſentations being agreeable to the King's own Sentiments, were ſo well received and approved, that the Queſtion was propoſed in Council, whether a War with France was at that Time adviſeable. Upon the Debate there were very different Opinions; but it was at laſt determined, that this was a proper Time for the King to claim, and recover the Engliſh Dominions in [z] France. Upon this, firſt it was reſolved, that a monitory Embaſſy ſhould be ſent to Lewis the Twelfth, requiring that he ſhould deſiſt from proſecuting the War in Italy. But that Prince, whether from an Impulſe of Courage or Reſentment; whether confiding in his own Strength, good Fortune, or the Friendſhip of the Emperor, of which he then thought himſelf ſecure, ſhewed no Regard to this Meſſage [a]. Our King being ſtill more irritated by this Behaviour of Lewis, and that he might have more Reaſons than One for a War upon France, ſent by Clarencieux to demand in Form, the Duchies of Normandy, Guyen, Anjou, and Mayn, as his patrimonial Inheritance, and in Caſe of Refuſal, to denounce War; which being proclaimed, it was reſolved that the King ſhould in Perſon invade France; and an Army being levied in Purſuance of this Reſolution, the [b] Care of ſupplying it with Proviſions was committed to the Almoner and new Favourite Mr. Wolſey, who accompanied the King in this Expedition; in the Succeſs and Glory whereof, he in a ſhort Time after found his own Account, by a further Encreaſe of Power, Riches, and Honour; and, which laid the Foundation of them all, of Credit with his Prince. In which View I ſhall leave him,

1. WHEN Henry the Eighth came to the Crown, the greateſt Part of the chriſtian World was in Communion with the Church of Rome, and viſibly conformed to her Faith, her Doctrine, and Worſhip; the Waldenſes or Albigenſes indeed, as they they were called, Inhabitants of that Tract where the Alps are joined with the Pyrhenees, had ſeparated from her; but they were a People of great Simplicity and Ignorance; neither conſiderable for their Number, nor much capable of propagating their Doctrine, in a ſtrict or perſuaſive Way of Argumentation [c]. Beſides, their Neighbours were prepoſſeſſed with ſuch an Opinion concerning certain Impieties wherewith they were charged, and entertained ſuch ſtrong Prejudices againſt them, on that Account, that had they been much better qualified to undertake the Converſion of others, there was little Probability of their ſucceeding in an Attempt, to all Appearance, ſo very impracticable.

2. There were alſo ſome Followers of John Huſs and Jerome of Prague, in Bohemia, who yet differed not much from the eſtabliſhed Doctrine or Worſhip, except in Reference to the Article of the Sacrament, and the Adminiſtration of it, under one Kind. But neither did theſe Perſons appear very formidable, either for their Strength or Learning, or acted with any extraordinary Zeal for diſſeminating their Principles, in Order, by that Means, to gain Proſelytes abroad.

3. There was yet ſome Danger of Schiſm from the Head, as he had been then publickly acknowledged, of the Romiſh Church. Julius the Second, tho' poſſeſſed of ſeveral extraordinary Qualities, yet being rather of a Temper too warm, imperious, and turbulent, had, by his Conduct, provoked certain ſecular Powers, and ſome of his Cardinals, to ſeparate themſelves from him, and to call a Council, which firſt began to be formed by [d] Lewis the Twelfth at Tours; where an Inquiſition being propoſed concerning the Pope's Authority, and his late Actions, they reſolved againſt him upon both Articles; and declared the Sentence, whereby he had condemned and excommunicated them, to be void; Decreeing further, That a monitory Meſſage ſhould be ſent to him, by which he might be perſuaded to embrace Peace, and Moderation; and in Caſe of Incompliance, they would proceed to ſummon him before a free and general Council, according to the Decree of the Council of Baſil. Maximilian, at preſent, united with the French King and the Cardinal's againſt Julius, and ſhortly after a Council was called at Piſa, where his Holineſs was commanded to appear. But the Emperor did not long act in Concert with Lewis in thoſe Meaſures, which ſo viſibly tended to the Pope's Diſgrace and the Diminution of his Authority; ſo that whether in Regard to a perſonal Affection for him, or to the Dignity of the Papal-Chair, or to the Peace of the Church in general, or from any Umbrage at the growing Power of France, and the Succeſs of her Arms, Maximilian thought fit to leave Lewis to himſelf in proſecuting thoſe Deſigns, which were now become, by the Diſtreſs and hard Conditions to which the Pope was reduced, very invidious, and to join with our King, and Ferdinand King of Arragon, in Defence of his Holineſs againſt that Monarch. The Council of [e] Piſa notwithſtanding continued under his Protection in paſſing their Cenſures, and purſuing their Deſigns againſt the Pope; but apprehending themſelves ſlighted by the Inhabitants of that City, they removed to Milan, and being treated there with the like Indignity, they ſhifted the Scene of their Reſidence to Lyons in France, where the Pope not appearing or anſwering according to their Summons, they finally ſuſpended his Authority. Theſe Proceedings irritated the Pope ſo far, that he not only iſſued out his ſpiritual Fulminations againſt Lewis and his Subjects, but exerted the higheſt Inſtance of Power, which any of his Predeceſſors had aſſumed, in Virtue of their ſitting in the Papal-Chair, and expoſed the Kingdom of France, together with that of Navarre, whoſe King favoured Lewis, to the Capture of any Perſon who ſhould attempt to make it: And in Oppoſition to what had been done againſt him, at the Council of Lyons, or rather, to the End he might perfectly annihilate all the Acts and Decrees of it, he ordered one to be held at the Lateran in Rome, at which Silveſter Biſhop of Worceſter, John Biſhop of Rocheſter, Thomas Docwra Lord Prior of Saint John's, aſſiſted on the Part of the Engliſh Church, and where the Authors and Abettors of the other Council were excommunicated, and all their Proceedings declared null.

4. Yet theſe Conteſts between the two Councils, and the Parties who reſpectively adhered to them, did not directly affect the eſtabliſhed Faith, Doctrine, or Worſhip of the Church of Rome, but chiefly turned upon a Diſpute, which to this Day is undetermined, concerning the Extent of the Pope's perſonal Authority, and the Meaſures of Subjection and Obedience due to him, eſpecially in Oppoſition to the Power and Authority of a Council: The Grounds of which Controverſy I am not here concerned to examine. It is ſufficient for my Purpoſe to obſerve at preſent, that wherever, or in what Meaſure ſoever the Superiority was ſuppoſed to be lodged, or did really reſide, the Church in general was not then divided upon any of thoſe Articles relating to Faith, Worſhip, or Diſcipline, from which the Reformation afterwards took its Riſe and proceeded. Julius, whoſe Mind was formed for vaſt Deſigns, had before his Elevation, given his Friends the ſtrongeſt Aſſurances, that he would re-eſtabliſh the Honour and Dignity of the Holy See, and did indeed throughout the whole Courſe of his Government, endeavour to make good thoſe Aſſurances; but he dying about this Time, and being ſucceeded by Leo the Tenth of that Name, who thought proper to take more gentle and pacifick Meaſures with the chriſtian Princes in his Patriarchate, particularly with Lewis the Twelfth, ſoon found Means of reconciling at once that King, and the Cardinals in his Faction, and of putting an End to the Diviſions, which had ſo much troubled the Church under the Pontificate of his Predeceſſor.

There was alſo a warm Conteſt about this Time between the Dominican [f] Fryers, and thoſe of the Order of St. Francis, concerning the immaculate Conception of the holy Virgin. But tho' this was a Subject of much Altercation, and ſcholaſtick Diſpute throughout the Univerſities, and among the Doctors of the Romiſh Church, yet the common Peace and Unity of it was ſtill preſerved.

The Franciſcans held, that the bleſſed Virgin, prevented by the Grace of the Holy Ghoſt, was ſanctified, ſo as never to be ſubject one Moment, at the Time of her Conception, to original Sin. The Dominicans in Oppoſition to this Doctrine maintained, ſhe was conceived as all other Children of Adam are, in Sin; and that the Privilege of an immaculate Conception belonged only to Chriſt. Yet they owned ſhe was by a ſpecial Privilege actually ſanctified in the Womb, much after the ſame Manner as they ſuppoſed a previous Sanctification of John the Baptiſt or the Prophet Jeremy, before they were born. The contending Parties were divided under the two great Chiefs of the ſcholaſtick Wars, Duns Scotus and Thomas of Aquin. The ſubtle Doctor had aſſerted the Holy Virgin to be perfectly and originally free from the common Stain or Contagion of humane Race, and therefore contended, that the anniverſary Feaſt of her Conception ought to be perpetually celebrated in the Church. On the other Side, the angelick Doctor with his Followers, accounted it heretical to ſay, ſhe was conceived without Sin, and condemned the Celebration of that Day as impious, and founded in a dangerous Error.

Pope Sixtus had by a Decree in the Year 1476, determined in Favour of the Franciſcans, and appointed that Feaſt to be annually ſolemnized in the Church for ever: Which Decree he afterwards corroborated by a Bull in 1483; which, notwithſtanding his pretended Infallibility, did not put an End to the Diſpute among thoſe, who yet owned his Authority, and continued in Communion with him; a plain Argument that his perſonal Infallibility at leaſt, even when he pronounced from the Chair, was not then any Article of Faith; for this Controverſy was continued and agitated with much Heat 'till the Year 1509. It was obſervable in the Conduct of it, that the Franciſcans, to repreſent by a ſenſible Image, what they found it very difficult to eſtabliſh in a clear and ſtrict Way of Reaſoning, made a Picture of Joachim and Anna kiſſing, with a Deſign to ſhew, that the Holy Virgin was generated and conceived merely by Virtue of a Kiſs.

5. At Home there appeared at this Time to be as perfect an Union of this Church with that of Rome, as had happened under any preceeding Reign; if there were any Grounds of Complaint from that Side againſt our Biſhops and Paſtors, it could not be on Account of their oppoſing the Pope's Authority, the Doctrine and Diſcipline of the Romiſh Church, or the Powers of the Clergy in general: They were rather blameable indeed for diſcovering too violent and unreaſonable a Zeal againſt ſuch Perſons, whoſe Principles tended to a Reformation of Religion in theſe ſeveral Reſpects.

6. It cannot be denied, there were at this Time in the Kingdom ſeveral Perſons who embraced and endeavoured to propagate certain Doctrines of Wickcliff, and that ſome of his Followers had been perſecuted and even ſuffered Death, for maintaining Principles condemned by the Church. I would by no Means ſay any Thing in Defence of Perſecution purely on a religious Account. Religion is founded in Reaſon; it ſuppoſes the free Uſe and Exerciſe of our reaſonable Faculties, and is therefore to be propagated after a Manner ſuitable to them; that is, in a rational Way of Perſuaſion. All that external Force can do, is to make Men Hypocrites, and compel a formal exterior Aſſent; and therefore ſhould never, upon any Pretence, be uſed either for the Conviction of Men, or the Puniſhment of the Errors into which they may have fallen, provided ſuch Errors do not affect the Peace or Well-being of civil Society.

But then we ſhould be very cautious, tho' Men may really ſuffer upon Principle, and for Conſcience Sake, how we dignify them with the Name and Character of Confeſſors or Martyrs in a proper Senſe; becauſe, their Sufferings may notwithſtanding proceed from an erroneous Perſuaſion: I do not ſay, but even in this Caſe, God may ſometimes approve and reward the Effects of an ignorant or miſtaken Zeal; becauſe the ſtrongeſt Teſt of Obedience, the higheſt Evidence, any Perſon can give of the Sincerity of his Love to God, is to ſuffer, and, where that is required, to lay down his Life for the Truth, or what he really apprehends to be ſo. But ſtill, when we judge concerning the Sufferings of other Men, we are not to regulate our Judgement from the ſecret Motives upon which they may ſuffer, which are known only to God, but from the Principles which they profeſs. Otherwiſe our Judgements ought to be equally favourable to thoſe who ſuffer for the Truth, and who ſuffer againſt the Truth, or perhaps in direct Oppoſition to the Principles of one another.

7. Mr. Fox ſeems, in his Martyrology, not to have had a ſufficient Regard to this Diſtinction. He ſometimes makes Martyrs and Confeſſors of Men, who not only maintained erroneous Doctrines, but who gave juſt Occaſion of Scandal by expreſſing an irregular and indiſcreet Zeal in Defence of them.

8. Whatever Judgement we may form, concerning the Innocency of Error, or the Immunity where the civil Magiſtrate is not concerned, which it has a Right to plead from all penal Reſtraints; yet in Caſes where the State is in viſible Danger of ſuffering by the Toleration of any ill Principles, the civil Magiſtrate has certainly a Right to interpoſe, by temporal Sanctions againſt them: Otherwiſe he cannot anſwer the End of his Inſtitution, which is to ſecure the Peace, and provide for the Happineſs of Society, againſt all thoſe who directly, or indirectly endeavour to deſtroy them.

9. I am not afraid to make theſe Remarks in Defence even of certain of our Engliſh Prelates before the Reformation, who were many of them pious and good Men, tho' obliged, as they conceived, to execute the penal Laws againſt the Lollards, and Followers of Wickcliff, at that Time. It was not for their ſpeculative Opinions, conſidered purely as ſuch, that theſe People were proſecuted; but becauſe in certain Reſpects they maintained Principles derogatory to the Rights of the Prince, injurious to Society, and contrary to the Laws then in Force. This Charge may be eaſily made good by an Induction of Particulars. That chriſtian Princes ought not to make War upon one another, is a Principle, which renders the ſupreme Magiſtrate, in Caſe he be invaded, incapable of defending his Subjects, or of preventing their utter Ruin, and, if that ſhould be attempted, their utter Extirpation. That the Improvement of manual Arts, concerning Things not abſolutely neceſſary to the Support of Life, ſerves only to miniſter Occaſion of Sin, or a ſinful Luxury, is a Concluſion directly tending to promote the great Bane of Society, Idleneſs, and to impoveriſh innumerable Families, who ſubſiſt by the Profits ariſing from manual Occupations, tho' perhaps not of indiſpenſable Neceſſity to the common Ends or Uſes of Life. And laſtly, the Opinion concerning the Unlawfulneſs of paying or receiving Tythes, which were then and are ſtill made Part of our civil Rights, for the Appropriation of which, there was both the Reaſon of the Thing, and a divine Precedent, had ſomething in it ſo weak and capricious, ſo reflecting on the Honour, Wiſdom, and Juſtice of our Legiſlature in the many publick Proviſions to this End, that the Authors of it were very juſtly cenſured, and where they perſiſted in it, expoſed to the civil Penalties awarded againſt them. In ſhort, the Growth of the Lollards and of their enthuſiaſtick Opinions, had been formerly apprehended ſo dangerous to the State, that in the second Year of [g] Henry V, a Law was expresly made to suppress them: And if we may credit [b] Archbishop Parker, in his British Antiquities, it was not without good Reason, that Law was enacted, on Account of their Numbers, and the Tumults they occasioned, to the Disturbance, and even to the Terror of the civil Government.

10. These Things considered, [i] Archbishop Arundel in his Constitutions at Oxford, acted with a due Regard to the Interests of the State, as well as the Peace of the Church: In one Article, indeed, by which he condemns the Reading of Wickcliff's Books, he is represented by Archbishop Parker, as inconsistent with himself, because in his funeral Sermon at Westminster upon the Death of Queen Anne, he had among other excellent Qualities particularly extolled her Zeal and Piety, in devoting Part of her Time for Reading the holy Scriptures. But this Conduct of the [k] Archbishop is not so irreconcileable as the Author of the British Antiquities represents it. The Reading of Wickcliffe's Translation was prohibited, not simply as a Version in the vulgar Tongue, but as disapproved by the Church, because the Translator was not thought to have rendered the Original faithfully, and according to the full Import and true Meaning of the Text, or at least, because it was not a Work of Authority. Archbishop Arundel could not be of Opinion, that it was simply unlawful to render or to read the holy Scriptures in the vulgar Tongue; because in those very Constitutions which prohibit the Reading of Wickcliffe's Books, or any other Version by Persons unauthorized, it is declared, this Prohibition should only continue in Force, 'till such Translations shall be approved by a provincial Council, or the Bishop of the [l] Diocess: Which supposes, in the Judgement of that Prelate, there might be very good Reason why such Translation should be approved when faithfully done, and by Persons duly authorized to that End. Archbishop Arundel might therefore justly applaud Queen Anne for reading the Scriptures in the vulgar Tongue, the Version whereof was tacitly at least allowed, or not condemned by the Church, and yet consistently with this Elogy on that Queen, prohibit the Reading of such Versions, which the Church had condemned. A Liberty, which considered simply in itself, may be both lawful and expedient,

11. And that the Reading of the Scriptures or certain Portions of them in the vulgar Tongue, was not univerſally condemned, but approved and recommended, appears from that Exhortation to the Laity, that they ſhould hear Goddy's Service every Sonday with Reverence and Devotion, and ſay devoutly the Pater-noſter, and hear Goddy's Law taught in the modern [m] Tongue.

12. I cannot therefore, with Submiſſion, think the Cenſure paſſed upon the Death of this Metropolitan by Archbiſhop Parker, to be either ſo very juſt or pious as might have been expected from ſo great and learned a Primate: For he inſinuates, as if in the Circumſtances that attended the Death of Archbiſhop Arundel there was ſomething obſervable, which denoted a judicial Revenge [n] of Providence, upon his Conduct in this Particular. God does, indeed, ſometimes, in the Courſe of his Providence, make himſelf ſo evidently known by the Judgement which he executeth, that it plainly appears to be his Doing, and to point at the particular Occaſion of his interpoſing after ſo ſpecial and remarkable a Manner; but where the Connection, between the Event and the Cauſe or Action to which we refer it, is not viſibly clear, Reaſons both of Modeſty, Prudence, and Charity, ſhould render us very cautious how we interpret the Judgements of God to the Diſadvantage of other Men.

13. To return to the State of the Church at that Time, the Followers of Wickcliff were ſo numerous, that the Laws were put, and ſometimes with too great Rigour, in Execution againſt them. Many of them were obliged to abjure, a Hundred and twenty or more at [o] once, and ſome of thoſe who after Abjuration incurred the Cenſure of the relapſed, were expoſed to the Flames. Theſe Severities are commonly charged upon the Clergy of thoſe Times, as Men of a cruel and perſecuting Spirit, and as if ſuch a Spirit were the more peculiar Character of Clergymen. But why ſhould the Clergy, and they alone ſuffer, becauſe the Laws enacted, and executed by the ſecular Power, were thought ſevere? The Clergy neither have, nor ought to have, conſidered as ſuch, any Power but what is purely ſpiritual: If the civil Magiſtrate will, in Conſequence of what is thought neceſſary to preſerve Peace or Order in the State, inflict, upon any Account, temporal Penalties upon the Subject, Penalties that are ſuppoſed unreaſonable, or contrary to the Rules of natural Equity; he is to anſwer for the Abuſe of his Power in inflicting them, as being the proper Judge, what Laws are moſt fit to attain the Ends of civil Government: And if he thinks proper to give greater Force to eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, by adding certain penal Sanctions, as conſidering any heretical Opinions deſtructive to the State, he has the ſame Right to do it, if that Conſideration be well founded, as he has to coerce or puniſh Delinquents of any Kind. But if in this Caſe he ſhould extend his Power too far, it is he alone and not a Body of Men who claim no ſuch Power, that is accountable for the Exerciſe of it. To obviate what is here ſaid, it may be pretended, that it was at the Inſtigation of the Clergy, the penal Laws againſt Hereticks or Perſons then reputed ſo, were obtained and enacted, and not for Reaſons reſpecting the Peace of the State. To this it may be anſwered, That the Fact here alledged, does not ſufficiently appear: We may rather reaſonably infer, that the Act of Henry the Fifth before cited, againſt the Lollards, was founded in Reaſons reſpecting the [p] civil State. If the Clergy were inſtrumental in procuring that, or any other penal Laws againſt Hereticks, from a Principle of Perſecution, or any Motive of Cruelty, no Cenſure can be paſſed upon them too ſevere or opprobrious; notwithſtanding the Lollards, againſt whom thoſe Laws were principally made, had attacked the Clergy in their proper Rights and Character, denied all Authority and Church-power, the Succeſſion of the Prieſthood, and aſſerted, that every Man had a Right to take that Honour upon him, without being called of God, as was Aaron: And tho' they had endeavoured to lay waſte the Patrimony of the Church, and render Miniſters contemptible, by withdrawing thoſe Supports, or making them precarious, without which, the Reſpect due to the miniſterial Character, cannot be preſerved; yet all theſe Provocations, we grant, had not been ſufficient to juſtify the rigid Diſcipline of the Church at that Time, and the temporal Puniſhments, by which it was enforced, if the State had not apprehended Conſequences injurious to the publick Peace, from a Toleration of thoſe Men, particularly from their Notions of Property, and the [q] Rights of civil Government.

14. We do not deny, that certain Truths were then in ſome Meaſure diſcovered, which were afterwards more univerſally profeſſed, and upon more clear and ſolid Grounds: But as yet, they who were in Search of them, had but little Light; and beſides, that their Knowledge was confuſed and imperfect, like that of Men juſt creeping out of Darkneſs; the Truths they began to diſcover, were mixed with ſeveral and great Errors. Which yet, conſidering the Simplicity of thoſe who ſuffered towards the Concluſion of the late Reign, and in the Beginning of this, ſhould rather have moved Compaſſion towards them, than rendered them the Objects of that ſevere Treatment, to which they were expoſed. For though the civil Power may, and ought to guard, by proper and penal Interminations, againſt all Errors which may diſturb the publick Peace; yet as Laws are intended not for Deſtruction, but in order to prevent it, it is agreeable to the Wiſdom, Clemency, and Ends of Government, that where the Safety of it will admit, they ſhould be executed with all poſſible Tenderneſs and Moderation. By which Characters, if we may make a Judgement of the Proceedings againſt the Perſecuted at this Time, it will be difficult in all Reſpects to excuſe or defend them.

15. In all theſe Proceedings the Church acted in Subſerviency to the Authority of the State, and by Virtue of ſtanding and expreſs Laws. The Extent of the civil and the eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction was not then ſo nicely controverted, as it happened to be ſome Time after in the Sequel of this Reign. Tho' the Encroachments of the papal Power had been oppoſed by ſeveral of our Kings, who thought themſelves concerned in Honour and Juſtice to preſerve the Rights of the Crown, and to ſecure their Subjects as much as poſſible from foreign Impoſitions of any Kind, or under any Pretence; yet the Court of Rome ſtill, by one Means or other, made Irruptions upon the civil Power, and enlarged the Bounds of her Authority. Statutes of Proviſors had, indeed, been made to obviate and reſtrain it; yet the Laws to that End, were ſeldom executed, according to the proper Tenour and Deſign of them: Nay, in ſome Reſpects, even where the Dignity or Prerogative of the Prince was more immediately concerned, the Laws had not only grown into Diſuſe, but were in a Manner buried in Oblivion: Inſomuch, that when Cardinal Wolſey was ſhortly after charged, upon his Impeachment, with Contempt of the King's Authority, and againſt the Statute of Proviſors heretofore made, becauſe he had obtained and exerciſed the Legatine Powers, it was thought a reaſonable Plea by his Council, that he did not know the Impetration of thoſe Powers to have been contrary to Law. And it appears, that the King, by his conſenting they might be ſued for and obtained from the Court of Rome, either was a Stranger to that Statute himſelf, or thought he had a Power of diſpenſing with it, and that it might be diſpenſed with, without any Derogation to his royal Dignity, or civil Juriſdiction. To which of theſe Cauſes ſoever we attribute his Concurrence on the Occaſion, there was nothing in it new or extraordinary, nothing but what he could plead Precedents for in the Courſe of ſeveral foregoing Reigns.

16. Yet the Kings of England ſtill retained a very conſiderable Power and Influence over the eccleſiaſtical State, notwithſtanding the independent Authority at that Time of Primates in calling provincial Synods, and of ſummoning their Suffragans to them: For Biſhops were nominated to the vacant Sees, and reſtored to their Temporalities by the Crown. Our Kings had formerly indeed a Power of giving Inveſtiture to Biſhops, by Delivery of the paſtoral Staff and Ring, without Election from the Clergy or Chapter. But tho' deprived of this Power, in that Way of exerciſing it, they ſtill enjoyed it in Effect, as to the main Ends and Purpoſes of it. [r] Upon the Vacancy of any Biſhoprick, a Writ iſſued out of Chancery, to veſt the Temporalities of it in the King; upon which, the Perſon deſigned for ſuch Biſhoprick was recommended to the Pope, and by him conſecrated and inveſted: But he was firſt obliged to take an Oath to his Holineſs, the Import whereof, as to other Biſhops, may be diſcovered from the [ſ] Form of that which was adminſtered to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury. But there being ſomething in the Profeſſion of Obedience to the Pope, not eaſily reconcileable to the Duty of a Subject, or the Rights of ſecular Princes; before any Archbiſhop or Biſhop could have his Temporalities reſtored, upon his doing Homage to the King, he was obliged to diſclaim and renounce all Clauſes in the Pope's Bull, prejudicial to the Rights of the Crown, or the King's Prerogative.

17. The Chapters notwithſtanding ſtill preſerved an Appearance of their ancient Right of Election, which had been exerciſed in the Saxon Reigns, and was after the Norman Conqueſt ſecured to the Church by a Charter of King Stephen, agreeable to the Practice and canonical Elections in the primitive Church, and that divine Precedent, in the firſt Election of a Biſhop to ſucceed in the apoſtolical College, upon the Death of Judas. How far the civil Power may interpoſe to influence, direct, or preſcribe, in ſuch Elections, upon any political Conſiderations, I ſhall not preſume to enquire: But only beg Leave to obſerve, that if the Church be a regular Society, and formed upon a wiſe and good Model, it is reaſonable to believe, in Honour to the Founder of it, that he has taken care a Succeſſion of proper Officers and Paſtors ſhould be preſerved in it, without any Neceſſity of calling in the ſecular Power to appoint or ſpecify them. The Method which to this Day obtains in our capitular Elections, plainly ſuppoſes, that there is an inherent Power lodged in the Church to this End: Their Prayers to God to direct their Choice, if they do, after the [t] Example of the Apoſtles, pray for his Direction to that End, proceed upon this Ground, That they have a Right of chuſing ſuch a Perſon, who, according to the beſt Judgement they may be moved or excited to make by his holy Spirit, ſhall be thought moſt fit for ſo high a Truſt. How ſuch a Prayer conſiſts with a previous Deſignation of the Perſon to be choſen, with the Right which the Church has to chuſe, with the Freedom which every Man is preſumed to have of judgeing for himſelf, are Problems which I dare by no Means undertake to reſolve.

By an [u] Act of Parliament in the firſt Year of Edward the Sixth, it is ordered, That the King may by his Letters Patents, at all Times, when any Archbiſhoprick or Biſhoprick ſhall become void, confer the ſame on ſuch Perſon as he ſhall think fit, by Donation, without Conge de Eſlire or Election. And tho' this Statute was afterwards repealed, and the former Method of Election reſtored, yet one Reaſon upon which it is founded, ſeems ſtill to ſtand in its full Force, and to require, if that could be made, ſome good and diſtinct Anſwer; namely, [x] That Elections by Writ of Conge de Eſlire, have indeed Colours, Shadows, or Pretences of Elections, but ſerve nevertheleſs to no Purpoſe.

19. The Method of Electing by the Clergy, was confirmed by a Grant of King John: And yet before his Reign the Uſage of beſtowing Biſhopricks by Donation, or the Delivery of a Ring and a Staff, had for a long time obtained; tho' indeed [y] Henry I, had formerly made the ſame Grant, which was afterwards confirmed by the 25th of Edward the Third. And again, It is provided by an Act made in the ninth Year of Henry the Fourth, That all Elections of all the Archbiſhops and Biſhops be free, without being any wiſe interrupted either by the Pope, or by Commandment of the ſaid Sovereign Lord the King.

20. King Henry the Eighth, upon his Acceſſion to the Crown, proceeded in Relation to the Church of Rome, much after the ſame Method, to which his Predeceſſors had for a long Time generally ſubmitted. He ſhewed himſelf indeed a moſt obſequious Son to the Church, and was ſo far from attempting any Innovation in the eccleſiaſtical State, to the Prejudice of the Roman See, that ſo ſoon as a proper Occaſion offered, he readily engaged in the Pope's Defence by his Sword, as he did ſometime after with his Pen. It may be queſtioned, whether his very Method of Study did not tend to animate him with a greater Zeal for the Religion then eſtabliſhed. He was particularly converſant in the Works of Thomas of Aquin, that great and ſtrenuous Aſſertor of the Romiſh Doctrine in every Article of it; he was ſtill prepoſſeſſed more in Favour of the Religion wherein he had been educated, on Account of many learned and good Men, who lived at that Time, and were bright and conſpicuous Ornaments of it. Several of the Biſhops, tho' profeſſing the eſtabliſhed Doctrines, had acquired great Eſteem for their Knowledge both in divine and human Affairs; they were venerable in their Perſons and Conduct, careful to maintain good Works, and to ſupport the Reſpect due to their Character by a holy and exemplary Life. A Prejudice on theſe Accounts, for the Religion which they profeſſed, and wherein the King had been from his Infancy inſtructed, was more excuſeable in him at an Age, when he had as yet neither Force, nor, on Account of his many Avocations, perfect Liberty of Mind to give every Thing a due Examination. But his Zeal indeed, afterwards, in Oppoſition to Luther, where no perſonal Regards or publick Conſiderations ſeemed to require he ſhould engage in the Controverſy, plainly ſhewed how much he was attached to the Church of Rome, by Inclination as well as Judgement. So that had it not been for a Paſſion, whereof he was naturally ſuſceptible, that had got the Dominion over his Heart, and which he was reſolved to gratify at any Rate, he wanted no Qualification to render him a zealous and laſting Advocate for Popery. For 'till the Period commenced, when his Love for Anne Boleign put him upon ſolliciting, by all poſſible Means, a Divorce from the Queen, and he had ſuffered ſome Repulſe from the Court of Rome in his Suit to that End, he ſought and embraced all Opportunities of obliging the Pope, and, in general, Churchmen of any Learning, or other ſuperior Character, throughout his Dominions.

21. But notwithſtanding the King profeſſed, on all Occaſions, ſo much Devotion for the Church of Rome, he ſtill retained ſome Regard for the Honour and Dignity of the Crown; and was unwilling any Applications ſhould be made to the pontifical Court, or any Bulls ſued out there, without ſpecial and expreſs Licenſe firſt obtained from him: And therefore, whereas a Premunire was incurred incurred by the 16th of Richard II, by which all Perſons who ſhould ſue to Rome, contrary to the King's Prerogative, ſhould be put out of his Protection, when any Commiſſions were granted by him to ſue out Bulls there, the Grounds and Reaſons of this Act were recited in the Preamble to them.

22. Yet it was not long before an Occaſion happened of Conteſt between the two Powers of the civil and the eccleſiaſtical State, concerning the Exemption of the Clergy from the Cognizance of temporal Courts in criminal Caſes. I ſhall not enter into the Merits of the Arguments, which were managed with great Heat on both Sides of the Queſtion; but only take notice of a remarkable Occurrence which happened in Conſequence of it, and wherein the Memory of Cardinal Wolſey is concerned.

23. One Hunn a Merchant-Taylor of London, encouraged by the Advantage which had been obtained in the Progreſs of this Conteſt, againſt the ſpiritual Juriſdiction, and having been ſued in the ſpiritual Court for a Mortuary, which he refuſed to pay, in Revenge proſecuted the Clerk, who brought that Action againſt him, in a Premunire, for bringing the King's Subjects, as Biſhop Burnet ſtates the Caſe, "before a foreign Court, the ſpiritual Court "ſitting by Authority of the Legate. This, continues the Biſhop, "ſo touched the Clergy to the Quick, that Hunn is indicted for "an Heretick, and put into the Lollard's Tower, where to ſtop "his Mouth and Suit at once, Horſey the Biſhop of London's Chan-"cellor, the Sumner, and Bell-ringer murther him, as appeared "from the Sumner's Depoſition." I think it incumbent on me, in Regard to Truth and Equity, and to a ſecret Inſinuation, as the Caſe is here repreſented, to the Cardinal's Diſadvantage, to make ſome tranſient Remarks on theſe ſeveral Particulars.

24. And, firſt, I would obſerve, that the very Matter of Fact, which is the Foundation of the Story, is wrong ſtated: Hunn did not ſue the Clerk who demanded a Mortuary of him, for bringing him before a foreign Court, as the word Foreign is here intended to be underſtood; but for citing him into the Spiritual Court, for a Matter, as he pleaded, only triable at Common Law.

25. Neither, ſecondly, is it true, That the Court, wherein Hunn was proſecuted, did ſit by Authority from the Legate. The Perſon, againſt whom this ſeems to be deſigned, if the Biſhop had any intelligible Deſign in it, was not then Legate, nor ſo much as Cardinal, or Archbiſhop; neither if he had been Legate, would the Proceſs againſt Hunn have any ways affected him; becauſe Hunn was ſued in the Court of the Biſhop of London, whoſe Chancellor acted in virtue of his ordinary Juriſdiction, without any Bulls, Inſtruments, or other Powers obtained or tranſmitted from Rome. By what Legatine Authority then did the Chancellor, at that time, ſit? Or what can poſſibly be the Meaning of this Aſſertion by our learned Hiſtorian, in prejudice to a Perſon who did not then ſubſiſt, according to the Character under which he is here repreſented to act? Had Mr. Collier conſidered this, there would have been no Occaſion for the following Reply, which he makes to the Charge before us, in his eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. "If by a Stretch of Con-

"ſtruction the Biſhop of London ſhould be ſaid to be an Abettor
"of foreign Juriſdiction, becauſe he did not formally diſclaim
"Wolſey's Legatine Authority." To this I anſwer, "That Cardi"nal Wolſey had the King's Licenſe under his Broad Seal, to execute
"the Function of a Legate." The Biſhop of London could no more diſclaim, than the Cardinal could excuſe an Authority, which it is certain, though neither of theſe learned Hiſtorians obſerved ſo much, was not then in Being.

26. Hunn's Suit could not touch the Clergy to the Quick, as his Lordſhip out of his great Regard to the Order, candidly repreſents, becauſe it was over-ruled by the concurrent Opinion of the Judges, the Matter in Diſpute being a Mortuary, which, by the Law, was cognizable, and properly within the Juriſdiction of the Spiritual Court. For the Biſhop of London, leſt it ſhould be pretended Hunn had hard Meaſure, as not being permitted to make the moſt of his Action at Common-Law, ordered, that the Proceedings againſt him for erroneous Doctrine, of which he was accuſed, ſhould be ſuſpended in the Spiritual Court, 'till the Judges ſhould come to a Reſolution in his Caſe; who, having declared that his Action would not bear at Common Law, the Clergy could be in no Danger from Hunn, nor under any Temptation to murther him, on Account of his Suit, wherein he was baffled; and which therefore could not now affect the Clergy, either in reſpect to their Reputation, or Intereſts. But this Affair cannot be more clearly ſtated, than in the Words of Sir Thomas More, who, to uſe his own Expreſſion, knew this Matter from Top to Toe, and had ſpoken with almoſt every One that could give him any Light into it, except, as he ſays, the dead Man himſelf. "Now it is well known of a "Truth, that he was detected of Hereſy, before the Premunire
"was ſued or thought upon; and he began that Suit to help ſtope
"t'other Tryal; as indeed it did for a While: For albeit that he
"that was ſued in the Premunire, was nothing belonging to the "Biſhop of London, before whom Richard Hunn was detected of "Hereſy; yet leaſt ſuch, as would be glad ſiniſterly to miſconſter
"every Thing towards the Clergy, might have occaſion to ſay,
"the Matter was hotely handled againſt him, to force him to for"bear the Suit of the Premunire; the Biſhop therefore did the "more forbear, 'till it appeared clearly to the temporal Judges,
"and

" and all that were any thing learned in the temporal Law, that " hys Suit was nothing worth in the King's Law. For as much " as by plain Statute the Matter was out of Queſtion, that the " Ple to be holden upon Mortuaries belonged to the Spiritual " Court."[z]

In anſwer to what our learned Hiſtorian difinitively concludes from the Sumner's Depoſition, that Hunn was murdered by Horſey Chancellor to the Biſhop of London, aſſiſted by the ſaid Sumner, and Bell-ringer; It may be obſerved, that his Confeſſion in the Tower, if we may credit the Biſhop of London in his Letter afterwards to the Cardinal, was obtained by Pain and Durance; That he denied the Fact both at his taking Sanctuary, and at his Tryal; That he was a Man of looſe Behaviour, and much in Debt, and had no Regard to the common Principles of Vertue or Humanity, as appears from his Saying to his Maid Julian Litle, It is merry, to turn the Penny[a]; at the ſame time he charged himſelf with one of the moſt horrid and ſhocking Crimes, whereof human Nature is capable. To this may be added the Depoſition of Allen Creſwell, That the Night before Hunn died, he deſired to borrow the Keeper's Knife, and upon his being asked, What he would do with it? ſaid, It were better to kill himſelf, than to be ſo entreated. Horſenaile alſo depoſed, That Charles Joſeph the Sumner, declared himſelf guiltleſs of Hunn's Death. Theſe Things being conſidered, it is much to be ſuſpected, this Joſeph did, for a Reward, and under Aſſurance of Pardon, or out of Revenge to Doctor Horſey, who had turned him out of his Office, charge himſelf and others with a Crime, which none of them had committed.

To what may be farther pretended, from the Inqueſt and Verdict of the Jury, which ſat upon Hunn's Body; from the Proceeding relating to this Caſe in the Parliament-Houſe, where it was brought, and from the King's Precept for the Reſtitution of his Goods, all which Particulars are pleaded in order to acquit him from the Guilt of Suicide; it may be anſwered, That the Verdict of Juries in like Caſes, is not infallible, but frequently ſet aſide; That the Perſons who compoſed the Jury being Citizens, might think themſelves affected by the Proceedings, as in a common Cauſe, againſt Hunn who was one of their Body; and upon that Account be more inclined to judge favourably of him, and to receive any ill Impreſſions concerning Horſey: Good Men cannot always entirely diſengage themſelves from the Ties of Friendſhip, of mutual Intereſt or Alliance, but will be apt, in judicial Caſes, where the State of them is not very clear and evident, to feel ſome little Byaſs upon their Judgement, and an Inclination to follow it; and that the Citizens of London were at that Time particularly prejudiced againſt Horſey, and very probably on Account of his being concerned in proſecuting Hunn, may well be concluded from a Paſſage in the forementioned Letter of Fitz-James Biſhop of London to the Cardinal, where he declares, "Aſſured I am, if my Chan-"cellor be tried by any twelve Men in London, they be ſo ma-"liciouſly ſet in [b] Favour of Hereſy, that they will caſt and con-"demn any Clerk, tho' he were as innocent as Abel." It was not impoſſible, but ſome Perſons in the Parliament-Houſe might be in the ſame Diſpoſition and Sentiments with the Citizens, in relation to the Clergy, and the Acquittal of Hunn from the Imputation of having killed himſelf. As to the Reſtitution of his Goods by Order of the King, it may be reſolved into an Act of royal Clemency, or a Motive of Compaſſion to a diſtreſſed Family; or perhaps to a real Opinion which the King had, at that time, of Hunn's Innocence. But Sir Thomas More aſſures us, that ſome time after, when the Matter came to be thoroughly examined, the King was ſatisfied, that Doctor Horſey, with others proſecuted with him on the ſame Account, had been wrongfully charged with Hunn's Murther. And that the Biſhop of London, who appears to have been in general a good Man, was fully convinced that his Chancellor had nothing to fear from the ſtricteſt Scrutiny concerning the Circumſtances of Hunn's Death, may be further concluded from the main Deſign and Requeſt of his Letter, which is, that the Cardinal would move his Majeſty to appoint, "That the Matter may "be duly and ſufficiently examined by indifferent Perſons, of his "diſcreet Council, in the Preſence of the Parties, 'ere there be any "more done in the Caſe. And that upon the Innocency of the "ſaid Chancellor declared, it may further pleaſe the King's Grace, "to award a Placaerd to his Attorney to confeſs the ſaid Endite-"ment to be untrue, when the Time ſhould require it." In ſhort, Sir Thomas More, whoſe Candour and Probity were equal to his great Learning and Judgement, and who had examined this Matter, with every Thing relating to it, carefully and to the Bottom, poſitively avers, that there is nothing in the Story. As for Hall, the original Authority among our Hiſtorians for it, we may judge of his Reſpect and good Affection towards the Clergy, from almoſt all the Occaſions which he takes of ſpeaking concerning them, but eſpecially from the following Inſtance. One Packington being ſhot dead in the Streets as going to Maſs at Four a-Clock in a miſty Morning, this Author, out of his great Charity, without any Evidence, or Pretence of Evidence, charges the Clergy with his Death, upon this ſingle Suggeſtion, that Packington, tho' a moſt

zealous Papiſt, was yet a free Speaker in the Houſe of Commons: Whereas the Man who did the Fact, publickly confeſſed it at Bunbury-Gallows, where, many Years after, he was ſentenced to be hanged for Felony. Hall, and other Hiſtorians after him, who have endeavoured to make a Merit by expoſing the Clergy to publick Hatred and Contempt, ſhould have been careful at leaſt to cite Facts to this Purpoſe, which had ſome true and certain Foundation.

After all, neither the Cauſe of Religion in general, nor the Character of the Clergy is much concerned, whether Hunn died by his own Hands, or thoſe of Horſey and his ſuppoſed Accomplices. It is impious, it is contrary to all the Rules of common Equity and Honeſty, to charge the Crimes of particular Perſons, upon a whole Body of Men to which they may be allied. Neither if Hunn was really murthered, does it therefore follow that he died a Martyr, or that any Honour or Advantage will redound to the Reformation from his Death. To what End then are thoſe tragical Repreſentations which ſome of our Hiſtorians have made of his Death, except with a Deſign, in regard to which they are ſometimes indeed viſibly formed, of rendering the Clergy odious, upon a Charge, or Inſinuation at leaſt, that they are of a cruel and perſecuting Spirit.

As to the Principles upon which Hunn was proſecuted as an Heretick, there appears to have been nothing very meritorious in them. The firſt Charge againſt him was, That he had publiſhed and obſtinately maintained, the Clergy had no Right to demand Tythes, and that they had nothing but their own Covetouſneſs for their Title. The Second, That Biſhops and Prieſts are the Scribes and Phariſees, who crucified Chriſt, and condemned him to die. The Third was, much to the ſame Effect, reflecting on the ill Lives and Idleneſs of the Clergy, their Avarice and Rapine, their Want of Juſtice and Charity.

Theſe Articles, ſo far as they relate to the Conduct of the Clergy, might poſſibly, in certain Inſtances, have ſome Foundation: But as they are general and indefinite, without any diſtinct Application, it was agreeable to Reaſons of Order and Prudence, that they ſhould be cenſured. A Society which will openly ſuffer its Rights to be diſputed, or the principal Members of it to be traduced and inſulted, cannot long, or in any becoming Meaſure, ſupport its Authority.

It is true Hunn diſowned theſe Opinions as expreſſed in the Articles, yet acknowledged he had ſpoken Words which might be interpreted to a like Conſtruction: But it will not therefore follow that a Proceſs, upon ſuch a Conſtruction, could entitle Hunn to the Honour of Martyrdom, ſuppoſing he was really murdered during ring the Courſe of it. Beſides, the Church of Rome will never envy us the Glory of a Martyr, who, whatever the Manner or Occaſion of his Death might be, yet is ſaid to have died in their own Communion.

I have longer inſiſted on this Story of Hunn, to confirm what I obſerved before, That it has no Relation to the Conduct of Cardinal Wolſey, as the Pope's Legate; as Biſhop Burnet according to the moſt obvious and natural Conſtruction of his Words, appears to inſinuate; for he was at the Time of Hunn's Death, in the Year 1514, neither Cardinal nor Legate. A more diſtinct Examination of this Affair was alſo ſubſervient to my Deſign of ſhewing in what Situation the eccleſiaſtical State was at that time. I ſhall now deſcend to another Article, proper to be conſidered towards giving us a better Light into the Cardinal's Hiſtory, relating to the Subject of the King's Marriage.

1. Concerning the Marriage of Henry the Eighth, and the Motives upon which it was concluded. 2. With certain Conſiderations that tended to remove the Difficulties which obſtructed it. 3. A Report of Sir Richard Moriſon, That Henry the Seventh had ſometime adviſed his Son againſt it. 4. Conjectures concerning the young King's real Sentiments in Relation to it. 5. The Author's Deſign in theſe occaſional Obſervations.

1. HENRY the Seventh, upon the Death of his eldeſt Son Arthur, who had been married to Catherine of Arragon, procured a Contract to be made between that Princeſs, and Henry his ſecond Son. The political Motives to this Match were, her Dowry, her Reſidence in England, the Benefit of a ſtrict Amity and Alliance with Spain, with her perſonal Merit and Qualifications. Her Dowry, which was to be returned with her, was conſiderable, and more than Henry the Seventh, who knew the Value of Money, and loved it, was willing to refund. Beſides, if ſhe ſhould happen to marry to a Prince of the Houſe of France, that Kingdom, by ſuch Alliance, might, in caſe of a War, be rendered more formidable. It was further conſidered, That the Lady was preſent; That many Formalities of treating with a Stranger, and much Expence of Time and Money would by this Means be ſaved. Beſides, ſhe had a great many fine and engaging Qualities; ſo much Sweetneſs in her Temper and Carriage, and was ſo ſtrictly virtuous in her whole Conduct, that it had been very difficult in any any foreign Court to have found her Equal. She was then not paſs'd the Bloom of Youth, about the Age of Twenty-two, and, as Speed reports, Beauteous. [c] Paulus Jovius repreſents her as a Lady of moſt excellent Accompliſhments. Her Parents were careful to give her a religious Education, and cauſed her to be inſtructed in the Sciences, wherein ſhe made conſiderable Progreſs. It was alſo thought adviſeable to cultivate Peace and Friendſhip with Ferdinand her Father, and, when Henry the Eighth ſucceeded, to remove the Occaſion of Offence which that Prince ſeemed to have taken, becauſe the Treaty was not perfected ſooner; for which a Diſpenſation had been obtained from the Pope in the Reign of Henry the Seventh.

2. To remove the Difficulties which might obſtruct this Affair conſidered as a Caſe of Conſcience, beſides that Diſpenſation, there were Preſumptions from the Age and Imbecillity of Arthur, that the Princeſs was ſtill a Virgin; but chiefly from her own Declaration, and the Teſtimony of ſome great Ladies at [d] Court; to whom in private Converſation ſhe had revealed her ſelf upon that Head, and now propoſed to be tried by a Deputation of Matrons. But the Legality of the ſecond Marriage was not pleaded only upon this Article; the Law in Deuteronomy, that a Man might marry his Brother's Wife, who died without Iſſue, was thought ſufficient, under the Pope's Licenſe, to juſtify this Marriage, even though Prince Arthur had really conſummated the former Marriage. And the Pope, out of a refined Policy, was the more ready to diſpenſe with it, as the Children which ſhould be born in Conſequence of it, would by this Means be more firmly ſecured to the Intereſts of the Papacy; for in Caſe they ſhould ever renounce the Pope, they would in Effect diſclaim, by that very Renunciation, the Authority, by which themſelves were legitimated.

3. Yet Sir Richard Moriſon reports, Henry the Seventh afterwards charged his Son, the preſent King, to break the Contract upon a Principle of Conſcience, and becauſe he was fully convinced, that it was unlawful. For which Reaſon, when Prince of Wales, he was for ſome time reſtrained from viſiting the Princeſs, and from holding any Correſpondence with her; leſt a familiar Entercourſe ſhould mutually inflame a Paſſion to a Height, which it might be afterwards more difficult to moderate. It has been ſuppoſed for this Reaſon, that the Prince, in formally proteſting againſt the Marriage about two Years after, conformed to his Father's Advice and Pleaſure. It is not probable, he felt at that [e] Age, any great Trouble or Remorſe of Conſcience, about an Affair which had been concluded in Form, and by Concurrence of the two Courts of England and Spain; That this Proteſt was not the Effect of his own Choice or Judgement ſo much as of his Father's Direction, may be inferred from the ſpeedy Concluſion of his Marriage after his Father's Death, when being more at Liberty to follow his own Inclination, we may better judge how far he acted in Purſuance of it, and how far he had been formerly influenced by the Authority of a Father. It is probable, if he had before really entertained any Scruples of Conſcience on Account of the Contract, yet the near Proſpect of being married to a young Princeſs, ſo excellently accompliſhed, might more eaſily prepare the Way to their Removal: For we never ſooner ſatisfy our ſelves, or get over any Difficulties, in diſputable Caſes, than when we diſpute or argue from our Inclinations.

Some have thought indeed that the King married this Lady more out of reſpect to filial Piety, and his Father's firſt Appoinment, than from the Devotion that he really had for her. But there was nothing in the Temper of the King, for he was very reſolute and impatient of being oppoſed in his Deſires, that ſhould induce us to form ſuch a Judgement. If he had been willing to make a Sacrifice to filial Piety, he ought not to have conſulted his Father's firſt Appointment ſo much as his laſt Thoughts, when it might be ſuppoſed he had examined Things more ſtrictly, and found Reaſons which he had not conſidered before, for a Change of his Mind. If the young King had been in the leaſt reluctant to this Marriage, he might probably as eaſily have obtained a Diſpenſation for diſſolving the Contract, as his Father had obtained one to legitimate it. Whatever his private Inclinations were, it is certain he acted in the Matter agreeably to the Advice of his wiſe Council; and to ſhew at leaſt, how well pleaſed he was with the Proſpect of perfecting the Marriage, in Honour to the Princeſs, he refuſed to be crowned 'till the Marriage might at the ſame time be ſolemnized; when, among other Ceremonies ſuitable to the Occaſion, the Bride, tho' a Widow, was dreſs'd all in White, to denote her inviolable Virginity, which ſhe and all her Friends aſſerted to the Laſt.

I thought proper to mention this Article diſtinctly, as the Occaſion of many great and important Events, wherein the Cardinal was immediately concerned, and which terminated at laſt in his Diſgrace and Ruin.

1. I NOW return to the Situation wherein we left the Almoner upon the King's Expedition into France, who committed to him the Direction of the Supplies, and Proviſions to be made for the Army: An Office which ſhewed how high he ſtood in the King's Favour, and gave him ſtill nearer Acceſs to his Perſon; and he was not ſo regardleſs of his own Intereſts, as to neglect theſe Advantages. Tho' he may rather perhaps be ſaid to have known the Uſe of Money, and how to apply it to the moſt excellent Ends, than to have loved it; yet he was careful to improve all the Opportunities, which were put into his Hands of enriching himſelf; and upon that View, if Cavendiſh has been juſt to his Memory, would ſometimes condeſcend, as other great Men near the Throne have done, before his Time, and ſince, to accept ſuch Preſents and Gratuities, as were tendered to him. 1513.

2. Some have thought that the Almoner, making uſe of the Power he then had with the King, was the Perſon who principally adviſed his Majeſty to this Undertaking; and the Motives which induced him to adviſe it, are ſuppoſed to have been, a[f] Deſire of ſhewing his Zeal for the Church, and the Honour and Intereſts of the Papal See, and by that Means of recommending himſelf to the good Graces of the Court at Rome, where he was already [g] known, and looked upon as a Perſon of great Weight and Authority. Beſides the Ends of his Ambition on that Side, he might reaſonably hope, while he attended upon the King's Perſon, and was entruſted with ſo conſiderable an Employment, he ſhould, more Ways than One, find his own Account in the Progreſs, but eſpecially in a ſucceſsful Iſſue of this Expedition.

3. The Hiſtorian is at Liberty to make ſuch Conjectures which have a ſpecious and reaſonable Foundation, as the Reader is to credit or reject them. But whether the Almoner adviſed this War upon any private Views reſpecting himſelf or not, it is certain, there wanted not many publick and political Reaſons which might perſuade the King to it.

4. It was no unpopular Deſign in a young Prince of the Romiſh Communion, and who had then no Scruples upon the Head of his Religion, to aſſiſt the common Father of the Faithful, (I ſpeak according to the Principles of that Time) brought into great Diſtreſs by the Diſobedience of His Moſt Chriſtian Son, Lewis the Twelfth of France. Henry the Eighth, on the other Hand, affected ſo much to be thought a true Son of the Church, that he was unwilling to loſe ſo favourable and inviting an [b] Opportunity of ſhewing his Zeal for it, and, in particular, for the Maintenance of the Papal Authority, without which the Church was conſidered as a Body without Head. That the King had the Cauſe of Religion really at Heart, may be inferred from the great Ambition which he entertained of having the Title of Moſt Chriſtian King transferred from his Brother of France upon himſelf. This he looked upon as ſo glorious an Acquiſition, that it is thought, the [i] Hopes of it contributed very much to engage him in this War, if they were not the principal Inducement to his undertaking it, in which he was notwithſtanding miſtaken, the Intention which the Pope had ſignified to this End [k] producing no Effect.

5. But the principal Reaſon was founded in his Title to the Engliſh Dominions in France; where the People retaining ſtill a Senſe of their Duty, and of the Benefits formerly received from this Nation, were ready to favour and aſſiſt his Pretenſions: It was added, That Lewis had ſuffered ſome Diſgrace, and had Work enough to do in Italy; That there were a great Number of Male-contents among his Subjects, who would readily join our Forces; That as to the Expence of the War, the King had large Sums in his Exchequer to ſupport it, and the [l] Parliament of England which was ſhortly to ſit, would never be wanting to grant Supplies, where the publick Service, in a juſt and neceſſary War, might really require them: And tho' Maximilian the Emperor then acted in Concert with France, yet Means might probably be found to diſſolve the League and Amity between them.

6. If the King had not thought neceſſary to aſſert his Title at this Conjuncture, to his Dominions in France, by Force of Arms, or there had been no Motives to engage him in this War from any religious Conſiderations, yet Reaſon of common Prudence and Caution ſeemed to require it. Lewis was a Perſecutor of the Church, and not only an Enemy to the Pope, but had formed a Deſign to depoſe him, and executed it ſo far as he was able, to the End he might advance ſome Creature of his own to the Papacy, who would favour and aſſiſt his Attempts towards the Conqueſt of Italy, or at leaſt not directly oppoſe them. Reaſons of national Emulation, and Jealouſy, would not ſuffer that Advances ſhould be made towards ſuch an Acceſſion of Grandeur and Power to Lewis King of France, and England remain an unconcerned Spectator.

7. Theſe are Reaſons of ſuch Weight, that there is no Occaſion to ſuppoſe, as ſome Writers have done, the Engliſh were incited to this War, by a Bribe from the Pope. [m] Spondanus reports,

If that Poſition "be true, this Epithet could not be attributed to Henry VI, in the Capacity of his being "King of France; And in truth the ſame is in a (1) Statute given to Henry III, as after-"wards to Henry V, in the Hiſtories of Elmham and Livy de Foroliviis, and to our Henry VI "in the Records of (2) Parliament, as the Style of Moſt Chriſten Sire and mighty King was af-"terwards to (3) Edward IV." his Holineſs ſent hither a Ship laden with Wine, Cheeſe, and Gammons of Bacon, which being preſented in his Name to the King, and the great Men about him, were received after a Manner, that teſtified how grateful the Preſent was to them: And as the Populace are ſometimes affected with inſignificant as well as great Occurrences, a numerous Train of them, with ſenſible Demonſtrations of Joy, went to ſee the Ship, glorying, that no Veſſel of that Kind had ever been ſeen before in this Iſland, under the Pontifical Colours. Mezerai too reports, but after a Manner more ſatyrical, and injurious to the ancient Spirit of our Nation, That the Engliſh were inebriated with the vain Glory of defending the Holy See, and by the Fumes of delicious Wines, with which the Pope had loaded a Ship, and wherein to make them reliſh the better, he had ſent Gammons of Bacon.

8. Some have pretended this Token from the Pope is not taken notice of by Polydore, (tho' he could not but know it, and had a fair Occaſion where he ſpeaks concerning the Reaſons of the War to mention it,) becauſe in reſpect to both Nations, he was obliged to conceal it. He had reflected highly on the Honour of the Pope, whoſe Miniſter he was, in reporting, he offered ſuch a Bribe; but had expoſed the Engliſh Court, from which he had received many great Favours, to the greateſt Infamy, had he charged them with accepting it. It is moſt probable the Story has no good Foundation, or if there be really any Thing in it, has been much amplified and improved by the Writers on the French Side.

9. The King having taken a Reſolution to head his Army in Perſon, embarked, and arrived at Calais the laſt Day of [n] June. He had given Orders before to his Generals, George Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury, and [o] Lord Herbert Lord Chamberlain, to advance towards Therouenne in Artois, to which Place they came, and encamped about the Diſtance of a Mile from it, on the 22d of June. The King, after he had for ſome Days ſtayed to refreſh himſelf, and received the Compliments that were made to him, commanded his Army with all Expedition to follow him to the Camp before Therouenne, upon Advice that the French were preparing to relieve that Place, under the Command of the Duke of Longueville. The Rearguard of the Army was compoſed in great Part of the Retinue of Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter and the Almoner, to the Number of Eight hundred Men, commanded by Sir William Compton. We had ſcarce entred the French Territories near Ardres, when News was brought that the Enemy approached, upon which the King's Army advancing towards them, they retired with the [p] utmoſt Precipitation.

10. On the 9th of Auguſt there was an Enterview between the Emperor, who was now come as far as Ayre, and the King, but the Weather being foul and unpleaſant, the Ceremony of it was ſoon over. This [q] Progreſs of the Emperor, was in purſuance of a Promiſe he had made by Article to join with the King in Perſon againſt the French, on Condition the King would ſupply him by Way of Loan with 125000 Crowns. It appears from his Majeſty's Ambaſſadors Wingfield, Knight, and Spinelli in the Low-Countries, that the Lady Archdutcheſs advertiſed them, great Offers had been made to the Emperor, by the Kings of Arragon and France, to bring him into their Meaſures, but nevertheleſs, conſidering the good Diſpoſition which the Emperor was in towards their [r] Maſter, her Highneſs was of Opinion, that upon any friendly Propoſals from him, his Imperial Majeſty would not only reject all Overtures made by thoſe two Powers, but uſe great and ſpeedy Diligence towards the Performance of what he had promiſed to the King of England. [ſ] Spinelli further informed the King, "That his "Majeſty ſhould take into his Service at leaſt Four thouſand Al-"mains, ſaying, That a proſperous Beginning of the War would "be a good Sign and Earneſt of future Succeſs; and that if the "French met with a Repulſe or Defeat upon the firſt Congreſs, "they would from that time loſe their Courage." Wherein ſhe appears to have ſpoken agreeably both to Events, and to a common Obſervation upon the Temper of that People, wherein the Diſtance of Time in which we now live, ſeems to have made no extraordinary Alteration.

11. On the Twelfth of Auguſt the Emperor entred the King's Camp in Quality of a [t] Soldier in his Service, for which he actually received Pay, to the Value of twenty-five Pounds a-day. The King was very ſenſible how great an Honour was done to him by his Imperial Majeſty, an Honour which none of the King's Predeceſſors, nor any other Crowned-Head could ever boaſt; and therefore he ordered a Tent to be prepared for his Imperial Majeſty ſuitable to his Dignity, of Cloth of Gold, wherein for the Space of two Days, while he ſtay'd in the Camp, he was entertained after the moſt ſplendid and magnificent Manner.

12. Therouenne

12. Therouenne was not ſo cloſely inveſted, but on one Side there was a Way open, through which the French might with leſs Difficulty or Danger attempt the Relief of it. The Town being in Diſtreſs for Want of Proviſions, the King was apprehenſive they would make ſome Effort that Way towards it, and therefore immediately ordered Bridges to be made over the River to the other Side of the Town, where it was moſt eaſy of Acceſs to the Enemy; upon which himſelf, attended with Maximilian, paſſed with Part of the Army, and immediately received Intelligence by the Light-Horſe, that the French Convoy was in Sight, which advancing, and finding the Engliſh Army ready to oppoſe them, made a Shew as if they were reſolved to diſpute the Field, and at firſt engaged warmly; but after they had for ſome time maintained the [u] Fight, fled in the greateſt Conſternation and Diſorder. From their precipitate Flight, that Engagement received a memorable Diſtinction, and was called the Battle of Spurs: For their Cavalry only engaged, which yet was compoſed of the braveſt Men among them. In the Purſuit, the Duke of Longueville, with ſeveral General Officers, was taken, together with nine Cornets and ſix [x] Standards. By occaſion of this Victory, the King and Maximilian (who gave him Precedence) congratulated each other upon the Place, and afterwards aſſiſted in ſolemnizing it by a publick Thankſgiving.

13. During this Action, Part of the French Cavalry divided, to try if they could open a Way for carrying in the Proviſion on the other Side of the River, where they endeavoured to force the Quarters of the Earl of Shrewsbury and Sir Rhys ap Thomas Knight of the Garter, but were ſoon repulſed; tho' to favour that Attempt, and cauſe a Diverſion of the King's Forces, the Garriſon and Townſmen took the Opportunity at the ſame time of ſallying forth upon the Trenches of Lord Herbert; but he being upon his Guard, received them in ſuch a Manner, that they were ſoon obliged to retire. The Engliſh ſtill obtaining new Advantages, and the Governour of the Place finding himſelf reduced to Extremities, without proſpect of Relief, capitulated to ſurrender the Town with the Ordinance, on Condition they might depart with their Arms, and Baggage, and Drums beating, with other Characteriſticks of military Honour. Upon which, the King with the Emperor entred that City, and dined in the Biſhop's Palace. But a Queſtion ariſing, whether the Place ſhould be diſmantled, or kept in its preſent Condition, it was determined, that the Town and Fortifications ſhould be demoliſhed, and nothing preſerved but the Cathedral and Religious Houſes. The King, notwithſtanding the great Expence of Blood and Treaſure

he had been at in taking it, came into this Reſolution, at the Emperor's Inſtance, on whoſe Territories it confined, and whoſe Subjects had been much harraſſed and incommoded, by the Irruptions made from it; So great Deference did the King pay to this mighty Prince, who bore Arms under him, and perhaps the greater on that Account: Though his Majeſty might alſo more readily conſent to the Demolition of the Place, as it would contribute to weaken his own Army, ſhould he have left a ſufficient Number of Men behind him to garriſon it. Yet it was not ſo entirely evacuated, but the French found Means afterwards to repair the Fortifications, and put it in a Poſture of Defence.

14. After this the King, by the Advice of Maximilian, inveſted Tournay; and tho' the Gates bore this Inſcription, Thou haſt never loſt thy Virginity, yet it was forced, after a ſhort Siege, to ſurrender upon certain Conditions that were not very hard or diſhonourable; the King promiſing, on his Part, that the Inhabitants ſhould have their ancient Privileges and Cuſtoms continued to them, provided they would admit a Garriſon. Of this City, Wolſey the King's Almoner, being made Biſhop, and conveening the Inhabitants before him, took an Oath of Fidelity from them to his Maſter, who was reſolved to keep the Place with a ſtrong Garriſon under the Command of Sir Edward Poynings. Lord Herbert makes it Matter of Admiration, that Therouenne, which was near to the Engliſh Pale, ſhould be raſed, tho' it might have been better defended, and that Tournay ſhould be garriſoned; and he reſolves the Conduct of the King, as to this Difficulty, into the Advice of the Almoner, and that Advice into a Motive of private Intereſt. His Lordſhip ſuppoſes Wolſey had the Biſhoprick of Tournay in his Eye, and with a View of That, perſuaded his Majeſty not to evacuate it. He told his Maſter he had laid a laſting Obligation upon the Emperor, and ſufficiently eſtabliſhed a Confidence in him by the Demolition of Therouenne; but as for Tournay, it was fit it ſhould ſtand as a laſting Monument of his Victories, and the rather, as Cæſar in his Commentaries acknowledgeth he no where found ſo generous and brave a Reſiſtance as in this Place. This Conjecture of his Lordſhip may poſſibly be grounded upon Truth; but ſince that does not appear, it ſhould, I humbly conceive, be conſidered only as a Conjecture, and not have been propoſed in thoſe deciſive Terms, wherein his Lordſhip has expreſſed it. The Reaſon of preſerving Tournay may be accounted for, in reſpect to the greater Strength and Dignity of the Place, being a Biſhop's Seat, having beſides the Cathedral, y ten Pariſh-Churches, two Abbies,

and ſeveral Religious Houſes, with large Dependencies without in the Country. Beſides, Winter then approaching, and it being reſolved an End ſhould be put to the Operations of War for that Seaſon, it was neceſſary that where the Scene of Action lay, the Engliſh ſhould be poſſeſſed of ſome ſtrong Place, to facilitate their Deſigns and cover their Forces, or to which, in caſe of any Misfortune, they might ſafely retreat.

15. It ſeems more difficult to juſtify the Almoner, either for ſolliciting or accepting that Biſhoprick, which in Right appears to have belonged to another [z] Perſon. For I do not ſee what Power Conqueſt could give the King of England to break in upon the Rules of the Church, or to diſſolve the Union between the other Biſhop and his Flock; this ſpiritual Relation might, and, in my humble Opinion, ought to have been preſerved, notwithſtanding the temporal Government of the City was changed: There is no Neceſſity that the ancient and apoſtolical Order of the Church ſhould be diſturbed, becauſe Princes think fit to diſſeiſe one another of their temporal Domains.

16. It is acknowledged if that Matter be conſidered purely in relation to the common Maxims of civil Policy, there wanted not Appearances of Reaſon in that kind, why the King ſhould chuſe a ſpiritual Paſtor of the Place, who was moſt in his Confidence and Intereſts. And upon theſe Maxims the Lord Mountjoy, firſt Lord Lieutenant, founds his Advice, when he repreſents to the King, "That if this Biſhoprick might be got clear into his Majeſty's "Hands, it were good that the Town being under the Biſhop of "Tournay and Cambray, and all the Bayliage, ſhould have no Re"ſort in no Caſe to the Archbiſhop of Rheims, but to the Arch"biſhop of Canterbury." By the ſame Rule as if any Epiſcopal Seat within the Province of Canterbury had, upon ſome Accident or Emergency been reduced by the Arms of France, the Conqueror would have acquired thereby a Power not only of depoſing ſuch Biſhop, but of ſubſtituting one who ſhould no longer acknowledge the leaſt Dependency on the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, or Relation to him as ſuch, but become a Suffragan to any Archbiſhop in France. Certainly the wiſe Founder of the Chriſtian Church has eſtabliſhed other Rules for electing thoſe who are to preſide over it, and towards preſerving the Peace and regular Government of it, than ſuch as depend on the Succeſs of the Sword, or the Caprice of ſecular Princes. It is impoſſible indeed, while the Church is governed or new modelled at every Turn by Reaſons of State, that either Peace, Amity, or Order can be preſerved in it. Nothing can produce or preſerve theſe invaluable Bleſſings, but thoſe ſtated Rules, and that uniform Manner of Acting, by which the Fathers of the Church originally governed it, before Princes became Chriſtians, and ſucceeding Paſtors found it expedient to make their Court to them, by Acts of Submiſſion, unknown to the Dignity and Spirit of the apoſtolical and preceeding Ages.

17. The Oppoſition for ſeveral Years which the Almoner met with in aſſerting his Title to this Biſhoprick, convinced him, that the Steps he had taken to poſſeſs himſelf of it, were not thought perfectly regular, the French Biſhop aſſerting his Claim to the Laſt, and the Revenues of the Biſhoprick being difficultly levied, and not without Danger ſometimes of raiſing a Commotion. Of this [a] Dr. Samſon, Wolſey's Vicar-general, wrote to him an Account, at large, telling him, "That as he came to Bruges, as he had be-" fore in Guant, by his Letters Patents he deſired the Favour and " Aid of the Lords of the Town, but he found them nothing fa-" vourable; that a few Days after he called the Biſhop's Officers " together, and ſhewed them the Pope's Breve and Letters Patents " of the Lady Margaret written in Wolſey's Favour, which not-" withſtanding when they had read, becauſe the Matter was of " great Weight, they deſired a Day's Reſpit to conſult what might " beſt be done." He adds, "My Lord, the French King, as I " think, hath not kept all his Promiſes with your Grace; for the " Biſhop-elect had made for all Flanders, both another Vicar-gene-" ral, and alſo a Receiver, and all the Profits without fail, of the " Year paſt be received, and all paid and delivered to the Elect " in France. Moreover he hath ordained his Officers ſtrongly to " reſiſt when I ſhall come: They had readily their Appellations " made with other Remedies, as ſtrong as by the Law poſſibly " might be made; which this Day when they aſſembled, they " ſhewed expreſsly; and if with Rigour I ſhould have made Pro-" ceſs againſt them, without fail I ſhould have made a Commo-" tion among the People, whom they had before provoked." And then interpoſing his Advice, he ſubjoins, "That if his Lordſhip " ſhould quietly have this Adminiſtration, there were no other Re-" medy, but that the French King muſt by his Letters Patent " charge the Biſhop-elect to be content, and ſuffer this Adminiſtra-" tion, not to reſiſt; or elſe if theſe Officers ſaw the French King's " Letters favourable to it, they would all immediately obey. But

[a] Strype Mem. Ecc. H. 8. p. 16.

" if his Grace ſhould follow the Proceſs of the Law, and the Bi-
" ſhop-elect defend his Poſſeſſion, with marvellous great Trouble, " his Grace ſhould never have Profit. Wherefore they had in-
" ſtantly deſired a Day of Reſpit to counſel with the Biſhop-elect,
" and accordingly that he had granted them 'till St. Martin's Day;
" except that in the mean time it might appear the Biſhop-elect
" ſhould not return perſonally to defend his Poſſeſſion, always pro" vided that Profits as in the mean time ſhould fortune, ſhould be
" preſerved, that he granted them this Time ſo boldly, for that if it
" ſo were that the French King favoured his Grace at this time, as he " thought he did, ſhortly it might be known that the Biſhop ſhould
" not return; and his Grace haſtily, or they come to him, might " cauſe by his Letters, that the French King might charge him to " have Patience."

18. We may judge from this Letter, how many Obſtacles there were in the Almoner's Way, before he could propoſe to himſelf a peaceable and quiet Adminiſtration of this Biſhoprick; tho' if he could have ſurmounted them all, the Difficulty as to his Right to it, would ſtill remain. For tho' he had a Brief from the Pope ſpecifying the Reaſons, why he was admitted by his Holineſs to the Adminiſtration, yet it was liable to ſome Objections, which ſeemed to have Weight in them. In anſwer to what was ſaid in it, That the other Biſhop had abſented, and deſerted his Seat; it was replied, That Neceſſity and his own Safety required that he ſhould withdraw, and for that Reaſon he could not properly be ſaid to deſert. The moſt ſpecious Plea in favour of the Almoner ſeems to be, That the other was only Biſhop-elect: But if his Election, as according to the ordinary Rules in like Caſes, gave him a canonical and juſt Right to the Epiſcopate and the Revenues annexed, the Want of ſome Forms to be obſerved in order to give him plenary Poſſeſſion, could not much tend to corroborate or juſtify the Pretenſions of his Competitor. But not to enter on a formal Diſcuſſion of his Right, I ſhall only remind the Reader of Dr. Sampſon's Opinion, declaring in a free ingenuous Manner, and in repeated Terms to the ſame Effect, that there could be no other Way to ſecure a peaceable and quiet Adminiſtration of that Biſhoprick to his Grace of York, unleſs the French King might be induced to expreſs himſelf in ſome proper and publick Manner well affected to his Grace, or would by ſome Means or other oblige the Biſhop-elect to acquieſce.

1. WHILE the King lay before Therouenne, Lyon King of Arms of Scotland, in his Herauld's Habit, came to the Camp, and deſiring Leave to deliver a Letter to the King, was introduced to his Majeſty by Garter Principal King of Arms of England: The Import of that Letter was, a Remonſtrance concerning certain Injuries which his Maſter pretended to have received from our King, and a proviſionary Declaration of War in caſe Satisfaction were not given to his Demands. The King made a verbal Anſwer to Lyon's Meſſage, which he apprehended ſo reproachful to his Maſter, that he deſired he might not be charged with a Report of it, and moved, that his Majeſty would be pleaſed to commit it to Writing. The King thought his Requeſt ſo reaſonable, that he wrote a Letter in return to his Brother of Scotland to this Effect: "That he looked upon this Memorial to be nothing but "a pretended Occaſion of Quarrel, to the End he might aſſiſt "the French King, and invade England in his Abſence: He adviſed "him to recollect how John King of Navarre, by taking Part "with the French, had been deprived of his Kingdom, and that "he ſhould take Caution from his Example how he engaged in "the ſame Cauſe. Laſtly, That he might be aſſured of a juſt

" and plenary Retaliation for any Attempts he ſhould make upon " his Subjects or Dominions in his Abſence." Notwithſtanding this ſharp Anſwer, and that 'tis probable this ſame Officer had miſreported to his Maſter a former Anſwer of the King's, yet he ordered a handſome Preſent to be made to him, according to the Uſage at that Time in Caſes of carrying Defiances.

2. James the Fourth of Scotland apprehending, he had juſt Cauſe of Complaint againſt King Henry, thought he had a ſeaſonable Opportunity of Revenging himſelf, while the King was out of his own Dominions engaged in a foreign War; yet he would not break through the common Rules obſerved by all civilized Nations, and therefore conſidered as having the Force of a Law to all Nations; but before he made War upon England, he ſignified his Intention in Form to that End: He ſcorn'd to take the Advantage of a baſe and ignominious Surpriſe, or to fall upon his Enemy, unguarded, ſecure of Peace, and under no Apprehenſions of being attacked, without common and previous Notice.

3. It appears, indeed, that it was not without ſome Reluctance the Scots King came into the Projects of this War. When Doctor Weſt Dean of Windſor was ſent on an Embaſſy to James the Fourth, to know whether he would keep the Peace in the King's Abſence, he made this proviſional Anſwer; He would keep it, if Juſtice were done to him on the Borders: At another Audience, That he would keep the Peace if the King of England would do the [b] like. And it being demanded by the Dean, whether he would make that Anſwer in Writing, he refuſed to make it upon this Reaſon, That the King ſhould have no Letter of his to ſhew in France. The Dean told him, he took this Anſwer as a Declaration, that he did not intend to keep the Peace; and that it was only a Delay of Time to ſay, he expected whether King Henry would do him Juſtice or not. The laſt Anſwer to the Dean was by one of the Council, " That " concerning the Treaty of Peace, the King his Maſter was and " would be contented to keep it accordingly, provided the King " of England would do the ſame, and that there never was nor " ſhould be occaſion given on his Side to the Breach thereof; and " as touching Love and Kindneſs, he would ſhew them to the " King of England, as ſoon as he knew how Juſtice would be mi- " niſtred upon the Borders; and that he would then ſend his Em- " baſſador to the Engliſh Court to aſcertain the King how Juſtice " was done, and his further Mind." This Dr. Weſt inſiſted ſhould be delivered in Writing, but that was denied. Upon which, and ſome other appearances of their prevaricating with him, he ſaid under Proteſtation, that it appeared they meaned not truly: Upon this the King came in, and after ſome Diſcourſe, the Lords withdrawing, the King took the Opportunity of diſcovering his own Sentiments in a free and open Manner to the Dean. Whereby it appeared, that he had before delivered himſelf under ſome Reſtraint from the Council. "Ye know, ſays he to the Dean, what Promiſe "the French King hath made me, wherefore I would not loſe him, "and for that Reaſon I ſpeak ſharply before my Lords, or elſe they "would certify it to France; but my determinate Mind is to keep "firm Peace with my Brother." And this probably was the Promiſe, with the Breach of which the King charges him in a Letter from the Camp before Therouenne. King James added, "he was "obliged to expreſs himſelf in general Terms to preſerve Appear-"ances; yet if the King of England would make the ſame Pro-"miſe to him the French King had done, he ſhould have leſs Re-"gard to the French King's Friendſhip or Alliance;" and to ſhew how ſincere the King of Scotland was in his Declaration, he wiſh'd King Henry might be as ſure of France, as he was of England. This Miniſter obſerves further, the Scots were very proud of the Overtures of Peace that were made to them in the King's Name, but withal thought themſelves by a late Treaty ſo obliged to Lewis the Twelfth of France, that they were very unwilling to give any Umbrage to that Monarch.

4. Yet the French at laſt prevailed, and King James, in compliance with the Inclinations of his Court, and the Populace, determined contrary to his Declaration to Weſt, to break with England. His Pretence was, That the Engagements to cultivate Peace were reciprocal between him and the King of England; that the Oath they had mutually taken equally obliged them both; that the firſt Infraction of the Peace had been made by England, by the Attack upon Andrew Barton; that the King of England aſſiſted the Ducheſs of Savoy againſt the Duke of Guelders, a Couſin and Ally of James; that the Queen of Scots had not, after repeated Demands, received her Legacy; that the Engliſh Commiſſioners ſent to accommodate Matters upon the Borders, had but trifled; and, that he ought to aid and ſupport the French King: But what ſeems to have irritated him in a particular Manner, was, the monitory Brief againſt him from Rome, which had been obtained at the Inſtance of Bambridge Archbiſhop of York. Upon Weſt's repreſenting to him in a former Converſation, that the Pope of his own mere Motion, cauſed this Brief to be expedited, he ſaid he would appeal from it, and ſend the Biſhop of Murray to the new Pope, to prevail with him not to give Sentence againſt him unheard, and if he could not obtain a Promiſe from his Holineſs to that End, he would never do Obedience to him. He added, That if he were diſpoſed to make War upon the King of England, he ſhould not deſiſt upon the Pope's Monition. By this Brief of Julius II, Sentence was given againſt him, under Condition that he brake the Peace, and whatever Application was made to Leo the Tenth, to have it reverſed, He was not able to obtain that Grace, this Pope confirming the Act of his Predeceſſor, and the King dying in Conſequence of it, under the Sentence of Excommunication, could not have Chriſtian Burial, 'till a Diſpenſation was granted by his Holineſs to that End.

5. The Death of this King was occaſioned by his proſecuting the War. When he had in Perſon, at the Head of 50,000 Men or more, entered the Borders, and after a Siege which laſted but a few Days, taken Norham Caſtle, Thomas Earl of Surrey with an Army ſcarce exceeding half the Number, advanced to meet him: But before he prepared to engage him, he ſent a Challenge to him ſpecifying the Time and Field of Battle, which James complying with, afterwards thought fit to change his Meaſures. Upon this, in a ſecond monitory Challenge the Earl charges him with Breach of Promiſe, and with putting himſelf into a Ground more like a Fortreſs or Camp, than upon any indifferent Ground for Battle to be tried. This Letter, tho' written with a Spirit that became a brave Commander, yet in the Language and Addreſs of it is very courtly and reſpectful: The Buſineſs of it is to deſire James to deſcend from the Mount, where he had poſted himſelf, and there was no coming at him, into the Plain of Milfield, which lay between the two Armies. The Admiral, Son to the Earl of Surrey, had ſent a Meſſage to the like Effect, ſignifying, [c] 'That becauſe he could meet no Scot's Ships at Sea, he landed that he might juſtify Andrew Barton's Death: And, That as he expected no Mercy from his Enemies, he would ſpare none but the King himſelf if he fell into his Hands, and to make all good, he would be in the Front of the Battle.

6. The Letters of Challenge having no Effect towards bringing King James down from the Hills, to make Good what he had given Expectation of to the Earl, that General by poſſeſſing himſelf of a Poſt, whereby he cut off ſuch Comunication, which the Enemy had with the Country, ſo as to prevent any Supplies of Proviſion, found Means of obliging the King of Scotland to remove; in conſequence of which happened the memorable Battle of Flodden-Field, where, after a hot and bloody but doubtful Fight, wherein great Bravery was ſhewn, and many gallant Actions performed on both Sides, that King was ſlain, doing all that a magnanimous Prince could do, with one Archbiſhop, two Biſhop's, and about Ten thouſand other Perſons: The dead Body of the King being embalmed by Order of the Earl, was removed to New-

caſtle, and from thence to Shene in Surrey, where it was honourably interred. But that Prince dying under the Sentence of Excommunication, before the proper Rites of Chriſtian Burial could be performed, it was neceſſary that a Diſpenſation ſhould be obtained from Rome to that End, which was granted at the King's Inſtance. Accordingly Leo the Tenth in the firſt [d] Year of his Pontificate, writes a Letter to King Henry, ſignifying, that "Whereas "James late King of Scotland, in a Treaty he had made with Henry "the Seventh of England, confirmed by Pope Alexander the Sixth, "had articled, That if at any Time he ſhould act contrary to the "Tenour of that Treaty, or in Breach of it, he would incur the "Sentence of Excommunication, as was ſpecified by proper In"ſtruments of the ſaid Pope; and that James afterwards upon "his Marriage with the King's Siſter, renewed and eſtabliſhed the "ſaid Treaty, and ſubmitted himſelf to the ſame Cenſure if he "infringed that Treaty; and notwithſtanding, in violation of ſo "many powerful Ties and Engagements had broken the Peace, "and for that Reaſon had been declared and pronounced Excom"municated by Chriſtopher Archbiſhop of York (Cardinal) in vir"tue of full Powers granted him to that End by Julius the Se"cond, and that dying in the Field of Battle, upon the Borders "of England, his Body had not been interred in ſacred Ground; "therefore in Conſideration of the Dignity of his Character, his "Alliance to the King, the common Events of Life, and his per"ſonal Vertues, the King had been induced to deſire that his "Body might be carried to London, in order to be interred in the "Cathedral Church of St. Paul's according to his royal Dignity; "and the Pope being moved with ſo pious and laudable an In"ſtance of Zeal in his Majeſty, and ſtudious of giving all pro"per Teſtimonies of his Regard to him, and being further chari"tably perſwaded, that the ſaid King James, in his laſt Moments, "might exerciſe ſome ſuitable Acts of Contrition, ſuch as the Cir"cumſtances of the Time would admit: He therefore granted a "Licenſe to his Majeſty to remove his Body, and cauſe it to be "buried in the ſaid Cathedral, with ſuch Funeral Rites and So"lemnities as his Majeſty ſhould think requiſite and becoming: "And that his Majeſty might appoint the Biſhop of London or "any other Biſhop, before his Interment, to abſolve him by Vir"tue of the Pope's Authority, from all Impediments or Difficul"ties on Account of the Cenſures paſſed againſt him; provided "withal, that his Majeſty, in the Name of the deceaſed King, "ſhould himſelf undergo ſome convenient Penance, notwithſtand"ing any Rules or Conſtitutions to the contrary."

[d] Bibl. Cott. Vitell. 2 Fol. 54. & Rym. T. 13. 385.

7. We may judge from this Letter, how great an Aſcendant the Popes had at that Time over Chriſtian Princes, what Regard was paid to their Decrees, and how ſacred and awful the Cenſures of the Church were then thought. I do not ſay, but that eccleſiaſtical Power was in many Inſtances extended beyond its juſt Bounds, and ought to have been in ſuch Inſtances reſtrained: But the Abuſe of any Thing ought not certainly to be pleaded for its Abolition, eſpecially where the Exerciſe of it is neceſſary to the Being and Ends of Society: As to the particular Occaſion, upon which King James had been excommunicated, ſucceſſively by three Popes, it was interpretatively owing to his own Act. He had inſerted it as a Condition in the Treaty with Henry VII, that in Conſequence of his violating the Faith he had given, he ſhould be liable to be excommunicated: The Pope therefore in pronouncing the Sentence of Excommunication againſt him, or in conſidering him as a Perſon out of the viſible Communion of the Church, did not act, as himſelf and others dignified with the Pontificate, would ſometimes do, in virtue of the Plenitude of his Power, or after a Manner wholly arbitrary, but by Right, a ſpecious Pretence at leaſt to it, of a ſpecial and expreſs Stipulation, to which James himſelf had conditionally agreed.

8. The Advancement of Leo the Tenth to the Pontificate was no Obſtacle to the Almoner's Riſe, or the Succeſs of his Affairs at Rome. This Pope purſued the Steps of his Predeceſſor Julius, and ſhewed the ſame Zeal in aſſerting the Power of the Triple Crown, and in condemning thoſe who ſeparated from him. Julius did not live perfectly to execute the Deſigns which he had formed againſt the Enemies of the Church, but left them, when almoſt brought to Maturity, to be finiſhed by his Succeſſor; who was more moderate to Appearance in his Temper and Manner of Acting, but not leſs vigilant in bringing Matters, which he had reſolved upon, to bear. Julius had a martial Spirit, and in the Characters of Valour and Intrepidity few Heroes have exceeded him. He appeared and aſſiſted in Perſon, and in all the Pomp of military Dreſs at the Taking of Towns. He was ſo impetuous in puſhing his Deſigns that nothing could obſtruct him, or be done ſoon enough; he had no Regard to the Cold of the Seaſon, or to the Imbecillity and Decays of old Age. It was ſaid, he threw the Keys of St. Peter into the Tyber, to ſhew, that he only deſigned to make uſe of his Sword. But this Story ſeems only to be founded upon an Epigram, and great Allowance is to be made in Compoſitions of that Kind to Fiction, and the Diſtreſs wherein the Poet frequently finds himſelf, for Want, as he may conceive it, of an agreeable Turn. It is certain however, that this Pope, with his great Courage, did not want a political Head, by which he formed Leagues and and broke them, like other Princes, as the Scene of Affairs happened to vary, or new Exigencies of State were thought to require. The Emperor and King of France being equally diſguſted at his Conduct, endeavoured to humble him, by a Method ever formidable to the Popes: They approved by their Letters Patents the Council of Piſa, and protected the Fathers who compoſed that Council, and who declared Julius ſuſpended from the Adminiſtration of the Pontificate, and forbad Obedience to him: Far from being herewith intimidated, he excommunicated and degraded thoſe Fathers in his Council of Lateran; and tho' he did not live to oblige Lewis the Twelfth to renounce and condemn their Sentence againſt him, yet he left Things in ſuch a Situation, that Leo the Tenth, his Succeſſor, found this a Work of much leſs Difficulty.

9. This Pope, though he had a great Spirit, was better verſed in the Arts of Condeſcention, and of gaining his Point by that Means. He had a great many fine Talents, the Luſtre of which was tarniſhed with certain Vices, and a Levity on many Occaſions, which very ill became him, tho' the Diſorders into which he fell, have been aſcribed by ſome to a Temper more [e] eaſy and complaiſant, rather than naturally vicious. Yet in proceeding againſt the Schiſmaticks, and thoſe who adhered to them, he acted with great Vigour and Reſolution.

10. In a Letter from [f] Archbiſhop Bambridge to the King, that Prelate gives his Majeſty an Account of what had paſſed in the Council of Lateran againſt them, at the Time of his writing it, and of ſome private Converſation he had with his Holineſs in relation to two of them, and to what he had done for their Rebuke, Shame, and Infamy. And tho' his Holineſs determined to reſtore them, yet it was in ſuch a Method, as ſhould at once tend to humble them, and to do Honour to thoſe who had taken Arms againſt them. As to the Schiſmaticks in France, the Pope declares his firm Reſolution to make no Step towards abſolving them from the Interdict, without the expreſs Conſent of his Confederates.

11. It appears from the whole Tenour of this Letter, how zealous that Archbiſhop, as well as the King his Maſter, was, in oppoſing the Schiſm, and in aſſiſting the Pope againſt all his Enemies, particularly againſt Lewis the Twelfth. But there is one Paſſage which ſhews, that Polydor Virgil, who is ſaid to be Body and Soul to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and then reſided at our Court, was not ſo careful, as might have been expected from his Character and Abilities, to inform himſelf concerning the real Deſigns and Tranſactions of it. For in a Letter to Cardinal Adrian, whoſe Agent he was, he is ſaid to inform him, that the King would in no caſe perſonally proceed againſt the French. We may judge by this one Inſtance, that intire Credit is not always to be given to this Author, in reporting Matters of Fact or Conſultation, where they are not otherways ſufficiently atteſted. We have in this Letter a remarkable Inſtance to ſhew, that his Holineſs did not diſdain to make uſe of one of the common Artifices, employed by Princes to ſalve Appearances, and amuſe their Friends. Upon this View, his Holineſs ſignifies by a brief to the King, that he deſigns to ſend a Legate to him to treat of univerſal Peace. But this Archbiſhop freely declares at the ſame time, that the Sovereign Pontiff has really no ſuch Intention, that He only does it for a Shew, and that he may be ſeen to keep his Oath. In conformity to the Pope's ſecret Will, and the Maxims whereby he governs himſelf in this Affair, the Archbiſhop repreſents to the King, that he thinks it neither for his Honour nor Advantage, to admit ſuch a Legate, eſpecially for that Intent.

12. In the Cloſe of this Letter, Mention is made of the great Zeal of the Biſhop of Worceſter in the King's Service at Rome, and of the powerful Intereſt which that Prelate had with the Pope: And who, as appears by a Letter from him to the [g] Almoner on the Tenth of May preceeding this from the Archbiſhop, ſhews how deſirous he was to give him proper Teſtimonies of his Eſteem, and how ſenſible of the Confidence to which he was then admitted with the King. And tho' the Pope made ſome Scruple of granting a Diſpenſation in his Favour, which was thought both unreaſonable, and without Precedent, that he might hold Benefices tho' conſiſting of more than three Parochial Churches to the Value of Two thouſand Pounds annually, at leaſt of Two thouſand Marks: Yet his Holineſs, as he declares, not only on account of the Almoner's perſonal Vertues, but of his great Weight and Favour with the King, if upon Enquiry any ſuch Diſpenſation might be found in England upon Record, and a true Copy of it ſhould be tranſmitted to Rome, will readily expedite one in his Favour to the ſame Effect.

13. This was a Year of Succeſs to the common Confederacy, as of Glory in particular to the Engliſh Arms. On the Tenth of June Archbiſhop [b] Bambridge writes a Letter to the King, giving his Majeſty an Account of a ſignal Victory obtained by the Duke of Millain and the Swiſs in his Aid, over an Army of the French conſiſting of about Ten thouſand Men. The Duke of Millain being at a City of Lombardy called Neware at the Head of Five thouſand Swiſs, was vigorouſly attacked by the French, who with their Artillery, had levelled fifty Yards of the Wall. But the Beſieged did not only bravely repulſe them, but ſallied out with ſuch Force and Reſolution upon them, that they put them to the Rout, and ſoon became Maſters of their Artillery; what encouraged them to ſo brave an Action was, that Seven thouſand Swiſs marching to their Aid, were in a Manner at hand, and came up very opportunely with them. Upon the two Armies engaging, a fierce and bloody Battle was fought, wherein the French General with two of his Sons were killed, with a Gentleman who headed the French Faction in the Milaneſe, and whoſe Death, if the Calculation of the Archbiſhop be juſt, imported as much to the French, as they would have ſuſtained by the Loſs of a thouſand Launces. A fourth Part of the French were ſlain in the Field, and ſeveral of thoſe who made their Eſcape, were killed by the Peaſants. Among the Officers of Diſtinction the Baron de Barnyſe alone ſaved himſelf, and made a Retreat with a ſmall Party into a neighbouring Caſtle, where he was ſurrounded in ſuch a Manner and ſo expoſed, that he could no ways either make his Eſcape, or defend himſelf. During the Action, the Viceroy of Naples was paſſing the Po in order to join the Swiſs, of whom about Five thouſand were ſlain, but received Orders from the Duke of Millain in his March, that he ſhould take the direct Way toward the Venetian Army: Orders were ſent at the ſame time to the Generals who commanded the Imperialiſts, that they ſhould take ſuch care to ſecure the Paſſes and Defiles, that the Venetians might find no Way open for Flight. The Pope was encouraged by this News to declare himſelf more vigorouſly againſt the French, and cauſed publick Rejoicings to be made for it. The Archbiſhop concludes, it was daily expected by his Holineſs, and the great Men at Rome, that his Maſter ſhould utterly exterminate the French King.

14. I ſhall here take the Liberty of citing a Letter, tho' written ſome time before this Period, from the [i] Almoner, wherein there are certain Particulars relating to his own and the Hiſtory of that Time, proper to gratify the Curious. It is directed to his Patron, that great Stateſman and excellent Prelate, Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter. The Almoner informs him in the firſt Place, by advice from Sir Robert Wingfield, That the Emperor had received News of the great Danger the Pope was apprehended to be in from a Mortification in the Lower Parts of his Body, and that his Imperial Majeſty deſign'd to recommend the Cardinal Adrian as his Succeſſor, and had engaged Sir Robert Wingfield in his Intereſt: The Almoner, in ſome private Converſation which he had with the King upon this Intelligence,

Intelligence, repreſents the ſaid Cardinal as a Perſon, if promoted to the Papacy, capable of doing both much Honour and Service to his Majeſty; and that the Emperor having already declared himſelf in his Favour, his Promotion, with his Majeſty's Help, might eaſily be effected. This Adrian, as appears by Letters from the Court of Rome at that time, had been employed in ſeveral Negotiations by our King and his Miniſtry; was an active, artful, and enterpriſing Man, and particularly affected to ſhew an extraordinary Zeal againſt the Schiſmaticks, and in promoting the Intereſts of the Common Cauſe, or League, whereof the King was at the Head. Yet Cardinal Bambridge, whether from any perſonal Diſlike, or juſt Grounds, in ſome of his Diſpatches ſpeaks of this Cardinal, as a Man very aſſuming, who would be thought to underſtand and to do every thing; but was neither ſincere, nor inſtrumental in the King's Service, as he pretended. However it ſeems, tho' theſe Overtures came to nothing, he was in ſo great Eſteem both with the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and our Almoner his Chaplain, and with the King himſelf, that his Majeſty ſeemed to approve what the Almoner had preſumed to mention in his Favour, who yet did not think it proper or decent to puſh the Matter farther at that time. It appears from the Sequel of this Letter, that the Lord Chamberlain and the Biſhop of Durham were inclined to favour the Cardinal St. George: that they oppoſed the Advancement of Adrian, and ſpake to his Diſadvantage: but that if the Biſhop of Wincheſter would make his Appearance at Court, where he was much deſired and expected, this, with other Matters, concerning which the Reſolutions to be taken were deferred to his coming, might terminate happily.

15. The Almoner proceeds to obſerve, the ill Succeſs which the Maſter of the Rolls, Dr. John Young, had found in his Negotiation at the Court of [k] France, when he was ſent on a monitory Embaſſage to Lewis, requiring him to deſiſt from the War againſt the Pope. He writes, "Never Man had worſe cheer than he, in "France, and that he had done nothing touching the Matter "wherewith he was charged." After ſome Obſervation relating to the Treatment of our Army in the Spaniſh Expedition, and the Diſpoſition of the King's Money, which he thinks was made after a profuſe Manner, and exported to the King's Diſadvantage, with ſome other Particulars, which it is not neceſſary to repeat; He takes notice to the Biſhop of the cold Reception which the Treaſurer had received, upon his coming lately to Court, at which he was ſo diſguſted, that he had abſented from thence above a Week. The Almoner embraceth ſo favourable an Opportunity of repreſenting to his great Patron, how with little Difficulty the Treaſurer, who was now declining in the King's Favour, might be excluded from his Apartment at Court, of which, in his poor Judgement (he ſeems as if he would expreſs himſelf in a Manner agreeable to the Sentiments of the Biſhop) no little Good ſhould enſue.

16. But I principally cite this Letter to ſhew, that neither the Biſhop of Wincheſter nor the Almoner, approved a Breach with Scotland: That to prevent it, The Dean of Windſor Dr. Weſt had been ſent into Scotland, to declare the Cauſe why he had taken the Ships belonging to that Nation, and proceeded in the Manner we had done, againſt the Subjects of it; and alſo to pay the Legacy due to the Queen of Scotland, for which ſuch frequent Demands had been made at our Court. He complains that Mr. Howard, a Relation probably or Creature of the Earl of Surrey, contributed very much to influence the King againſt the Scots, and that by this Means not only much of the King's Money was ſpent, but the King himſelf was more diſpoſed to War than Peace. He repreſents to the Biſhop, that his Preſence would be very neceſſary, to undeceive the King and divert him from ſuch Counſels. During the Negotiations between the two Powers, before the War commenced, the King of Scots throughout the whole Progreſs of them, declared himſelf very ſollicitous for procuring an univerſal Peace, and that he was willing, in purſuance of ſo good and deſireable an End, to come into any reaſonable Meaſures. But our Commiſſioners were not empowered to treat upon that Subject, but only to engage him to preſerve the Peace according to the Treaties then ſubſiſting with England. Whether Reaſons of common Safety might oblige the King of Scots to aſſiſt his Ally Lewis the Twelfth of France againſt the Arms of England, when a Peace for him could not be procured; and when England would grow ſtill more formidable to its Neighbours, by the Advantages which it ſhould obtain againſt Lewis, whether the Scots were indolently to expect the Iſſue of a War, wherein if England ſhould ſucceed, they would be leſs able, in caſe of a Rupture between the two Nations, to defend themſelves: Theſe are Queſtions of Nicety upon which my political Readers may determine as they pleaſe. Whatever Judgements we may make concerning the Legality of this War, it appears, that in the Movements which were originally made towards it, two of our ableſt Miniſters thought it more adviſeable, if that could be done upon honourable Terms, to preſerve the Peace.

17. Though the [l] Letter which Leo the Tenth ſent about this time to the King with a Sword and a Hat, has no immediate Relation to the Hiſtory of the Almoner; yet as there are ſome Parti-lars in it, diſcovering the high Claims of that Pope in his civil as well as his eccleſiaſtical Capacity, it may not be improper in a Work, wherein I am to ſhew the Grounds of the Reformation, to give an Extract or two from it. His Holineſs after the uſual Form of Benediction, acquaints the King, that in Teſtimony of the great Regard which he entertains for his Majeſty on Account of his many excellent Qualities, eſpecially his great Zeal for Religion and the Church, he has ſent him a conſecrated Hat and Sword. That this Preſent, the Signification whereof he explains, denotes the two Powers Spiritual and Temporal, wherewith the Roman Pontiff is of Right inveſted, wiſhing him Succeſs and Proſperity in the Uſe of them, againſt the Enemies of the Church and his own. This Letter is directed to the Moſt Chriſtian King, and it is the only authentick Inſtrument I have met with under that Title; which was promiſed and granted by Julius the Second, but the Brief of it had not been divulged, or formally executed. And this Brief I take to be the Subject Matter of a Letter from Cardinal Bambridge to the King, tho' not expreſsly ſpecified. After a congratulatory Addreſs to his Majeſty upon the Succeſs of his [m] Arms againſt France, that Prelate acquaints him that he had deſired Cardinal Sinogalen in his Name to deliver the Brief which his Grace knew of, and which had been depoſited with him by Pope Julius of bleſſed Memory; but that Cardinal excuſed himſelf from delivering it, without expreſs Warrant from the King in Writing, by Reaſon it was of very great and weighty Importance, appertaining to the perpetual Honour of ſo high and mighty a Prince. He adviſes, that the King would take no Notice, but that this Brief was in his Hands before the Death of Julius, and that he would move his Succeſſor Leo the Tenth, to give a ſpecial Confirmation to it, and in more ample Manner under Lead. The remaining Part of the Letter contains a Recommendation of that Cardinal to the King's Favour, with a Stricture or two upon Cardinal Adrian agreeable to the Character before given of him, from a Teſtimony of this Archbiſhop. It may deſerve to be conſidered, how the King afterwards ſuffered a Title to be loſt or diſcontinued, for which he was ſo ſollicitous, which in the Reaſon of the Thing, he had as good a Claim to, as that of the Faith's Defender afterwards conferred on him, and which he purchaſed at the Price of a foreign and expenſive War, if what ſome Authors of Credit relate be true, That the Promiſe of this Title, as hath been obſerved before, was the principal Inducement upon which he engaged in the common Alliance.

CHAP. IX.

1. Concerning the Biſhoprick of Tournay. 2. And a Treaty of Marriage between Lady Mary, the King's Siſter, and Prince Charles of Spain. 3. A Letter in Relation to it from Knight at Mechlin. 4. The Reaſon of citing that Letter. 5. The King of France ſeeks an Alliance with England by Means of Marrying the Princeſs. 6. The Almoner's Services to him on that Occaſion. 7. A Letter relating to it from King Henry to the Almoner. 8. What Suggeſtions the French made uſe of to perſuade the Marrriage. 9. The Articles of which were drawn up by the Almoner. 10. The Princeſs is conducted into France, and the Marriage there ſolemnized.

1. THOUGH it concerned the Almoner, now Biſhop of Lincoln, to cultivate a good Underſtanding in the Netherlands, on Account of the Vicinity of his Biſhoprick at Tournay, where his Affairs were but in an ill Situation, and his Agent who ſuperintended the Affairs of it, and collected his Revenues, had many Difficulties to ſurmount; yet theſe Conſiderations did not hinder him from taking due Care of his Maſter's Intereſts in thoſe Parts.

2. There had been a Treaty ſome time before concluded by the Emperor and Henry the Seventh, concerning a Marriage between the Lady Mary his Daughter, and Charles Prince of Spain, which Treaty ſtill ſubſiſted in Force; yet the Marriage had been deferred on the Part of England, not only becauſe the Princeſs was yet thought too Young for the Celebration of it, but for Want of ſufficient Security for her Jointure. But ſhe being now of a riper Age, and the King willing to remove all Obſtacles to the Match, thought fit to demand a Performance of it, and ſent Commiſſioners for that End to the Council of Flanders: But finding himſelf ſtill eluded on that Side with formal and dilatory Excuſes, he began to entertain a Suſpicion, that the Emperor had not acted a ſincere Part in his Negotiations relating to that Article.

3. The King was confirmed in this Thought by a Letter from Knight at Mechlin, to the Almoner; who writes, that "whereas "we have had a great Appearance by the Emperor's Letters, that "he would obſerve his Promiſes, now it appeareth that all was "diſſembled to keep the King in good Hope, 'till the King of "Arragon and He had made their Part: Notwithſtanding he is "deſirous that the Marriage ſhould be performed, by Reaſon

" whereof both He and the King of Arragon think they ſhall make " amends for all Injuries and Breaches.
" I think it were not expedient ſo ſhortly to ſatisfy their Minds
" in that Part, as they ſhall deſire; for it maketh much more for " them here, than for the King's Grace: For by the Marriage,
" according to good Reaſon, they ſhould be aſſured of England,
" and the King's Grace never the more aſſured of them; for the " Prince is young, and hath young Council, which is French.
" And the Prince is like to be obſtinate, if he enter into any " Opinion; and conſidered, that all the Reſt about him are French,
" and hath ſpoken ſuſpicious Words, as I have written before time
" unto you.
" Item, That there is no Faſtneſs in the Emperor; and he did
" perſuade by his Letters unto the Lady the Archdutcheſs, that the " Marriage ſhould be deferred, for he was counſelled by the Phy-
" ſicians, that in caſe there followed Conſummation, that in all " likelihood it ſhould be the Deſtruction of the Prince, or he " ſhould by that Means loſe the Hopes of Iſſue: And of all like" lihood, the Motion of this did come from hence to the Empe" ror, which is ſo light of Credence, that ſmall Perſuaſions ſhall " lead him, as they will.
" Item, Motion was made by the King of Arragon, that the " Prince's eldeſt Daughter might marry into the Houſe of France;
" and thus the Grandfather and Father-in-law, and all thoſe that " govern her, all intend their proper Wele, not regarding our
" Maſter's Honour, or the great Dangers and marvillous Charges " that they have brought him unto; always foreſeeing, that the " Perfection of this Marriage ſhould ſo bind the King, that he " might not attempt any Thing to them prejudicial.
" I cannot ſtudy in my Mind, how the King's Grace might " make his Part, without ſome Peace or Truce taken with France.
" For ſtanding as now for fear of his Grace, the King of Arra-
" gon and the Emperor have what they will ask. And it is not " unknown, that if the French King had Peace with our Maſter,
" he would obſerve toward the Emperor and the King of Arragon,
" no more, than were his Pleaſure.

4. This Letter deſerved to be cited at large for the Spirit and good Senſe of it; beſides that it lets us into ſome Part of Secret Hiſtory, relating to the Conduct of the Emperor, and Ferdinand, and the Character of Prince Charles, afterwards veſted with the Imperial Dignity. It ſhews alſo upon what weighty Reaſons the Biſhop of Lincoln adviſed the King, at this Juncture, to the Treaty and Marriage with France.

5. Lewis

5. Lewis the Twelfth having Intelligence, that ſome Jealouſy and Miſunderſtanding had happened between our King and thoſe two Powers, conſidered how he might improve the Occaſion to his own Advantage. And being now in a Diſpoſition to marry again, though far advanced in Years, he caſt his Eye towards the young and beautiful Princeſs of England: and thought, if he might ſucceed in his Addreſſes, he would not only by that Means procure a preſent Peace with England, but eſtabliſh it on a ſolid and laſting Foundation. He had a great many Reaſons, from the preſent Condition of his Affairs, to court this Alliance; three of the moſt potent Kings in Europe had entered into a ſtrict League Offenſive and Defenſive againſt him; two of his principal Towns towards the Netherlands had been taken by our King; the Flower of his Cavalry either deſtroyed, taken Priſoners, or put to a ſhameful Flight; his Couſin and Confederate James the Fourth was ſlain in the Field of Battle; and the Adminiſtration of the Government in Scotland did thereupon, for the preſent, devolve upon Queen Margaret his Relict, and Siſter to King Henry. The Pope too, who had then a great Influence over the ſeveral Powers and Courts of Europe, maintained open War with him, and attacked him both by his temporal and ſpiritual Sword; and he found himſelf more diſtreſſed by his Holineſs, under the Notion of a Schiſmatick, than of a civil Adverſary. Notwithſtanding the ill Situation he was in, on all theſe Accounts, he had but a ſhort Space, during the Winter Seaſon, to provide for the Operations of War, which were to begin the Spring following.

6. Theſe were very powerful Motives to oblige Lewis the Twelfth to think of making his Peace: And to that End, conſidering the Power of England, and the perſonal Weight which Henry the Eighth had with the other confederate Princes, he found it neceſſary to make Overtures of Peace and Friendſhip to him, and to cement them the more, deſired his Siſter, the greateſt Beauty of that Age, in Marriage. The Almoner apprehending theſe Overtures to be for his Maſter's Service, readily came into them, and gave the French Miniſters all the Aſſiſtance he could towards effecting them, both by his Intereſt with the King, and by the Influence which, if we may judge by the Sequel, he appears to have had with the Princeſs: Though he could not but be ſenſible, that by making this Step, he ſhould incur the Diſpleaſure of Maximilian and the Flemings, and might thereby ſuffer on Account of his own private Affairs, in their Neighbourhood.

7. It appears from a Letter of the King to the Biſhop of Lincoln, that the Duke of Longueville, then Priſoner in England, contributed very much to facilitate, and perfect this Treaty, having Commiſſion from Lewis to ſue for Peace, and being himſelf more deſirous of it, that he might ſooner obtain his Liberty. The King's Words to that Prelate are, as I find his Letter tranſcribed, "[m] I ſaid "to him, ſeeing that the King your Maſter hath ſought ſo gently "to us both for Amity and Marriage, I aſſure you, our Honour "ſaved, we could be well content to hearken thereto; and he may "have both under this Manner, viz. That the Peace be made du-"ring our Lives and one Year after; for if it be made for Years "it cannot endure any longer than the Payment, which expired, "ſhould be Cauſe of new Breach and Demands. Wherefore to "eſchew all Danger, and to recompenſe me for with-holding mine "Inheritance, which if I would be ſlack in, my Subjects ſhould "murmur at, this Amity may be made during our Lives and "one Year after, your Maſter paying yearly to me 100,000 "Crowns: Which Amity once granted, the Alliance ſhould not "be refuſed.

"If your Maſter conſider what Heritance he holdeth from me, "and what Good my Amity may do to help forth his Matter in "Italy, I think he will not greatly ſtick at this."

8. The French to induce the King to hearken more readily to their Overtures, made uſe of theſe two Suggeſtions, That Charles Prince of Caſtile contracted to the King's Siſter, was yet at that time actually in Treaty concerning a Marriage with Anne Daughter of Ludiſlaus King of Hungary; and that if the Emperor really ſhould be in earneſt to have the former Contract executed, yet ſtill the Prince, who would not be fourteen Years old 'till February following, was not of a competent Age to marry. Tho' this latter Argument might perhaps have been not improperly omitted, as miniſtring Occaſion of an Inquiry not much to the French King's Advantage, whether it was not more adviſeable to marry a young Lady in the Bloom of Youth and Beauty, to a Prince of that Age, than to an old and infirm King, upon the Verge of the Grave.

9. However the Treaty was at laſt agreed upon, and the Biſhop of Lincoln commanded to draw up the Articles of the Marriage: One Condition whereof was, that the Princeſs ſhould have for her Dowry 300,000 Crowns, but two whereof were only to be paid, it being provided ſo by a ſecret Article, and the other Hundred thouſand only added for [n] Stipulation.

10. After the Treaty of Marriage was concluded according to the uſual Forms, the Princeſs was conducted on her Way towards France ſo far as the Sea-ſide by the King and Queen, and then committed to the Duke of Norfolk's Care, who attended her into France, where ſhe was received with her Retinue (which made a very ſplendid Appearance) after a Manner becoming her high Birth, and the Solemnity of the Occaſion. The French King met her at Abbeville, and entertained her with much Pomp and Gallantry, and there celebrated the Marriage on the ninth Day of October, being the Day ſacred to St. Dennis. Her Entrance afterwards into Paris was moſt Magnificent, and accompanied with the greateſt Demonſtrations of publick Joy.

Yet there is Reaſon after all to doubt, whether this Marriage was previouſly, and in all Reſpects, agreeable to the Inclinations of the Princeſs. The Inequality of her [p] Age and that of Lewis the Twelfth, renders it not improbable, that her Eſpouſals to that Monarch were rather owing to her Brother's Influence and Advice, than to her own free and proper Choice, even on Suppoſition, which we are not neceſſarily obliged to make, that ſhe had not already received any Impreſſions in favour of the Duke of Suffolk. Biſhop Godwin in his Annals of Henry the Eighth, taking upon him to aſſign the Motives of her Marriage, reſolves them into the Authority of a Brother; but above all, what he obſerves might be ſuppoſed to have the greateſt Power over her Sex, the Proſpect of that Glory, which attends the [q] Name and Dignity of a Queen.

The Almoner on his Part poſſibly had Motives for promoting the Marriage, that reſpected the Ends of his own Ambition: Yet with which, Reaſons of publick Good, after an expenſive War with France, might at the ſame time very well conſiſt. The Friendſhip of ſo great a Prince as Lewis the Twelfth, though at preſent under ſome Difficulties, was not to be diſregarded: He was ſtill capable by one Means or other of aſſiſting the Almoner in puſhing his Fortune, and the Neceſſities to which he found himſelf reduced, would naturally incline him, as in Fact they did, to make ample Promiſes to a Perſon of the Almoner's Weight in the Engliſh Court. They who will conſult the Treaties relating to this Marriage, may eaſily diſcover how ſollicitous the French King and his Miniſters were to have them perfected, and upon what Grounds. Neither was the Court of England reluctant to the Overtures of a Peace, which might be made upon honourable and moderate Terms. Notwithſtanding the Advantages which had been obtained over the French, and the Proſpect of obtaining ſtill greater, in caſe we had purſued them; yet we choſe to grant Peace upon the Conditions propoſed, rather than to inſiſt upon ſuch hard and ignoble

Terms,

Terms, to which the laſt Diſtreſs could only oblige a Sovereign Prince to ſubmit. If it be ungenerous to take all the Advantages againſt a private Adverſary, which Fortune may have put into our Hands, it is equally irreconcileable with the Maxims of true Generoſity, to extort ſuch Conceſſions from a neighbouring Potentate, with which he cannot comply, either in Honour to himſelf, or perhaps in Juſtice to his Subjects.

Archbiſhop. 16. Why this Project was well received by Him, yet certain Difficulties retarded the Execution of it.

1514. 1. THE Almoner had not been long promoted to the Biſhoprick of [r] Lincoln, before the Archiepiſcopal Chair of York became vacant by the Death of Chriſtopher Bambridge the King's Ambaſſador at Rome. Concerning the violent Manner of which, I ſhall take Occaſion to ſay ſomething in the Sequel. I am only to obſerve at preſent, that it opened a Way for the Almoner to ſucceed him in that high Dignity; who under the Title of Biſhop-elect of York, had the Adminiſtration of the [s] Temporalities belonging to that See granted by the King on the Fifth of Auguſt 1514, and on the Sixth of November following he was actually tranſlated to it from Lincoln.

2. But as he had been ſo immediately concerned in the Negotiations relating to the Marriage of the Princeſs; who ſtill continued, tho' Queen of France, to honour him with particular Marks of her Favour and Confidence; it may not be here improper to give ſome further Account of that important Affair, ſo far eſpecially as he was more directly intereſted in the Conſequences of it.

3. After that beautiful Princeſs had been received, and her Marriage to Lewis the Twelfth of France ſolemnized, in the moſt ſplendid and joyful Manner, and the King had made Preſents to her of Jewels to an ineſtimable Value, ſhe ſtill complains in a Letter to the Almoner, now Archbiſhop, in reſpect to the following Article, that ſhe had not been well uſed. "That the very Day "after her Marriage, all her Servants, Men and Women, had "been diſcharged." She adds, "Yea, my Mother Guildeford, by "whom the King and you Willed me in any wiſe to be ad-"viſed." She deſires the Archbiſhop to propoſe ſome Means that this Lady may return to her again, and declares ſhe had as leave loſe all the Advantages, which might accrue to her in France, as the Counſel of that Lady, when ſhe ſhould want it, which, ſhe adds, is not like long to be expected; from whence we may probably conclude, ſhe began already to be apprehenſive of ſome ſenſible Decays in the King, and that the Thread of his Life was running off apace; ſhe aſſures the Archbiſhop, that the Noblemen and Gentlemen that attend her, could ſhew him more in this Matter, than it became her to write. She complains that the Duke of Norfolk had not dealt well with her, becauſe he diſcovered too great Facility in complying with the French Court, and in granting every Thing they demanded. In Concluſion, to ſhew the great Regard which the Queen had for the Archbiſhop, ſhe wiſhes, that inſtead of the Duke of Norfolk, he had been charged to attend her into France. She writes to the King upon the ſame Subject of her ill Treatment, in having her Servants removed; and though King Lewis, upon her Inſtances, was requeſted that the Lady Guildeford might again be received into her Service; yet he refuſed to grant this Requeſt, upon a Pretence that "Neither He nor his Wife needed any, that "ſhould guide them, as her Ladyſhip took upon her to rule the "Queen."

4. There was at this time a Miſunderſtanding between the two Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, which ſome have ſuſpected was ſecretly fomented by the Archbiſhop, that he might at the ſame time more effectually ſerve his own Intereſt's and thoſe of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, which he would be much ſooner capable of doing, could he by any Means contribute to leſſen the Eſteem which the King ſtill entertained for the Duke of Norfolk. To this End the Aſſiſtance of ſo great and potent a Favourite, as the Duke of Suffolk, was naturally ſought after; and the Archbiſhop on his Part wanted neither Power nor Inclination to make proper and ſuitable Returns of Friendſhip to him. He had now a fair Opportunity of obliging that Duke in an Affair, which he had much at Heart: For being every Way qualified for Exerciſes of Activity, and ambitious of ſignalizing himſelf, as he had often done, in performing them, he had a great Deſire to go to the Juſts in France; but being oppoſed by the Duke of Norfolk, had not yet been able to obtain the King's Leave to be Preſent at them; and therefore writes a Letter from Dover to the Archbiſhop, deſiring that he would move the King in his Favour on this Occaſion. And his Requeſt, whether at the Archbiſhop's Suit, or upon any other Conſideration, was ſoon after granted, and he appeared at thoſe Eſſays of Art and Strength to an Advantage, whereby he not only acquired much Honour to himſelf, but a good Reputation in general to the Engliſh Proweſs. The Marqueſs of Dorſet was choſen with him to aid the Dolphin, afterwards King of France, and they both of them performed Wonders. In a Letter from the Marqueſs of Dorſet, that Lord writes, "The French highly commendeth my Lord of "Suffolk, and ſaith there is no Prince Chriſtian, hath two ſuch "Servants as we two, both for Peace and War, in Field and in "Council." In a Letter to the Archbiſhop of York, giving an Account of the Juſts, he ſays, "My Lord of Suffolk and I, "ran three Days and loſt nothing: On Saturday the 18th Day "the Journey and Courſe in the Field began: My Lord of Suffolk

" and I ran the firſt Day our ſelves, then put our Aids to it, be" cauſe there was no Nobleman to run with us: On the 21ſt the " Fighting on Foot began, when they put an Almain that never " came into the Field before, againſt my Lord of Suffolk, to have " put us to Shame, but could not." It is added, in the [t] Extracts from which I now copy, " The French King ſaid (to the Queen)
" that the Lords of Dorſet and Suffolk ſhamed all France, and car" ried away the Prize."

5. Some have thought theſe Exerciſes contributed not a little to prepare the Way for a more favourable Reception of thoſe Addreſſes which the Duke of Suffolk, upon the Death of Lewis the Twelfth, afterwards made to the Queen his Relict, and againſt which ſhe was far from appearing to be greatly prepoſſeſſed. That King did not long ſurvive the Accompliſhment of his Wiſhes in the Peace, and his Marriage, which ſome were of Opinion tended much to encreaſe the Infirmities of Age, and to accelerate his Death. Varillas obſerves, it was commonly ſaid before the Match, that his Reign would be of no great Continuance after it. Some thought that having no Children but Daughters, he was poſſeſſed with too violent a Deſire of having Male-Iſſue to ſucceed to the Crown: But all his Efforts upon that View proved ineffectual. That his Temper was amorous, and might incline him to regulate his Behaviour towards the Queen more by the Allurements of her Youth and Beauty, than by the Conſideration of his own Age, may be reaſonably preſumed from his Conduct in the former Part of his Life. For having married Jane Daughter to Lewis the Eleventh, and being in Love with the Ducheſs of Brittany, he could not be eaſy 'till he had procured a Divorce from the Queen, with a Deſign of marrying that Ducheſs, the Widow of Charles VIII, his Predeceſſor. His Pretence for the Divorce was, that he had married out of Conſtraint, and for Fear, and that he had never known the Lady, who proteſted upon Oath to the contrary, and declared with all the Modeſty becoming her Sex, that the Marriage had been conſummated: And many were inclined, from their Cohabitation and the Temper of the King, to credit what ſhe ſo ſolemnly depoſed. However the Pope believed, and received the King's Proteſt, and gave 1541. a Diſpenſation for the Divorce, which was admitted by the Sorbon, and the Parliament of Paris.

6. This King, in the Courſe of his Reign, had a Mixture of good and ill Fortune; and conſidered in his perſonal Character, though he had ſome Failures, was One of the greateſt Men of the Age wherein he lived. His Courage and Spirit animated him to great Undertakings, in the Proſecution of which he was vigilant and active; he had a martial Genius, an undaunted Heart, and a politick Head. He had not only the Pope, the Emperor, England, and the Swiſs, at once againſt him, but the Charge of ſupporting an unhappy dethroned King, who brought him no other Aſſiſtance, but the Juſtice of his Cauſe: Under all theſe Difficulties he found Means to diſſolve the formidable League againſt him, and to re-eſtabliſh his Affairs before his Death, which happened ſoon after, upon a good Foot. The hardeſt Condition impoſed upon him, and to which he ſubmitted, was, That he ſhould renounce and condemn the Council of Piſa, which he did by a formal Inſtrument, tho' the Fathers of it had convened, and acted under his Protection. Yet it may ſtill be queſtioned, whether this Submiſſion was occaſioned by any Exigency to which he found his Affairs reduced, or any intimidating Apprehenſions, which he might be under on that Account; and if it were not rather the Effect of ſome Regret which he now felt in his Mind, becauſe he had contributed to foment an unhappy and dangerous Schiſm in the Church, and cauſed much Blood to be ſhed in his Wars againſt the Pope.

7. He died on the 1ſt of January 1514-15, before he had been married full three Months. Upon his Death King Henry ſent a Letter of Condolance to the Queen, deſiring to know her Inclination as to her Return into England, and that ſhe would not enter into any new Contract of Marriage without his Conſent. The Archbiſhop of York writes to her upon the ſame Subject, adviſing her, "That ſince her Husband is dead, ſhe will conform her ſelf "to the King her Brother's Will, who will never forſake her, and "that ſhe would not condeſcend to any Marriage in France." Among thoſe, who were deputed by the King to carry his Letters of Condolance to the Queen of France his Siſter, was the Duke of Suffolk, who had not been long at the French Court, before he found Encouragement agreeable to his Inclination, to make his Addreſſes to the Queen-Dowager; that Duke made no Secret of his Paſſion to the Archbiſhop. He writes to his Grace on the 3d of February, "The Day that the French King gave us Audience, his "Grace called me into his Bedchamber, and ſaid, my Lord of "Suffolk it is here bruited, that you are come over to marry the "Queen of France your Maſter's Siſter. I excuſed my ſelf and "denied it: He ſaid, then I will be plain with you, and ſhewed "me the Queen her ſelf had broken the Matter to him, and de-"ſired his Aſſiſtance therein, which he had promiſed her by the "Truth of a King, and renewed the ſame Promiſe to me. I was "convinced, and I could not but thank his Grace. Yet told "him, I was like to be undone, if this Matter ſhould come to "the Knowledge of my Maſter: And then he ſaid, Let me alone,

" for I and the Queen ſhall ſo inſtance your Maſter, that he ſhall " be content.

" Of this, continues the Duke, I do advertiſe you my Lord of " York, becauſe I intend to hide nothing from you; and I deſire " your ſpeedy Advice, and if you ſhall think good to advertiſe the " King of this Letter. My Lord, I thank God, that who I feared " moſt, is contented to be the Author of this Act himſelf, and " to inſtance the King my Maſter for me; whereby his Grace " ſhall be marvellouſly diſcharged, as well againſt his Council, as " the other Nobles of his Realm."

This Complaiſance of Francis the French King was the more ſurpriſing to thoſe who reflected, that when the publick Juſts were celebrated, on Occaſion of his Predeceſſor's Marriage, he had looked upon the Duke of Suffolk for his Atchievements in them with ſo envious an Eye, that he had formed a Deſign not only to foil him, but which might have proved of very dangerous Conſequence to him in other Reſpects: For he had cauſed a German of prodigious Strength and Stature to be privately introduced into the Field, in order to the Conflict with him; and for ſome time, the Event of it was more doubtful. But the Duke by the Blows, wherewith he repaid this unknown Champion, made him ſenſible at laſt, that he was his Superior, of which the Marqueſs of Dorſet gives an Account in the forecited Letter from him to the Archbiſhop, but conciſe, and in very modeſt Terms.

9. The Duke of Suffolk wrote to the King himſelf on the 18th of February upon this Subject, who in regard to his Royal Dignity had ſeemed to oppoſe the Deſign, but ſecretly was determined to favour it, and now conſents, " That the French King ſhould be " intreated to write for the ſaid Duke and Queen, which Requeſt " of his King Henry would grant, thereby to engage the Monarch, " and diſcharge himſelf towards his Council."

10. In a Letter from the Queen to her Brother of England, ſhe reminds him of his Promiſe, when ſhe took Leave of him, and tells him, " Your Grace knoweth well, that what I did this time, " was for your Pleaſure; and now I truſt that you will ſuffer me " to do what I liſt. For if you would have me married in any " Place, ſaving where my Mind is, I will be there where your " Grace nor any other ſhall have Joy of me. For I promiſe your " Grace, that you ſhall hear that I will be in ſome religious Houſe." She writes, That the King of France intendeth to ſend to him Overtures of a Marriage between her and the Duke of Savoy his Uncle, which ſhe hopes his Grace will not approve; and ſhe tells him where ſhe is determined to marry, if ever ſhe marry again; but obſerves at the ſame time, that the Perſon to whom ſhe has engaged her Affections, has Enemies about the King her Brother.

And it ſeems indeed, from the whole Conduct of the King in this Affair, that it was more to preſerve Appearances of State, and to ſatisfy his Council, that he did not at firſt countenance the Marriage, than out of any Oppoſition to it, as the Duke, tho' a Perſon of the greateſt Merit, and of the firſt Quality below a Crowned Head, was yet but a Subject.

11. On the 8th of February there is a Letter from this Duke to the Archbiſhop, giving an Account of a certain Engliſh Fryar who had been at the French Court, and deſired Audience of the Queen-Dowager; and under an Obteſtation of Secrecy ſaid, it was reported in England, that ſhe was to be married to the Duke of Suffolk; but he adviſed her of all Men, to beware of that Duke, for he knew well, that the Archbiſhop of York and He had meddled with the Devil, and ſo kept the King ſubject to all that pleaſed them. This Fryar was either an Enthuſiaſt, and ſo went upon ſome viſionary Deſign he had formed to himſelf, or, which is more probable, was ſent on this fooliſh Errand by ſome Enemies of the Duke and the Archbiſhop at the Engliſh Court, who under a Pretence of Zeal and Sanctity, or of occult Knowledge, and perhaps of an extraordinary Commiſſion, might divert the Queen from the Thoughts of marrying the Duke. But ſhe was too far prepoſſeſſed in his Favour, and too well fixed in her Reſolution, to be influenced by any ſuch Arts of Illuſion, which yet have ſometimes produced ſtrange Effects: She took little Notice of what he ſaid, and diſmiſſed him with Neglect. From the Concluſion of this Letter of the Duke to the Archbiſhop, we may judge, how much their Intereſts were complicated, and what it concerned them to do towards obviating the Deſigns of their common Enemies. "It were neceſſary, ſays the Duke, that you endeavour to knit a "ſure Amity between theſe two Princes, which done we ſhall not "fail, God willing, to continue in the Favour of our Maſter, in "deſpight of all that would the contrary."

12. On the Thirteenth of September this Year, I find a Letter from Mr. Pace at Rome to the Archbiſhop, wherein the Death of his Predeceſſor Bambridge, is charged upon the Biſhop of Worceſter, as an Accomplice in it, by the Confeſſion of the Perſon who had poiſoned that Archbiſhop, and, ſtung with the Remorſe of his Crime, had killed himſelf. Pace ſays it was done by that Biſhop's Inſtigation, and had been proved to be ſo by ſeveral Perſons of Learning and Character then at Rome; he ſpeaks of it as a Fact that admitted no Diſpute, and after a Charge exhibited againſt that Biſhop on ſome other Accounts, wherein himſelf and the Archbiſhop of York were perſonally concerned, he refers the Deciſion of the Matters complained of to his Grace's Equity, and deſires he may be conſidered as One, not, who affected to revenge ſo horrid a Crime,

Crime, but who ſought to diſcover the Truth; and who ſhould look upon himſelf as a Partaker in the Sin, if he ſhould diſſemble or conceal what he knew of it, upon ſo good Grounds. On the twenty fifth of the ſame Month he writes at large, and to the like Effect, to the King, and acquaints him with the Proceſs that had been made according to Law againſt the Biſhop of Worceſter, and one of his Chamberlains, for the Murder of the ſaid Archbiſhop; and that it was concluded, the Confeſſion of the Prieſt who actually perpetrated the Murder, ought to be admitted as good Evidence againſt him; nay, that it was the Opinion of ſome, the Biſhop ought to be impriſoned and compelled by Torture to confeſs the Truth. Tho' conſidering him as veſted with a Publick Character from the King, he would not conſent to that, notwithſtanding in the Rigour of the Law, all Protections were in ſuch Caſe excluded. In both theſe Letters, tho' Pace repreſents himſelf as perſonally aggrieved and ungratefully uſed by the Biſhop on ſeveral Accounts, yet he would be thought to deſign nothing but the Diſcharge of a good Conſcience, in bringing the Biſhop, if really guilty, to condign Puniſhment, and in obliging him, if innocent, to purge himſelf from the Imputation of ſo atrocious a Crime. But whatever Grounds there were to ſuſpect that Prelate, the Proceſs againſt him came at length to nothing.

13. In France the Affair relating to the Marriage ſucceeded according to the Situation wherein we left it. Tho' Reaſons from the Dignity of her State, as well perhaps as of Decency after the late Death of her Husband, might lay ſome Reſtraints upon her, ſo that ſhe could not well appear to proceed without ſome Scruple; yet ſhe reſolved at laſt to be ſecretly married, and in the Letters of Excuſe which ſhe wrote to the King on that Occaſion, ſhe took the Fault wholly upon her ſelf; and to juſtify the Duke of Suffolk declared, that ſhe had limited him to the Space of four Days, wherein, ſhe proteſted, unleſs he ſhould obtain her Conſent, he muſt deſpair of ſucceeding in his Pretenſions. The Duke was not at a Loſs to explain her Meaning, and prepared without Delay to make his Advantage of it.

The King of France was more willing to promote this Marriage of the Queen-Dowager to a Subject of England, to prevent any Alliance that might prove incommodious, or prejudicial to him in caſe ſhe ſhould marry to any foreign Potentate. And the Archbiſhop probably was not altogether without ſome private View; as by contributing to promote it, and in being the Means of reconciling the King to his Siſter and the Duke, he engaged them both more effectually to eſpouſe his Intereſts; and by the Acceſſion of ſo great a Weight to his own, would now be an Overballance to all thoſe who ſtood, or might, at any Time, ſtand in his Way.

14. But

14. But before the Queen and Duke left the French Court, ſome Overtures were made by Francis towards the Reſtitution of Tournay, which our Ambaſſadors there, in a Letter to the Archbiſhop of York, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the Duke of Norfolk, Lords of the Council, adviſe; as being a Place, when the Peace ſhould be once concluded, of no great Uſe to the King, and not to be kept but at a very great Expence. They are of Opinion the Surrender of it to the French, would prevent future Occaſions of Jealouſy, and Rupture between the two Crowns: The French King had this Affair ſo much at Heart, that he offered to make the Duke of Suffolk Mediator in it, and to be determined by what he ſhould direct, declaring himſelf ready to make Compenſation by a good Sum of Money for the Expence which the King had been at in taking that Place, or to agree to any other Conditions that might be thought fit, tho' it were to protract the Term of thoſe annual Payments he was already obliged to make, for ſeveral Years to come.

15. But it is obſervable, they ſent a Letter at the ſame Time, and to the ſame Effect, apart to the Archbiſhop: By which we may judge how much he had now the Aſcendant, and was the Man in Effect who did every Thing. They tell him, that the End they had in their common Letter, was to incline the Council to be more benevolent in aſſiſting his Lordſhip in that Motion; and give him Aſſurances from Francis, the French King, that his Majeſty was very much diſpoſed to favour and ſerve him.

16. This Motion was the more acceptable to his Grace, by Reaſon of the Difficulties he ſtill met with in his Biſhoprick of Tournay, from the Claim, which was kept up by his Competitor the French Biſhop-elect; who by ſome Means had obtained a Bull in his Favour from the Pope, by virtue of which he was reſtored to his Biſhoprick, with a Licenſe to call in the [u] ſecular Arm to his Aſſiſtance, both in the City and without: So that as far as this Bull was of any Force or Authority, the French and the Flemings were equally obliged to promote the Reſtoration of that Biſhop. The Archbiſhop was ſo apprehenſive of the Obſtacles which this Competition threw in his Way, that he had moved Francis to confer on him ſome other Biſhoprick; and the Neglect of that Prince to ſerve him in this Particular, was ſuppoſed the Cauſe, why the Treaty about the Reſtitution of Tournay was broken off at preſent, and the Archbiſhop became from that Time Francis his ſecret Enemy. Tho' while the Duke of Suffolk was tranſacting this Affair at the French Court, nothing was done without the Archbiſhop, and Francis expreſſed the greateſt Friendſhip and Regard for him:

The

The Reaſons indeed upon which that Duke adviſed an offenſive and defenſive Alliance with France, do not appear to have wanted a juſt Weight: He propoſes, That the Pope ſhould be comprehended in this Alliance, and that it would be of great Advantage both in reſpect to the Scots and the King of Arragon, of whom King Henry might recover the Charges, which he had expended for his Service, and ſuch Moneys, as he had a Demand for, in Right of the Queen his Wife. He obſerves the French King did not love Ferdinand; and was reſolved to reſtore the King of Navarre to his Dominions, tho' at the Hazard of loſing his own. But there aroſe ſome Difficulties concerning the Conditions of the Surrender. The King did not think it ſo much for his Honour to expoſe Tournay to Sale for a Sum of Money, but would have an equivalent in Lands, and ſpecified the County of Guyneſs or Ardres: To this, the French being unwilling the Engliſh Pale ſhould be enlarged, would not conſent. The Duke of Suffolk moves, that the Deciſion of this Matter may be referred to him, and the Archbiſhop, as the Miniſter of the Engliſh Court, in whom only the French have Confidence.

17. The Duke of Suffolk writes about the ſame time to the Archbiſhop, a Letter, wherein he acknowledgeth him, next to God and the King, to be the Cauſe of all the Honour that had been done to him. If we may judge by the Sequel of this Letter, the Queen favoured him ſo far, that he was not under much Difficulty in making the firſt Advances, or of ſuffering any great Repulſe, when encouraged to make them. As it appears to have been written in Confidence, tho' there is nothing in it injurious to the Honour of that Queen, I ſhall not recite it at large. In the Concluſion he is apprehenſive, when the King comes to be acquainted with the Marriage, he will be diſpleaſed, and deſires the Archbiſhop would mediate in his Favour.

Both he and the Queen write to implore the King's Pardon, which was granted, and very much was owing on this Occaſion to the good Offices of the Archbiſhop. The Queen ſays in her Letter, Tho' ſhe had no Regard to the Miſſion of Fryar Langley when he oppoſed her Deſires, that he put her into Deſpair of marrying the Duke, if ſhe came into England before Marriage, and pleads that in Excuſe to the King for marrying againſt his Commands in France. So great an Influence have our Inclinations, eſpecially where they are more violent, to influence our Belief, and to regulate our Judgements both concerning Perſons and Things, as they tend either to gratify, or to diſpleaſe us.

1. BEFORE the Return of our Ambaſſadors, with the Queen from France, they adviſed the Archbiſhop by Letters, that they had notified to the King, Francis was diſpoſed to make Peace with him, during both their Lives, upon the Foot of the Treaty laſt concluded, and would conſent the Scots ſhould be comprehended in it, provided the French King would give him private Aſſurances by Letter, that he would not ſend the Duke of Albany into Scotland: To which latter Article the French King anſwered, That he had already engaged, by Promiſe to the Scots, that he would ſend the Duke. And upon the Repreſentation made by our Embaſſadors, That he was a ſuſpected Perſon, pretending Title to the Crown of Scotland, and invited over by thoſe, who were known Enemies to the young King; he ſaid, he would oblige himſelf upon Pain of eccleſiaſtical Cenſures, or by Oath, or other Security, to anſwer for the Duke's Conduct, ſo that he ſhould attempt nothing to the Prejudice or Diſturbance of the ſaid King, of his Mother, or Brother; but only contribute by his amicable Endeavours to compoſe the Animoſities among that People, and cauſe them to ſue to the King of England for Peace; and that if in the Space of two or three Months, what he propoſed, was not effected, the Duke ſhould be recalled. April 3.

2. Accordingly, two Days after a Treaty of Peace between France and England was concluded, and the Scots comprehended in it. Yet the King either ſuſpecting the Fidelity of Francis, or doubting whether the Duke would conform to his Inſtructions, if the French King was really ſincere in what he promiſed, ordered a Fleet to be fitted out, with an Intention, it was thought, to intercept the Duke. April 1515.

3. On the 16th of April, the Queen, the Duke of Suffolk, and Sir Richard Wingfield, departed from Paris in order to return for England, leaving Doctor West, the other Ambaſſador, behind them; to whom on the eleventh Day of May, Francis ratified the Peace upon Oath, and delivered the Treaty of it in a great Preſence, with an Obligation for Payment of the Sum ſtipulated in it; and in exchange, received from Dr. West, the Treaty on the Part of his Maſter, which yet had no permanent Effect: It being the Opinion of our Court, and eſpecially of the Archbiſhop, upon the Expedition of Francis into Italy, that England ought to oppoſe the Progreſs of his Arms in thoſe Parts. The Archbiſhop was ſo apprehenſive of the Danger which might ariſe to his Maſter from the growing Power of France, that he [x] writes to Maximilian, there was great Probability, the King would not ſuffer him to enlarge his Dominions by the Acquiſition of Milan, and ſecretly encourageth him to ſollicit Aid of our King, in the Name of Sforza Duke of Milan; to which End he ſent a Milaneſe, Anchiſtes Viſconte, to our Court.

4. Neither did we want juſt Matter of Complaint againſt the French King at home. Several of the King's Subjects had ſuffered by Depredations at Sea, under Colour of the old Letter of Mark, from the Scots, without any Redreſs, upon their demanding it; ſeveral Moveables of Plate and Jewels due to the Queen were detained, upon one evaſive Pretence or other. The Duke of Albany, contrary to the Aſſurances given by the French King in his Behalf, had taken upon him the Government in Scotland, and been declared Vice-Roy 'till the young King ſhould come to Maturity; it was farther repreſented, that this was a notorious Violation of the Queen's Right, who had been conſtituted Regent by the Will of her Husband, and confirmed in her Authority by the Pope: That this Invaſion by the Duke, was no leſs dangerous to the King's Nephews, than derogatory to the Queen's Honour and juſt Title to the Government: That he excited the Scots to Acts of Hoſtility againſt England, tho' comprehended in the Peace at the Inſtance of the French King: And laſtly, That he obliged the Nobility of Scotland to take the Oaths of Allegiance to [y] himſelf. As to the perſonal Conduct of the French King, he openly protected and favoured Richard de la Pool, a Fugitive and a Traitor; and if he had not really given any Occaſion of Breach on theſe ſeveral Accounts, yet prudential Reaſons would not ſuffer England to ſee him extend his Conqueſts, without oppoſing him, either openly or at leaſt by ſecretly aſſiſting the States upon whom he made War. Theſe Reaſons were debated in an extraordinary Council which was called on this Occaſion, and at which the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the Duke of Norfolk, who had for ſome time withdrawn themſelves, were required to aſſiſt. The Archbiſhop of York charged the Breach of Peace upon Francis on ſeveral of theſe Articles, and was ſeconded by the Biſhop of Dureſme. Thoſe of the Council who were againſt a Rupture with France, alledged, as Lord Herbert repreſents, "That to break a Treaty or League ſo-"lemnly ſworn, did ſeem a ſtrange Counſel in any, but eſpecially "in a Divine: That for their Parts they conceived the Violating of "Publick Faith, was to call God and Man in Judgement againſt "them: They would not deny yet, but juſt Cauſe of diſſolving "Leagues might be given. But then that the wronged Party ought "both to proteſt the Fault and denounce War; without which, "the Law of Nations and even Mankind itſelf could not ſub-"ſiſt."

5. Theſe Reaſons have Weight in them, and are propoſed in a good Light. But it may be queſtioned, whether this noble Hiſtorian, with all Deference to his Authority, does not here, as on ſome other Occaſions, aſſign Reaſons from the Probability of Things, rather than according to real Fact. It is here ſuppoſed, or elſe the main Argument employed by his Lordſhip is of no Force, that no Proteſt or Remonſtrance had been made againſt the Proceedings of the French, nor any Intermination of War, in caſe no Redreſs ſhould be obtained: And yet Sir Richard Wingfield had been ſent ſome time before, with proper Inſtructions, to make Complaint to the French King, for the ill Treatment our King had received from him, and to declare, his Majeſty would no longer ſuffer ſuch ill Treatment. His Inſtructions are, as I find them in the [z] Collections of a Writer, well known to Lord Herbert, as follows. "That ſeeing now Peace is made (he ſuppoſes them gi-"ven about the Beginning of May) all Occaſion of Breach may "be taken away, and equal Juſtice adminiſtred to the Subjects of "both Parties; therefore as divers Complaints have been made to "his Grace, the King of England, as Spoils done by Sea to his "Subjects, under Colour of the Scots old Letters of Mark, &c. "and that no Juſtice upon Requiry is done them: It is neceſſary "the French King take Order for Remedy thereof; or elſe the "King's Grace ſhall be forced to grant Letters of Mark — He is likewiſe to demand the Moveables, viz. "Plate and Jewels due to "the French Queen Mary, which upon debating of Law on "both Sides, ſeem to be due, and which are with-holden from "her, under Colour of the Cuſtom of France, for Payment of "Debts."

z Maſt. Coll.

He is to ſhew the French King, "how the Duke of Albany, "whom he lately ſent into Scotland, hath taken upon him to be "Governour there, contrary to the Promiſe of the French King, "which is dangerous to the King's Nephews and Siſter, who was "deputed Governeſs by the Laſt Will of her late Husband, her "Authority being alſo confirmed by the Pope that now is; which "the King's Grace will in no wiſe ſuffer, and therefore would "that the French King revoke him; eſpecially ſeeing that he in-"viteth the Scots (who by the Means only of the French King have "been comprehended in the late Peace) to Hoſtility againſt Eng-"land, and taketh the Oath of Allegiance of the Nobles there to "himſelf."

6. If upon theſe Repreſentations the King could not receive Satisfaction, he ſeemed to have no other Method of obtaining it, but by the laſt Appeal of Sovereign Princes. However, the King obſerving his Council divided upon the Matter, propoſed a middle Way to bring them to a Temper; which was by entring into ſuch Meaſures, as might enable him to curb the Deſigns of the French, without a formal Declaration of War: Tho' the Archbiſhop ſtill perſiſted in his Opinion, that Lewis was rather to be attacked by open Force, than by ſecret and clandeſtine Means. However, it was for the Preſent agreed, that ſome private Overtures ſhould be made both to the Emperor and Franciſco Sforza, Brother to Maximilian late Duke of Milan, concerning the King's Intention to unite with them in proper Meaſures, towards recovering Milan, and putting a Stop to the Current of the French Victories in Italy.

7. Among other Conditions it was ſtipulated with the Duke of Milan, that in caſe his Territories ſhould be recovered from the French, a yearly Tribute ſhould be paid to our King, in Conſideration of the Supplies he was to furniſh, and equivalent to the Charge of them, and that the Archbiſhop for his Part ſhould have a Penſion out of the Revenues of it, to the Value of Ten thouſand Ducats yearly: Polydore ſays Eighteen thouſand, upon as good Authority, and with the ſame Ingenuity, that he has advanced ſeveral other Things, whereby he might tranſmit the Cardinal's Name under a more diſadvantagious Character, and gratify his Reſentment againſt him. In the [a] Original Contract, by which Michael de Abbatis obligeth himſelf to pay a certain Sum of Money to the Cardinal, in the Name of the Duke of Milan his Maſter, upon his being reſtored to that Duchy, the Sum is ſpecified to be Ten thouſand Ducats: And this Contract being preſerved and repoſited among other Monuments of

publick Tranſactions, it is highly probable he had the King's Authority for inſiſting upon this Condition for himſelf. He could not expect the Payment of ſuch a Sum could have been made, or long continued, without the King's Privity: And he was too cautious to incur the odious Imputation, for ſo it would then have been thought, of Betraying his Maſter's Honour, or the Intereſt of his Country, for the Sake of a Bribe. It is another Queſtion, how far a Man of ſtrict and nice Vertue, where he really acts with Regard to the Good of his Prince or his Country, yet ought to avoid the very Appearances of Self-Intereſt in his Conduct. That the Duke of Venice too, was very ſenſible of the Obligations which he had to the Archbiſhop, himſelf acknowledgeth in a Letter to him, wherein he congratulates him upon the high Honours and Dignity, to which his perſonal Merit, and great Abilities had raiſed him.

8. The Affairs of the Biſhoprick of Tournay were ſtill in much Diſorder. Dr. Samſon writes from thence to the Archbiſhop on the 26th of May, that the only Way to obtain the ſame quietly, and for his Honour, would be to procure a Reſignation by the French King's Help; a Penſion being granted to the Biſhop-elect, 'till he might be otherways provided for in France, and a Promiſe made by the French King for ſome of the firſt Promotions that might fall in France. This Samſon calls the ſafeſt and moſt godly Way, in conſideration that the Biſhop-elect being deprived of his Benefice, had nothing elſe to live upon.

9. Notwithſtanding all the Honours which were done to the Archbiſhop at Rome, he had ſtill ſome ſecret Enemies there, who favoured his Competitor: Among whom, Adrian Biſhop of Bath, though employed there as one of the King's Orators, was ſuſpected to be One; at leaſt he was charged with great Remiſſneſs, and Neglect of his Duty, for having ſuffered a Bull of which I am preſently to give an Account, to be obtained in Favour of the French Biſhop. But the Archbiſhop had other Grounds to queſtion the Fidelity, or however the Friendſhip of that Cardinal. He did not appear to ſerve him faithfully or with Zeal, when he privately made Intereſt to ſucceed Bambridge as Cardinal; for which Reaſon it is ſaid, this Prelate oppoſed him in his Collectorſhip, and procured another to be ſubſtituted in his Room; putting Polydore Virgil, his Sub-Collector into Priſon, from whence he was not diſcharged 'till after a Confinement for ſome Months, and then at the ſpecial Inſtance of the Pope. There is a Letter from the Biſhop of Worceſter to the [b] Archbiſhop of the 27th of March, this Year, which gives a great Light into the preſent Affair. He acquaints his Grace, who had recommended one Hammond, a Servant of his own, to be Sub-Collector in the Place of Polydore, now removed, that the Pope was desirous to gratify the said Hammond, on account of his own Merit, but especially at the Instance of the King, and that his Holiness had consented Bulls should be prepared in his Behalf; not doubting but Cardinal Adrian would desist from all further Pretensions in the Matter: But that notwithstanding the King's Letters, which he had received to that End; he still declined to conform to the Import of them. Pretending he had Intelligence from several great Men, and repeated Advice from Polydore, that it was by no Means the King's Will or Intention that he should lay down his Office; that upon this Representation of Adrian, his Holiness had hitherto retarded the Execution of what he designed in behalf of Hammond; but had now determined on certain Conditions to substitute him in the Place of Polydore, and had done it sooner, if he had not found himself obliged to do something towards satisfying the Clamour of the said Cardinal and his Friends.

10. From a [c] Letter of the Pope himself to the King upon this Subject, we discover how unwilling his Holiness, being prepossessed in Favour of Cardinal Adrian, was to believe the King sincere and determined in his Recommendation of Hammond, one of his Secretaries for the Latin Tongue. He writes indeed to the King, that at his Desire, notwithstanding the great Vertue, Merit, and Dignity of Adrian, the personal Friendship he had for him, and his great Zeal and Sedulity in his Majesty's Service, he had yet removed him from his Office, and disposed of it to the King's Secretary. But he says so many Things to the Advantage of Adrian, and so artfully represents his Case, as if in Justice and Honour he might hope for Redress; so that at the same time he appears to grant the King's Request, he plainly enough insinuates, the King ought not to have made it, and that he thinks it very reasonable his Majesty should revoke it. He questions, upon the whole Matter, whether the Letters from the King, recommending Hammond, were not some way indirectly obtained; and therefore desires to know, if his Majesty had signified his true and real Intention in them; according to which he is determined to regulate himself.

11. But the greatest Offence which Adrian Bishop of Bath gave both to the King and his great Minister, was on Occasion of his permitting a Bull to be procured and expedited at Rome to restore the French Bishop of Tournay, without making any Opposition, or giving any previous Notice to the English Court, of so exorbitant a Grant, as the King calls it in his Letter of Admonition to the ſaid Biſhop; and from which we may obſerve, notwithſtanding the Complaiſance the King had always ſhewed to the See and Biſhop of Rome, yet when he apprehended that his temporal Rights were ſtruck at, he knew how to expreſs himſelf in Terms, that would ſufficiently diſcover his Reſentments. This Letter indeed, is wholly written in the Name of the King, but we might eaſily diſcern from the Manner and Stile of it, that it was drawn up by the Cardinal, did not the Subject-Matter which immediately concerns him, render it highly probable, that he had the main Hand in it. And indeed, among all the Letters of Inſtructions I have met with, either in his own, or the King's Name, during his Miniſtry, not one of them ſeems to have been dictated with a better Spirit, or to have proceeded from one Charge to another by a more juſt and regular Gradation.

CHAP. III.

1. An Article in a Bull, obtained by Cardinal Adrian's Remiſſneſs, complained of as highly injurious to the King's Honour and Prerogative. 2. The Cardinal oppoſes the Progreſs of the French in Italy. 3. A Character of Francis the Firſt. 4. Mr. Baile animadverted upon. 5. When the Cardinal received a formal Confirmation of that Dignity. 6. A Conteſt which he had with the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, about Superiority, and on what Account.

1. THE ARTICLE in the POPE'S BULL, before refer'd to, of which the King complains as moſt injurious to his Prerogative-Royal, and moſt derogatory to his Honour, is that, which empowers the French Biſhop to require the Aſſiſtance of the Secular-Arm in order to reinſtate him: The King's Subjects themſelves are not excluded from that Clauſe of the Bull, but bound, under Pain of Excommunication and other Cenſures, to aſſiſt towards his Reſtoration: Which imported, in effect a Diſcharge to them from their Oaths of Allegiance to the King, and authoriſed the Princes his Allies, ſo far as in that Reſpect the Pope could influence or authoriſe them, to break the Conditions of their Alliance with him. The King aſſures his Holineſs, that his Troops would not by any Means think themſelves obliged to execute ſo unjuſt a Sentence; and eſpecially as the King had not been in a proper Manner called upon to aſſert and juſtify his Right. In

ſhort, he declares theſe Proceedings of the Pope, to be "contrary "to the Laws of God and Man, of Juſtice and Reaſon; he ſays "it was the greateſt Diſhonour that ever came to the Pope, to "act ſo indiſcreetly." He does not omit to put his Holineſs in mind of the great Services which he had done for the Papal Intereſt, in extinguiſhing the Schiſm, at the Expence of much Blood and Treaſure; in entertaining the Swiſs; in making Leagues, and entring into Engagements with ſeveral Princes, more for Conſervation of the Pope's Power and Dignity, than from any Exigency in relation to the State of his own Affairs. Having tacitly charged the Pope with Ingratitude upon theſe Heads, he obſerves, that the Bull was contrary to the Adminiſtration granted to the Cardinal, becauſe the French Biſhop had never made Homage for his Temporalities, but had refuſed to make it. In concluſion, the Biſhop of Bath is charged not only with Negligence, but Infidelity, and ſeverely threatned if he does not take care to procure a Revocation of that Bull, to be ſuperſeded by one, who will have more Regard to the Truſt repoſed in him. This Command is reinforced, at his Peril, and as he will avoid the King's Diſpleaſure.

2. Though this Letter is without Date, it ſeems from the Cir-
1515. cumſtances of Affairs to which it refers, to have been written in 1515, ſometime after this great Prelate was made Cardinal, to which Dignity, Francis the French King contributed to raiſe him, and was the Firſt who gave him Notice of the Honour done to him, who yet at the ſame time was ſecretly forming Deſigns to break the French Power in Italy. I will not preſume to ſay whether he took the ſame Methods that other great Miniſters have done, of playing a double Game, or what Uſe he might make of the Advice in a Letter to him from [e] Samſon, when the Pope, Emperor, King of Arragon, and other Powers, entered into Confederacy againſt France, upon his deſign'd Expedition into Italy, which Letter Samſon concludes to his Patron with theſe Words, "Now will be the "Time for to ſollicit the French King, and to make a ſure Friend "of him."

3. Though Francis was animated with a Spirit of Ambition, he had great Humanity, and many generous Qualifications. He was a Man of Letters, and a Lover of learned Men. He was happy in the Lineaments and exquiſite Proportion of his Body, as well as in the Endowments of his Mind. His Advantage in both Reſpects, at the Age of Two-and-twenty, when he came to the Crown, recommended him very much to the Affections and Eſteem of his People. Never any Prince upon his firſt aſcending the Throne gave greater Expectations. But the Sequel of his Reign

did not, in all Reſpects, appear to anſwer them. This may be aſcribed to the common Caſualties which frequently happen to prevent the Succeſs of Things according to the Probability of their firſt Appearances; but it muſt be further allowed, That the extraordinary Qualities of Francis the Firſt were allay'd with ſome Defects. The French Writers repreſent him as a [f] Prince formed for the Conqueſt of the Ladies: And, as One who was not altogether inſenſible of this Advantage. They have audaciouſly reported ſome Things upon this Head, not much to the Honour of that beautiful Queen the Relict of Lewis the Twelfth; tho' without any Grounds, but what may be reſolved into the Imagination of the Hiſtorian, from the Impreſſions of her Beauty, and the Temper of a young Prince, inclined to Gallantry, with whom ſhe was ſometimes obliged to converſe. But what Brantome relates, and wherein he is not ſupported by any Authority, ought in Honour to that Lady to be animadverted upon with ſome Severity. He writes, as if ſhe had intended to impoſe an Heir upon the Crown of France, and that for ſome time after the Death of Lewis her Husband, ſhe affected to be thought with Child, and to ſhew the common Appearances of One in that Condition. Upon which Mr. Baile triumphs with the following Reflection. "This, ſays he, irrefragably confutes thoſe, who ſay in Behalf of King James, that "it cannot come into any Body's Thought, who is in the Midſt "of a numerous Court, always ſurrounded with Servants, to Sup-"poſe an Heir. Here is Brantome, who underſtood the World as "well as another, and knew the Court extremely well; here he is, "I ſay, relating ſuch another Project, actually carried on in the "Court of France. It is an Argument, there are ſome Men of "Senſe who fancy, that it may be done."

4. This irrefragable Confutation, as Monſieur Baile calls it, depends only upon a ſingle Opinion of Brantome, upon which he would ground a Fact that never ſubſiſted. It is not doubted, but there have been People in the World, as well as Brantome, who might ſuppoſe ſuch a Deſign practicable; but had it been really then attempted, as it was not, in the Court of France, there may yet be Reaſons from Circumſtances of Time, Place, and Perſons preſent, why it ſhould not, or could not be practiſed, under the Reign of another Prince, and in another Court.

5. The Cardinal had been ſome time honoured with that Title before the Pope ſent him, in Form, a [g] Confirmation of it, which he did not do 'till December following; he had already received his Hat, ſent him by a Meſſenger; but upon Notice that he was a Perſon of no Character or Diſtinction, and who made but a deſpicable Appearance, the Cardinal, thinking it a Diminution of the Honour done to him, that ſo rich a Preſent ſhould be ſo meanly introduced, ordered the Meſſenger to be ſtopped, that he might be better arrayed and attended; who was therefore met upon Black Heath by a great Number of Prelates and Gentlemen, eſpecially thoſe of Kent, who conducted him in great Pomp and Triumph to London, and through Cheapſide to Weſtminſter; where the Acceptance and Confirmation of this Dignity to him was formally celebrated by all the Biſhops and Abbots about London, in their rich Mitres, Copes, and other Ornaments, after a moſt ſolemn and magnificent Manner. On the 22d of this Month the Seals were taken from Archbiſhop Warham and delivered to the Cardinal, for which Office he took the Oath at Eltham on the 24th.

6. His Elevation to theſe high Dignities, occaſioned the Refuſal of a certain Homage to Warham, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, due to him as Primate of all England, and who demanded as an Acknowledgement of his Superiority, which had been formerly paid by the Archbiſhop of York, that the Croſs of that See ſhould not be advanced in the ſame Province, or in the ſame Place with the Croſs of Canterbury: Yet the preſent Archbiſhop of York, in Breach of this ancient Cuſtom and Acknowledgement, had ordered his Croſs to be advanced and carried before him, not only in the Precincts of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, but in his Preſence. Upon which, that Primate expoſtulating with him, by Way of Admonition, concerning the Indignity which he apprehended done to him, he projected how he might for the future, have a Right to do it, without incurring any Imputation of acting contrary to Rule: And though his being a Cardinal, did not exempt him from that Submiſſion, on which the Archbiſhop of Canterbury of Right inſiſted; yet he was ſenſible, if he could be once inveſted with the Legatine Character, it would put the Matter out of all Diſpute, and even render him that Primate's Superior, which therefore he ſollicited, and ſhortly after obtained. I do not think my ſelf concerned to apologize for an Action in the Cardinal, which I cannot impute to Ignorance, and which appears to be on no other Account defenſible. They, who are not diſpoſed to favour him, may, if they pleaſe, attribute it to the Force of Ambition, by which Men of very great Abilities, are yet ſometimes carried away againſt the known Order and Reaſon of Things.

1. WE are now to conſider Cardinal Wolſey, as riſing to the Height of his Glory, and almoſt in his Meridian. He was Archbiſhop of York, Cardinal of St. Cicily, and Chancellor of England: Theſe were ſeparately three Characters of great Dignity: But beſides that they now united in him, nothing was done without him at Court; and he had eſtabliſhed his Power there in ſuch a Manner, and to ſuch a Degree, as no Miniſter or Favourite had done before him. He wanted nothing to compleat his Grandour, but a Commiſſion from the Pope ('till he might aſpire to the Triple Crown himſelf) to be Legate a Latere, and this was expedited to him in the Year 1516: And tho' I have not been able 1516.
to obtain a Copy of it, yet as the general Powers contained in it are well known, ſo many of them are diſtinctly ſpecified in certain ſubſequent Bulls which will be refer'd to. By Virtue of his Legatine-Commiſſion, he might ſummon the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and all other Biſhops within the King's Dominions, to aſſemble at his Convocation; he might ſuperintend and correct what he thought irregular within all their Juriſdictions, appoint all Officers in the Spiritual Courts, and preſent to all eccleſiaſtical Benefices; conſtitute Maſters of Faculties, and Maſters of Ceremonies to advance his Dignity; he might exerciſe a viſitatorial Power over Monaſteries and Colleges, and all the Clergy of England, exempt and not exempt. That he exerciſed moſt of theſe Powers is evident from the Articles of his Impeachment; and the principal Charge which his Accuſers endeavoured to make good againſt him, was not that he had acted contrary to the Tenour of his Commiſſion, but that he had procured ſuch Powers, as were inconſiſtent with his Duty to the King, and tended to the Subverſion of the Laws. But I only propoſe to obſerve here, the great State and Dignity wherein he now lived. Beſides the Profits of the great Poſts before-mentioned, he had to ſupport his Grandour the rich Abby of St. Alban's in Commendam (tho' he had not the Temporalities 'till December 7, 1521.) He had alſo in Farm the Biſhopricks of Bath, Worceſter, and Hereford, the Incumbents of them being Strangers, who had been ſent here upon Legations, and under ſome Pretence of Service to our Court; King [h] Henry the Seventh, a frugal Prince, choſe rather to reward them upon their Return, with Preferments that coſt him nothing, than to impair his Treaſure by making pecuniary Preſents to them; and they living now abroad, to avoid the Charge of Agents, and Trouble of making Returns by them, with other Inconveniencies, were willing to let the Cardinal have the Revenues of their reſpective Biſhopricks, upon eaſy Conditions, with Diſpoſition of the ſeveral Eccleſiaſtical Preferments annexed to them.

2. They who would inform themſelves particularly concerning the Order and Number of the Cardinal's Domeſticks, may conſult Cavendiſh. I ſhall ſatisfy my ſelf with obſerving, in general, that he kept Eight hundred Servants, among whom there were nine or ten Lords, fifteen Knights, and forty 'Squires: Yet the Nobility in his Family, rather reſided there, as in a Place of [i] Education, than under the Notion or Character of Servants; tho' upon any publick Occaſion, they were ready to honour the Cardinal as Maſter of ſo great a Family, or rather of ſo ſplendid a Court, with their Attendance. It was computed indeed, that his Revenues, with the numerous Preſents and Penſions that he received from abroad, annually exceeded the Revenues of the Crown. Tho' as to the Returns made to him from foreign Courts, it has been mentioned to his Honour by thoſe, who cannot be ſuſpected of Partiality to him, that he never engaged the King in any Alliance but what was for his Honour and Advantage. He was leſs culpable however in making his private Views ſubſervient to the publick Good. What has been thought liable to Cenſure in his Conduct, was, that he did not make uſe of the great Power which he had over the King, to engage his Majeſty's Attention to the Affairs and Studies proper to him, but rather adviſed him to follow his Pleaſures: That by Inſinuations of this Kind, he got the intire Adminiſtration of Affairs into his own Hands, without Regard to the King's Dignity, not conſulting what was proper for his Information: Something has been ſaid as to this Charge already. But the Truth is, tho' Lord Herbert, Biſhop Burnet, and ſome other modern Hiſtorians have concurred in exhibiting it, yet the Fact itſelf may very juſtly be queſtioned, if we may believe an Enemy, (who was ſo far from being favourable to the Cardinal's Character, that he takes all Opportunities of ſhewing his Prejudice againſt him) he did not abuſe the King's Favour in the Manner, thoſe Hiſtorians have repreſented. "[k] After, ſays he, a Share of the Publick Buſineſs was devolved by the King upon Wolſey, his Majeſty, tho' "in that reſpect more diſengaged and at liberty, yet being well "diſpoſed and inſtructed, and formed for Empire, did not wholly "neglect his Duty; but that he might employ his Time both "commendably and to advantage, applied himſelf to the Study "of good Literature: He ſometimes entertained himſelf, at his "leiſure Hours, with Muſick: But he read with Care and Attention the Works of Aquinas, and this he did by the Advice "of Wolſey, who was a profeſſed Follower of that Schoolman." This Advice to a young Prince concerning a Method of Study, which requires the greateſt Abſtraction and Force of Mind, and is attended with Pleaſures of a very different Kind from the common and ſoft Entertainments of a Court, does not ſeem perfectly to agree with the Tradition of the Cardinal's Advice to the King, that he ſhould give himſelf up to the Neglect of his Studies, and the Purſuit of ſenſible Delights.

3. It is not the Buſineſs of an Hiſtorian to go out of his Way, in Queſt of every Invective or Calumny againſt the Perſon, whoſe Life he writes, but to relate Matters, as he finds them, in a ſimple and direct Manner; yet where Perſons of the greateſt Reputation have concurred in reporting Things without Authority, to the Diſhonour of any great Man, there, I conceive, no Hiſtorian can juſtly be charged with a Digreſſion, for an Endeavour to vindicate him. The common Reaſons of Ingenuity, in ſuch a Caſe, hold ſtill ſtronger, where the Author finds the proper Subject of his Hiſtory traduced and abuſed againſt the Rules of hiſtorical Juſtice. I ſhall be more readily excuſed for making this Reflection, when I recite the Charge; a Charge without Proof, or Shew of Proof, which has been brought againſt the Cardinal, and on Occaſion too of the Influence which his Advice had over the King, [l] That as a Churchman, [k] Polyd. Virg. p. 19.

Churchman, he was the Diſgrace of his Profeſſion, being lewd and vicious, exorbitantly Proud and Oſtentatious, and indeed the main Debaucher of his Sovereign Maſter. This Invective, in the latter Part of it, is more unjuſt, as it does not appear that the King, tho' he might indulge himſelf in certain criminal Liberties, yet gave himſelf up to a very irregular and vicious Courſe of Life: His Affair with the Lady, by whom he had a natural Son the Duke of Richmond, is not to be examined by the ſtrict Rules, either of Morality or revealed Religion: Beſides that Intrigue, I do not know, that during the Cardinal's Adminiſtration, the King was charged, in reſpect to his Morals, with any notorious Vices: The great Diſorders he fell into, were from the Time that he began to have leſs Regard for the Cardinal, and to govern himſelf by other Maxims, under a more powerful Aſcendant. He before delighted on proper Occaſions in pompous Shews, in Maſques and Banquets, and other Amuſements common to all Courts. But we ſhould be injurious to the Character of ſucceeding Princes, in ſuppoſing, that he was therefore corrupted by them, or involved in thoſe Conſequences, to which they may ſometimes accidentally miniſter an Occaſion. In his younger Years, which is not a common Character of Perſons vitiouſly diſpoſed, he was, by Intervals, ſtudious and contemplative, a Lover of Learning and of learned and good Men, whether Laymen or Eccleſiaſticks: He always profeſſed great Zeal for Religion, and as to all the exterior Forms and Rites of it, few Princes have conducted themſelves with a more viſible or ſtrict Regard. Upon what then, can this heavy Charge of his corrupting the King be grounded, who, for the Time this Miniſter had any Influence over him, appears to have been as regular in his moral Conduct, as moſt of the Princes who lived before him, or who have been ſince inveſted with the Royal Dignity?

4. But to give us a juſter Idea of the Cardinal's Character, it may be a more agreeable Attempt to draw a Parallel between him and ſome other great Man, if we can find one of a near Reſemblance to him, than to remove any malevolent Aſperſions, which have been caſt upon him: And the Hiſtory of the ſame Age furniſheth us with One, of ſo great Similitude in many Reſpects, that I cannot here eaſily decline the Occaſion of introducing it. The Reader may poſſibly apprehend already, that I mean Ximenes Archbiſhop of Toledo, Cardinal, and prime Miniſter of Spain. But beſides theſe three general Characters, which may lay a Foundation for the intended Parallel, there are ſeveral Things relating to the Riſe, the Temper and Conduct of theſe two great Men, wherein they agree, tho' in certain Reſpects and on Account of the very ſame Conſiderations, a ſenſible Difference may be obſerved between them.

5. I ſhall

5. I ſhall not here examine the Grounds of what is remarked by the Author of Cardinal Ximenes his Adminiſtration, "That "thoſe Regions, which are ſituated under the more favourable Af- "pect of the Sun, gave Birth to Men of more eminent Quali- "ties, eſpecially the more advantagious Situation of Spain, which "lies full and open in the Eye of that great Luminary." This Remark carries in it an Inſinuation commodious enough to poſſeſs the Reader both in Favour of that Writer's Heroe, and of his own Performance. I ſhall be content, that the more Northern Climates, ſhould produce Men of as great Abilities, tho' not generally of ſo great Vivacity, as thoſe to whom the Sun imparts a greater Degree of Light and Heat; whether ſuch Abilities are to be aſcribed to his Influence, or to any other ſecondary Cauſe: Tho' it is very probable, there may be ſomething in the mechanical Order and Conſtruction of the external World, which may tend to render the Operations of the Microcoſm or Body of Man more or leſs perfect, according to which he ſhall have greater Strength or Weakneſs of Mind, a more lively or ſlow Imagination. But that there are other Cauſes of the great Variety which we obſerve between the Capacities of Men, beſides the different Degrees of Strength or Heat of natural Temper occaſioned by Irradiations of the Sun, is evident from that extraordinary natural Capacity and Force of Mind, which we ſometimes obſerve in Perſons of very weak and tender Conſtitutions, and even of an irregular Form, in more cold Climates. God governs the World by certain general Laws of Providence, which in a Senſe may be termed Mechanical, as acting according to a certain Order, and in virtue of ſtated Powers, ſome of which are known to us; but yet he interpoſes in the Courſe of his Government, and eſpecially in regard to the Body and Mind of Man, and the Methods of Communication between them, by a great many inviſible Ways, which we know nothing of, and which perhaps will never be known, in this imperfect State.

6. Ximenes, in reſpect to his Birth, had the Advantage of the Cardinal of England; being deſcended from an ancient and noble Family, but without a Fortune equal to the Dignity of it; for his Parents were reduced to ſuch low Circumſtances, that they were ſcarce able to bear the Expence of his Education; ſo that in the firſt Eſſays towards making their Way into the World theſe two Cardinals were much under the ſame Diſadvantages; and after they appeared more openly upon the Stage of it, met with a like ignominious Treatment, tho' different as to the Duration, and other Circumſtances of it. Ximenes, upon ſome Diſguſt, that his Dioceſan had taken againſt him, and under a Pretence of irregular Behaviour, was caſt into Priſon. This Dioceſan, who ought to have have encouraged him on Account of his Learning and other excellent Qualifications, was an Archbiſhop; but as his Advancement to that Dignity was not owing to perſonal Merit, ſo, in the Diſcharge of it, he ſhewed very little Regard to the Merit or Vertues of other Men. Wolſey was put under another Sort of Confinement, from which he was ſooner diſcharged; but the Infamy of it was perhaps of longer Continuance. Theſe early Rebuffs produced, in the Sequel, a Train of Events very favourable to them both. So difficult it is to make a Judgement concerning what may happen to us in Time future, from any preſent Appearances; and ſo often do thoſe very Things by the wiſe and good Diſpoſitions of Providence, terminate in our Happineſs, which we apprehended moſt deſtructive to it; as on the other Hand the moſt bright, open and promiſing Views are frequently intercepted by one riſing Cloud or other, and inſtead of the Sunſhine of Proſperity, we find our ſelves ſurrounded in the Midſt of a Tempeſt.

7. The Merit of theſe two great Men could not be obſcured, even under Circumſtances of Diſgrace. They ſtill found generous Patrons, who did not think, as Perſons of little narrow Minds, in high Stations, ſometimes do, That the Misfortunes of Men afford a reaſonable Pretence, why they ſhould not be encouraged or preferred: But yet their Manner, as to the Conduct of Life, was ſomewhat different. Ximenes, after ſome Converſation in the World, which gave him a Taſte and Diſlike of it, choſe to retire to a Cloiſter, and to initiate himſelf among the Order of St. Francis, that he might, without Diſtraction, ſerve God in Contemplation and Prayer. But, in that Retreat, the Fame of his Sanctity, and of other Qualities proper to his Character, ſpread ſo wide, that a great Number of People, out of a religious Veneration for his Perſon, went to viſit him, and ſome of the firſt Rank and Diſtinction; which gave Occaſion to his future Riſe: Tho' had he been perfectly at Liberty to follow his own Inclination, there is great Probability the Life of a Recluſe would have been more agreeable to it; a Life at leaſt free from publick Employments, and the Functions whereof might be diſcharged without much Pomp and Ceremony. For when an Offer was made to him of the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo, the richeſt Benefice in the Church, next to the Papal, he declined it as much as he could, and to avoid his Inveſtiture, retired a great Way on Foot to a Convent of his own Order. Yet, at laſt, in Obedience to the Pope's Command he accepted it, but would never conſent how much ſoever he ſleighted the Title, that his Revenue ſhould be ſacrilegiouſly charged with any Penſion, prejudicial to the Dignity and Liberty of the firſt Paſtor of Spain. But tho' he was ſenſible of the high and important Charge, which he ſuſtained with a Mind equal to it, he ſtill preſerved the Innocency and Plainneſs of a religious Life. The external Pomp wherein he was obliged to live, did not alter the humble Temper and Diſpoſition of his Mind: He would ſometimes privately withdraw to mend, with his own Hands, the Frock of his Order. And tho' he had his Bed of State, as became his Quality, yet he choſe to ſleep on a Frier's Pallet; and to avoid Diſcovery, went to Bed and came out of his Apartment the next Morning, without Attendants. His Simplicity at laſt gave ſuch Occaſion of Raillery to the Court, and Offence to ſome good Men, that it was complained of to the Pope; by whoſe Advice, he lived in greater Splendour, and at a Rate better ſuited to the Dignity of his Station and Order.

8. The Temper of Cardinal Wolſey, as to his exterior Conduct, appears to have been very different; it inclined him more to the Freedoms of civil Life and Converſation. There was nothing throughout his whole Conduct, which ſhould much incline us to think, That he affected Solitude or a rigorous Practice of Religion; much leſs that he would have declined the Offer of the firſt and richeſt Dignities in the Church, meerly from a Principle of Self-denial, or to avoid Popularity. He was formed by Inclination, as well as Capacity, for publick Buſineſs, and loved to be ſeen in it. Far from being reſtrained by any affected Shew of Modeſty, from living up to the Grandour of his State, he has rather been thought blameable for affecting to appear with too great Pomp and Magnificence. And tho' I do not know that there was any thing ſimply unlawful in his Behaviour, on any Occaſion, yet at ſeveral publick Entertainments, where the King was preſent, it was ſuch, as could not be perfectly reconciled with the Rules of chriſtian Expedience. There was a Levity in it, which if not chargeable directly as ſinful, yet, conſidering his ſacred and high Character, can by no Means be excuſed from Indiſcretion. It ought however to be acknowledged, that as to the exterior and devotional Part of Religion, he always ſhewed great Regard: And tho' he might ſometimes take Liberties himſelf, which were not to be examined by the ſtricteſt Rules of Decency or Order, yet he was very zealous in reforming all ſcandalous Abuſes at that time among the monaſtick Orders, and the regular Clergy of all Diſtinctions. One Thing ought to be mentioned for his Honour, being obſerved by a [m] Perſon, whoſe Veracity as to this Particular, may be depended on, and who reports from his own Obſervation, That notwithſtanding the Multiplicity of Affairs wherewith the Cardinal was taken up, and all the Pageantry with which he was ſurrounded in his ſeveral Offices, he never omitted, at the uſual

[m] Cavendiſh.

Hours, regularly, and after a pious Manner, to perform his private and publick Devotions. And the Influence of his Example in diſcharging ſo eſſential and important a Part of his Duty, will perhaps, with Perſons of much Ingenuity, be placed to ſome Advantage on his Side, in Oppoſition to too great a Gaiety of Temper and Behaviour, which he confeſſedly ſometimes diſcovered in Converſation, eſpecially on Occaſions of more publick Concourſe and Feſtivity at Court.

9. But as to thoſe Qualities, which are ſuppoſed properly to conſtitute Greatneſs of Mind, and from which we form our Idea's of Men in reference to that Diſtinction, there ſeems to have been a near Affinity between theſe two Cardinals.

10. The great Revenues of Ximenes, were employed in Works of Piety and Charity, and in anſwering the End for which the Donation of them was originally made to the Church. The Poor, whom he called his Lords and Proprietors, received one Moiety; the other was appropriated, neceſſary Deductions being made for the Expence of his Family, towards founding Monaſteries and Colleges, and endowing them after a proper and liberal Manner: But he had one excellent Deſign in particular, which he lived to execute at a vaſt Charge, and whereof the Chriſtian Church at this Day every where reaps the Benefit. In order to as juſt and correct an Edition as might be made, of the holy Scriptures, in Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and Chaldee, he bought up all the Manuſcript Bibles he could any where hear of, and at any Rate: A Copy of which, when finiſhed, being preſented to him, with Eyes and Hands lift up to Heaven, My God, ſays he, I return thee immortal Thanks for granting my Deſires of good Succeſs to this Work. Then turning to his Domeſticks, he adds, It is true, my Friends, God hath been pleaſed to crown my Labours with Succeſs in many important Affairs, for the Good of the State; but there is not any thing wherein you ought to rejoice with me more, than in the happy Accompliſhment of this Impreſſion and Explication of the Bible in the four Languages. If the Reader find himſelf affected after the ſame Manner with this pious Thankſgiving of Cardinal Ximenes to God, on ſo important an Occaſion, as I was upon reading it, he will not be offended that I give it a Place, where there appeared to be no abſolute Neceſſity of inſerting it.

11. In his pious Foundations there was one Thing that deſerves to be more particularly recorded, as having ſomething ſingular in the Deſign and Inſtitution of it. He built a Nunnery for the Education of Maids, born of poor Parents, who, after their receiving the Benefit of it, if they deſired to return into the World, and ſhould be diſpoſed of in Marriage, had honourable Portions aſſigned to them for that End. Among the nume-

numerous beneficent Acts by which the Piety of this Nation is diſtinguiſhed, it is not eaſily accounted for, that there ſhould be no Societies of that Kind erected for the Benefit of the other Sex, which allowing to them the ſame Advantages of Education as Men, would certainly be equal to them, if not in the Strength of their Minds, yet in the Beauty and Delicacy of their Thoughts, and in ſeveral of the more liberal and polite Parts of Learning, would make a readier Progreſs, and probably arrive at length to a greater Perfection, than is common to Men. But if we conſider a Society erected to this End, not in regard to learned Improvements, but as a Means of making a handſome Proviſion for young Women without Fortune, eſpecially ſuch as are deſcended from good Families, or whoſe Qualities renders it leſs becoming for them to undertake any ſervile Employment, or who are perhaps of too tender a Compoſition to endure Hardſhip or ſervile Work; what greater Inſtance of Humanity can any Perſon give, or how be more capable of promoting the Good of civil Society, than by projecting a Method, that thoſe who have been ſo unhappy, as not to be born to the common Advantages of it, may yet be rendered both uſeful and ornamental to it? Whether theſe Reaſons in particular, determined the great Ximenes to erect a Society for the Benefit of young Maids, who had leſs Share of the Favours of Fortune, I do not preſume to ſay; but ſhall think my ſelf happy, if by any Occaſion of my mentioning ſo great and ſhining an Example, any Perſon or Perſons of competent Abilities, ſhould be excited by the Excellency and Influence of it, to go and do likewiſe.

12. The Cardinal of England did not leſs diſcover the Greatneſs of his Mind, in applying his large Revenues for the Advancement of Piety and Learning. It is true, inſtead of erecting, he deſtroyed ſeveral religious Houſes, the Reaſons of which Procedure will be accounted for afterwards; but this was ſo far from being inconſiſtent with the great and magnificent Things he had in View, that it prepared the Way towards the Accompliſhment of them. And as to the Republick of Letters, it may be affirmed, without derogating from the Glory of Ximenes, that Cardinal Wolſey was no leſs a Friend to it: That his Foundations were larger, and his Endowments, had they been preſerved upon his Plan, more noble and opulent: To which we may ſubjoin, he had formed a Deſign, as to the Charge and Difficulty of executing it, not inferior to that of Ximenes, in his Edition of the holy Scriptures, which was, to cauſe all the Manuſcripts in the Vatican to be tranſcribed, for the Service of his Country.

13. While the Thoughts of theſe great Men were taken up in promoting the Intereſts of Learning and Religion, they did not neglect the Service of their reſpective Maſters, or the Affairs of State; they were indefatigable both in Super-intending the Civil Oeconomy, and in taking care, that there ſhould be no Want at any Time of military Preparations. It was a ſtanding Maxim with them both, That no Prince could be conſiderable, except he was either in Action, or at leaſt always viſibly prepared for Action.

14. Ximenes his Humility did not exempt him from the Charge of Ambition, nor his magnificent Works from that of Avarice. The Wars which he adviſed his Maſter to proſecute, and in ſome of which he perſonally commanded, gave Occaſion of Cenſure to his Enemies, who reproached him, as acting unſuitably to his Character; which ſhould have inclined him more to pacifick Meaſures, than to War. Nothing, they cry'd, could be more abominable, than to ſee a Prieſt, an Archbiſhop, and a Cardinal, embrue his Hands in human Blood. The Cardinal of England was cenſured on all theſe Accounts, except that of having a Command, properly military, in the Army. And tho' theſe Calumnies were improved by the great Men in both Courts, to whom the Power of which the Cardinals were poſſeſſed, had rendered them invidious; yet the two Kings, their Maſters, were ſo ſenſible of their Integrity and Zeal for the publick Service, that all the Deſigns which had been projected to bring them into Diſgrace, proved impracticable; 'till Wolſey indeed at laſt was removed; but not ſo much by the Weight of all his Enemies in conjunction, which he had long withſtood and was ſtill able to overbear, as by the Artifices and Inſinuation of a ſingle Woman.

15. Ximenes puniſhed with Rigour, wherever he could diſcover them, the Authors of Violence and Injuſtice; and ſuch eſpecially, who in Breach of the Truſt repoſed in them, had embezled the Publick Moneys. And tho' like Inſtances of Juſtice, may provoke particular Perſons, who feel in one Degree or other the Effects of it; yet in general, they procure Eſteem, and recommend Magiſtrates to the Favour of God and Men: For every Man neceſſarily loves Order and Juſtice, where no accidental Conſideration or Intereſt corrupts his Judgement.

16. Cardinal Wolſey appears to have had, upon the Compariſon, an equal Regard to his Maſter's Honour, and to the Good of the State. He is allowed on all Hands, in his judicial Inquiries and Proceedings, to have acted with a becoming Severity; and not to have ſacrificed the Rights of the Crown or the Publick, to any private Influence. He gave a remarkable Inſtance of a generous Inflexibility in the Caſe of his great Friend, the Duke of Suffolk, who having borrowed Two thouſand Pounds of the King to ſupport his Expences in the French Court, when he made his Addreſſes to the Queen-Dowager, moved the King for a Remiſſion of that Sum, but was oppoſed in his Motion, by the Cardinal;

nal; and upon that was ſo diſguſted, that he retired from Court, and from that time the ſtrict Amity which had been for ſome Years between theſe two great Men ſenſibly declined.

17. Ximenes, with all the Evidence he gave of a publick Spirit, was not inſenſible, that his Family had ſome Claim to a Share in his great Fortune. Towards anſwering the Debt, for which Nature here called upon him, he married one of his Brothers, and a Niece, to noble Families, and to great Advantage. In this Reſpect the Cardinal of England may be thought to have had ſome Advantage; for we do not read of any private Contracts or Alliances which he made in favour of his neareſt Relations, much leſs of any ſacrilegious Alienations of the Revenues of the Church, towards aggrandizing his private Family. There was Winter indeed on whom he accumulated ſeveral Preferments, and who was violently ſuſpected to be his natural Son; however, having given him a learned and liberal Education, he did not much for him but what might be accounted for upon a common Principle of Affection, and the Laws of Nepotiſm, which ſtill do almoſt every where obtain: Tho' no Reaſon indeed appears, why Eccleſiaſticks in the firſt and moſt beneficial Poſts of the Church or State, ſhould, on that Account, be diſengaged from the ordinary Ties of Conſanguinity, or other Relation, but rather be obliged to take care of their neareſt Dependants in every Reſpect, provided they are equally qualified for the Charge or Truſt to which they are appointed, with others, who, upon a general Conſideration, may have a reaſonable Claim to them.

18. One of the greateſt Subjects that we read of in England, and who, in ſome Parts of his Character, bore a near Reſemblance to Cardinal Wolſey, was William Longshanks Biſhop of Ely, in the Reign of Richard the Firſt: That Prelate was not only Chancellor, but Legate a Latere: And in the King's Abſence, when he went to make War in Paleſtine, was made one of the Juſticiaries of England, but found Means in a ſhort time to ſupplant his Rival and Brother the Biſhop of Durham, and to engroſs the whole Power of the Adminiſtration to himſelf; and in that Reſpect, it may be ſaid, he was ſuperior in Dignity and Authority to Wolſey. For the [n] Juſticiary had not only Precedence of all the Nobility, but Juriſdiction over all the four great Courts in the Kingdom; that of the King's Bench, the Common Pleas, the Exchequer, and the Court of Wards.

19. This Prelate, in the Diſcharge of his ſeveral Powers, loved to act to the Extent of them, but was more eſpecially rigorous in his ſeveral Demands and Tranſactions relating to the Crown. But at the ſame time, to create what Dependencies he could, he procured to himſelf the Diſpoſal of all the civil Governments, and of all the eccleſiaſtical Preferments in the Crown, and frequently made both the Biſhopricks and Abbies, throughout the Kingdom, ſenſible of his rigorous [o] Proceedings. In his Viſitations he travelled with a Retinue ſo numerous, and was treated with ſo great Profuſion, that he made the Places, through which he paſſed, deſolate. And if he happened to take up, but for one Night, in a Monaſtery, the Expence of his Entertainment was more, than the Fraternity could well recover in two or three Years. It has been generally ſaid indeed, that he was no Friend to the monaſtick Orders, and this has been aſſigned as one Reaſon, why the Monks of that Time have tranſmitted his Name to Poſterity, under a Character not very advantagious to him. But, without Regard to the fabulous Stories of thoſe who are prejudiced againſt him, his arbitrary Proceedings and extravagant Manner expoſed him to the Attacks of publick Hatred, and his Enemies preferred ſeveral Articles of Accuſation againſt him, of a Nature moſt apt to provoke the publick Revenge againſt corrupt Miniſters: They charged him with aſſuming to himſelf the ſupream Power both Temporal and Spiritual: They repreſented, That he arbitrarily diſpoſed of all Promotions; That his Table was furniſhed to a high Degree of luxurious Prodigality; That he preferred his obſcure Relations to Alliances of the firſt Quality; That he favoured Foreigners; That his Retinue, when he travelled, was compoſed of them, as if he deſpiſed the Engliſh, and took that Method of putting an Affront upon them; That he employed in his Service a vile Sett of Flatterers, Buffoons, and Poets; and, That, in fine, he had, with his Creatures and Inſtruments, exhauſted the Treaſure of the Kingdom. Theſe Articles, true or falſe, were ſo well adapted to irritate a People naturally jealous of all Attempts towards introducing Oppreſſion, and had ſuch an Effect upon them, that the Juſticiary thought convenient to provide for his own Safety; and to that End ſought to retire out of the Kingdom in Diſguiſe, but was ſurpriſed by the Sea-ſide, in a Woman's Habit, and being diſcovered and expoſed to the Deriſion of the People, was treated with the greateſt Indignity and Contempt imaginable. Such publick Revenges of an injured People upon Men, whoſe Inſolence, while they were in Power, knew no Bounds, have ſometimes happened. Tho' it has been made a Queſtion, whether the publick Hatred, in particular, which this Prelate incurred, was not rather the Effect of Envy and popular Miſconſtruction, than of a Conduct, which could not on any Account be juſtified. An [p] Author of good Reputation, deſcribes Biſhop Longshanks as a Perſon of wiſe Behaviour, Generoſity, and good Nature, and One who was recommended to the King merely in Conſideration of his Probity and perſonal Merit; and he did not want a ſpecious Vindication of himſelf, as to the main Articles exhibited againſt him. He inſiſted, That it was neceſſary for him towards preventing Diſorder, and dangerous Attempts againſt the Crown, to proceed with the Severity he had exerciſed: And that the Treaſury had been exhauſted in the King's Service, but more eſpecially on Account of his Foreign and chargeable Expedition.

20. Tho' there might be much Force in this Anſwer to acquit him before equal and competent Judges, yet they were of little Weight againſt the Clamours of the Populace, to which therefore this Prelate was ſenſible, he could not truſt with Safety. It is hard indeed for the beſt and wiſeſt Miniſters to obſerve ſuch exact Meaſures between Property and Prerogative, as at the ſame Time to be capable of ſerving the Prince with Zeal and Fidelity, and of rendering themſelves acceptable to the People. And if this be really the Caſe, who would quit the Bleſſings of an innocent and peaceable Retirement, to embark in an Ocean of Trouble, and Inquietude? where many are wrecked, all are in a fluctuating, and uneaſy State; and none, not the moſt able, or artful Pilots, can aſſure to themſelves a future and undiſturbed Calm.

It is viſible, That in ſome Parts of this Prelate's Character, a Compariſon might be formed with that of the Cardinal. Tho' the Prejudices, which were raiſed againſt him, much upon the like Grounds, had a different Effect in Relation to the two Princes whom they ſerved. The Juſticiary, though obliged to quit this Title, with that of Chancellor and Legate, yet lived and died in the King's Favour, after he had been employed by him, as a ſpecial Mark of it, upon an Embaſſy to the Pope; though the King found himſelf obliged, in ſome Reſpects, to give Way to the popular Current againſt him, and thereupon obliged him to relinquiſh ſome of his principal Titles and Offices. But however differen the Event was of their Proceedings, they agreed in promoting the Intereſts of the Crown with great Zeal and Fidelity; tho' both of them ſtrained their Authority, in certain Caſes, too far, and ſeem to have been poſſeſſed with a like immoderate Affectation of Grandour.

21. Some Things may be obſerved from theſe two Inſtances, for which I therefore produced them, towards a better Illuſtration of Cardinal Wolſey's Character: I ſhall now deſcend to conſider ſome of the more remarkable Events in particular, which happened under his Adminiſtration, after he became Legate. And here, as the principal, in a manner, the ſole Direction of Affairs in the Court of England was committed to him, at a Time, when the Influence of it, in all the European Courts, was as great, as at any time before that Period, or ſince, to write his Hiſtory at large, would be in Effect to write a general Hiſtory of Europe, in the Beginning of the ſixteenth Century. But to avoid that diffuſe Way of Writing, into which the Extent of my Subject would naturally carry me, I ſhall chiefly confine my ſelf to ſuch Affairs and Negotiations, which he perſonally directed, or wherein he appears to have acted more immediately.

Influence

1516. 1. ENGLAND, tho' aſſiſting, at this Time, to the Deſigns of Maximilian againſt the French in Italy, did not proceed to any open Rupture with France; notwithſtanding the Movements, which Henry the Eighth made to ſupport the Imperial Troops on that Side, had given great Umbrage to the French Court, and viſibly tended to inflame the Animoſities, which had been there conceived againſt him. It appears indeed, from a Letter of Pace, then reſiding at Trent, to the Cardinal, that a Deſign had been formed between the two united Powers, to diſpoſſeſs the French of the Milaneze, and to annex that Dutchy, upon the Reduction of it, to the Crown of [q] England. But Pace, in his Letter, has the Aſſurance to expreſs his Diſlike of this Project, for the following Reaſons: That the Charge of keeping it, would more than over-balance the Advantages, which were expected to ariſe from the Acquiſition; That the People were ſo attached and devoted to the Houſe of Sforza, they would never be ſatisfied or eaſy, under the Government of any Prince, who was not of that Family; and therefore he adviſes, as more conducing to his Majeſty's Intereſts, that he ſhould reſtore the right Heir to that Duchy, rather than endeavour to make himſelf, in Propriety, Maſter of it. But this Reaſon, tho' viſibly founded in the Maxims of Juſtice and Honour, may poſſibly be reſolved into a more latent Cauſe. Pace expreſſeth, from his own Experience, ſo great Diffidence of the Emperor, and obſerves, ſo little Regard was to be had to his Word, that this may be looked upon as a very corroborating, if not the principal Argument, why the Overtures which had been made in relation to Milan, were not much to be depended upon. The Letters indeed from Wingfield, who was at that time with the Emperor, repreſent his Deſigns in a better Light. But whether he or Pace, between whom there was not the moſt perfect Underſtanding, might be more capable of penetrating the true Deſigns of the Imperial Court, or more ſedulous to that End, I ſhall not preſume to enquire. If we may judge by the Event, and from the Suſpicions which our King himſelf entertained, in reſpect to other Propoſals made to him by the Emperor, it may be thought probable, that this Agent was not leſs careful than Wingfield, to obſerve by what Springs the Imperial Court was principally moved, and to diſtinguiſh between the declared, and the ſecret Intention of it. On one particular Occaſion, Pace, as he complains in a Letter to the King, had not been well uſed by the Emperor: For he was in a Manner conſtrained by Threats to ſign a Condition with the Emperor, whereby the King was obliged to contribute a certain Sum of Money, that the Enterprize againſt the French in Italy might not be prevented or miſcarry, as the [r] Emperor himſelf acknowledgeth in a Letter to the King, who expreſſing his Diſlike of this Obligation, Pace might thereby probably have taken ſome Diſtaſte againſt the Emperor, as the Occaſion of his incurring the King's Diſpleaſure. Yet the King was at laſt not only induced to pay the Moiety of the 60,000 Florins, which had been contracted for in his Name, but the whole Sum, at the Inſtance of the Emperor; who repreſented the Inability he was under of performing the Condition on his own Part, and deſired the King would be ſo good a Brother to him, as to pay the reſt: Enforcing his Requeſt with an Intermination, That if the King did not comply with it, he ſhould be obliged to take other Meaſures, and make ſuch Conceſſions to the Catholick King, as England ſhould not approve.

2. But the greateſt Light into the Projects, at that time, of the Imperial Court, is from a Letter of † Wingfield to the King, wherein that Miniſter acquaints him with ſeveral important Matters, which the Emperor, at a private Conference, had propoſed to him. That Letter containing many Things remarkable, and a Repetition of the Emperor's own Expreſſions to Wingfield, as he reports them, I ſhall not, in tranſcribing them, take upon me to vary the leaſt from my Copy, except in what relates to Orthography. Theſe are the Emperor's Words.

" Firſt I deſire you to make my moſt hearty and affectionate " Recommendations to my moſt dear and affectionate Brother, the " King your Maſter, which by Word doth call me Father, and " I do call him Son, which I do take right gladly upon me. And " as touching the holy Enterpriſe which hath been made upon the " common Enemy, though as yet it hath not attained the deſired " End, I truſt, that by my ſaid Brother's farther Aſſiſtance and " Comfort, it ſhall come right well to both our Ends, and the " Weale not only of Us, but alſo of all Chriſtendom. " Horſe and 3000 Archers; with which Army I will go my ſelf

" five Miles from Milan; where, when he hath tarried a Seaſon,
" I will in his Company paſs to Rome, where he ſhall be crowned
" Emperor: Which done, I doubt not but he ſhall and may chuſe,
" whether he will take the moſt honourable Peace with France that " ever had any of his Anceſtors, or proceed in War, 'till he hath " recovered the Crown as his proper Inheritance; which to attain,
" I eſteem he ſhall have the Conſent of the Pope, and all Chriſtian
" Princes, and the Aid of all Italy, which muſt find Health by
" that Means, or elſe not only Italy, but rather all Chriſtendom
" ſhall remain in War and Deſolation."

3. Here are not only Overtures made of Force ſufficient to have awakened the Seeds of Ambition in a Temper leſs flexible to the Motions of it, than that of Henry the Eighth, but here is the very

Method of Executing them ſpecified; and ſuch a Plan drawn, and ſo particularly delineated towards his Elevation to the Imperial Dignity, that he had nothing to do, in Appearance, upon that View, but to declare his Acceptance of it.

4. But whether the King was diffident of the Emperor's Sincerity, or apprehended any extraordinary, or perhaps inſuperable Difficulties, in the Scheme propoſed by him: Whether he thought that the Weight of the Empire would rather draw his native Patrimony after it, and inſtead of augmenting the ancient Grandour of the Engliſh Monarchy, would only tend to reduce it into the Form of a Province to the Empire; or whatever other Reaſons might influence him; he did not embrace this great Offer of the Emperor, when firſt it was made to him, with that Forwardneſs and Alacrity that might have been expected, nor conſent to accept it, at laſt, without much Precaution.

5. While theſe Things were tranſacting, the Cardinal's Enemies did not omit to charge him (ſo Pace writes from Trent) as the Author of the Expence to which the Nation was put, towards ſupporting the War in Italy. They even pretended, that he adviſed it to ſerve his own private Ends; ſo difficult is it for the moſt able and prudent Miniſters, to avoid the Obloquy ariſing from a Suſpicion of their having ſome latent and indirect View in their Schemes: Yet every Man in this Caſe is to regulate himſelf by the ſtated Maxims of Truth, Juſtice, and Honour, and where he can ſatisfy his own Mind, that he has acted in ſtrict Conformity to thoſe Maxims, ought to ſhew a generous Contempt of the unjuſt Cenſures, which others may paſs upon him.

6. Pace in his Letter, where he uſes this faithful Liberty to the Cardinal, is of Opinion, it ought to be repreſented to the King, that ſuch Perſons know not what they ſay, nor what Good dependeth on this Expedition, particularly in Relation to the Recovery of Milan from the French, through the King's Aſſiſtance; in Conſideration of which, Francis Sforza the deprived Duke, when reſtored, ſhould annually ſupply the King with a thouſand Men at Arms, if ſo required, and reſtore what Moneys he was indebted to the King, offering his Brother as a Hoſtage to his Majeſty for Security of Payment. Theſe Propoſals which were made by Pace in the Name of the Duke, were afterwards confirmed by a Letter, from himſelf, to the King.

7. But whether the Emperor really and effectually intended a Reſignation of the Empire to Henry the Eighth, it is certain his Remiſſneſs, to ſpeak ſoftly as the Nature of the Thing will admit, in proſecuting the War, on the Side of Italy, gave the King no great Cauſe of repoſing an abſolute Confidence in him. In a Diſpatch of the Cardinal to Pace, of the 27th of May, he complains, that, as he underſtood, the Inaction and Retreat of the Emperor in thoſe Parts had fruſtrated the whole intended Deſign. For tho' his Imperial Majeſty, at the Head of a powerful Army, raiſed with the greateſt Expedition, and with which the Swiſs, in Purſuance of Pace his Negotiation with them, were joined, had marched into Italy, and was now without any Oppoſition advanced near the very Gates of * Milan, to the Terror and Conſternation of the French, in whoſe Hands it then was, and who obſerving the great Number, Strength, and Order of the Imperialiſts now ready to attack them, diſcovered great Deſpondency of Mind, and began to think not ſo much of making a brave and vigorous Defence, as of providing by Flight, as well as they could, for their own Safety: On a Sudden, without any viſible Cauſe, or Danger, Maximilian decamps and retires to Trent, from which Place he had ſet out with his Army, ſuſpecting, as he alledged, the † Fidelity of the Swiſs, who, he apprehended, would not fight againſt their own Countrymen in the French Service. This abrupt Departure of the Imperialiſts ſo animated the Enemy, that ſoon after they marched to join and aſſiſt the Venetians in the Siege of Breſcia, which the Spaniards, by whom it was garriſoned, in a few Days ſurrendered upon Articles. Encouraged with this Succeſs, the two Armies united in a Deſign of laying Siege to Verona, but here they found a ſenſible Change of Fortune, and were repulſed with much Slaughter and Loſs. After this Advantage obtained over his Enemies, Maximilian reſolved to renew the War with greater Vigour, and to that End ſends Matthew Cardinal of Sedun to King Henry to implore his Aid, and at the ſame time to excuſe his Retreat on Account of the Suſpicion which he had entertained of the Swiſs. It was in particular a ſenſible Mortification to Cardinal Wolſey, that the Emperor retired with a Precipitation which appeared more like a Flight after the Loſs of a Battle, than a voluntary Retreat, becauſe this War had been principally undertaken and proſecuted by the Cardinal's Advice. However, when the Cardinal of Sedun came to Court he had a favourable Audience, and making a good Diſpatch of the Buſineſs upon which he was ſent, haſten'd his Return to Maximilian, but not without ſome ſpecial Inſtances of the King's Generoſity to himſelf.

9. The Sentiments of Pace, in the German Court, concerning this inglorious Campaign of the Emperor, were the ſame with thoſe of our Miniſters at home. He writes, That the Emperor's Negligence loſt the Victory; That his Soldiers ran away without Cauſe; That he promiſes indeed to ſet forward again into Italy, but, I believe his Words no farther, than Deeds confirm them.

10. This

10. This is a high Charge, and I ſhould not have preſumed to repeat it, as reflecting upon the Honour of ſo great a Prince, were there not ſome collateral Grounds to ſupport it. The King of England himſelf, who was the beſt Judge in the Caſe, violently ſuſpected the Emperor did not deal ſincerely with [z] him. Sir Thomas Bolein in a Letter to the Cardinal writes, That the King of France told him, King Henry, by his own Mouth, had ſometime adverti ſed the French Ambaſſador de la Paſty, That he was laboured unto by the Cardinal of Sedun, when he was in England, to have been Emperor, and how his Highneſs perceived it was but to draw Money out of the Realm. [a] Pace in another Letter writes, That the King's Money which ſhould have furniſhed the great Enterprize in Italy, had been ill ſpent, and as good as caſt away by the Emperor; and therefore moves, that the King ſhould grant a Commiſſion, and he will be ſure to ſee it executed, that no more of his Money ſhould come into the Emperor's Hands. He remonſtrates, That by reaſon of his Non-compliance with the Emperor, who would have had an arbitrary Diſpoſition of the King's Money, he had been commanded to depart from the Emperor's Court, and was not only hardly uſed, but even apprehended himſelf to be in Danger of his Life. This however is undeniable Fact, That tho' the King, as he acknowledgeth in his Inſtructions to [b] Sir Robert Wingfield, had thankfully declared his Acceptance of the Emperor's Adoption [c], and of the other Articles depending on it; yet while this great Affair was negotiating, and before it could be perfected, his Imperial Majeſty was privately treating with the French King about Peace, which he ſhortly after concluded with him: Tho' one Condition of the Treaty between the Emperor and King Henry upon the Reſignation was, That he ſhould aſſiſt King Henry to recover France, as well as to put him in Poſſeſſion of the Duchy and Government of Milan. Of ſo little Significancy are Overtures and Conventions among Princes, 'till they have paſſed the uſual Forms, and received their plenary Ratifications; And even then, they are not always thought inviolable, where ſome extraordinary Accident or Emergency of State, that could not be foreſeen, requires, they ſhould no longer ſubſiſt in their original Force, or according to the proper Tenour of them.

11. The great Supplies of Money, for the Subſiſtence of his Troops, which the Emperor had drawn from England, not having been in all reſpects applied to the deſigned Ends, our Court grew more cautious in truſting the Remittances of it (as may be concluded from Pace's Letters) in the Hand of his Imperial Majeſty.

In Reſentment of which Uſage, or perhaps really for Want of Money, under which he laboured, in a manner continually, he was more diſpoſed to enter into pacifick Meaſures, and it was not long before he put a Stop to the Operations of War. He firſt made a Truce with his Adverſaries the Venetians, and reſtored to them Verona, in Conſideration of Two hundred thouſand Ducats; and afterwards made Peace both with them and the French King. It is thought the Death of Ferdinand, his near and conſtant Ally, and with whoſe Intereſts his own appeared to be inſeparably complicated, did contribute very much to produce theſe Treaties.

12. That Prince was diſtinguiſhed by the Title of Catholick, which became Hereditary to the King's of Spain from his Time. He was vigilant in obſerving Advantages, and in making the beſt Uſe of them, and did not ſtand too rigorouſly upon nice [d] Diſtinctions in Morality, where a Point could be ſtrained to ſerve a preſent Exigency: And his great Experience in political Affairs, joined to a good Underſtanding, rendered him very capable of judgeing wherein his Intereſt conſiſted, and of applying what he apprehended might be for his Intereſt to the right Purpoſe. His Alliances, though ſtrengthened by the Ties of Blood, were not on that Account, inviolably obſerved, in reſpect to all the Conditions of them. The Engliſh Troops, which, in the Infancy of the King's Reign, had aſſiſted him in his Wars againſt [e] France, were neither employed in the Operations, which had been projected, nor otherwiſe well accommodated: He ſatisfied himſelf with making them ſubſervient to his own Deſigns, without Regard to the Meaſures of the King, or thoſe Marks of Tenderneſs and Affection, which might have been expected from a Father-in-law. He had the [f] Character, among other Princes, of acting according to thoſe Maxims of Policy, which even before Machiavel's Time had too generally obtained, but are not to be reduced to the common Rules, whereby moral Writers ſhould judge, concerning the Rectitude, or f I have taken the Liberty, after Lord Herbert, of moralizing on Occaſion of this Character. They, who may poſſibly ſuſpect, that ſuch rigid Sentiments, as they will be thought by ſome Perſons, which follow, are only proper to Eccleſiaſticks unacquainted with Myſteries of State, or, in general to Chriſtians, may conſult Tully's Offices in the firſt Book, where he has, upon ſolid Reaſons, eſtabliſhed the Neceſſity, notwithſtanding any pretended Exigency of Affairs to the contrary, of preſerving publick Faith and Honeſty; and where he afterwards confirms thoſe Reaſons by ſeveral moſt authentick and excellent Examples. And tho' Chriſtianity has indeed propoſed the Duties of Morality in a better Light, and enforced them by a more expreſs Authority, and conſequently rendered the Breach of them, in every reſpect, more criminal; Yet the Rules of our Conduct, whether in reſpect to private or ſocial Life, eſpecially thoſe concerning the Adminiſtration of publick Juſtice, are ſufficiently clear (whenever they are duly applied) to leave the Tranſgreſſors of them without Excuſe. Thoſe however, if there are any ſuch in an Age of ſo much Light and Knowledge, who queſtion the Authority of divine Revelation, may here obſerve the ſtrict Notion which the Roman Orator had, and whereby, to the great Reproach of many Chriſtian Potentates, the brave ancient Romans governed themſelves, upon a pure Principle of natural Religion.

Obli-

Obliquity of human Actions. Whether, after all, ſuch a Conduct deſerves the Name of Policy, is another Queſtion? For all practical Sciences ſhould be founded in certain ſtated Rules, upon which they, who would excel in them, ought to ſuperſtruct and proceed; otherways ſuch Rules can never be learned, or effectually put in Practice. Now the Rules of Truth, Juſtice, and Honour, are well known and aſcertained. When we treat with any Perſon, or oblige our ſelves upon the Foot of them, he can eaſily tell where to find us, and what he may expect from us: But if we once depart from theſe Rules, we act by no Rule, but what is every Moment ſubject to Change, and muſt therefore neceſſarily betray us, except by mere Accident, into a Conduct perpetually irreconcileable to itſelf! A Conduct, which therefore deſtroys the very Foundation of civil Society, by removing all the rational Grounds of Truſt and Confidence among Men. But the End of Policy is to unite, not to divide Mankind, and to promote, in every reſpect, their common Tranquillity and Happineſs. How then do ſuch Maxims deſerve the Name of political Wiſdom, the Wiſdom, that has for its Object the Good and Well-being of ſocial Life, which evidently tend not to the Benefit, but the Deſtruction of Society?

13. It may be pretended, one principal End of human Policy, is the Preſervation and Safety of Civil Government. In order to which, it ſometimes becomes neceſſary, that ordinary Rules ſhould be diſpenſed with, by thoſe who govern, tho' in Breach of Contract with other co-ordinate Powers: And therefore, in Caſes of very imminent Danger, or ſome extraordinary Proſpect of Advantage, Princes have not commonly made it an invincible Scruple of Conſcience, to break through certain Engagements, whereby they apprehended themſelves too much reſtrained or embaraſſed. Were this Point to be determined by Precedents, I do not know, whether I might not be obliged to give it up. But, in the Reaſon of the Thing, it ſeems more adviſeable, as well as more honeſt, to hazard, any ſiniſter Accident, or truſt to the over-ruling Diſpoſitions of Providence, than to have recourſe to any ſinful Method in order to avert it. Since it is more eligible we ſhould expect a Bleſſing from God in his own Time and in his own Way, than attempt to raviſh it by a precipitate and unjuſt Force. Theſe Rules ought certainly to oblige Men, when applied to private Life; but they conclude much ſtronger, in reſpect to the Maxims and Conduct of Civil Governours. As they are under the Direction of a more ſpecial Providence; as they are ſuppoſed to repreſent the moſt high God, not only in the Exerciſe of Power, but in the Juſtice and Rectitude of their Government; and as their Example is of the greateſt and moſt general Influence towards promoting moral Good or Evil: So that private Persons, where they observe Breach of Faith, or any other Corruption, to be publickly exemplified, will think themselves in a Manner authorised to follow such Example. It were to be wished upon all these Reasons, and others which might be mentioned, respecting as well the Tranquillity as Honour of Princes, that Statesmen would form a Resolution of conducting all their Designs and Measures by the strict Rules of Morality and Religion. It is impious, it is derogatory in the highest Degree to the Honour and Wisdom of the supreme Governour of the World, to suppose, that he has any need of the sinful Man; or that he has so contrived the Frame of human Government, that it cannot subsist in Peace and Safety, without the Breach of his Laws; or except those, who administer under him, are to be put upon a Necessity of having recourse to Fraud, Violence, and Injustice. There is not a Man, who will not abhor a Thought so injurious to the supreme and righteous God; and yet, every Man, who pretends a Necessity, from any Reasons whatever of State, to violate the publick Faith, or the Rules of moral Vertue in any Kind, does interpretatively and by necessary Construction, entertain such a Thought. There is Scope enough for Princes and Ministers of State to shew their Wisdom and Abilities, while they keep steddy to the Rules of Vertue, Justice and Truth; besides, that this is the plainest Way to prevent their being involved, and the Safest to acquire and preserve Esteem, without which the greatest Abilities are of little Significancy, It is a Security from those Revenges of Providence, which generally, one time or other, overtake wicked Princes and Ministers, in the Breach of publick Faith or Justice in any Kind.

14. The Negotiations towards a Peace between the Emperor and France, were not carried on so secretly, but the Cardinal had Notice of them, tho' he could not give Credit to a Report which was spread abroad, that the Peace was actually concluded. He acquaints Tunstall, then in the Low Countries, by Letter, that when this Intelligence was brought to the King, it was not supposed to be true; but to have been raised by the Partizans of France, to render the Emperor suspected at the English Court, and to cause the King, by that means, to withdraw his Friendship and Supplies from him. Yet the Cardinal advises Tunstall to enquire whether such Peace was really made, or not; for he was apprehensive, it was no new Thing for a Prince to act a dubious Part; tho' he is confident, if either Honour or Truth were in the Emperor, he would never make a Peace without the King's express Consent: And to shew what strong and additional Ties of Gratitude, the Emperor was at present under to the King, he signifies, that at his Instance, and to supply a pressing Occasion, the King had lately remitted to his Imperial Majesty, a considerable Sum of Money.

15. [illegible] in the Low Countries in Quality of the King's Am[illegible] Fidelity in his Charge, as well as [illegible] wherein his Majesty was [illegible] He exactly underſtood the State of [illegible] into all the Springs of it, and fa[illegible] offered, to impart his Advice accordingly, either to the King, or his chief Miniſter. In a Letter to the Cardinal, he expreſſeth his Diſlike of a League propoſed between King [illegible], and the King Catholick, upon a Reaſon, which deſerved very well to be conſidered. He would not have the King involve himſelf in foreign Affairs, to maintain the Intereſts of other Princes. He inforces this general Reaſon, by repreſenting the State of the Allies, with whom he was to contract: He ſaith, The Emperor is poor, and not able to defend himſelf, and therefore his Aſſiſtance could not be of any great Significancy. The King Catholick, he obſerves, is of his Realms, and as poor as his Grandfather, and that, if any Invaſion ſhould happen, all the Burthen muſt lie upon the King of England.

1517. 1. IN this Year thoſe memorable Events happened which gave Birth to the Reformation in Germany, that afterwards ſpread into ſeveral other Parts of the Weſtern Church. And tho' the Cardinal, throughout the whole Courſe of his Life, firmly adhered to the Doctrine and Communion of the Church of Rome; yet, as the Corruptions of the Clergy, have been generally aſſigned as one principal Cauſe of the Reformation; and it cannot be diſſembled, that the Cardinal was very ſedulous in his Endeavours to detect the Diſorders among the Engliſh Clergy, and to puniſh them with a becoming Severity; he may, in this reſpect, be conſidered as one of the occaſional Cauſes at leaſt of the ſurpriſing Progreſs, which in a ſhort time after the Reformation made in Great Britain. The Irregularities wherewith the Cardinal was charged, as to his own perſonal Conduct, had they been really criminal and offenſive, as ſome Authors have repreſented them, ought not to be objected to what I now obſerve. The Beauty of Order, and the Neceſſity of publick Diſcipline, appear ſometimes to thoſe, who yet do not regulate their private Life accordingly, in a Light, and with a Force that cannot be reſiſted. Some have thought that the Cardinal, as a Prince of the Church, and endowed by Virtue of his Legatine Character with ſuch ample Powers, did not apprehend himſelf concluded within the ordinary Rules of the Church; but as to the common Meaſures of canonical Duty or Obedience, might act with a diſcretionary Liberty. I ſhall not diſpute, how far in this Way of Arguing, he might poſſibly be excuſed, in diſpenſing with certain eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions; but no Powers, no Authority upon Earth, none in Heaven, can cancel the eternal Rules of moral Truth and Juſtice, or diſcharge Men from their natural Force, and Obligation.

2. A Doctrine indeed, by Occaſion of which, the firſt Blow was given to the Papal Authority, and a Way opened to the Reformation, had been taught, and for ſome Time generally believed, that the Pope, out of the inexhauſtible Treaſure of the Church, founded in the Merits of CHRIST, of the Holy Virgin, and the Saints, had a Power of diſtributing Indulgences, on certain Conditions preſcribed by him, to the greateſt and moſt profligate Sinners for a plenary Remiſſion of Sin, and the Puniſhment both Temporal and Eternal otherways conſequential to it.

This Doctrine being found ſubſervient to the temporal Intereſts of the Church, and a proper Means to bring Money into the Apoſtolick Chamber, Leo the Tenth, as ſome of his Predeceſſors had done under the like Exigencies before him, finding his Exchequer low, and a Neceſſity of new Supplies, publiſhed, at this time, a Bull of Indulgences, with very ample Privileges to thoſe, who would purchaſe them, at a moderate [g] Price. This Pope being a Man of excellent Parts, well verſed in human Learning, and of a very human and generous Diſpoſition towards learned Men, had by his great Liberalities much exhauſted the papal Treaſure. His Character had been compleat, ſays a [b] Writer celebrated among other excellent hiſtorical Talents for his Impartiality, had he, with his other bright and noble Qualities, applied himſelf more to Theological Studies, or the Practice of Piety. Way of Living, tho' in other Reſpects eaſy and undiſturbed, having put an End to the late Schiſm, and there being now no open Defection from the Weſtern Church, which might give him any diſquieting Apprehenſions, he had Recourſe to this Method, at a Juncture ſo favourable to it, towards augmenting his Treaſure.

3. This Practice had been uſed from the Time of his Predeceſſor [i] Urban the Second, who in the Beginning of the eleventh Century, granted plenary Remiſſion of all Sins to thoſe, who ſhould take Arms for the Recovery of the Holy Land, and the Sepulchre of our Lord, from the Infidels. His Example was followed by ſeveral of his Succeſſors, ſome of them, as Improvements are eaſily made of beneficial and new Projects, extended the Benefit of their Indulgences to ſuch Perſons, who were either unwilling to go to the Wars themſelves, or unable to bear Arms, provided they deputed others to ſerve for them at their proper Expence. By Degrees theſe ſpiritual Favours were diſtributed to thoſe, who ſhould take the Field againſt the Enemies of Holy Church, tho' profeſſing Chriſtianity. Great Sums were raiſed for the Apoſtolick Chamber by this Means, but not always applied to the Ends, for which they were deſigned.

4. Pope Leo being determined, but more eſpecially by the Advice of the Cardinal Saint Quater, to follow ſuch convenient Precedents, opened a general Mart for Indulgences to thoſe, who ſhould comply with the Conditions, upon which they were propoſed. The Benefit of them was even extended to the Dead, in Caſe they ſhould be purchaſed by their ſurviving Friends in their Name, or for their proper Uſe. A Privilege was farther granted in them, for People to eat Eggs or white Meats in Time of Lent, or other Faſts, and of chooſing their own Confeſſors. And although in executing theſe Diſpenſations, as the Papiſts themſelves will readily own, a Commerce was carried on, which cannot be defended or excuſed, wherein many irregular Innovations were made, and from whence great Occaſion of Scandal aroſe; Yet, it muſt be acknowledged, many Bulls of former Popes proceeded upon Motives, that did not appear to be more pious or juſt, and were negotiated after a Manner, very obnoxious in Point of Scandal and Extortion. But it frequently happens, as Father Paul hath juſtly obſerved, that good and fit Occaſions of doing great Things are loſt, either for Want of a perfect Knowledge of them, or becauſe Men do not know how to apply them; but chiefly, becauſe the Period may not yet commence, wherein the ſupreme Governour of the World thinks fit to interpoſe or appoint a Train of Cauſes, proper to correct or reform publick Diſorders. That Period happened in the Pontificate of Leo the Tenth, when, on Account of preaching up Indulgences, there was a Concurrence of Circumſtances more favourable to the Deſigns of Reformation, than had been known or improved on the like Occaſion, under any of his Predeceſſors.

5. There is no Neceſſity, where publick and extraordinary Events may be accounted for from natural Cauſes, that we ſhould have Recourſe to any occult Qualities or Powers of the Heavenly Bodies, under a certain Configuration, into which ſome would reſolve that great Revolution, the Original whereof commenced about this Time: And yet there appears ſome Reaſon, from the Influence which the State of the Body has upon the Operations of the Mind, to conclude, that Diſtempers communicated by a contagious Air to the Body, may ſo far indirectly at leaſt affect the Mind, as to diſpoſe it to receive thoſe Impreſſions, whereof it would be, at another time, leſs ſuſceptible. This ſeems to be the moſt probable Way of accounting for the ſurpriſing ſuddain Progreſs, which certain Enthuſiaſts have been ſometimes obſerved to make, in ſpreading ſtrange and ſometimes very chimerical Doctrines. This Contagion of the Mind, from a malignant tho' more latent Diſorder of the Body, occaſioned perhaps by ſome Diſpoſition of the Air proper to produce it, was viſible in the firſt Riſe and Growth of Quakeriſm, and afterwards in the capricious Doctrines and Behaviour of the Camiſars. But there is no Occaſion for our having Recourſe to ſuch a Principle for the numerous and ſuddain Converſions, which were made by the Preaching of Luther, or in Conſequence of it. For, tho' this Reformer did not want a warm, bold, and lively Imagination, yet he ſupported his Doctrines in a human Way of Reaſoning and Argumentation, and, in many Reſpects, ſpoke forth the Words of Soberneſs and Truth. Beſides, even in the enthuſiaſtick Way of propagating new Doctrines, there is no need of our having Recourſe to the Influence of any remote celeſtial Cauſes; ſeeing, a State of the Air, ariſing from the Concurrence or Action of more immediate Cauſes, may effectually ſerve to that End. Yet Lipſius was not ſingular in reſolving the Spirit of Diſputation, which ſo remarkably diſcovered itſelf in all Ages and Sexes, at the Beginning of the Sixteenth Century, into the Power of ſome malignant Conſtellation. This Effect might have been accounted for, without conſulting the Stars, from ſublunary Principles. The Reputation wherein (by general Conſent) Learning then was, inſpired all Sorts of People with a laudable Ambition of having ſome Share in it: When ſo obvious and ſtrong a Motive as the Deſire of Fame, which might too be attended with other Advantages, inclined Men to Study and Diſpute, why ſhould we have Recourſe to unknown and precarious Cauſes in the Heavens, to diſcover the Reaſons of ſuch an Inclination: If, after all, any

Cauſes

Cauſes beyond the ſolar Syſtem are capable, except by their Light, of acting on tereſtrial Bodies. Yet Paulus Jovius, upon as good Grounds without doubt as Lipſius, obſerved the Effects of ſome noxious and celeſtial Aſpect, not only from what happened in Germany by Means of Luther, but from the general Change which happened at the ſame time, in the religious Rites and Doctrines, as well of the Oriental, as Weſtern Indians.

6. Though Luther attacked the Church of Rome in a more grave, and argumentative Way, yet there wanted not ſeveral Writers in the Boſom and Communion of that Church, who obſerved, and with great Freedom and Severity, animadverted upon ſeveral Diſorders, that were openly committed in it. Eraſmus in particular, was ſo copious and ſatyrical upon this Head, that ſome have thought his Writings did not a little contribute to facilitate the Progreſs of Luther's Doctrines, if they did not principally prepare the Way for the Reception of them.

7. But it would carry me too far beyond my Bounds, ſhould I here inquire after all the Reaſons, upon which a Reformation was now deſired, and thought by very good Men, neceſſary. I ſhall therefore confine my ſelf to the Efforts which were made towards it, by Means of the Article before mentioned relating to Indulgences; that being the firſt Cauſe of the Oppoſition, which Luther made to the papal Power and Authority.

1517. 1. BEFORE the Bull of Indulgences was publiſhed, there was a Circumſtance reſpecting the Diſpoſition of the Money to ariſe from them, which very much contributed to raiſe the Prejudices of People againſt that Bull. The Pope had already anticipated large Sums which ſhould be advanced by that Means, by appropriating them to ſeveral of his Friends, yet reſerving ſome

Part

Part for his own Exchequer. But what gave the greateſt and moſt general Occaſion of Scandal, in this Partition of them, was, that he had aſſigned to his Siſter Magdalene the Profits which ſhould accrue from the Indulgences in Saxony, and that Branch of Germany which extends itſelf towards the Ocean. This Lady was married to Francis, natural Son of Innocent the Eighth, deſcended from the Houſe of Cibo; by Means of which Alliance Leo himſelf now ſat in St. Peter's Chair; having in Conſequence of it, and as a previous Qualification for the Pontificate, been advanced to the Dignity of a Cardinal, when he was only fourteen Years of Age; whereby the Foundation of that Grandour was firſt laid, to which the Houſe of Medici afterwards arrived: And therefore Authors who are inclined to judge favourably concerning the Conduct of Leo, conſider this Action not ſo much as an Inſtance of pious and fraternal Affection, as of a becoming Gratitude to a Family which had laid the moſt honorary and powerful Engagements upon him; particularly, beſides the great Article I have mentioned, by ſupporting him at a vaſt Expence, when he was obliged to retire from Rome to Genoa, it not being ſafe for him to reſide near to the Perſon, or within the Territories of Alexander the Sixth; that Pope being in a ſtrict Amity with the Florentines, who were profeſſed Enemies to the Family of Medici, and had compelled them to remove out of their Capital, it was apprehended his Favour and Protection could not be entirely depended upon, againſt the Inſtances they ſhould make in Prejudice to ſo conſiderable a Branch of it.

2. The Care of theſe Collections for the Pope's Siſter, was, according to Father Paul, committed to Archembolus, a Prelate indeed, but who had all the Qualities of a compleat Genoa Merchant. He retailed his Powers, for the Diſtribution of Indulgences, to thoſe who would advance the beſt Price; but after ſo ſordid and vile a Manner, that Perſons who had a decent Regard to their own Reputation would not contract with him, tho' he found ſome of the ſacerdotal Order corrupt enough to proſtitute their Character, by accepting his baſe Conditions.

3. This is a very ſevere Charge againſt that Biſhop; and the Authority of Father Paul is ſo well eſtabliſhed, on Account of his Candour and Impartiality, and other great Qualities of an Hiſtorian, that it would be an audacious Attempt to conteſt the Truth of it. However, I think my ſelf obliged, in Point of common Juſtice and Humanity, to oppoſe againſt this great Name, what Cardinal Pallavicin has advanced, upon ſpecious Grounds, to overthrow the Credit of it in this Place. He obſerves, from the Authority of Sadolet, the Pope's Secretary, that the Deputation of Archembolus, to collect Indulgences, was in the Year 1514; that it was not a general Bull, but limited to a certain Part of Germany; that that he was not then a Bishop, neither originally a Genoese; nor by Profession a Merchant, but a Native and Gentleman of Milan; that he did not act by virtue of his Commission, as appears from the Tenour of it, in that Part of the Country, where Father Paul supposes, but in another District. Yet, should that excellent Historian after all be mistaken, as to certain Circumstances of Time, or Place, relating to Archembolus or his Commission, it will not therefore necessarily follow, that Prelate did not execute it in the Manner according to which he was before charged.

4. One of the great Advantages wherein Pallavicin affects to triumph against this learned Writer, in Reference to the Article of Indulgences, is taken from his dissembling the Motive upon which Pallavicin contends they were granted; and that was towards the Building of St. Peter's Church in Rome, concerning which Father Paul is perfectly silent, and contents himself with imputing in general, the Want of Money, to which the Pope was reduced, to an Excess in his Liberalities. The Cardinal assigns another Cause for this Distress: Pope Julius, Leo's immediate Predecessor, had exhausted his Treasure in the Wars wherein he had engaged, and which could not be carried on without a very great Expence. The Efforts which he made towards recovering the Cities which had been taken from him in Italy, required large Supplies, and he was at no little Charge in fortifying his Maritime Towns against the Designs of the Turks. Under these Circumstances he thought it a proper Method, in order to execute his Designs of Building St. Peter's Church, to raise Contributions for that Work by Means of Indulgences. Leo therefore had the Example of his Predecessor to justify him as to this Article, and which the Emperor himself approved, so far as can be concluded in this Author's Way of Reasoning, from a negative Argument: For when, on Occasion of a Book which was written to expose the Court of Rome, and presented to his Imperial Majesty, he complained of certain Irregularities with which they had been charged; he yet makes no Mention in his Remonstrance, concerning the Article of Indulgences, which yet had been particularly specified in that Book.

5. Pallavicin is sensible however of two Objections relating to Indulgences, which he ingenuously proposes and endeavours to answer as well as he can. He observes, that by the Method which was used in distributing them, Scandal was taken on two Accounts; first, as it rendered the Treasure of the Church venal; and as it depreciated the highest and most invaluable Privileges, by exposing them to be sold for Trifles.

6. To the former Objection he answers, That no great and good Design, like that of Building the Church of St. Peter, could be executed without Money. And as so pious an End could not be attained without the Application of proper Means, it certainly authoriſed thoſe Means. In his Way of improving this Argument, the primary Grant of the Bull was not for the Sake of the Money, but for the Work, which could not be carried on or perfected without Money, a Work highly laudable, and tending to the Glory of God; who, willing to accept our Contributions to ſo excellent an End, and being pleaſed with ſuch Sacrifices, mercifully grants Remiſſion of Sins, upon the Performance of them: For which Doctrine he cites the Prophet's Authority, break off thy Sins by Righteouſneſs, and thy Tranſgreſſions, by ſhewing Mercy to the Poor. He adds, (but I recite his Reaſons without thinking my ſelf obliged to aſſert or defend them,) That to ſell any ſpiritual Privilege for private Profit, is indeed ſacrilegious; but not when any Thing is ſold with an Intention of appropriating the Profits ariſing from it to the publick Honour of God, or the Benefit of Religion.

7. To what is objected in the ſecond Place, he replies, That the Value of every Thing is to be eſtimated, not from the Operation or Effect of it in particular Inſtances, but from the proper Tendency and Reſult of it, in Reſpect to ſome general Good. He argues, That as human Laws render certain Offences capital, which ſimply conſidered, are not of very pernicious Conſequence to the Peace or Tranquillity of the State, but yet, if generally ſuffered to eſcape with Impunity, would ſoon introduce great Diſorder and Confuſion; ſo on the other Hand, many Things ſeparately, and in themſelves of no great Value, yet taken collectively, and as reſpecting the common Benefit of Society, are highly enhanced in their Value. This he illuſtrates by the Rewards appointed by the Greeks to thoſe that conquered in the Olympick or other Games; which tho' of no intrinſick Conſideration, yet as tending to create in Men a generous Ambition of Excelling in ſuch military Exerciſes, as might render them ſerviceable to the State, and preſerve a martial Spirit in the Members of it, were, as Cicero acknowledgeth, not inferior to the Honours wherewith a Roman Triumph was celebrated. What he would conclude is, That tho' the low Price, at which the Indulgences were expoſed, was very inconſiderable in itſelf, yet in Relation to the aggregate Sums which would ariſe from them, and the publick and good Deſign to which they were principally appropriated, they appeared to be of a much more valuable Conſideration.

8. This Writer owns, That Father Paul's Account concerning the Appropriation of the Money ariſing, in the Parts before ſpecified, to the Pope's Siſter, had an ill and diſhoneſt Appearance: Not that it really imported, if true, ſo enormous a Crime, as it might ſeem to do at firſt, or upon a general View, and as that Hiſtorian repreſents it; who is reproached with following the moſt virulent rulent and ſatyrical Writers on the other Side. Pallavicin advances ſeveral probable Arguments againſt the Fact it ſelf, from the great Mind and generous Qualities of Leo; who would not have ſuffered an Embezzlement of the Moneys deſigned for ſo good and noble a Work, which, as appears from two of his Letters to Raphael Urban, he had very much at Heart; from his Magnificence, celebrated by the common Conſent of Hiſtorians, and the Monuments of which ſtill remained; and, to omit ſome other Conſiderations, that he deſcends to mention, from the vaſt Expence of the Building, from which his Holineſs could not well be ſuppoſed to ſpare any Thing; eſpecially, if what he obſerves in another Place be juſt, That all the Contributions to be raiſed by the Indulgences, were but as an Atom, in Compariſon of that great and ſtupendous Fabrick. He adds that, if in Fact this Aſſignment to the Pope's Siſter had been made, it is reaſonable to preſume, his Holineſs might do it with an Intention of ſupplying the Deficiency on that Account, by Way of Equivalent to the Church, from ſome other Branch of his Revenues. He does not omit in Concluſion, to inſinuate the great Motives of Gratitude and Attachment which the Pope was under to the Houſe of Cibo.

9. But all theſe probable Conjectures, are mentioned by Way of Accumulation; and admitting them to be of no Significancy, Pallavicin has ſtill one Argument in Reſerve, wherein he placeth in a Manner his whole Strength, and which if he has truly cited his Authority, appears indeed to be of great Weight. He ſays, the Grant upon which this Calumny againſt Leo the Tenth was occaſioned, could not upon Search be found in any of the Regiſters, wherein both according to Cuſtom, and the Precautions taken by the Officers of the Apoſtolick Chamber, it ought to have been repoſited and preſerved. But I ſhall not interpoſe in the Diſpute between theſe two great Men: What Father Paul had advanced, is ſupported by the Credit and Teſtimony of Paulus Jovius, a very competent Evidence in the Caſe. On the other Hand, an open Appeal by a learned Man and a Cardinal to publick Records, which might be eaſily conſulted, without he had ſome good Foundation for ſuch an Appeal, cannot readily be accounted for upon any Maxims of Prudence, or a Principle of common Honeſty. It is not very probable, that a Writer who did not want Art, or a reaſonable Regard to his Reputation, would, upon the Entrance of his Work, diſcredit every Fact, that he ſhould afterwaads cite or refer to, by a pompous Appeal, the Falſity whereof might be at any Time detected.

10. But whether this ought to have been aſſigned as one of the Cauſes which provoked Luther to write againſt Indulgences, it is certain, there were ſeveral Abuſes committed in the Diſtribution bution and Sale of them, which might have irritated a Temper leſs ſenſible to the Impreſſions of religious Zeal, than that of Luther, to ſome Degree of Warmth, and pious Indignation; eſpecially, if there be Truth in what is related concerning the ill Life, and ſcandalous Practices of thoſe, who made a Traffick of Indulgences; and in Gaming-Houſes, in Taverns, and other Places not fit to be named, cauſed People, beſides the Price of them, to ſpend what they could otherways ſpare from their neceſſary Expences, in treating for the Purchaſe. Pallavicin doth himſelf acknowledge, it occaſioned great Scandal to the Chriſtian World, that the Revenues ariſing from Indulgences, were transferred to thoſe, who would advance moſt Money for the Privilege of collecting them. As Temporal Princes, upon ſome valuable Conſideration, let out their Domains or emergent Subſidies to Farm. But this was an accidental Scandal and Inconvenience, rather according to Pallavicin to be lamented, than admitting a Remedy, without loſing the main End for which Indulgences were granted. For as the Returns which are made to Princes by a great Number of ſubordinate Officers employed in collecting their Taxes, are greatly impaired, by the Deductions to be made proviſionally from them, and ſometimes by ſecret and undue Practices; ſo the Profits ariſing from Indulgences would have been very inconſiderable, if his Holineſs had collected them by a numerous Train of his own Deputies, and at his own Charge, into whoſe Conduct he could not, conſiſtently with his Character, look ſo narrowly, as it might be preſumed the Farmers of this Revenue would think themſelves concerned to do after thoſe, who were deputed by them.

11. We have an Inſtance in Archembolus of the Caution which was uſed by the general Farmers, in appointing ſuch Perſons under them, from whoſe Deputation they might propoſe the largeſt Returns. Indulgences having been formerly publiſhed by the Order of Friers Heremits, this Biſhop ſuſpecting that they underſtood by Experience the ſecret Methods of advancing their own Intereſts, in that Way of Commerce, was determined to employ the Dominican Friers, who amplified the Value and Merit of Indulgences at a ſtrange Rate, and ſaid many Things of them altogether new and ſurpriſing: Whereas, he argued, what could be expected from the Friers Heremites, but according to their old and trite Doctrine concerning them, and the cuſtomary Collections which they had heretofore made. Luther being one of that Order, not without ſome Reſentment perhaps of the Indignity which he might apprehend done to it, was provoked to inveigh againſt ſeveral Abuſes and Innovations which had been introduced relating to this Subject. In the firſt Efforts of his Zeal, he ſatisfied himſelf with ſpeaking againſt the Retailers and Preachers of Indulgences; but growing warm in the Heat of Diſpute, he proceeded to examine the Nature and Reaſons of them more narrowly, and to diſcover, if he could, the Foundations, upon which they were ſupported. To this End, he publiſhed Ninety-five Concluſions, which he propoſed to be openly diſputed at Wirtemberg; but no Body thought fit to enter the Liſts with him by Way of oral Conference, or to appear againſt him in that Place: Tho' one Thecle a Dominican Frier publiſhed a File of other Concluſions, in Oppoſition to his at Franckford. In the Progreſs of the Conteſt, ſeveral Queſtions incidentally aroſe, relating to other Doctrines of the Church of Rome, particularly concerning the Extent of the Pope's Authority. For the Adverſaries of Luther not being able to eſtabliſh the Doctrine of Indulgences, as it was then commonly taught and received, by clear and convincing Reaſons, had Recourſe to the Pope's Infallibility to juſtify it, and to ſhew the Neceſſity of adhering to it, at leaſt, by an implicit Belief. This obliged Luther to make Reſearches concerning that high Privilege, upon which many other Doctrines in that Church equally depend. And tho' for a Time he expreſſed himſelf with great Modeſty, and Regard to the Pope, ſometimes appealing to his Judgement, and profeſſing he would ſubmit to his Authority; yet he was brought, by Degrees, utterly to diſclaim it, and at laſt intirely to withdraw his Obedience from him.

1. THO' the Doctrine of Indulgences, as taught at this Time, firſt opened the Way to the Reformation, by the reſolute Oppoſition which Luther made to it; yet we are not, I humbly conceive, ſo much to conſider it, as the true and direct, as an occaſional Cauſe of the general Seceſſion, which was afterwards made from the Church of Rome. That there were great Abuſes, in preaching and collecting them, the Members of that Church will not deny; but they argue, That Abuſes do not deſtroy the Nature or Reaſon of Things, or diſcharge Men from the general Obligation, which they are under to the Rules of Peace and Order; That the Church had no where made the Doctrine of Indulgences, as they were then abuſed, an Article of Faith, or eſſential to Communion in Worſhip; That our Saviour, tho' the Jewiſh Church in his Time, was chargeable with ſeveral Corruptions in relation both to Doctrine and Practice, yet did not ſeparate, on that Account, from the publick Worſhip, or Communion of it, or teach his Diſciples ſo to do: That a Separation therefore from any Church, lawfully conſtituted, (wherein the Adminiſtrations are regularly performed, and by Perſons regularly qualified) ought not to be made arbitrarily, by private Perſons, even tho' there may be ſome Things publickly profeſſed or practiſed in ſuch Churches, which ought to be reformed; provided thoſe Things are not made neceſſary Articles of Communion; That, as to the Doctrine of Indulgences in particular, whatever Diſputes there had been among the Writers of the Romiſh Church, concerning the Vertue or Merit of them; or whatever Diſorders might have happened in diſtributing them, yet there had been no publick Deciſion of the Church upon that Head, to which the Members were obliged to expreſs an implicit Aſſent, or that would juſtify an open Separation from it, on that Account. 1517.

2. It muſt be acknowledged indeed, that when this Article came to be conſidered in the Council of Trent, the Fathers who compoſed that Council, very prudently declined to enter into the Detail of the Queſtions, which had been diſcuſſed with great Heat by Luther and his Opponents; and upon which many learned Men, who ſtill continued in the Communion of the Church of Rome, were much divided. Several therefore of the Fathers, who were deſirous to avoid Difficulties, were for paſſing this Matter over in Silence, as requiring too intricate and copious a Diſquiſition; others thought this would expoſe them to the Inſults of the Lutherans, who would not fail to reproach them with avoiding to ſpeak of Indulgences, becauſe they knew not what to ſay concerning them.

Some

Some therefore propoſed a middle Way, as the beſt Expedient to obviate Inconveniences in both theſe Reſpects, which was only to treat ſo far in general, about the Uſe of Indulgences, as might tend to remove the Scandal and Diſorders, with which thro' Length of Time, certain Perſons, concerned in preaching and diſtributing them, were too notoriouſly chargeable.

3. What the [k] Biſhop of Modena ſaid, on this Occaſion, may well deſerve to be recited, ſince it not only lets us into ſeveral Particulars relating to the State of the Controverſy at that Time, but by the favourable Reception which it met with, diſcovers to us the general Senſe of the other Fathers. This Prelate repreſented, That if they would examine the Doctrine of Indulgences, in the ſame Latitude as they had done That of Juſtification; that is, take in all the Queſtions relating to it, and account for all Difficulties, this would be a Work which would require much Time. Neither could they proceed diſtinctly, or upon any clear Grounds, in it, 'till they had firſt determined, whether Indulgences were properly Abſolutions, Compenſations, or Suffrages: And, whether they delivered only from the Pains which the Confeſſor had impoſed, or from all other Pains, that are due: As alſo, whether the Treaſure out of which they are diſpenſed, is ſolely founded in the Merits of Chriſt, or it be not neceſſary to aſcribe ſome Part of it to the Merits of the Saints: Whether Indulgences can be given, except the Receiver on his Part qualify and prepare himſelf for the Benefit of them: And whether they do not extend to the Relief of the Dead: —But then to define, that the Church has in general a Power of diſpenſing them, and has diſpenſed them at all Times, and that they are of great Uſe and Benefit to thoſe, who in Fact are duly qualified to receive them, is what would not admit of any great or long Diſpute. The Power of granting them may be proved from the holy Scriptures, their Uſe from apoſtolical Tradition, and the Authority of Councils, and their Certainty, from the concurrent Teſtimony of the Schoolmen. Upon theſe general Principles a Decree might be paſſed about them, without any Oppoſition; accordingly this Biſhop was deputed, with ſome other Members, to draw up a Decree purſuant to the Method propoſed by him, with an additional Clauſe, concerning the Regulation of Abuſes.

4. The Decree was afterwards read and received by the Council in the following Form. "Foraſmuch as the Power of granting Indulgences has been imparted to the Church by Jeſus Chriſt; "which, from the firſt Ages of it, has aſſerted and exerciſed that "Power, as given to it from God; the Holy Council teacheth

" and commandeth, that the Uſe of Indulgences, ſo very ſalutary " to Chriſtian People, and confirmed by the Authority of Holy " Councils, ought to be retained in the Church; condemning ſuch " by Anathema, who either pretend them to be uſeleſs, or deny " that the Church has a Power to diſpenſe them: Wiſhing at the " ſame time that due Moderation might be ſhewed in diſtribu- " ting them, according to the ancient and received Uſage of the " Church, leaſt the Diſcipline of it ſhould be relaxed, by an Ex- " ceſs of Lenity.

" But as to the Abuſes, to which Indulgences have been ſub- " ject, and by Occaſion of which the very Name of them has " been blaſphemed by Hereticks, the Holy Council deſiring a Re- " formation of ſuch Abuſes, doth enact in general by this preſent " Decree, that all ſinful lucrative Arts in procuring them, which " have been the Cauſe of many and great Diſorders among Chri- " ſtian People, ſhall be aboliſhed. As to other Offences, the Ori- " gin whereof has been owing to Superſtitition, Ignorance, or " Impiety, or to any other Cauſe; ſince a ſpecial Proviſion to- " wards the Removal of them, cannot conveniently be made, on " Account of the Variety of Abuſes in different Places, and Pro- " vinces, where they may be committed; all Biſhops are com- " manded to take a ſtrict Account of the ſeveral Abuſes within " their ſeveral Precincts; and to make a Report of them in the " firſt Provincial Synod: So that when they have been condemn- " ed, as ſuch, by the Sentence of other Biſhops, they may be im- " mediately laid before the Sovereign Pontiff, whoſe Authority and " Wiſdom may determine what is moſt expedient for the general " State of the Church, that by this means all the Faithful may " participate of this ſacred Treaſure, after a pious and holy Man- " ner without Scandal or Corruption.

5. Had they, who were employed in negotiating the Affair of Indulgences under the Pontificate of Leo the Tenth, regulated themſelves according to theſe Meaſures, or had they looked upon them, as only importing a Relaxation of the Penance impoſed by the Prieſt, or by the eccleſiaſtical Laws, the Controverſy concerning them might have been managed with more Temper, and determined with far leſs Difficulty. But it appears from Luther's Letter to the Archbiſhop of Mentz, that the State of Indulgences at that Time was not to be examined by theſe Rules. He remonſtrates, That they, who carried on the Traffick of Indulgences, pretended to act, as if they kept a publick Office to Inſure the Salvation of thoſe, who ſhould purchaſe them: Nay, that ſuch who purchaſed in Favour of the Dead, immediately, upon Payment, redeemed their Souls out of Purgatory: That there was no Sin ſo great or enormous, not that, upon an impoſſible Suppoſition, of violating the the Holy Virgin, which might not, by the Vertue of theſe Indulgences, be pardoned. To which he farther adds, what appears no leſs ſhocking, that Contrition was not neceſſary to thoſe who redeemed. Luther finds no Difficulty in confuting ſuch impious Maxims, and concludes, That Indulgences confer nothing towards inward Sanctity, but are only a Relaxation of external and canonical Puniſhment.

6. However Luther by theſe Repreſentations (which in general, the Members of the Church of Rome themſelves being Judges, muſt be allowed reaſonable) drew upon himſelf the Indignation of the Monks at that Time; who by Reaſon of their many Exemptions, and ſtrict Dependence on the Pope, thought themſelves moſt concerned to maintain his Authority, and were indeed his moſt faithful and obedient Subjects, and the principal Sinews of his Power. So that for the ſame Reaſons upon which Henry VIII, diſclaimed the papal Authority in his Dominions, it has been argued, he might demoliſh the Monaſteries and religious Houſes, wherein ſo great a Number of Perſons, who were profeſſedly under the Direction of a foreign Power, reſided, and that not only in Regard to Spirituals, but on many Accounts, indirectly at leaſt, or by neceſſary Conſtruction, in Relation to Things Temporal. Whether that Prince might, without the Imputation of Sacrilege, alienate Revenues ſolemnly appropriated to pious and religious Uſes, ſo as wholly to transfer them into ſuch Hands, to which it was never intended they ſhould devolve; whether the Abuſes complained of, in conſequence of ſuch Appropriations, ought not to have been remedied, without totally deſtroying all the good Ends and Reaſons of them, may be conſidered in a proper Place. In the mean time, it cannot be denied, that the Inſtitution of Monks, who ſhould depend upon the Pope as their Superior, and to whom their laſt Appeal might lie, was a very proper Contrivance for ſupporting the Authority, and ſerving the Intereſts of the Triple Crown. And, for the ſame Reaſon, it has been a political Maxim of the Court of Rome, to exempt Chapters as much as poſſible from the Juriſdiction of their reſpective Biſhops, the Perſons who compoſe them being frequently leſs timorous, or ſubject to the Influences of the Civil Magiſtrate, than the Biſhops, who owe their Dignity to his Favour.

7. But to return to the Monks, They being diſperſed throughout the ſeveral Dominions, which acknowledge the Pope's Authority, are more capable thereby of ſerving him, both by executing his Orders, and giving him Intelligence of every Motion and Event, which it may concern him to know. And to this End, ſeveral of them are furniſhed, with large and great Powers, in Places very remote from their Sovereign; like thoſe Roman Generals abroad, who were commiſſioned to act at Diſcretion, where the Returns of Diſpatches could not be made with convenient Speed: So that the religious Orders, diffuſed through the Weſtern Patriarchate, may be conſidered in their particular Provinces, as ſo many Detachments of the Pope's Army; but who have this peculiar Advantage, that profeſſing ſtrict Piety, and Contempt of the World, it will not be ſo eaſily preſumed, they would ſerve under his Holineſs, could his Government be ſuppoſed Unjuſt or Tyrannical.

8. Martin Luther, who had been initiated into this Fraternity, and conformed ſeveral Years to the Rules of it, yet did not think himſelf bound in Conſcience, or under an indiſſoluble Engagement to obſerve them: Tho', during the Time of his leading a monaſtick Life, his Behaviour was regular and inoffenſive. The Breach indeed of his Vow, and his vigorous Oppoſition to the Doctrines of the Romiſh Church, occaſioned many Falſehoods and groundleſs Calumnies to be publiſhed againſt him. But Father [l] Maimburg, who will not be ſuſpected of Partiality to him, nor of Ignorance, of what might be objected upon any good Grounds againſt him, ingenuouſly owns, That as to his Morals, there was nothing much to be blamed. This Writer takes Notice of the Story, that had been ſpread abroad, of his being begotten by an Incubus, but with no other Deſign, than to confute it. He affirms, this Story had no Appearance of Truth, and was not mentioned 'till Luther became an Hereſiarch, which he might have been, without any Neceſſity of ſuppoſing that the Devil was ſubſtituted in the Place of his reputed Father.

9. Luther's Adverſaries, who addicted themſelves to aſtronomical Obſervations, took Pains to give him a diſadvantagious Horoſcope, that they might defame him according to the Rules of an Art, which had at that time ſome great Names to ſupport the Credit of it; but other learned Men, proved by the ſame Rules, and with equal Evidence and Certainty, that Luther ought to have been a very great Man.

10. In a Book, Entituled, Luther's Table-Talk, and publiſhed by [m] one of his Friends, certain Things were ſpecified, upon which, not only his Principles, but his Morals, were attacked. Particularly he was charged with hard Drinking, and with having a catechiſtical Cup, as he called it, that held about two Pints, and which he would take off at a Draught, boaſting that no Body elſe could do it; as Ulyſſes, ſaid he, had a Bow, which only himſelf could bend or draw up to the Arrow's Point. He was vindicated by ſeveral, and particularly by Seckendorf, from this and other Calumnies; yet, it is certain, the Materials of his Table-Talk were ill chosen, and that Collector of them, has discovered in several Instances, much Indiscretion; he having not considered so much what it became him for the Honour of Luther to recite, as how he might testify the Zeal which he had for that Reformer, by reciting every Thing, that he had occasionally spoken in Conversation. He ought, tho' he idolized Luther, to have known, that a great many Things may be said agreeably, by Way of free and familiar Communication among Friends, where a certain Negligence of Thought or Expression is more allowable, that yet are not fit to be published in Writing. Who does not perceive, that several Incidents give a proper Occasion for speaking Things in private or select Company, which, at other Times, being repeated to Strangers, unacquainted with those Incidents, would appear very improper, and in some Cases scarce intelligible. But it is the common Errour of Collectors in this Kind, to take any scattered Piece that comes to Hand, and to preserve it religiously, as some sacred Relict, which it would be impious, on any Account, either to reject or impair.

11. But since, so much depends upon the first Efforts that were made by Luther, towards a Reformation in Germany, and which influenced the subsequent Motions towards a Reformation in this Kingdom, during the Ministry of Cardinal Wolsey, I shall not think it any unseasonable Digression to add still something further concerning that Reformer; and to take Notice, in particular, of two Articles which have been objected to him, in order to vilify his Character, and by that Means to bring a Disgrace upon the Reformation in general. These two Articles (I shall consider them distinctly) relate to the Terms wherein he speaks of the Epistle-general of St. James; and to his Concurrence, with some other German Divines, in allowing the Landgrave of Hesse to marry two Wives.

As to the former Charge, it was very evident Luther had, in a Preface to one of his Books, asserted, That the Epistle of St. James, was not equal in Dignity to the Epistles of Peter and Paul, and that, in Comparison of them, it was a Work of Straw. Whitaker, who vigorously defended Luther so long as he could, from the Invectives of Campian against him upon this Head, found himself at last obliged to [n] acknowledge the Charge. Tho' it is no less certain that Jesuit advanced some Things in his Accusation, which he was not able to support, by any express or authentick Citation from Luther's Works: He had accused Luther of saying, The Epiſtle of St. James was a contentious, tumid and dry Piece, and a Work of Straw. Campian, when challenged by Whitaker, to produce theſe Words out of any Part of Luther's Writings, could not find them. Upon which, he was openly cenſured by Whitaker, as a lying Calumniator, having profeſſed, that himſelf had ſeen theſe Words in Luther's Books. The Truth is, [o] That he might poſſibly have ſeen what concerns the laſt Branch of the Accuſation, tho' he could not recollect particularly in what Place: For in the Progreſs of the Controverſy, it plainly appeared where he had ſaid it. Bayle, whom we cannot ſuppoſe to have been byaſſed in Favour of Campian, freely confeſſeth, it is probable this whole Paſſage was in ſome ancient Edition of Luther's Books; ſince, as he argues, "The "other Epithetes were not in Reality more derogatory or injurious "to the Honour of St. James, than this: So that Whitaker, like "an artful Writer took Advantage againſt his Adverſary, becauſe "the Editions that were wanting, could not be produced. He "improved this Advantage into an Occaſion of Triumph, tho' "it had not all the Force he attributed to it, and was only a co-"lourable Excuſe: For tho' in ſome Caſes there may be a wide "Difference between an abſolute and a comparative Charge; yet "this Diſtinction is of no Service in the preſent Caſe, admitting "the divine Authority of St. James his Epiſtle, ſuch a Compari-"ſon ought not to be made. Whoever ſays, therefore, it is a "Work of Straw, compared to the Epiſtles of Peter or Paul, does "really ſay it is not canonical, or the Work of an inſpired Wri-"ter. It would be impious and irrational to pretend, that thoſe "who write by divine Inſpiration, are not of equal Authority; "or that the Writings of ſome of them, in reſpect to others, are "light and inſignificant." What ſome have preſumed, that Luther afterwards changed his Opinion as to this Epiſtle, becauſe it is not found in any following Edition of his Books, lays the Groundwork of the beſt Apology for him. Tho', after all, he ſhould openly have retracted an Error, which gave open Scandal and Offence, and not have left the World to juſtify him, by Inferences founded upon a charitable Conjecture, and an Argument merely negative.

12. But his Conſent, upon the other Head, that the Landgrave of Heſſe ſhould marry two Wives, can be excuſed upon no Rules of Charity. This Prince, in ſolliciting an Indulgence of ſo extraordinary a Kind, chiefly proceeded upon two Reaſons, tho' both of them might, in good Meaſure, be reduced to One; an unuſual Vigour of Conſtitution, for which the [p] Phyſicians who opened him after his Death, are ſaid to have diſcovered a natural Cauſe; and the Obligation, he was frequently under of being abſent from his Lady, to attend the Diets, where it was not commodious for her to reſide; and where eating and drinking after the High-German Faſhion, provoked him, as he acknowledged, to conflict with Difficulties, upon the Subject of Chaſtity, which he was not able to overcome.

13. If Reaſons of this Kind might be admitted to authoriſe Polygamy; or if every great Inconvenience in the conjugal State ſhould be improved as his was into a Caſe of Neceſſity, what a wide Door would be opened to all manner of Licentiouſneſs? And when or where would Men know to ſtop the Torrent of it? I grant, there is a wide Difference in Caſes of this Nature, between a Prince and a private Perſon, as to the Methods which may be taken to open the Eyes, or obtain the Deciſion of Caſuiſts. The Succeſs of this Prince, in accompliſhing his Deſires, may ſerve to diſcover to us, how conveniently the Engines of this World may be employed over Synods, towards introducing ſuch Principles of Morality or Religion, as are moſt agreeable to the Sentiments or Inclination of the Sovereign. The Landgrave of Heſſe was ſenſible, that the Deſign he was forming, would expoſe him to Cenſure, and afford Matter of much Speculation to the Chriſtian World: But he thought the Authority of Luther, who was in ſo great Reputation at that time, would go a great Way towards his Juſtification; eſpecially if it could be ſupported by the Suffrages of other eminent Divines. He cauſed therefore ſeveral of them to be aſſembled at Wittemberg, who reſolved, it was convenient, he ſhould have a Permiſſion, which accordingly was granted and drawn up in Form, to marry a ſecond Wife; provided, all poſſible Precautions ſhould be uſed to keep the Matter ſecret. For notwithſtanding they plainly foreſaw the Scandal, and ill Conſequences of the Deciſion which they were going to make, yet being over-awed by the Authority of the Landgrave, or influenced by ſome other Conſiderations, they gave in to the Opinion of Luther for the Legality of a [q] ſecond Marriage. Whether the Landgrave preſided in this Convocation as ſupreme Head of the Church within his own Dominions, I have not been able ſufficiently to inform my ſelf; I would only obſerve

[q] The Acts of this ſecond Marriage were taken from the Archives of Ziegenham, common to the Houſe of Heſſe Caſſel, and that of Heſſe D'armſtadt. Prince Erneſt of Heſſe Rhinfields having embraced the Romiſh Faith, was overjoyed at their being publiſhed, becauſe he thought this would fix a Blemiſh on the Church he had quitted. And it is manifeſt they were a great Diſgrace to Luther, Melanchon, and Bucer. There is therefore no Appearance that the Landgraves of Heſſe Caſſel, and Heſſe D'armſtadt, the former Calviniſts, the latter Lutherans, would have been ſilent, if there had been any Suſpicion, that theſe Acts were forged. Thoſe great Princes could not be ſufficiently blamed, if having any Suſpicion of this, they had done nothing to oppoſe the Deſign of Erneſt a Popiſh Proſelyte. Bayle Art. of Luther.

from this Caſe, how far human Influences will ſometimes carry Men againſt all Senſe of Probity and Honour, and the Maxims of Morality univerſally eſtabliſhed: And that, it is not abſolutely impoſſible for a corrupt Prince, to find Inſtruments of Corruption even among Eccleſiaſticks, acting in a ſynodical Capacity; eſpecially where their Proceedings are under his Direction, or it may be very dangerous for Men to incur his Diſpleaſure, by regulating their Judgement according to the natural Evidence of Things, or the Perſuaſion of their own Minds, againſt any civil Reſtraints. In the firſt Ages of Chriſtianity, before ſecular Princes took the Church under their Protection, no Inſtance is to be found of any publick Judgement, like this. But when the Fathers of the Church began to contract greater Dependencies on the State, and Princes obſerved, with what Force and Effect the Engines of this World might be applied, it cannot be ſaid, that even in their ſynodical or other publick Aſſemblies, they always conducted themſelves in a Manner agreeable to the Purity or Simplicity of their Rule, or to the Powers wherewith they were originally inveſted by Chriſt, for the Government and Edification of his Church.

14. Mr. Jurieu has endeavoured to vindicate Luther, with Reſpect to this Imputation, by Arguments upon no Account reconcileable to Truth, or to what he has advanced himſelf, in his [r] Hiſtory concerning the Doctrines and Worſhip of the Church upon the Subject of Polygamy. But Men of a vehement Temper, in the Heat of an Argument, are ſometimes apt to militate againſt themſelves. It had been more adviſeable for this warm Writer, ingenuouſly to own Luther's Fault, than to defend him by weak and fallacious Reaſons, had they been really more conſiſtent with his own Sentiments: If Neceſſity, as he pretends with theſe Divines who formed the Decree, will excuſe or authoriſe Polygamy, Neceſſity in every Caſe, will give an equal Privilege, and in Reſpect to both Sexes. It appears indeed, from ſome Paſſages in the Works of Luther, that his impetuous Temper occaſioned certain Expreſſions, relating to the Subject of Continence, that cannot be juſtified, which ſome have attributed to his Zeal againſt monaſtick Vows, and for a diſcretionary Liberty in the Clergy to marry: A Zeal ſo violent, that it ſometimes cauſes him to ſpeak of Inevitable

r Vol. 1. Ch. 22. It is unqueſtionable, that Polygamy is contrary to the Law of God, given at the Beginning of the World when he inſtituted Marriage.

—— Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf furniſheth us with an Argument to prove, that Polygamy is contrary to the Original Contract of Marriage, when he condemns Divorce by the very Words of the Inſtitution of Marriage. Whoſoever ſhall put away his Wife and marry another, committeth Adultery againſt her. This could not be, unleſs Polygamy was forbidden; for then, as he argues, ſuch a Perſon by marrying again, would not commit Adultery, but only live in the State of Polygamy.

Ne-

Neceſſities, after a Manner harſh and offenſive to chaſte Ears, and which at the ſame time does not eaſily agree with what himſelf has elſewhere profeſſed, that during the Time of his Celibacy to the Forty-fifth Year of his Age, he had lived without Reproach.

15. The perſonal Errors or Failings of Luther, cannot however be urged in Prejudice of the Reformation, which took its Riſe from his Doctrine: The Papiſts eſpecially, can make no Advantage of an Argument in this Kind. The Popes, upon their own Principles, the Vicars of Jeſus Chriſt, were many of them very wicked Men, and ſome in a long Train of Succeſſion: Yet it will not be denied, That their greateſt and moſt enormous Crimes were conſiſtent with the Authority and other Rights aſcribed to them, proper to their paſtoral Function. Mutual Recriminations in Controverſies of Religion, founded in private Irregularities or Defects, are of little Uſe to diſcover, where the Truth really lies, but rather tend to obſcure it, by provoking the Paſſions of Men, and rendering them leſs capable of making a good and equitable Judgement. Waving this Conſideration, it were perhaps better both for the Credit of the Reformed and the Romiſh Church, and of Religion in general, that in controverting the Points wherein they differ, Men ſhould decline all Reflections foreign to the main Argument, and keep themſelves wholly to ſuch Queſtions, as may tend to elucidate or enforce it.

16. If Luther was really chargeable with any heterodox Opinions or Miſconduct, the Reaſons of his Proceeding, in Oppoſition to the Errors or Corruptions concerning which he had juſt Cauſe of Complaint, will ſtill ſubſiſt in their full Force. And his greateſt Enemies muſt allow, he had ſome eminent Qualities. For a ſingle Monk to introduce ſo ſudden and ſenſible a Change in Religion, againſt the Doctrines commonly received, and eſtabliſhed by the Laws; againſt the Power of the Pope, and all the Meaſures which the Court of Rome, could form, or employ to ſuppreſs him; a Court, diſtinguiſhed for the moſt refined Politicks, and then in the Height of all its Glory; that he ſhould not be intimidated by any Threats, or allured by any Overtures of Favour to retract his Doctrine; and that he ſhould at length triumph in the Progreſs of it, over all his Adverſaries, among whom there appeared ſeveral Perſons of Learning, and who bore a Character of Diſtinction in other Reſpects: All theſe Conſiderations ſhew, that Luther was not only a Man of Zeal and Courage, which will not be conteſted; but that his Abilities as a Divine, and a Scholar, were by no Means to be contemned.

17. But

17. But what principally facilitated the Reformation by his Means, was a Concurrence of Circumſtances under the Pontificate of Leo, which had not perhaps happened at any time ſo favourable to ſuch a Deſign. Wickliff, who had ſome time before diſſeminated Principles here in England, which tended that Way, and drew a conſiderable Number of Followers after him, was Maſter of as much Learning and theological Knowledge, as Luther, and appears to have been animated with as hearty a Zeal for his Opinions, tho' he did not expreſs it with the ſame Vehemence and Impetuoſity of Temper. But tho' he recommended himſelf to the Patronage of certain great Men, by propagating crude Notions againſt the Rights of the Church, and the Powers of the Clergy; a Method, wherein Eccleſiaſticks often find their Advantage, who can ſo far debaſe their Character, as to make their Court by it; yet, by Reaſon of the juſt Prejudices which good Men entertained againſt him on this Account, his other Principles, tho' many of them had a better Tendency, were more coldly received, and did not ſpread themſelves very wide, except among vulgar and ignorant People, who were not the moſt capable of examining the true Grounds of them. Perhaps the Diſeaſe, which Luther attempted to cure, was not then come to its Maturity, or the proper Remedies towards the Cure of it were wanting. Luther interpoſed at the critical Time, when the Diſtemper was come to its Heighth, and began to turn, and diſcharge its Malignity, and ſo had the good Fortune of thoſe Phyſicians, who carry away the Reputation of the Cure, by preſcribing the laſt Medicines, at the Inſtant they will operate moſt powerfully.

18. Both theſe Reformers had the Advantage of inſinuating themſelves into the Favour of the People, by preaching Doctrines, which ſet them looſe from Diſcipline, and rendered the Payment of Tythes more precarious. But yet they are by no means chargeable with all the Conſequences, which the Anabaptiſts and other Enthuſiaſts in Germany, and the Lollards here in England, drew from thoſe Doctrines: Bull in particular, who made uſe of Wickliffe's Principles to encourage the Rebellion of Jack Straw and Wat Tyler, applied them, by undue Inferences, to ſerve a moſt wicked and villanous Deſign, wherein there is not the leaſt Proof of Wickliffe's Concurrence, or to which it does not appear that he gave any tacit Approbation.

1517. 1. THERE was a Commotion at this ſ Time in England, yet not upon a religious, but a civil Account: Which becauſe it not only affected the Adminiſtration, but the Cardinal immediately in Perſon, it may not be improper to give ſome Account of it. The Artificers of London apprehending themſelves aggrieved by the great Confluence of Strangers, who were permitted to exerciſe their manual Occupations in the City, were very much irritated; not only as ſuch an Indulgence tended to impoveriſh their own Families, but becauſe theſe Strangers preſuming upon the Favour and Protection of the Court, behaved themſelves with great Inſolence towards the Engliſh, and even in Contempt of the City-Magiſtrates. Among other particular Inſults which the Natives received, one from a certain Lombard, did not a little contribute to inflame them. This Foreigner found Means of prevailing upon the Wife of an Engliſhman to come to his Chamber, and to bring with her Part of her Husband's Plate, both which he refuſed to reſtore upon the Husband's Demand. But the greateſt Hardſhip upon the injured Party was, That the Lombard arreſted him, and obtained Conſideration from him for his Wife's Board, whilſt he kept and detained her againſt the Husband's Conſent.

2. Com-

2. Complaint was made of this and other Abuſes committed, by the Foreigners, to one † Dr. Standiſh, who was appointed to preach on a publick Occaſion, and deſired to repreſent, That ſuch Inſolencies, were againſt all Law and Reaſon, and the Good of the Common Weal; That, Complaint of them had been preferred to the Council, but could not be heard; and in ſhort, That while Strangers were obſerved to live in great Splendour and Luxury, the Engliſh were reduced to a poor indigent and diſtreſſed Condition.

3. Standiſh prudently declined to intermeddle in ſo dangerous a Matter: But Application being made to the ſame Effect, by one Lincoln, a Broker, to Dr. Beal, the Doctor was prevailed upon to receive a Bill of Complaint that Lincoln had prepared, and to read it openly from the Pulpit wherein he preached.

4. Bard, which was the Name of the Lombard, being ſometime after on a Sunday in the King's Gallery at Richmond, with other Foreigners, they made a Jeſt of his keeping another Man's Wife, and were ſo inſolent as to ſay, if they had the Mayor's Wife of London, they would make no Scruple of treating her in the ſame Manner. Several Engliſhmen being provoked at their impious and indecent Raillery, Bolt, a Mercer, ſaid, "Though the "Lombards then rejoiced and laughed, yet the Engliſh would one "Day have a Fling at them, come when it would." What paſſed upon this Occcaſion being publickly reported, the People were diſpoſed more than ever to revenge themſelves upon the Foreigners.

5. The Mayor conſidering the Diſpoſition, which the Citizens were in, repairs to the Cardinal for Inſtructions, whereby he might better regulate his Conduct; who adviſed him to uſe all proper Methods towards preventing any Tumult upon the firſt or leaſt Appearances of it. And a Rumour having been ſpread abroad, that the Deſign againſt the Strangers was to be put in Execution, as upon May-day following, the Citizens were ordered to ſhut up their Doors on the Evening before, and to keep their Servants within 'till next Morning.

6. One of the Aldermen, finding in his Quarter, two Perſons fighting at Bucklers, with a good Number of People about them, commanded they ſhould deſiſt, and apprehending one of them, in Order to carry him off to the Compter, was violently oppoſed; upon which, the Delinquents, crying out 'Prentices and Clubs, it proved the Signal to that great Diſorder, which ſoon followed, for before Eleven that Night, the Number of the Rioters was increaſed in Cheapſide to ſix or ſeven Hundred. And tho' the Mayor and Sheriffs made Proclamation in the King's Name to cauſe them to diſperſe, yet they could not be ſuppreſſed, 'till certain Lords, and Gentlemen came to London with what Forces they could raiſe, upon ſo ſuddain an Exigence, and compelled them to a Submiſſion. Many of the Offenders were taken and convicted, and eleven Pair of Gallows were erected in different Places, to give them more terrifying Apprehenſions of their Crime. Yet Lincoln, when executed, ſhewed no ſenſible Regret for his own. He endeavoured to juſtify himſelf, upon a Pretence, that he meant well; and ſaid, if others conſidered the Miſchief occaſioned to this Realm by Foreigners, they would uſe Means to remedy it, and that he had many Times complained upon this Head, but to no other Effect, than that he incurred the Cenſure of a Buſy Fellow.

7. Upon Application to the King for [u] Mercy, the Matter in Concluſion was referred by him to the Cardinal, who, during the Inſurrection, had thought it adviſeable to fortify himſelf in his own Houſe; when the Mayor and Alderman came to appear in Form of Supplicants before him, he gave them a gentle Rebuke for their Negligence, and directing himſelf to the Priſoners, told them, they had juſtly deſerved Death. Yet theſe Expreſſions of Severity, it appeared, did not proceed from any Motive or Deſire of Revenge, but from a neceſſary Regard to Reaſons of State, which always require, that Acts of Lenity ſhould be tempered in ſuch a Manner as to preſerve a due Senſe of Authority. At the Inſtance of the Cardinal, the King was pleaſed to pardon the Criminals, who expreſſed a Senſe of the Mercy ſhewed to them by many joyful and loud Acclamations.

8. The Cardinal had lately taken another very popular Method towards recommending his Adminiſtration to the King's good Subjects in general, by calling [x] all Perſons to a ſtrict Account, who had been entruſted with the publick Money. Upon ſuch as had embezzeled or miſapplied any Part of it, proper Mulcts were inflicted, and thoſe whom he found in Arrears were obliged to make full Payment. Perjury, in particular, was puniſhed with an exemplary Severity, and ſuch Marks of publick Infamy, that it was obſerved to be leſs practiſed than formerly. oppreſſed Perſons of inferior Condition, and would not ſuffer them to live quietly, were not exempted from the Rules which he preſcribed to himſelf, of adminiſtring Juſtice with a ſtrict Hand, without Reſpect of Perſons, and which might moſt effectually contribute to promote, in every Reſpect, the [y] Good of the Common-wealth.

9. But the Maxims whereby he regulated himſelf in this Capacity, however juſt or reaſonable, accidentally involved him in much Trouble. The poorer Sort of People obſerving, that he puniſhed all Delinquents indifferently, preferred Complaints of Grievances without Number, and by that Means many honeſt and innocent Men were expoſed to vexatious, and ſometimes to very unjuſt Proſecutions.

10. Being ſoon apprehenſive of theſe Inconveniences, and wearied with a Multitude of Caſes and Petitions from all Quarters, he delegated others, in Virtue of the King's Commiſſion, to hear Cauſes and receive Complaints by Bill. But theſe Commiſſioners being dilatory in their Proceedings, and the People not finding that ſpeedy Relief in this Method, which they expected, they were glad at laſt to let Things run in the old Channel, and to have Recourſe, in Caſes where they apprehended themſelves aggrieved, to the Common Law.

11. In examining Cauſes which came before the Cardinal, as Chancellor, he would take Aſſociates with him learned in the Laws, and ask their Opinion; but in ſuch Matters as came before him, and were not very intricate, but might be determined in a rational Way of Arguing, from the common Principles of Equity, he would often give Sentence according to the Light of his own Underſtanding. The great Power which he had in all judicial Proceedings, gave much Diſguſt to the Peers. This however is no Argument that he abuſed his Power. Reaſons of Envy, or an Apprehenſion of being neglected, might have created him many Enemies, tho' he had not been really guilty of any Abuſe in diſcharging his Truſt. But there is a general Concurrence in the Writers of his Hiſtory, whether Friends or Enemies, that he acquitted himſelf in his judicial Capacity, as a Man of Vertue and Honour ought to have done.

[y] What Biſhop Godwyn obſerves, in Relation to this Part of the Cardinal's Conduct, is ſo very honorary to him, and there is ſo little Reaſon to ſuſpect, that an Author, who on other Occaſions has animadverted upon him with a becoming Severity, ſhould be partial in his Teſtimony, that I here think my ſelf obliged to recite it in his own Words. Multa ordinavit in Rebus civilibus popularibus grata ac nobis in hunc uſq; Diem uſurpata, Quibus virum ſe oſtendit ſapientiſſimum necnon Reipublicæ Amantem. Certe, qui illis temporibus vixerunt, aſſerere non dubitarunt, cum hoc Regno nunquam felicius actum, quam cum florente Wolſeo; cujus conſiliis pacem opulentam & ſecuram, qua fruebantur, & juſtitiam equo Jure civibus omnibus adminiſtratam, tribuebant, ib.

12. Concerning the Affairs of the Church here in England, I find a [z] Bull containing very ample Powers, and high Strains of Complements ſent to the Cardinal from his Holineſs: The Import of it is, to empower the Cardinal to collect a Tenth from all the Clergy in the King's Dominions for the Defence of Holy Church, and to give him Authority where any of them ſhould refuſe Payment, to compel them to make it, upon Pain of Deprivation, or any eccleſiaſtical Cenſure or Puniſhment that he might think fit to inflict: He was even commiſſioned, in Caſe the Clergy were found refractory or incompliant with his Orders, to invoke the ſecular Arm to his Aſſiſtance, with a Power of Abſolving thoſe, who had offended, upon their Submiſſion; and of deputing others to act according to the Tenour of his own Inſtructions; who might therefore not only inflict pecuniary Mulcts, but make a Seizure of any Goods or Emoluments belonging to them, except Books, Veſtments, or other Utenſils appropriated to ſacred Uſes; and theſe Powers might be executed in their moſt ample Extent, notwithſtanding any Uſages or former Cuſtoms, any Indulgences or ſpecial Exemptions from the apoſtolick See to the contrary.

13. The Sovereign Pontiff in this Brief, expreſſeth himſelf, as having the ſupreme and abſolute Dominion, not only over the ſpiritual State, but the temporal Poſſeſſions of the Church. It is true, in order to execute the Powers in the latter Reſpect, he appears to ſollicit the Aid of the Civil Magiſtrate; but that might be done, not by way of acknowledging to him any ſuperior or overruling Authority in temporal Affairs, but only in the Nature of a Petition of Right, which the Prince was obliged to grant upon his Demand, and by Virtue of it.

14. This was carrying the Prerogative and Claims of the Triple Crown to the utmoſt Stretch, and beyond what there were any Grounds in Reaſon or Scripture to juſtify, and which no authentick Precedent either in the ſacred or eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, could be produced to ſupport. And it is not improbable, that the Publication of ſo very unwarrantable and exorbitant a Grant, might be one of the Cauſes, which ſoon after contributed to the utter Abolition of the Pope's Authority here in England; tho' indeed ſome of thoſe Nations which ſtill acknowledge and ſubmit to it, yet will by no Means allow the Exerciſe or Extent of it, according to the Tenour of this Bull, to the Inſtructions whereof I do not yet find the Cardinal, who was always inviolably attached to the papal Intereſt, made any Scruple of conforming himſelf.

15. Be-

15. Beſides that his Principles, and private Views, perhaps, of which ſome Account will be given, might incline him to ſupport the Dignity and Power of the Pontificate, he had great perſonal Engagements at this Time to the Court of Rome. For notwithſtanding what had been done in Favour of his Competitor, the Biſhop-Elect of Tournay, to whom the Profits and Adminiſtration of that Biſhoprick had been granted by his Holineſs, the Cardinal is inveſted by another [a] Bull with the Government of it both in ſpiritual and temporal Affairs; this Brief was obtained at the Inſtance of Silveſter Biſhop of Worceſter, by Direction from the King, and in his Name. The Biſhop repreſented, That it was neceſſary to the Peace and Safety of the City, that the Adminiſtration of the Biſhoprick ſhould be transferred into other Hands; That the French Biſhop conſcious of his Diſaffection to the King, had not made the uſual Homage for his Temporalities; That he was juſtly ſuſpected to the King, and was not to be truſted, and ought therefore to be ſuperſeded by ſome Perſon in whom the King might ſafely confide. The Pope, and the Cardinals, upon this Repreſentation, did not think it convenient that he ſhould exerciſe his Epiſcopal Authority in a Place, to the Lord and temporal Power whereof he was an Enemy, and that neither was it convenient he ſhould depute another, where he could not perſonally viſit, or ſuperintend the People committed to his Charge. And therefore to prevent Sedition and Scandal, and any Diminution, which might accrue to the Church of her Rights, with other Conſiderations hereunto moving, his Holineſs, by the Plenitude of his Power, declares the People of Tournay, and within the Epiſcopal Diſtricts of it, abſolved from all Ties of Obedience to Lewis, the French Biſhop, and prohibits him, upon Pain of Contumacy, to make any Claim to it, inveſting the Cardinal with all the Powers of it, Spiritual and Temporal, 'till the Matter could be finally determined.

16. The Advice which had from Time to Time been communicated to the Cardinal by Dr. Samſon, to whom the principal Direction of his Affairs was committed in thoſe Parts, might not a little contribute to the Ardor of his Applications for this Bull. For Samſon, in a [b] Letter directed to him ſometime before, particularly adviſeth, that if his Grace might think fit to proceed further in aſſerting his Title to that Biſhoprick, it would be requiſite, that he ſhould with all convenient Speed and Diligence procure an Inhibition from Rome, againſt the Pretenſions of his Competitor. In the mean time, ſo ſoon as his Grace's Intention and Pleaſure in that Behalf ſhall be ſignified to him, he will endeavour, in Virtue of his Grace's Letters to them, to obtain a Prohibition from the Lady Margaret, and the Chief of the Council in thoſe Parts, that the ſaid Elect, while this Affair is depending, ſhall not proceed to take any further Poſſeſſion or Advantage againſt him.

The Suit between the Cardinal and the Biſhop-Elect had been committed by Way of Reference to two Cardinal's; notwithſtanding, while it was depending, the Elect had cauſed Writings to be affixed openly in ſeveral Places in Vindication of his Title, Copies of which Samſon ordered to be taken down, and ſubſtituted in the Place of them, Copies of the Inhibition decreed by the ſaid Cardinals, with a Schedule annexed, to this Effect, That the pretended Biſhop, with his Agents, had incurred the Sentence of Excommunication; becauſe it appeared evidently, that in Contempt of the Cardinals to whom this Affair was referred by the Pope, and while it was lying before them undetermined, they had preſumed to continue their old Proceſs. In Concluſion, he repreſents to the Cardinal, that there was ſomething more to be done in this Affair. And addeth, "Neverthelefs, Sir, ſaving your Grace's Plea-

"which is always to be dreaded, and Slander of the World, that "by the ſaid moſt reverend Cardinals, your Grace ſhould have a
"Commiſſion to ſome Men in theſe Parts to decree, that the Exe"cution and Proceſs now made by the French are of no Strength,
"and your Grace's Officers to be in no Danger of the ſaid Pro-
"ceſs or Sentence, and if there be Occaſion, that they ſhould be "abſolved from all Inhibition on the other Side. This Thing,
"Sir, is ſo neceſſary, that no Man ſhall dare to ſerve your Grace
"here in any Office, if they be not declared by this Means free
"from all Danger of Excommunication."

17. Samſon's Zeal for the Cardinal's Intereſts, and his Aſſiduity in promoting them, did not wholly divert him from a Regard to his own. He therefore writes a Letter of Requeſt to the Cardinal for ſome better Preferment, repreſenting the Meanneſs of his Condition, the Neglect wherewith Perſons in narrow and indigent Circumſtances muſt expect to be treated, and the Conveniency of ſome better Settlement, in order to render him capable of ſerving his Grace more to his Advantage and Honour. There was nothing extraordinary, or directly criminal in his employing theſe Topicks towards recommending himſelf to the Cardinal's Favour. Great Allowances are to be made for Addreſſes of this Kind, where Men are under violent and preſſing Neceſſities, which obſtruct their beſt and greateſt Deſigns. But certainly it would be much more eligible, if the Occaſions of them could be removed. The Cardinal ought not to have put a Perſon of Samſon's Capacity, who had had ſerved him ſo well and faithfully, and who had a Right to be conſidered, upon begging after a Manner, which, however it may be excuſed, certainly does not tend to give us any extraordinary Idea of the Greatneſs of his Mind. It is the higheſt Act of Cruelty to expoſe Dependants, eſpecially Men of Parts and ingenuous Diſpoſitions, to a Neceſſity of ſuch Applications, as cannot be made without Violence to themſelves, and without depretiating them in the Eye of the World. Of all the Evils of Poverty, or as Samſon. who was afterwards a Biſhop, repreſents his Caſe, of Extreme Poverty, perhaps there is none ſo great, or inſupportable, as when Men are forced to complain of it. I chuſe rather to refer the Reader to this Letter, which he will find in Mr. [c] Strype's Collections, than to recite it.

18. The civil Affairs of Tournay at this Time, gave alſo both the King and Cardinal much Occaſion of Uneaſineſs. The French had formed ſeveral Projects, in order to recover it by Force or Surpriſe, and were continually in Motion that Way. Beſides, Francis was ſtill more irritated againſt our King, on Account of his aſſiſting Maximilian in Italy, where the Diſſentions being now compoſed, that Prince finding himſelf more at Leiſure, to proſecute his Deſigns elſewhere, had Thoughts of attempting ſomething by Way of Revenge upon England. And to that End, upon his Return from Italy to Lyons, he had ſent for Richard de la Pole, repreſenting to him, That he knew the King of England to be his Enemy, having an Intention to deprive him of his Eſtate in Italy, and with that View had remitted large Sums of Money to the Emperor. He was determined therefore to make Repriſals upon him in his own Way; " and becauſe, ſays the King to him, I know your Title to " be good to the Crown of England, I ſhall ſhortly endeavour, " without fail, to make ſuch Peace with the Emperor, and to eſtab- " liſh my Affairs on ſuch a Foot, that I may be able to aſſiſt you " both with Men and Money, towards obtaining your Right."

19. But tho' ſome Meaſures were entred upon toward the Execution of this and other Deſigns againſt England, they were not long or reſolutely proſecuted, and Francis began to entertain more pacifick Sentiments in relation to King Henry, the Reaſon whereof is aſſigned by Polydore: For he conſidered, ſaith that Writer, there was no great Proſpect of Succeſs from a War with England; and that withal, the King had ſo much exhauſted his Treaſure, by aſſiſting the Emperor, that the Expence he had been at in ſerving him, might be eſtimated as equivalent to a Revenge. Therefore diſſembling his Reſentments, he ſecretly at firſt endeavours to negotiate with the Cardinal concerning a Reconciliation, who yet did not fail to impart what paſſed between them, as Matters ripened, to the King, by which the Foundation was laid of the Peace, which ſhortly after followed, and of the Treaty, whereby Tournay was to be evacuated and reſtored to the French.

CHAP. X.

1. Some Account of the Conduct of the French King and the Pope, at this Time. 2. An Inſtance of Guicciardine's Ingenuity. 3. One ſpecial Reaſon, which might now incline the French King to a Peace with England. 4. An Obſervation upon it. 5. More concerning the Oppoſition of the French King to the Deſigns of the Emperor. 6. The Method which he principally relied on towards obviating thoſe Deſigns. 7. A Citation from Polydore Virgil. 8. Suppoſed injurious to the Cardinal. 9. A Reflection of Montaign.

1518. 1. THERE were other Reaſons, beſides thoſe mentioned above by Polydore, which inclined Francis the Firſt to enter into pacifick Meaſures at this Time with England; and, by Conſequence, to turn his Thoughts upon ſome proper Means of negotiating with the Cardinal. That Prince having lately made a Treaty with the Pope, in Purſuance of it, according to his Promiſe at Bologna, his Holineſs confirmed to him the Nominations to Benefices, and the Revenue ariſing from the Collection of Tenths in his own Dominions, but with this Proviſion, that the Money ſo advanced, ſhould be depoſited in the Hand of ſome third Power, in order to be employed againſt the Turk. The Tenths, ſaith [d] Guicciardine, were granted, under this honeſt and ſpecious Colour: But there was Hope given ſecretly to the French King, that, after the whole Sum ſhould be made over into ſuch Hand, the Condition might be changed by another Writ, and in Virtue of it, the Money be converted by his Majeſty to his proper Uſe. The Pope promiſed, at the ſame Time, by a ſeparate Brief, he would never demand from the French King any Aid or Succours, againſt the Duke of Ferrara, who was now in a State of Hoſtility with his Holineſs, and whom Francis had taken under his Protection. Beſides theſe Conceſſions to the French King, his Holineſs had farther made a Promiſe to him of ſurrendering into his Hands, Reggio, Modena, Rubiero: But he delayed the Performance of that Promiſe, upon a Pretence it would be an Action unworthy of him, and the World would interpret it as a Confeſſion of his being reduced to very low and diſtreſſed Circumſtances, ſhould he deliver up ſo many ſtrong Places, and of great Importance to him in other Reſpects, at a Time, when he was openly engaged in War. Theſe Remonſtrances did not ſatisfy the King of France, who ſtill inſiſted, that the Pope ought to execute what he had promiſed. But his Holineſs giving ſecret Intimations, that if Francis ſhould ſtill perſiſt in his Demands, or attempt to lay any Conſtraint upon him, he would ſhew no further Regard to his Intereſts; that King being as yet upon no good Terms with England, diſtruſtful of the Emperor, of the King of Spain, and the Swiſs, was willing to come to an Expedient; and ſo deſiſted from urging his Claims, on Condition the Pope ſhould promiſe within ſeven Months to put thoſe Towns into the Poſſeſſion of the Duke of Ferrara; his Holineſs having this Intention, that if the Difficulties wherein he was involved, and the Dangers, which then threatned him, ſhould be removed before the Expiration of the Term ſpecified, he would make no more Account of this Article, than of what he had promiſed before at Bologna. The King ſeeing he could obtain nothing more, without Hazard of alienating the Pope intirely from him, ſatisfied himſelf, as well as he could, with a Brief from his Holineſs to this End, and thought he had at leaſt gained ſomething conſiderable, in having the Faith and Honour of the Pope conſigned to him under his own Hand.

2. The Ingenuity of Guicciardini, who was Secretary to the Pope, and who had therefore the beſt Opportunities of penetrating his ſecret Deſigns, is here very remarkable: He is not aſhamed to confeſs, That Leo the Tenth, acted by the ſame Maxims, whereby ſecular Princes frequently regulate themſelves in Relation to publick Treaties, and that the great Buſineſs in this Negotiation of his Holineſs was chiefly to preſerve Appearances.

3. It might be another Conſideration, upon which Francis was diſpoſed to a Peace with England, That Maximilian had diſcovered an Inclination to ſettle the Succeſſion of the Empire in one of his Nephews, and upon that View, Overtures were made to the Electors, towards inducing them to chuſe a King of the Romans, a Dignity upon which the Succeſſion to the Empire is entailed, without other Election or Confirmation; and becauſe a King of the Romans cannot be regularly elected, 'till He who is actually in Poſſeſſion of the Empire has obtained the Imperial Crown in Form, which Maximilian had not yet obtained; he therefore made Inſtances to the Pope, that his Holineſs would cauſe him to be crowned, with the uſual Solemnitie, in Germany. And though he wiſhed Ferdinand his Grandchild might ſucceed, and to that End particularly propoſed him to the Electors at Augsburg, where he had aſſembled

a Diet; yet he was afterwards determined to the contrary in favour of Charles, who was already poſſeſſed of many powerful and great Eſtates. He thought at firſt, that in caſe of any adverſe Accidents, the Dignity of his Houſe might be preſerved more ſafe, when ſupported by two Sovereign Princes: Should one of them, upon any future Contingency fail, the other might continue upon a more firm and laſting Foundation. But he afterwards changed his Opinion, upon Reaſons, which appeared more cogent to him on the other Side. He judged it more conducing to the Grandeur and Intereſts of the Houſe of Auſtria, that the whole Power of it ſhould devolve into one Hand, than that it ſhould be diſſipated, and in Conſequence weakened by a Partition. The Empire added to the Dominions, of which Charles was already in Poſſeſſion, might enable him to reduce all Italy, and in Time the greateſt Part of Europe, under one Sovereign; and the Advantages of ſuch a Reduction, it was ſaid, would not terminate in the Exaltation and Glory of the Auſtrian Family, but be of general Service to Chriſtendom, and eſpecially towards ſuppreſſing the common Enemy of the Chriſtian Faith. It was farther repreſented to Maximilian, that he was under a more particular Engagement to conſult the Imperial Dignity, wherewith the Houſe of Auſtria had been ſo long inveſted; which yet he could not but obſerve, when he reflected upon the Diſtreſs to which both himſelf and ſeveral of his Predeceſſors had been reduced, was now very much in the Declenſion. It was added, there was no manner of Proſpect, from the preſent State of the Empire, that it could be reſtored to its ancient Strength or Luſtre, but by annexing to it the Crown of Spain; that his Imperial Majeſty ought not to oppoſe, what both the Order of Nature, and Reaſon of Things, evidently appeared to direct; That, in Hiſtory, there were Inſtances of ſeveral Princes, wanting a lineal Iſſue, and jealous leaſt their Power ſhould die with them, or ſuffer Diminution, by being divided, who had adopted Perſons to ſucceed them, tho' very remote in Alliance, and nothing related in Blood. Theſe Arguments were corroborated by the Example of the late King Catholick, who, though he particularly loved Ferdinand, and the more, as having been educated under his Eye, yet he bequeathed none of his Eſtates to him, which he could diſpoſe of either by Right of Conqueſt, or in Virtue of any other Tenure: But left them all intirely to Charles, whoſe Perſon he did not ſo much affect, who was in a Manner a Stranger, and had even been charged with ſome Inſtances of Diſobedience to him. Maximilian was reminded, that the ſame Prince had adviſed him to purchaſe new Eſtates for Ferdinand, but to leave the Imperial Crown, with all its Dependencies to Charles; and that, puſhed on with no other Mo-

Motive but this, to augment the Greatneſs of his Succeſſor, he had, with a Reſolution condemned by many, excluded his own royal and renowned Houſe from the Crown of Arragon.

4. It is not improbable, that theſe or the like Reaſons might determine a ſucceeding King of Spain, to tranſmit his Dominions whole and intire to his Succeſſor; not ſo much perhaps, becauſe any extraordinary perſonal Affection inclined him to ſuch a Settlement, as that he might better obviate the Deſigns of thoſe, who had projected Schemes for dividing them, without his Concurrence, and thereby aſſumed a Power, which belongs only to the ſupreme God, of appropriating the Kingdoms of the Earth to Men by an over-ruling arbitrary Diſpoſition.

5. But what I am principally concerned at preſent to obſerve, is, that the French King oppoſed this Deſign of the Emperor, for the ſame Reaſons, upon which his Imperial Majeſty endeavoured to execute it. He was apprehenſive, that the Empire, by the Acceſſion of Spain, would be rendered too potent and formidable; and therefore was importunate in his Inſtances to the Pope, that he would not make a new Precedent, in ſending, by a Deputation of Legates, the Imperial Crown into Germany. Francis alſo made Remonſtrances to the Electors againſt the Emperor's Deſign, but they were for the moſt Part engaged to favour it. Neither was it believed, the Pope would make any Difficulty of conſenting, that Maximilian ſhould receive the Imperial Crown by the Hands of his Legates; ſeeing, it would be very uncommodious for him to make a Journey to Rome purpoſely to receive it: And the Rights and Honour of the See Apoſtolick would ſtill be, in all Reſpects, effectually preſerved; ſuch a Journey being rather Buſineſs of Pomp, and Ceremony, than neceſſary, in that Inſtance, to aſſure or recognize the Pope's Authority.

6. The moſt probable Method of preventing a Deſign, from which Francis apprehended ſuch pernicious Conſequences, and who probably might himſelf, at preſent, have Thoughts of ſucceeding to the Empire, was (if That might be found practicable) to court the Friendſhip and Alliance of England; tho' in Order to obtain them, he ſhould ſubmit to make a Sacrifice of ſome former Reſentments for Injuries received or pretended to be received from the Engliſh; at leaſt it might for the Time, be convenient to diſſemble them.

7. I ſhall here recite from Polydore Virgil, the Methods which Francis took, to accompliſh what he had projected to this End; only premiſing, That the Teſtimony of this Author, for Reaſons beforementioned relating to his Uſage from the Cardinal, is not perfectly free from all Suſpicion of Prejudice and Animoſity; and that there is no Neceſſity that we ſhould, upon his ſole Credit, implicitly assent to it. He saith, That Francis having determined to seek the Amity of Henry King of England, the Avarice and Ambition of his prime Minister, pointed the most ready and open Way to him of effecting what he desired; he made no doubt, but that by addressing to these Passions, in a proper Manner, the Cardinal might be brought over to his Interests: And therefore he first proposed to accost him by rich Presents and pompous flattering Titles, which Method being artfully applied by the Persons deputed by him, had so quick and powerful an Operation, that whereas the Cardinal had formerly been an avowed Enemy of the French Nation, he now discovered a great Zeal for the Welfare and Service of it; and that, as he apprehended, from a Prospect of Reputation and Honour no less than of private Advantage to himself. Animated by these Views, he soon took an Opportunity of acquainting the King with the Advances which Francis had made towards a Reconciliation and Peace with him, representing, how desirous that Prince was, not only of entring into a Treaty with him, but of settling it upon a solid and lasting Foundation. He was so far from dissembling the Receipt of Presents from the French Court, that he made a Tender of some of them to the King his Master, "and while his Majesty was agreeably entertained with "observing the Lustre or Curiosity of the Work, would improve "the Occasion towards insinuating something in Favour of the "Donor, and which might leave such Impressions upon the King's "Mind, as should incline him to accept the friendly Overtures "which had been proposed on the Part of Francis. The King "was not displeased with the Prospect of entring into Terms of "Accommodation and Alliance with that Monarch; the Conduct "of his great Minister the Cardinal was rather so grateful to him, "on this Occasion, that he applauded his Dexterity and Address, "in Terms which expressed a peculiar Approbation of them; so "that he declared, not in a Way of Raillery, but with a serious "and composed Air, That he plainly discovered the Cardinal would "now govern both himself and the King of France; intimating, "by the Manner of his Speaking, that he really thought the Cardinal equal to both Provinces. Francis observing Things to run "with so smooth a Current, and that this Minister had been affected by his Presents, in the Manner he desired, applieth himself to consider more effectually, how by his Assistance and Interposition, proper Measures might be concerted in order to the "Recovery of Tournay. But because this was an Affair both of "much Nicety and Importance, wherein great Caution and Address were to be used, he did not think proper to open it all at "once, but gradually, 'till the Seeds of Peace, which had been "sown, had taken deeper Root. In the mean time, knowing where

" where the Cardinal was moſt acceſſible, he improved all Occa-
" ſions, which preſented, of offering Incenſe to his Vanity; he
" ſhewed to him the greateſt Deference and Regard, continually
" by Letters, or ſpecial Meſſengers, ſaluting him by the Name of " Father, or other honorary, and moſt reſpectful Appellations.
" Sometimes he would conſult him, as an Oracle, upon political " Queſtions and arduous Affairs of State; extolling him, at other " Times, to the Heavens, in the higheſt Strains of Admiration
" and Applauſe. Francis having thus prepared the Way for a more
" free and open Diſcovery of his Intention, he began to treat di" rectly, and without Diſguiſe, about the Reſtitution of Tournay;
" which, he alledged, had been long in the Hands of his Prede" ceſſors, Kings of France. But there was no need of formal " Proofs or Arguments to one, who allured by ſo many and great " Rewards was ready in Return, to do any Thing required of him, " provided it was found practicable. Specious Pretences notwith-
" ſtanding were not wanting, why the King might with Juſtice
" and Honour comply with this Demand of the French King up" on the Conditions propoſed; the Advantages of which the Car" dinal repreſented with ſuch Force, that he ſoon obtained the " Royal Aſſent to them, and then laying the Matter before the " Council, he freely declared his Opinion for yielding up a Place
" ſo remote from the Engliſh Territories, which could not be kept
" without great Expence and much Difficulty, nor be at any Time " of much Service to the Crown of England (ſo precarious was " the Tenure of it) except by the Conſent or Permiſſion of his
" Carholick Majeſty."

8. I have repreſented this Account according to the Sentiments of Polydore, and endeavoured to expreſs his Reflections after a Manner, that ſhould not in the leaſt leſſen the Boldneſs or Virulency of them. To what has been ſaid before, I only beg Leave to add the following Obſervation, That this Writer aſcribes the whole Conduct of the Cardinal, in tranſacting this Affair, to ill and unworthy Motives: If Hiſtorians had a Right, where they have any perſonal Prejudice, to take ſuch a Liberty, how eaſy might they often find it to reſolve the beſt Actions, upon one Pretence or other, into the worſt Principles. But certainly Reaſons both of common Juſtice and Humanity require, That, where the natural Appearances of Things will admit, and there is no good or certain Evidence to the contrary, we ſhould rather aſcribe the Counſels and Conduct of Men, to honourable, or at leaſt to innocent Motives; and if that Part of the Cardinal's Conduct, which has been here under Conſideration, ſhould be examined fairly by this Rule, there might be aſſigned Reaſons for it from a Deſire of Peace, and the true Service of his Maſter, and of his Country, very different from thoſe ſpecified by this Writer.

9. Montaign has a fine, but I will not aver it to be in every Reſpect a juſt Reflection, upon the Hiſtory of Guicciardine, not impertinent to the preſent Subject. He ſaith, "That Author be- "ing deſirous to omit nothing, and having a very full, and, as "it were, an infinite Subject, he grows weak by it, and his Hi- "ſtory ſavours of the Prattle of the Schools. I have alſo obſerved "among ſo many Events and Counſels, about which he gives his "Judgement, he never aſcribes any to Vertue, Religion, or Con- "ſcience, as if thoſe Things were wholly baniſhed out of the "World; and he imputes all Actions, though never ſo fine, to "a vicious Principle or Self-Intereſt. It is impious to believe, "that among ſuch a vaſt Number of Actions, none ſhould have "been produced by a reaſonable Motive: Men will never be ſo "generally corrupt, but ſome will avoid the Contagion: Which "giveth me a Suſpicion, that Guicciardine had a vicious Taſte, and "perhaps he judged of others by himſelf.

1. THE remaining Part of the Time to which I confine my ſelf in this Book, is ſo conſiderable, on Account of many important Tranſactions and Events, relating to the Cardinal, that, to give the Reader a more clear and full View of them, it may be proper to reduce them under theſe three diſtinct Heads.

I. The Acceſſion of Preferments, of Honours, Penſions, and Powers to him.

II. His magnificent Deſigns and Works.

III. The Negotiations, wherein he was employed.

2. In

2. In Reſpect to the former Head, and the firſt Article of it, I find a Letter from Pope Leo to the Cardinal, wherein his Holineſs, after having made the uſual Complements to his great Wiſdom, and extraordinary Merit, acquaints him with the Deprivation of Cardinal Hadrian Biſhop of Bath, and veſteth in him the perpetual [e] Adminiſtration and Revenues of that Biſhoprick. This Cardinal had been ſeveral Years employed as a Miniſter of the King, at the Court of Rome; but on other Occaſions, beſides that beforementioned, acquitted himſelf ſo ill of his Commiſſion, that the King was much diſſatisfied at his Conduct. And it appears, from a Letter of the Cardinal [f] de Medicis to the Legate, that the King had even moved the Pope for his Deprivation, and thought his Holineſs too dilatory in the Proceedings againſt him. This Cardinal alledgeth in Excuſe of the Pope, that the uſual Forms ought to have been obſerved in the Caſe, to the End no one might pretend to object againſt his Holineſs, who was naturally inclined to Acts of Mercy and Clemency, that Hadrian had been proſecuted upon a Motive of Reſentment or perſonal Hatred, or at the Inſtigation of the King, and not on the Account of his perſonal Demerits. In the Sequel of the Letter it is ſaid, the Pope will not proceed to make any Proviſion relating to Hadrian's Biſhoprick, 'till the King's Pleaſure, as your Grace, ſaith he, knoweth very well, ſhall be ſignified to him on the Occaſion. He addeth, "There "is nothing wherein the Holy Father will not oblige the King, "to whom alſo the Houſe of Medici is ſo much attached, that "they are no leſs at his Diſpoſition and Command, than his own "Subjects."

3. It may be concluded, without any forced Conſtruction, from this Letter, that the Pope very well underſtood who would be the moſt acceptable Perſon to the King, as Adminiſtrator of the Biſhoprick of Bath upon Hadrian's Deprivation; and accordingly by the Letter beforementioned, about a Month after that from Cardinal de Medicis was written, the Pope conferred the Adminiſtration of it, upon his Legate, the Cardinal of St. Cicily.

4. But for the Satisfaction of the Reader, who may probably have a Curioſity to know ſomething more particularly concerning the Character of a Perſon, that had been ſo long in the Service of the Engliſh Court, and what was the principal Occaſion of his Diſgrace, I ſhall deſcend to give a ſummary Account concerning him in both Reſpects. He was a Man of Letters and good Capacity, had ſtudied the Works of Cicero with Succeſs, and underſtood the Latin Tongue very well. But he had the Misfortune, which was probably owing to a fluctuating and unconſtant Temper of Mind,

[e] Collect. N° 8. Book II. [f] Coll. N° 9. Book II.

to fall under the Diſpleaſure of all his Maſters. Under the Pontificate of Alexander the Sixth, he was not only out of Favour, but found it neceſſary for his Safety to withdraw from Court, and even to abſcond in the Mountains of Trent, that he might avoid the Cenſures, which his Holineſs had fulminated againſt him. What Offence he gave by his Conduct to the Engliſh Court, we have before intimated. Upon the Acceſſion of Leo the Tenth to the Papacy, he was recalled from Baniſhment, and diſtinguiſhed by him with ſpecial Marks of Favour and Truſt; but had not a Senſe of Gratitude of ſufficient Force to correct or reſtrain the natural Levity of his Mind, or rather in general had a vicious Diſpoſition to Acts of Falſehood and Treachery. Tho' Monſieur Bayle, indeed, has mentioned one of his Actions, which ſheweth, he was capable of being affected with a grateful Senſe of Benefits received. That Author reports, "He bequeathed a Palace to the King of England "his Patron, which was called the Engliſh Palace, and is at pre- "ſent poſſeſſed by the Family of Colonna."

5. But what occaſioned his final Diſgrace and Ruin was his Infidelity to Leo the Tenth. An Attempt had been made againſt that Pope's Life, by a young Cardinal, whoſe Name was Alphonſo, inſtigated thereunto by an implacable Reſentment which he had entertained againſt the Pope, for the ill and ungrateful Uſage which he pretended his Father had received for his eminent Services; himſelf alſo having contributed to the Advancement of Leo to the Popedom. He expected very different Treatment from him, than what he had as yet experienced; for his Holineſs had even diſpoſſeſſed him of his paternal Eſtate; and he was at preſent no ways capable of living up either to the Dignity of his Houſe or his Character: Burning with Revenge, and almoſt brought to the Brink of Deſpair, he thought to have aſſaſſinated the Pope with his own Hands. But fearing the Scandal, the Difficulty, and Conſequences of executing ſo bloody and horrid a Deſign, he ſought to poyſon him by the Help of a Surgeon, who was employed about the Pope's Perſon, and found Means to make him an Accomplice in his Deſign. But before it could be [g] effected, he had by his continual and open Invectives againſt the Pope, rendered himſelf ſo violently ſuſpected to his Holineſs, that he thought proper to conſult his Safety by retiring out of Rome. The Pope, who had diſcovered the whole Secret, recalled him, under Prtence of a Safe-conduct, which he had promiſed not to violate, and had indeed expreſsly given his Word and Faith to that End, to the Spaniſh Ambaſſador: Alphonſo upon this Aſſurance, tho' conſcious of ſo wicked and deteſtable a Crime, returned to Rome, where the Pope immediately cauſed him to be apprehended; pleading in his own Juſtification, (upon Complaint of the Spaniſh Ambaſſador,) that no Safe-conduct, how ample ſoever or full of Specialties, could be any Protection, in Caſe of Conſpiracy againſt the Life of the Pope, without expreſs and particular Proviſion, that this Prerogative particularly extended to a Queſtion of Poyſoning; a Practice ſo greatly abhorred by God and Man, and of ſo deteſtable a Nature, that the Laws have reſerved no Safe-conduct or Aſſurance of Pardon for Perſons offending in that Kind, but under the ſpecifick Condition beforementioned.

6. Theſe Reaſons of Leo the Tenth for the Breach of publick Faith wherewith he was charged, do not appear to be ſatisfactory. If the Popes had any ſuch ſtanding or legal Prerogative, which he contended for; yet he can never be excuſed for making a ſolemn Promiſe, by which he was antecedently determined not to be obliged, or rather, which he thought himſelf obliged to falſify. The Preſervation of publick Faith, is ſo neceſſary to all the Ends of Government, of Society, and Commerce, that no perſonal Conſiderations, no common Advantages to any State, will ever be able to ballance the open and notorious Breach of it. Under what Cenſures has the Council of Conſtance fallen, for the Proceedings againſt John Huſs, contrary to the Faith of the Paſſport and Safe-conduct granted to him. Tho' it has been pretended, indeed, that a Protection from the Emperor could not preclude the Fathers who compoſed that Council, from proceeding, againſt a Perſon charged with heretical Principles, in the ordinary Way, and if he ſhould be convicted of Hereſy, from delivering him over to the ſecular Arm. The Emperor Sigiſmund, who had given Huſs a Protection, was concerned, ſay they, to make it Good, and ought not to have interpoſed by the Civil Authority, where he had obliged himſelf not to make uſe of it. [b] One of our learned Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians, has a Reflection upon this Article, which ſome Perſons perhaps may think too favourable to that Council. "As to the Burning "of Huſs, after the Security of a Safe-conduct, that Breach of "Faith muſt be charged upon the Emperor; for it was from his "Majeſty, and not from the Council, that this Safe-conduct was "given." This Reflection is certainly juſt, provided the Council did not adviſe or inſtigate Sigiſmund the Emperor to act contrary to his ſolemn Engagement; and it was, I conceive, with that Reſtriction, the Author deſigned to be underſtood. But to return from this occaſional Digreſſion, Leo the Tenth did not only violate his Faith to Alphonſo, by cauſing him to be apprehended and deprived, but incurred a Suſpicion of having exerciſed a cruel Violence againſt him, on Account of his being poyſoned in Priſon the Night after he was put under an Arreſt. What affected Hadrian Biſhop of Bath in this Proceſs againſt Alphonſo Cardinal of Sienna, was, That he confeſſed this Cardinal had, in his Hearing, uſed Menaces againſt the Pope tending to Violence, which yet he did not diſcover. But upon proſtrating himſelf before the Pope, and making this Confeſſion, as two other Cardinals had done, in the Conſiſtory, he was pardoned on Condition of his paying a certain Sum of Money; yet either not truſting to the Pope's Letters of Pardon, or being unable to expend the Sum ſpecified, without leſſening his Dignity; or perhaps apprehending, he could not any longer appear with Decency, or any Degree of Reputation in the Court of Rome, he privately withdrew from that City, and no certain Account was ever given afterwards of him. Some have reported, that he was killed by the Servant who attended him in making his Retreat, for the Sake of the Money which he carried off, and had quilted up in his Cloaths. The Pope ſuſpecting from this Conſpiracy, that ſeveral in the College of Cardinals were not well affected to him, or might perhaps be ſecretly engaged in Deſigns againſt him, had recourſe to an extraordinary Method for the Preſervation of his Power and Dignity; ſuch a Method indeed, as only neceſſary Reaſons of Safety could juſtify; which was by declaring ſometime after in the Conſiſtory, the Creation of One and thirty new Cardinals.

7. Cardinal Wolſey had not only the Temporalities of Bath and Wells conferred on him this Year, whereof he was perpetual Commendatory, but he had Liberty of holding it with the Abbey of St. Alban's, tho' the preciſe Time, when he was made Abbot of that Place, does not appear. "When he came firſt into the [i] Abbacy of St. Alban's (I here think my ſelf obliged to refer to my Authority) I never could exactly find: It is plain he ſucceeded Abbot Thomas Ramrige, who was alive in the Year 1514, and poſſeſſed of the Abbacy, but when Ramrige died I could never diſcover. I ſhould judge Wolſey to come in the Year 1516, by ſome Circumſtances, tho' it is plain he had not the Temporalities of it veſted in him 'till the 7th of December 1521, as the Patents ſhew. I am apt to think, his being ſaid to be deprived of his Abbacy by the Premunire is a Miſtake; for in a Manuſcript of St. Albans, in the Archdeacon's Office of Inſtitutions, I find one William Wakefeild inducted the 9th of September 1530, into the Vicarage of St. Peter's, in the Town of St. Alban's, by the Cardinal's Licenſe and Authority, and this was not three Weeks before his Death."

8. In October following the King was pleaſed to confer an [k] Office on the Cardinal, which may be conſidered under the Article of his Preferment, but which was purely of a temporal Kind; the Office of Bailiff of the Honour or Lordſhip of Cheſthunte in the County of Hereford, in which Grant he was alſo conſtituted Park-keeper of Brantingiſhey in the ſame Lordſhip, and entitled to the Benefit and Herbage of the ſaid Park; with the Profits of the Garden belonging to it, and other Emoluments, for the Term of his Life, without being obliged to give any Account of them to the King, his Heirs, or Succeſſors. I ſhall not enquire how far theſe Offices of Bailiff and Park-keeper conſiſted with the Dignity of an Archbiſhop, a Cardinal, and Legate, or whether it be agreeable to the Character and Truſt repoſed in a firſt Miniſter to employ the Power he has at Court, towards obtaining whatever Grants the Prince may be diſpoſed to make to him. Without drawing any Conſequences from the Fact, I only obſerve, in a proper Place, this Grant to the Cardinal, as an additional Mark and Inſtance of that Share which he now poſſeſſed of the royal Favour.

9. Beſides the Preferments of the great Man, whoſe Hiſtory I write, already mentioned, I have received an Account of his Promotion to theſe which follow. "[l] In 1512 he was made Dean "of Hereford, and in 1513 Precentor of St. Paul's, both which "Dignities he quitted upon his being preferred to the Biſhoprick "of Lincoln." I have mentioned him before as Regiſtrary of the Garter and Canon of Windſor, which that Office indeed then ſuppoſed; but I have ſince found the [m] Patent for this latter Preferment. In the [n] Diſpenſation alſo from Pope Julius to qualify him for holding a third incompatible Benefice, we are informed, that he was at the ſame Time Rector of Lymington, and Vicar of Lyde in the Dioceſe of Canterbury. His Advancement to the Biſhopricks of Durham and Wincheſter will be mentioned in the Sequel, according to the Order of Time wherein theſe high and rich Dignities in the Church were accumulated on him.

1. THE great Revenues ariſing from the Cardinal's Preferments, his Magnificence, the Characters of Chancellor, Archbiſhop, and Legate a Latere of the Apoſtolick See, uniting in his Perſon, cauſed him to be revered, externally at leaſt, by Men of all Diſtinctions, after an extraordinary Manner: When he ſaid Maſs, Dukes and Earls did not think it beneath their Dignity, to attend his Adminiſtration, and when he waſhed, to hold the Baſon and Towel to him. We may perhaps acknowledge, without being injurious to him, that he ſometimes diſcovered a Temper too much elated with Proſperity and Succeſs; the Homage, which he obſerved every where paid to him, and the Honours he continually received, might contribute to enflame a Paſſion for outward Grandeur, to the Motions whereof he does not appear to have been naturally inſenſible. It has been imputed to him, as one Inſtance of too arrogant and aſſuming a Temper, that when Archbiſhop Warham, on a certain Occaſion, wrote to him, and at the Bottom of his Letter ſubſcribed himſelf Your Brother William of Canterbury, he was highly irritated at this familiar Stile; and declared with ſome Warmth, he would make the Archbiſhop ſenſible, that he was his Superior, not his Brother. The Bearer of the Letter having, upon his Return, informed that Primate what Offence the Cardinal had taken at his Subſcription, he ſaid to him, but not without ſome Shew of Reſentment, "Peace; knoweſt thou not, "that the Man is become inebriated with Succeſs."

2. It is proper, after all, that Perſons ſhould be addreſſed to, according to the Diſtinction which they bear in Society; and the Cardinal

Cardinal being, at that [o] Time, in Regard to One of his Characters, at leaſt, confeſſedly, the Archbiſhop's Superior; his Grace perhaps had acted more agreeable to this Rule, and the Form commonly obſerved by Men, in Writing to thoſe who are in any Degree above them, had he avoided a Stile, which is not ordinarily uſed, unleſs towards their Inferiors, or however their Equals: And yet it might have been very conſiſtent with the Rules of Piety and Prudence, if the Legate had taken no Notice of an Expreſſion, which appears to have been intended, as a Token of cordial and ſincere Affection. In the Letters which this Archbiſhop afterwards wrote to the Cardinal, two of which I find in the Cotton Library, both of them Original, he took care not to give any future Occaſion of Diſguſt to the Cardinal in this Kind. In the Former, he thus directs himſelf, To the Right venerend Father in God, and my very ſingular good Lorde my Lord Cardinall of York, and Legate a Latere is good Grace, concluding, at your Grace's Commandment. The [p] Other is ſubſcribed in the ſame Terms, and differs very little from it in the Direction.

3. In the ſame invaluable Collection of learned Monuments there is a [q] Letter addreſſed to the Cardinal, from the Mayor and his Brethren of the City of York; but not being able to determine exactly in what Year this Letter was written, it may as properly be mentioned here, as on any other Occaſion. The Import of it is, to acknowledge, in a very thankful and humble Manner, the Favours which his Grace had done to that City, particularly by his interpoſing to mitigate a Feefarm Rent, which had been claimed by the Lord of Rutland; and eſpecially, becauſe, at his Grace's Interceſſion, Letters Patents had been obtained from the King, whereby they were empowered to Ship-off Wool and Fells, to the great Encreaſe and flouriſhing Condition of the Inhabitants, as well as Benefit of the Country adjacent, while that Trade was open and uninterrupted; but meeting with ſome Obſtructions in it, and being under Reſtraints, as to another conſiderable Article of Como It has been diſputed, whether Cardinal Wolſey, merely in Virtue of that Character, could take Place of Archbiſhop Warham. For tho' in a warm Conteſt between Archbiſhop Chichley and Kempe, who was Archbiſhop of York and Cardinal, the Queſtion was decided in Favour of the Latter by the Pope; (See Duck's Life of Archbiſhop Chichley) yet my Lord Coke ſays, a Cardinal, as ſuch, had no Place in England by Law; upon which it is poſſible Warham might inſiſt. And therefore there is no Neceſſity of ſuppoſing, with Biſhop Burnet, that he took Place, as being Lord Chancellor, of Cardinal Wolſey; for then it would follow, as the Author of the Specimen under the Name of Anthony Harmer has argued, that the Lord Chancellor, as ſuch, ought to precede the Archbiſhops of Canterbury, the contrary to which is known to be, and to have alſo been, true. But it has never, I conceive, been diſputed, that the Pope's Legates, as ſuch, have always had Precedence of the Archbiſhops of Canterbury.

merce relating to the Exportation of Lead, they desire his [r] Grace would interceed to the King, that they may have a more free and open Passage for Trade, in these several Respects, as the only Means of preventing their utter Ruin.

4. The Cardinal's Weight and Interest at Court, in Conjunction with his great Fortune, his high Posts, and personal Qualifications, caused many Honours to be done to him from foreign Courts and Princes, as well as from his native Country. I shall not repeat the Addresses made to him by the King of France, one of the greatest and most accomplished Princes, who had sat upon the Throne of that Kingdom, tho' in some Respects very unfortunate. Leo the Tenth, at that Time Sovereign Pontiff, and a zealous Assertor of the papal Power and Dignity, in the several Letters which he wrote to the Cardinal, payeth a Deference to him, and treateth him after a Manner, as if he were able to direct, to undertake, and do every Thing. These Letters are for the most Part elegantly written, and might for this Reason, as well as for the Light which they give into the State of publick Affairs at that Time, very well deserve to be transcribed, in the Collections; but least I should overcharge it, I chuse rather to refer the Reader to Mr. Rymer's Collection of them in his thirteenth Volume.

5. Of all the Epistolary Honours which were done to the Cardinal from foreign Potentates, there are none, if we may judge from the Complements offered to him in them, which exceed [s] those, he received from Leonard Lauredan, Duke of Venice: His Ducal Highness, in two of his Dispatches accosteth him in Terms, as if he had a Genius superior to every Thing. Both these Letters run much in the same rhetorical Strain; but in the Latter his Eminency is represented as endowed with Abilities, and a Degree of Wisdom that even [t] surpassed human Credibility: He is told, [u] there could be nothing so arduous or difficult, provided it was just and honourable, which his innate Goodness would not excite him to undertake, which his consummate Wisdom could not regulate and direct after the best Manner, and which his supreme Authority in the Kingdom, with which he was so justly invested, might not enable him happily to execute. The Duke taking Occasion, in the Sequel of this Letter, to speak of the King, expresseth himself in

[x] Terms, whereby he even directly appears to aſcribe to the Cardinal a Participation of the Royal Power and Majeſty.

6. I ſhall not defend the Propriety of this laſt Complement. The Diſtance between Sovereign Princes and the greateſt Subjects, cannot be too carefully preſerved. The Cardinal could not but obſerve, that the Authority and Dignity of the King was here really impaired, out of an Appearance of doing Honour to himſelf. This was an Incenſe too ſtrong to be offered, and which he ſhould not be preſumed to have accepted without Diſguſt and Reluctance.

7. Yet the Title of Majeſty, which is here aſcribed to the King, was not then the common Appellation of Crowned Heads; it rarely occurreth as the Stile proper to them, among our own or foreign Writers, at that Time. Tho' I find the Univerſity of Oxford, in ſeveral Letters, addreſſing themſelves to the [y] Cardinal under that Title: And all that can be inferred from it is, That Uſe, which is the Rule of juſt Speaking, has now determined and appropriated the Signification of a Word to Monarchs which might then be more arbitrarily applied to inferior Perſons. For that the Univerſity did not intend any peculiar Honour to the Cardinal, by this Appellation, or were not induced to it from any ungenerous Motive of Flattery, may be concluded from a Letter of the ſame learned Body to [z] Warham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, wherein they uſe the ſame Stile to him. The Title of Eminency, as proper to Cardinals, was then too leſs frequent; yet I find it uſed in another [a] Letter from that Univerſity to their great Patron and Benefactor, and ſhould think this Authority, had I no other, ſufficient to juſtify me, as I ſhall ſee Occaſion, in the future Uſe of it.

8. But the Honours which were done to the Cardinal by that learned Body, were more than verbal. This Year, towards the latter End of Lent, the Cardinal accompanied the King and Queen in their Progreſs to Abingdon; where, the Day after their Arrival, a Deputation was ſent to wait on them, in the Name of the Univerſity; and the Queen taking that Opportunity to viſit Oxford, the Cardinal attended her thither. Her Majeſty was received with all the Honours and Expreſſions of Joy, that could be ſhewed on the Occaſion, and which were proper to teſtify how much they thought the Seat of the Muſes adorned by the Preſence of ſo great and excellent a Princeſs. As to the Cardinal, after he had entered the Convocation, and received the congratulatory Addreſſes upon his Arrival, he made a Speech, wherein he declared how much he had the Intereſt of the Univerſity at Heart, and how deſirous he was of doing to it real Service; to which End he particularly propoſed to found certain Lectures, and to be intruſted with the Care of reducing their Statutes into ſome better Form and Order; the Regulation of which, becauſe they were not only in much Confuſion, but in certain Caſes evidently repugnant to one another, had been ſome Time before committed to other Perſons. This benevolent Motion of his Eminency was gladly entertained, and thereupon Letters were directed to Archbiſhop Warham, the Chancellor, to ſignify the Propoſal to his Grace, and to acquaint him with the favourable Reception which had been given to it. And tho' at firſt the Chancellor could not be induced to concur in what they approved, for a Reaſon which I ſhall preſently mention; yet he was at laſt prevailed upon by their repeated Inſtances and Repreſentations to depart from his former Opinion, and to comply with the Deſire of the Univerſity, So that upon the Firſt of June, in a full Convocation, an ample and ſolemn [b] Decree was paſſed, that the Statutes of the Univerſity ſhould be put into the Hands of the Cardinal, to be corrected, reformed, changed, or expunged, as he in his Diſcretion ſhould think proper. So great Confidence did they repoſe in his Wiſdom and good Affection towards the Univerſity, that all the Liberties, Rights, and Privileges of it, and ſo in Effect the whole incorporate Society which formed it (but with a Reſerve to the Colleges of their proper and diſtinct Rights) were wholly in his Diſpoſition; and he had full Power of Methodizing the publick Diſcipline, or of altering it, after what Manner he judged moſt convenient; but with Aſſurance, upon his receiving ſo extraordinary a Mark of their Regard and Veneration for him, That he would take care to make ſuch Uſe of the Power wherewith he was veſted, as, he doubted not, would moſt effectually conduce to the Honour and Benefit of the Univerſity.

9. Tho' Archbiſhop [c] Warham in his Anſwer to the Univerſity, where he was reſident at this Time, for it bears Date at Oxford, highly approved and applauded the Overtures which the Cardinal had made towards founding certain academical Lectures; yet, he could by no Means grant, upon their firſt Application to him for his Concurrence, that the whole Rights and Power of the Univerſity, ſhould be transferred into the Cardinal's Hands, even upon Aſſurance he ſhould really uſe his beſt Endeavours to attain the End propoſed by him. "For ſeeing, as he remonſtrates, all the Statutes "of the Univerſity do in general, and ſeverally, tend to the Ad" vancement of Learning, and ſcholaſtick Diſcipline, if the whole " Authority reſpecting ſuch Statutes ſhould devolve upon any Per- " ſon beſides thoſe, who are at this Time veſted with it; the Uni- " verſity, conſidered as a Society, would be diſſolved: A mere " empty Name, or Shadow of Power would only remain to it, " and the Authority which it formerly exerciſed, wholly terminate " in the Perſon to whom you may deſire it may be transferred. " But, continueth he, if the Cardinal ſhould be pleaſed to declare " his Sentiments concerning a Regulation of the Statutes, or in " what Reſpects he would have them altered, reſtored, or metho- " dized, and ſhould lay his Scheme to that End before the Uni- " verſity for their Confirmation, if it ſhould appear ſo ſalutary, " and well concerted, as might juſtly be expected from him, there " would then be no Queſtion, but all Perſons would readily come " into it."

10. This was a plauſible Expedient of the Chancellor, but overruled through the extraordinary Eſteem, which the Univerſity had at that Time entertained for the Cardinal, heightened by a Senſe of his many Favours, and his late munificent Overtures for the Encouragement of Learning among them. In the Beginning of this Letter, which I have printed at large, this good Archbiſhop ſpeaketh of Henry the Eighth, on Occaſion of the Homage which the Univerſity had made to him at Abyngdon, as a Prince, to whom, in Regard of his innate Goodneſs and Generoſity, too great Honours could not be rendered. And it muſt be acknowledged, had he purſued thoſe Meaſures, or gone forward in thoſe Paths of Vertue and Glory for which his Reign was hitherto, and for ſome Time after, juſtly celebrated, it had concluded much more to his Honour and Advantage: But no ſooner did the Perſon, to whoſe Conduct, Wiſdom, and Fidelity he owed ſo much, fall into Diſgrace with him, but the Luſtre of it began ſenſibly to tarniſh, and ſeveral Diſorders to be committed, too well known to need a Recital. The Character, which followeth, by that Primate, of the Queen, is expreſſed in few Words; but comprehends every Thing that could be ſaid in [d] Praiſe of her, and as if all the Vertues and Graces, which were to be found or deſired in her Sex, had been united in her ſingle Perſon. I thought it an Act of Piety due to the Memory of an unfortunate Princeſs, and which the Reader might excuſe, to mention ſo handſome and beautiful an Elogy from one of the moſt grave and venerable Authorities, which that, or any other Age has produced.

11. The Decree which was afterwards made for veſting a Power in the Cardinal to reform and model the Statutes of the Univerſity, and even to annihilate as many of them as he ſhould think fit, containeth ſeveral Things very honorary to him; and from which we may judge, what Opinion one of the moſt learned Societies then in the World, and the beſt capable of Judging in the Caſe, did really entertain, concerning his perſonal Merit and Abilities. Such a Teſtimony, eſpecially if we add That from the other Univerſity on the ſame Occaſion, cannot but be thought an Honour indeed: And there is not a Prince in the World, who would not willingly exchange all the Statues of Marble or Braſs, and whatever mechanical Trophies have been erected to him, for ſuch a glorious Monument. To which I might add ſeveral Letters written to his Eminency from the ſame learned Body, for his Advice, his Direction, or Aſſiſtance, or in Acknowledgement of the many ſignal Favours received from him: Some of which [e] Letters, as giving a more diſtinct Light both into his own Character, the State of the Univerſity at that Time, and the Methods which he happily employed to ſerve it, I have cauſed to be tranſcribed for the Benefit of thoſe, who may have the Curioſity to conſult them.

12. I ſhall have Occaſion afterwards to make References to all theſe Letters; But I ſhall here in particular, by the Way, give an Abſtract of the Sixty-eighth, as it appears to diſcover a certain Peculiarity in the Cardinal's Temper, if that may be ſaid to be peculiar which has alſo been obſervable in ſome other great Men. It cannot be denied, that, on all Occaſions, he ſeemed to affect pompous and external Appearances; it was from this Paſſion, that he cauſed in his Proceſſions two large ſilver Croſſes to be carried before him, by two of the talleſt Prieſts which could be found in the Kingdom, upon two great Horſes. There are Circumſtances in this Letter, from which it appeareth, the Univerſity did not altogether omit to conſult the Cardinal's Temper herein. After they have acknowledged to him, how much the Reſtoration and Advancement of Learning among them was owing to his Patronage, and addreſſed him by the following Appellations of Father and Defender, of Maſter and Primate, to whoſe Authority and Wiſdom all their Power had been delegated; they take Occaſion to commend his Commiſſary, who was charged with Letters from him, for the ſuperior Graces of his Perſon, as well as for his extraordinary intellectual Qualities, in Regard to both which the Cardinal had made him his Chaplain. Then they proceed to inform the Cardinal, that when his ſaid Commiſſary had opened his Inſtructions, and acquainted the Univerſity with the Sentiments of his Eminency in Relation to the State of it, wherein they all unanimouſly concurred, they had, in Regard to his Recommendation, made Choice of one Standiſh for their Beadle, as being a Perſon of a comely and exquiſitely proportioned Body, as well as for other moral Qualities, which had procured him the Cardinal's Favour; and, in particular, for the Manner and Addreſs, whereby he had recommended himſelf to them; applauding the Cardinal for directing them to the Choice of One, who was not a Foreigner, but a Gremial, and in the Strength and Flower of his Age. It may be further obſerved from this Letter, that tho' the Cardinal was inveſted with full Authority to do what he pleaſed in the Univerſity, and might by Virtue of it, have appointed any Officer, or made any Regulation without conſulting that learned Body, yet he would not make uſe of the Plenitude of his Power, ſo far as to impoſe a Servant on them, without their Approbation and Concurrence. They proceed in the following Part of the Letter to acquaint him, That they were lately viſited with a peſtilential Diſtemper, which had raged for three Months among them, and had cauſed a great Number of Students to retire from the Univerſity, and did ſtill ſpread it ſelf among thoſe who remained, but not with the ſame Violence: Which yet I find, by another [f] Letter of Complaint to the Cardinal, broke out again in March following, and after ſo deſtructive a Manner, that they repreſent the Univerſity as reduced to a moſt deplorable and diſconſolate Condition: Attributing the Origin of it, if it may be accounted for from any natural Cauſes, to the Stagnation of the Waters in the adjacent Fens, and the noiſome Smells ariſing from them, occaſioned by the Want of a free Current of the Water in the Thames, which their Juriſdiction did not extend to open; and therefore they pray the Cardinal that he would make uſe of his great Authority to apply ſome proper and ſpeedy Means, whereby ſo great an Evil may be remedied.

13. In the Year preceeding, the Sweating Sickneſs raged to ſuch a Degree, that it had in a Manner diſpeopled the Univerſity, tho' moſt of thoſe who eſcaped the Fury of it, withdrew into the Country. Whether the preſent Diſtemper were originally the Same, and only diſcovered its Malignity by different and leſs violent Symptoms, I cannot infer from any certain Authority. Wood, on the Occaſion of his mentioning this Peſtilence, quits the Character of a Hiſtorian for That of a natural Philoſopher, and enquiring into the Cauſe of the frequent Calamities in this Kind, wherewith the Univerſity had been viſited, propoſeth two Ways of accounting for them. The One, from the vaſt Concourſe of Students who repaired to Oxford, and were crouded in it, as in a Siege, wanting both wholſome and convenient Apartments. The Other, from the Negligence of the Citizens, in not keeping a Paſſage open to the Water of the Iſis, the Cherwell and other Currents, whoſe Channels were choaked with Filth and Dirt, and by the Corruption of the ſtagnated Water in them, occaſioned a putrid and malignant Air, replete with noxious Vapours. To theſe Obſtructions in the Courſe of the Waters, he addeth, as contributing to the ſame peſtilential Effects, the frequent Floods, which overflowing the neighbouring Plains, ſpread a ſlimy and viſcous Matter upon them, which, there being nothing to carry it off, did neceſſarily putrify and corrupt; ſo that the Rivers about Oxford had a very different Effect from the Waters of the Nile; inſtead of fecundating, they accidentally contributed to render the adjacent Soil ſterile and fruitleſs, and ſo not only deſtroyed the Growth of Fruits, but what was ſtill more peculiar to its Situation, of Learning and Arts. Under theſe unhappy Circumſtances, the Univerſity applied to the Biſhops of Wincheſter, Durham, and Lincoln, as well as to the Cardinal and other Perſons of Condition, that they would be pleaſed to interpoſe their good Offices, towards applying ſome Method for opening the Sluices, and keeping them free and clear. It does not particularly appear what Effect their Letters had with the two latter Prelates, Ruthal and Atwater; But the Former, Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter, that great Patron of Learning, and a Promoter of every Thing that was Good, contributed very much to the End deſired: Tho' he might ſooner, as the learned Hiſtorian Wood conjectures, be induced to encourage ſo good a Work, in reſpect to the State of his own College, which he had lately founded, the Contagion having diſperſed moſt of the Members of it; who did not return till the Year following, when the Diſtemper began to abate; tho' it ſtill continued in ſome Places, and particularly in Canterbury College.

14. The munificent Acts of the Cardinal for the Encouragement of Learning, concerning which I am to ſpeak more copiouſly in a diſtinct Chapter, were not confined to the Univerſity of Oxford. I have but mentioned them here incidentally, as one principal Cauſe of the Honours done to him by that learned Body, and hope it will not be thought an improper Excurſion, if I take this Opportunity of obſerving how much he was alſo honoured, as their Patron and Benefactor, by the other famous Seat of Learning in this Kingdom; particularly by the [g] Act of Submiſſion, for ſo I am authorized from ſeveral [b] Expreſſions in that Act to call it, which was made to him in a full Congregation, towards granting him an [i] abſolute Power of reforming, methodizing, and if he ſhould think proper, of changing, and even of deſtroying all their former Statutes. The Terms employed to expreſs theſe Powers appear ſtronger, more ſpecifick and diverſified in the Original, to which I have therefore referred. They ſeem indeed, if that had been poſſible, and ſo far as the Force of Words could import, even in ſome reſpect, to be more extenſive than thoſe, wherein the former Decree of the other Univerſity is drawn up. Yet to ſhew further, how much they deſired to augment the Cardinal's Authority, and to render it, if ſuch a Suppoſition might be made, ſtill more [k] deſpotick, they complain as if they wanted Words to denote the Powers, wherewith, they moved, he might be inveſted, and the abſolute Conveyance of their Rights and Privileges as an incorporable Body to him, but with a Reſervation of ſuch diſtinct [l] Rights and Privileges, as were proper to the ſeveral Colleges.

15. The Grounds upon which the Univerſity of Cambridge proceed in this Addreſs to the Cardinal, are ſtill more glorious to him. They deſire their [m] Statutes may be modelled by his Judgement, as by a true and ſettled Standard. They conſider him as one ſent by a [n] ſpecial divine Providence from Heaven for the publick Benefit of Mankind, and, particularly, to the End they might be favoured with his Patronage and Protection. They ſalute him by a Title, which even appears ſuperior to that of Majeſty from the other Univerſity, but the proper Force of [o] which cannot, I believe, be expreſſed by any Word of the Language wherein I write. Though an Extract of ſeveral other Paſſages might be made from this Submiſſion, which diſcover the profound Deference and Eſteem which that Univerſity then entertained of the Cardinal; yet ſince I have publiſhed it at large in the Collections, I ſhall only obſerve, that the Powers here veſted in him, were not limited to any determinate Time, or ſuch whereby himſelf, when he had once executed them, ſhould be concluded, but they are granted for [p] Term of Life, and under ſuch expreſs Conditions, that he might exerciſe them as often, in what Manner, and according to what different Sanctions he might think moſt [q] expedient.

Having mentioned the very high and honorary Truſt repoſed in the Cardinal by the Univerſity of Cambridge on this Occaſion, that I may preſent to the Reader in one View, an Account of certain Memorials, which have been imparted to me relating to that ancient Seat of Learning, and to the preſent Head, I ſhall here proceed to give an Abſtract of them.

In the Year 1520 that Univerſity, principally in Honour, as I preſume, to the Cardinal, who was then preſent, [r] incorporated Dr. Taylor; and admitted certain other Perſons to the Doctorate, in the Canon Law; their Admiſſions being freely and fully accepted, as if they had performed the uſual Exerciſes pre-required to that Degree.

In 1521 his Eminence attended the [s] Queen in her Progreſs to Cambridge; at which Time I find certain Expences charged to the Univerſity, as in the Year preceeding, upon his [t] particular Account; and a Fabrick erected by them for his more ſplendid Reception; but of what Kind, or in what Place, the moſt learned and obliging Perſon, who communicated theſe Notices from the Univerſity-Regiſter to me, has not ſpecified. At the ſame Time an Oration was ſpoken by one [u] Roo, Maſter of Arts of Queen's College, a Copy of which may be conſulted in the very valuable Collection of Manuſcripts to which I refer.

But having in a ſeparate Eſſay towards a Vindication of Cardinal Wolſey from certain popular Imputations, cited a publick [x] Speech of Dr. Bullock in that Univerſity, and obliged my ſelf by Promiſe to publiſh it at length in the Collections, as being very ſcarce, and tranſcribed from one of the firſt Pieces printed at Cambridge in the Year 1521, in a fair and large Character, I could not diſpenſe with my ſelf in the Breach of that Promiſe; eſpecially conſidering how many great Things are ſaid, and how many hiſtorical Facts obſerved in it to the Cardinal's Advantage, before a moſt ſplendid and numerous Audience, in which the Imperial Ambaſſadors were preſent.

Neither

Neither were the Honours, which Cardinal Wolſey received from that Univerſity, merely verbal. They acquaint him by Letter, That in Regard to the many Favours he had conferred on them, they propoſe to appoint yearly and perpetual [y] Obſequies to be performed for him, which ſhould be celebrated by all [z] Graduates with the greateſt Solemnity, and with every proper Mark of Honour, Piety, or Religion, which either himſelf ſhould direct, or the Univerſity judge moſt requiſite.

I find another remarkable Inſtance of the great Deference which that Univerſity paid to the Judgement and Authority of the Cardinal, with reſpect to [a] Dr. Clyffe, Chancellor to the Biſhop of Ely, who excommunicated one of their Members for a Crime of Incontinency, committed, as he alledged, without the Bounds of their Juriſdiction. Clyffe being convened on this Account, before the Vice-Chancellor Dr. Edmonds and his Aſſeſſors, pretended to juſtify himſelf upon the Conſtruction of a certain Law produced by him; but his Plea was fully anſwered and over-ruled by Thyrlby Doctor of Law, and Council for the Univerſity. After ſome Diſpute the Deciſion of the Matter was referred to the Cardinal, who ordered Clyffe to ſubmit himſelf in a proper Manner to the Univerſity, that he might receive Abſolution; and thereupon Clyffe was reſtored by the Cardinal, at the Inſtance of certain Friends, to his Place and Degrees in the Univerſity.

Upon this Occaſion the Univerſity wrote a [b] Letter of Thanks and Acknowledgement to the Cardinal, expreſſing their great Joy for his juſt and authoritative Admonition to their common Enemy, which he had expreſſed in theſe Words. "[c] Know you not, Sir, "that the whole Authority of the Univerſity is by their voluntary "Act conferred to us? And if you know it to be ſo transferred, "How come you to be ſo audacious as to infringe or oppoſe our "Authority? You ſhall return to Cambridge, there to be abſolved, "from the Sentence of Excommunication."

But their Joy was much diminiſhed by the Contempt Clyffe had ſhewed to the Cardinal's Orders, and the bad Influence which the Example of one, who profeſſed and was ſuppoſed to underſtand the Laws, might have upon others. Afterwards they addreſs their Thanks to his Eminency for the eaſy and favourable Acceſs he had been pleaſed to grant to them in this Cauſe; but hope ſtill greater Things from his Goodneſs, provided they ſhould make it their Endeavour to ſuppreſs all thoſe Errors, which at that Time, as they repreſent, greatly diſturbed the World. Among other Remedies, to this End, they apprehend it would be of great Uſe if three Bookſellers, Men of Reputation and Gravity, but Foreigners, for which they aſſign a Reaſon, might be allowed in Cambridge by the King, at his Interceſſion; who ſhould be obliged upon Oath, and under ſtrict Penalties not to ſell any Book, before it had been firſt approved by the Cenſors of Books, to be appointed by the Univerſity. But I ſhall no longer detain the Reader from a Peruſal of the Letter itſelf, than while I obſerve, that the [d] Titles of the Cardinal in this Letter, and in the Oration next referred to, are not inferior to thoſe, concerning which I have taken diſtinct Notice before, from the Univerſity of Oxford.

Dr. Buckmaſter ſucceeded Dr. Edmonds as Vice-Chancellor in the Year 1529, and continued the Proceſs againſt Clyffe, and there being ſome Account of this Affair in an [e] Oration which he ſpoke to the Senate, I have thought proper to exhibit a Copy of it in the Collections, and alſo to add That of Clyffe's [f] Excommunication.

What particular Benefactions the Cardinal conferred on that Univerſity, or ſeparately on any of the Colleges, I have not been able to inform my ſelf: But I find that in the Year 1528, if the Authority of Mr. Maſter in his elaborate [g] Collections may be depended upon, the Fellows of King's College wrote to his Eminency, that upon his Recommendation, and as he had ſignified how dear Dr. Fox was to him, they had elected him their Provoſt.

Had thoſe high Marks of Eſteem and Veneration, which the Univerſity of Cambridge ſhewed to the Cardinal, been wholly owing to his Character as ſuch, or to his other Characters of Legate, Chancellor, or Archbiſhop, they had been leſs honorary to him. But it may be well inferred from a [h] Letter written to him by that learned Body, when he was then only Biſhop of Lincoln, and newly advanced to that Charge, that they conſidered him as having an extraordinary Share of perſonal Merit. For in that Letter, the Preſident, ſo he is ſtiled, with the Reſt of that learned Univerſity, propoſe, on Account of his many great and generous Qualities, which they elegantly celebrate, to chuſe him their Chancellor, and earneſtly requeſt him to accept that Office, tho' inferior to his high Deſerts, which yet (and it may be conſidered as one Inſtance of his Moderation) he humbly declined. Upon which Occaſion, [i] Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter gives him a Title, which has ſince been appropriated, if it were not ſo then, to thoſe who have been promoted, at leaſt, to the Archiepiſcopal Dignity.

The Cardinal, in [k] Anſwer to the Univerſity, whoſe Letters had been delivered to him by a ſpecial Deputation, acquaints them, that nothing could have been more grateful or engaging to him, than ſo ſignal a Teſtimony of their Favour, which he had neither ſought after, nor done any Thing to merit: But he is ſo ſenſible of the great Honour deſigned to him, that he will make it his Endeavour to ſhew his Gratitude, by doing the Univerſity in general, and the ſeveral Members of it, the beſt Services in his Power. He excuſes himſelf for not Writing in ſo copious a Manner as he propoſed, from the Multiplicity of publick Affairs wherewith he was taken up, and therefore refers them to the Magiſtrates deputed by the Univerſity to wait on him, for a more particular Anſwer; wherein I preſume he apologized for his declining the great Offer made to him of a Title and Truſt, with which Perſons of the greateſt Quality, Fortune, and Merit, have thought themſelves ſtill more eminently diſtinguiſhed.

16. As to honourable Teſtimonies to the Cardinal's Advantage by private Perſons, I ſhall principally confine my ſelf to thoſe which have occurred to me in Reading the Epiſtles of Eraſmus, who was very well acquainted at that Time with the Affairs and Characters of the Engliſh Court; a Name of very great Authority, one of the [l] Greateſt, ſays Mr. Bayle, without Diſpute, that was ever known in the Republick of Letters, and to whom, as [m] Moreri has juſtly obſerved, the Re-eſtabliſhment of polite Literature was principally owing.

This extraordinary Perſon has ſaid ſeveral fine Things in Praiſe of Cardinal Wolſey's ſuperior Talents, and his generous ſocial Qualities, with ſome Things (which I ſhall not diſſemble) to his Diſadvantage; but thoſe, after he was in Diſgrace.

The principal Virtues for which he is celebrated by Eraſmus, for it would be endleſs to deſcend to every Sketch of his Character drawn by that great Maſter, were his extraordinary Humanity and Moderation, his Beneficence and Zeal for the Reformation of Manners, and the Advancement of Learning; as his Abilities were repreſented to conſiſt in the Wiſdom and Rectitude of his Adminiſtration.

I am ſenſible, as to the Firſt of theſe moral Characters, the Cardinal is placed by moſt Writers in a very different View; and the general Opinion of the World hath been, that he was a Man of a haughty and aſſuming Temper, who affected to keep his Inferiors at a Diſtance, and did not diſcover a very humble or ſubmiſſive Temper towards other Perſons in general. I ſhall not reſume what I have ſaid before, towards obviating this common Tradition, from a natural Dignity of Manner and Aſpect, which I aſcrib'd to the Cardinal. My Buſineſs is only at preſent to remind the Reader, that I am not here forming any Judgement concerning his Character in this or other Reſpects, but only making a Report from the Teſtimony of Eraſmus, who, particularly in ſeveral of his Epiſtles, deſcribes him as a Perſon of a moſt humane, condeſcending, and affable Temper. He ſaith, in a Letter to his Eminency, "[n] A very great and ſplendid Fortune, is uſually invi- "dious; but the wonderful Facility of your Manners, conſpicu- "ous and known to all Perſons, ſo diſarms Envy itſelf, that they "do not ſo much conſider the Greatneſs of your Fortune, as the "native Goodneſs of your Diſpoſition." He had addreſſed himſelf [o] before in the ſame Letter, as he does, on another Occaſion, to the Cardinal in [p] Terms of the like Import. And as to his own Particular, or ſo far as he perſonally ſhared in the Effects of the Cardinal's Humanity, at the ſame Time he repreſents him to a Friend by a bold [q] Expreſſion, (which he therefore endeavours to qualify) as in a Manner of equal Authority with the King: He yet extols him for the ſingular Goodneſs and Condeſcention which his Eminency had ſhewed towards himſelf.

If theſe were the real Sentiments of Eraſmus, and nothing appears more inconſiſtent with ſo great a Character than the little and ſordid Arts of Flattery, they are yet contradicted, not only, as I obſerved before, by common Fame, but by a [qq] Letter written by a Clergyman to George Talbot the firſt Earl of Shrewsbury, the Original whereof is in the Herald's Office. And as I would not ſuppreſs any Evidence, or Facts competently atteſted, tho' to the Cardinal's Diſadvantage, the Reader may, if he pleaſes, conſult this Letter in the Collections, and make his own Inferences, as to the Article under Conſideration, from it: Let him judge for himſelf, how far a Miniſter, who has not only the principal [r] Direction of Affairs in the Court and Dominions of his Maſter, but a powerful Influence over all the Motions in the other Courts of Europe, can yet be at Leiſure to attend the ſeveral Applications made to him by private Perſons, upon private Affairs: And whether, from the Difficulty of Acceſs to ſuch a Miniſter, or from his anſwering to any importunate Sollicitors, "[rr] If ye be not content to tarry "my Leiſure, depart when you will," it is juſt to conclude, that he is therefore deficient in the common Offices of Candor and Humanity.

The Beneficence of the Cardinal, for which Eraſmus takes ſo many Occaſions of applauding him, was a Vertue ſo eminently conſpicuous throughout the whole Courſe of his Life, from the Time he became capable of exerting it, that here his greateſt Enemies have been obliged to do him Juſtice; and particularly with Reſpect to his moſt ample and magnificent Contributions towards the Advancement of Learning, and the Reformation of Manners. "The [s] Cardinal of York," ſaith Eraſmus, to whom I now confine my ſelf upon theſe Heads, "hath ſettled every Thing in the Re-"publick of Letters upon a better Foot; encouraging all Perſons "by his Liberality, to be ſtudious; and the ſame laudable Deſign "is proſecuted by Cardinal Campejus, one of the beſt, as well as "one of the moſt learned Men, with equal Vigour." I ſhall take the Liberty of adding what follows, it being an Obſervation very much for the Honour of the Engliſh Court at that Time, and which probably could never have been ſo juſtly made before that Time, or ſince: "[t] The King's Court, ſaith he, is repleniſhed with a "greater Number of learned Men, than any Univerſity." Eraſmus in another Letter written the ſame Year to Sir Henry Guildeford Maſter of the Horſe, propounds this Queſtion: "[u] Where is the "School, or Monaſtery, that hath at any Time produced ſo great a "Number of Men, eminent for their Probity and Learning, as the "preſent Court of England?" Mr. [x] Strype has cited theſe two laſt Paſſages from Eraſmus, except that he has omitted what relates to the Character of Cardinal Campejus: Tho' I will not be ſo injurious to him as to ſuppoſe, this was done out of Regard to the Memory of Biſhop Burnet; who has been ſo far from repreſenting that Cardinal, with Eraſmus, as one of the Beſt of Men, that, according to his Account, he was one of the moſt vile, lewd, and profligate Libertines of the Age wherein he lived. But whatever Eſteem is due to the learned Author who wrote the Hiſtory of the Reformation in England, I cannot think my ſelf excuſable in omitting any good Teſtimony, which may be of Uſe to vindicate the Honour of an abuſed Perſon, as Cardinal Campejus is ſufficiently proved to have been by that Prelate, in [y] another Place, and by other Teſtimonies beſides that of Eraſmus. And here I cannot but obſerve, that Mr. Strype, tho' leſs favourable to Cardinal Wolſey on other Occaſions, yet has done him a memorable Act of Juſtice, with Reſpect to his Beneficence and Endeavours towards the Advancement of Learning. He obſerves, "[z] That the Nation at that "Time was noted abroad for the Learning and learned Men, "wherewith it was repleniſhed; as was the Council alſo, and the "King himſelf, renowned not only for that Accompliſhment, but "for his ſharp Wit and Parts likewiſe, which muſt be attributed "chiefly to the Cardinal's Influence and Encouragement, and fur-"therance of good Studies."

It might not be unacceptable to the Reader, ſhould I here enumerate the ſeveral Names of Diſtinction in the Commonwealth of Learning, at this Time in England: But to avoid Prolixity, I ſhall reſtrain my ſelf to ſuch of them, of whom I find Eraſmus makes honourable Mention; tho' there might be a great Number of other learned Men, whom he had no Occaſion to mention, or to whoſe Characters perhaps he was altogether a Stranger. Among the Former are that of the [a] King, and even of the [b] Queen, of Cardinal Wolſey, of Warham Archbiſhop of Canterbury, of Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, [c] Tonſtall Biſhop of Durham, Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter, Sir [d] Thomas More Privy Counſellor, [e] Linacre Phyſician to the King, [f] Colet Chaplain to the King, [g] Pace chief Secretary, Lily firſt Schoolmaſter of St. Paul's School, [h] Montjoy Steward of the Queen's Houſehold, [i] Stokeſley Chaplain to the King, Sir Henry Guildeford, Grocyn.

I ſhall conclude this Article relating to the State of Learning with a Paſſage from Eraſmus, wherein he forms a Compariſon between the Foundation in Oxford by Biſhop Fox, and that by the Cardinal[k]. He acknowledgeth himſelf very ſenſibly affected with the Magnificence of the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in erecting and amply endowing a College at his proper Expence. But he is wholly captivated with Admiration at the vaſt and truly heroick Deſign formed by Cardinal Wolſey, who has with the greateſt Wiſdom conſtituted a learned Society, not only for the Improvement of Knowledge in every Language and every Science, but for a ſuitable Regulation of Manners. And Eraſmus indeed has not omitted to do him Juſtice on other Occaſions, with Reſpect to the great Care he took towards introducing a more ſtrict [l] Diſcipline and Morality, eſpecially in the Monaſteries, and among the Clergy of every Denomination.

What Eraſmus has ſaid concerning the Cardinal's great Abilities, in reſpect to the Wiſdom and Rectitude of his Adminiſtration, is very much alſo for his Honour. He does not only diſcover the Force of his Eloquence, but is ſo copious on this Head, that I muſt ſatisfy my ſelf among the numerous Paſſages which might here be cited, with referring to two or three of them. "[m] Your "Highneſs, ſaith he, in the happy Adminiſtration of the moſt "flouriſhing Kingdom upon Earth, are not leſs neceſſary to the "King your Maſter, than Theſeus was formerly to Hercules, and "Achates to Æneas." He attributes it to the Cardinal's Conduct and Influence that a ſtrict [n] League among the moſt potent Monarchs in Europe, was at laſt perfected, and when the Sovereign Pontiff himſelf, with all his Authority and Inſtances to that End, had not been able to effect it. On Occaſion of the Cardinal's Embaſſy to Bruges, where Eraſmus reports he was accompanied by Tonſtall, More, and Montjoy, the Emperor received him, as I have obſerved in another [o] Place, with all the [p] Honours that could well have been paid to a Crowned Head: The [q] Deſign of that Embaſſy was to adjuſt certain Differences between the Imperial and the French Court, as Eraſmus obſerves, on Occaſion of his mentioning Luther's Book of the Babyloniſh Captivity, concerning which he affirms, he did not know of its being written, till he ſaw a printed Copy of it in that Place. He had been charged, it ſeems, more than once, with favouring Luther's Doctrine: and in another of his Letters, I find, he was even ſuſpected to have had a Hand in compoſing the Books which paſſed under Luther's Name. But to remove this Suſpicion, he profeſſes he was not ſo much as known to Luther, nor had he at that time ever read above two or three Pages of his Books. He gives, at the ſame time, a Teſtimony concerning Luther, which I ſhould be unjuſt to the Memory of that Reformer in ſuppreſſing. He ſaith, "[r] Luther's Manner of "Life is approved by general Conſent, and it contributes not a "little to prepoſſeſs People in his Favour, that his moral Beha-"viour is ſuch, that even his Enemies cannot find any thing juſt-"ly blameable in it." This Teſtimony is more conſiderable, as Eraſmus was then in the good Graces of the Court of Rome, and particularly of Pope Leo; to whom, in a Letter to the Cardinal, he [s] profeſſeth the greateſt and moſt inviolable Attachment, as he does at the ſame time to the Doctrine of the Romiſh Church in general, confirming the Truth of what he ſays by a ſolemn Imprecation.

Had Eraſmus made the Dedication, which he propoſes to addreſs to the Cardinal, and concerning which, he ſpeaks with too great an Air of that [t] Vanity, which is ſomething obſervable in very good Authors, we might have had a full and finiſhed Character drawn at once by that excellent and maſterly Hand, inſtead of theſe few Strictures which I have, and others which I might have gathered from him. Tho' I do not find, however he appeared to wait a proper Occaſion for it, that he ever made any formal Addreſs of this Kind to the Cardinal: He wiſhed [u] indeed, he might have had the Honour of Addreſſing to him his Paraphraſe of the Epiſtles of St. Paul, but excuſeth himſelf, on account of his having compoſed this Paraphraſe at different Times, and inſcribed it to different Perſons. But this, by the Way, is not the only Inſtance of a Weakneſs common to Eraſmus, with ſome other great Names of Diſtinction in the learned World; we have too flagrant an [x] Inſtance of it upon his intended Edition of the New Teſtament; but to which I ſhall barely refer.

Tho'

Tho' ſuch Letters as were written to Eraſmus by other Perſons, and are collected among his own, cannot properly be cited under his Name; yet there are two conſiderable Teſtimonies from his great Friends Sir Thomas More, and Ammonius, relating to the Cardinal's wiſe and equitable Conduct, as Chancellor of England, that may be here not inconveniently cited: And eſpecially as they tend to remove a Prejudice, which has been entertained againſt the Cardinal, as if he had uſed ſome indirect Methods towards ſuperſeding Archbiſhop Warham in that high Office. [y] Sir Thomas More expreſsly aſſerts, that Archbiſhop really deſired to lay it down; nay, that he had for ſome Years made preſſing Inſtances for a Permiſſion to reſign, wherein he at laſt ſucceeded, to the End he might enjoy an agreeable Receſs from the publick Cares, which attended it, ſweetned by the Reflection of his having ſo well and honourably diſcharged the Duties of it. What follows is very much for the Advantage of the Cardinal his Succeſſor, "[z] Whoſe Con-"duct, ſaith Sir Thomas, hath even far ſurpaſſed the publick Expe-"ctation, great as it was, on Account of his other eminent Qua-"lities: So that he has had the Happineſs, which is not com-"monly or eaſily attained, of being approved and even of pleaſing, "after a moſt excellent Predeceſſor."

[a] Ammonius writes to Eraſmus to the ſame Effect, in Regard to both the foregoing Articles; but withal, makes a handſome Inſinuation, as if the Cardinal were ſo far from ſeeking or ſolliciting the Chancellorſhip, that Entreaties were uſed to oblige him to accept it.

But after all the advantagious Things ſpoken by Eraſmus of the Cardinal, did he not at laſt expoſe him to the View of the World in a new, and perhaps much truer Light, as being no longer under the Awe of his great Power and Promiſes? or as having nothing either now to fear or to hope from him? This is an Exception which may be here naturally made, and I am willing to give it all the Force I can: But at the ſame time recommend it to be conſidered, how far a Change of Fortune in our Patrons or Friends is commonly apt, (tho' that is an Effect which ought not to follow in generous Minds,) to cauſe a Change both in our Sentiments and our Behaviour towards them: And eſpecially if we have thought our ſelves much neglected, or very ill uſed by them.

Now this, it may be pretended, was the Caſe of Eraſmus. The Cardinal had made him Promiſes, wherein probably he might apprehend himſelf much intereſted, both in Regard to his Reputation and Fortune in the World, which Promiſes yet were not made good to him. Tho' there was nothing ſingular in ſuch a Conduct, even if we conſider the Cardinal as an Eccleſiaſtick of the firſt Diſtinction; yet, had he really been chargeable with it, nothing can be ſaid, I do not ſay in his Juſtification, but in his Excuſe. He had deſerved, for ſo injurious and diſhonourable a Treatment of Eraſmus, as ſevere an Animadverſion from the fine Pen of that Writer, as could have been made with Decency.

A promiſſory Lye is not merely to be conſidered, as an Argument of a little vulgar and ſordid Mind, and as attended with that Infamy, which in the common Judgement of Mankind, is due to Lying in general; but withal may and does often prove, in the Conſequence, an Act of the higheſt and moſt irreparable Injuſtice, by engaging ſuch who have depended on it, to purſue very different Meaſures from thoſe which Prudence would otherwiſe have obliged them to take.

But however Eraſmus might reſent ſuch Uſage, if he had really been ſo uſed, he ought to have confined himſelf to that Subject, which, to a Perſon of his Wit, had certainly afforded ſufficient Matter of it ſelf for a generous Revenge. He had no Occaſion, in order to gratify that Paſſion, to contradict his former Elogies upon the Cardinal, or to aſcribe to him what was not only irreconcileable to his own Teſtimony, but to Truth: Much leſs did it become him to take an Opportunity of inſulting a great Man under Circumſtances of Diſtreſs.

I ſhould have been very willing, out of the high Regard which I bear to the general Character of Eraſmus, to have ſuppreſſed theſe Reflections, had not the Love of Truth, of Juſtice, and Honour, in a Manner, forcibly extorted them from me. But let us conſider the Remarks which himſelf made, on Occaſion of the Cardinal's Diſgrace.

" [b] This, ſaith he, is the Play of Fortune; from being a School-
" maſter He was in a Manner advanced to the Royal Dignity,
" for he might more truly be ſaid to reign, than the King him-
" ſelf. He was feared by all Perſons, beloved by few, if by any " Body." Having cenſured him afterwards for the Impriſonment

of Secretary Pace, and his threatning the good Archbiſhop of Canterbury, he applies to him the Aphoriſm of Solomon, That a haughty Spirit goeth before a Fall; not recollecting that the Cardinal's great Affability and Moderation, had been ſome of the Vertues which himſelf had formerly employed his Eloquence in celebrating. What he ſays too, concerning the Cardinal's being removed from the Chancellorſhip[c] to the Joy of all good Men, appears at leaſt very improbable; for ſcarce any Man, by the Conceſſion of his greateſt Adverſaries, ever acquitted himſelf in that Station with more Integrity or Honour. Now it is very unaccountable, how a faithful and honourable Diſcharge of a publick Truſt, by any Perſon, ſhould be a Means of occaſioning a publick Satisfaction at his Removal from it.

It does not, after all, appear, that the Cardinal could be ſaid to falſify his Promiſe to Eraſmus. Demolendinus indeed, in a [d] Letter to that great Man, charges the Cardinal with Breach of Promiſe on his Account, which he obſerves as a Thing peculiar to Courtiers. And he pretends the Cardinal had actually given Expectation to Eraſmus of a Canonry of Tournay, where himſelf was Canon: Adding, that Lord Montjoy going to England, had promiſed to uſe his Intereſt there in Eraſmus his Favour. But then we may obſerve, from a [e] Letter of Sir Thomas More in Relation to this very Canonry, it was agreeable both to the Sentiments of Sir Thomas More and his own, that he ſhould not accept it: And one Reaſon ſpecified by Sir Thomas, for his declining it, was, That unleſs he ſhould be reſident on the Place, it would be of no Benefit to him.

17. After ſo great a Name as that of Eraſmus, I know not whether I ought to mention one [f] Whittington, who has inſcribed, under a pompous Title, four ſmall Eſſays of his Wit to the Cardinal: One an Epigram; another an Epiſtolary Addreſs; a Third, concerning the Difficulty of a juſt Adminiſtration of the Commonwealth; and the Fourth, a Panegyrick upon the Four Cardinal Vertues. In the Laſt particularly, he has ſaid many Things, if juſtly applied, to the Cardinal's Honour. If we may credit what has been reported, concerning certain Liberties taken by the Cardinal, Whittington ſeems to have been under the greateſt Difficulty upon the Subject of Temperance; having obſerved it is this Vertue, whereby we moderate all our irregular Appetites and Deſires, ſubjecting them to the Empire of Reaſon, and eſpecially to the Laws of Purity and Continence; he repreſents the Cardinal as eminently exemplifying the Power of this Vertue, by his being placed amidſt the ſtrongeſt Allurements to Pleaſure and Luxury, yet at the ſame time as preſerving his Innocence, and having a perfect Command over all his Paſſions; on which Account he makes him ſuperior to Hercules, who overcame cruel and horrid Monſters, but diſcovered his Weakneſs in ſuffering himſelf to be ſhamefully captivated by a Woman.

I am ſenſible, that great Allowances are to be made to Addreſſes of this Kind; and would not lay any Weight upon what is here recited, more than it will naturally bear. I ſhall only obſerve, that if the Cardinal's Life had really been as irregular, as ſome learned Hiſtorians have repreſented, this Panegyrick, as it is called, would have been a moſt ſevere Satyr upon him.

18. I ſhall conclude this Chapter with obſerving, that in the Harleyan Library, there is a Copy of Latin Verſes inſcribed to the Cardinal, under a large Enumeration of his Titles, by John Voſſius; but who does not ſeem to have had all the great Talents for which ſeveral other learned Men of that Name have been juſtly celebrated.

1517. 1518. 1. IN ſpeaking upon the Head of the Cardinal's Penſions, I ſhall ſatisfy my ſelf with a bare Recital of them, and of the Conſiderations, upon which they were conſigned to him; from which the Reader may draw what Concluſions he ſhall judge moſt proper. I would only obſerve to him tranſiently, that by the Inſtruments ſtruments of their Conveyance, it appeareth, they were not made over in that fraudulent clandeſtine Way, which is found neceſſary to cover infamous and diſhoneſt Contracts; but by certain open and authentick Inſtruments, which are yet to be ſeen in our publick Offices. So that if he had really been chargeable with the Crime of Bribery, under this Head, it was ſuch a Crime as no publick Mark of Infamy or Suſpicion of Infidelity did then attend; ſeeing the King his Maſter was or might have been at any time perfectly acquainted with the true Conditions of it.

2. The French King in 1518, made him a [g] Grant, during the Space of his natural Life, of a Penſion to the Value of Twelve thouſand Pounds Tournoiſe, which he was to receive annually by two equal Payments. We are at liberty to conjecture, if we pleaſe, that there might be Reaſons of Intereſt, or Reſpect to ſome ſecret Service to be performed for this Penſion. But the Laws of Equity will rather oblige us to enquire, whether it might not be an Equivalent for ſome Service which the Cardinal had performed already for that Prince, without any Prejudice to the Rights or Honour of his Maſter? or for ſome Ceſſion he had made of a Right to which himſelf pretended, and wherein he was greatly intereſted. This latter Conſideration is, in a very particular Manner, ſpecified in the Grant, where the French King recites, that in Regard the Cardinal had been content at his Inſtance, and to gratify him, totally to relinquiſh all his Claim and Title to the Biſhoprick of Tournay, and to the Adminiſtration and Profits of it, he hath aſſigned to him this Penſion.

3. In 1517 Charles, King of Caſtile, had granted him a [h] Penſion of Three thouſand Livers yearly, as well in Regard of the great Amity and Conſideration which that Prince had for him, as of the good Offices and effectual Pains he had taken in negotiating a Peace between the ſaid King of Caſtile, and his Maſter the King of England. The ſame Prince, in 1520, being then Emperor-Elect, made a yearly Grant to him, out of the [i] Revenues of two Biſhopricks in Spain, to the Value of Seven thouſand Ducats yearly; for Two thouſand of which, payable out of the Biſhoprick of Palencia, he had, in July following, a corroborating Bull from the Pope; if it was not rather properly in the Pope's Diſpoſition, and at the Inſtance of the King Catholick to his Holineſs granted to the Cardinal; tho' the Pope, in his Bull to that End, declareth, he is [k] induced to make this Grant, not at the Requeſt of the Cardinal, or of any other Perſon, but purely from his own voluntary Motion, in reſpect to the Cardinal's extraordinary Merits, and for the better Support of his Dignity. The Condition of making this Payment, was not only impoſed upon Peter then Biſhop of Palencia, in the Kingdom of Leon, and under the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo, now under that of Burgos, but, proviſionally, upon his Succeſſors, ſo long as the Cardinal ſhould live, by Advice of the Conclave, and under Pain of an Interdict, in caſe punctual Payment ſhould not be made at the Times ſpecified in the Bull. There appeareth to be no other Way of reconciling this Declaration of the Pope, with the Promiſe which Charles made to the Cardinal, that he would move his Holineſs to make this Aſſignment, than, by ſaying, that the Words from his own voluntary Motion, excluſive of all foreign Inſtances, are to be underſtood merely as Terms of Form, and common Ceremony. Notwithſtanding the ſtrict Charge for making exact Payment to the Cardinal according to the Tenor of this Bull, he complaineth ſome Years after, in a Letter to Edward Lee the King's Almoner, afterwards Archbiſhop of York, that the Emperor was much in Arrears to him, both in regard to the Aſſignment out of the Biſhoprick of Palencia, and that which it ſeemeth was afterwards made to him out of the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo. I ſhall here tranſcribe this [l] Letter, as giving a more diſtinct Light into the State of the Cardinal's Penſion in Spain, at that Time, tho' the Year when it was written, is not ſpecified in the Date.

6. The Augmentation of the Cardinal's Powers about this Time was another Article, concerning which, I propoſed to ſay ſomething more diſtinctly.

7. The Turk by his late Victories againſt the Soldan of Egypt, whoſe Dominions he had ſeized and annexed to his Own, being now become very formidable to the Princes of Europe, having united two large and powerful Empires under his ſole Government; they were apprehenſive, leaſt being elated with his Succeſs, and at the Head of a numerous and well appointed Army, furniſhed with all the proper Means and Inſtruments of Action, he might attempt to make an Irruption into the Chriſtian Pale, and convert all his Fury to diſturb the Peace, and, if that might be poſſible, to extirpate the ſeveral Powers of it.

The Pope conſidering himſelf as the common Father of Chriſtians, but more eſpecially awakened at the Senſe of a Danger, from which his own Territories did not lie very remote, thought it more nearly concerned him to obviate, ſo far as he was able, any Deſigns which Selim might have of extending his Conqueſts towards the Weſt, or, upon any Pretence, of diſturbing the Repoſe of Europe. With this View he ſollicits, by his Bulls, the European Princes to unite againſt the common Enemy, and ſends Cardinals of the greateſt Authority to their reſpective Courts, to adviſe and recommend a general Confederacy againſt him. The Overtures of his Holineſs were for the moſt Part well received at firſt, and there was great Appearance that the Chriſtian Powers would readily come into them. But when they conſidered, upon farther Reflection, that the Danger was remote and uncertain, and the Deſign itſelf attended with great Difficulties, but above all (as it frequently happens in general Confederacies) when every one began to conſult his private Intereſt, more than that of the common Cauſe, their firſt Ardour was obſerved gradually to abate, the Buſineſs was ſlightly followed, and in Shew only, 'till the Death of Selim finally put a Period to the Negotiation.

8. While Leo the Tenth was projecting this Affair, he ſent one of his Bulls to the Cardinal, wherein [n] Campejus, a Man of approved Prudence, as well as Experience in tranſacting publick Affairs, is joined in Commiſſion with him, towards procuring a Truce among Chriſtian Princes for five Years: For notwithſtanding the Confidence which the Pope had in the Abilities and Conduct of this Legate, he ſignifieth to the [o] Cardinal, that as nothing ought to be omitted on his Part towards effecting the good End propoſed, knowing the Cardinal's great Weight and Authority at

Court,

Court, and that he was able effectually to adviſe or diſſuade any Thing, he had eſpecially required his Aſſiſtance in order to conduct and facilitate the Negotiation on Foot, and therefore conſtituted and deputed him as an [p] Angel of Peace, to tranſact it with an equal Share of Power and Authority.

9. Afterwards a [q] Bull with more ample Powers to the two Legates is expedited, towards authorizing them to treat directly of a Confederacy againſt the Turk, and giving Aſſurances, that whatever Meaſures and Conditions in order to it, ſhall be propoſed by them, or whatever Conventions they may think fit to make, his Holineſs will be obliged to ratify them. There was alſo another Bull, wherein Campejus was veſted with a Legatine Power of viſiting Monaſteries: But being come ſo far on his Way to England as Calais, and having been at that Time ſolely commiſſioned to this End, he was deſired by Cardinal Wolſey not to proceed any further 'till he might procure from Rome, that they both ſhould be joined in the ſame Commiſſion. This [r] Lord Herbert reports upon the Authority of Hall, and Archbiſhop Parker. But his Lordſhip ſeemeth to prefer that of our Records and Polydore, and to be of Opinion, this Legate was retarded in his Journey, in order to ſollicit that the Biſhoprick of Bath to be voided by the Deprivation of Adrian, convict of the Crime beforementioned, might be conferred on the Cardinal.

10. Campejus, after three Months Stay at Calais, that he might bring with him the Bulls in Favour of the Cardinal which he had continued there to ſollicit and expedite, was received upon his Arrival in England with great Pomp and Teſtimonies of Reſpect, being met at Black-Heath by the Duke of Norfolk, and a great Number of Prelates, Knights, and Gentlemen, and conducted by them into a rich Tent of Cloth of Gold, where he ſhifted his Habit, and put on the Cardinal's Robes edged with Ermine, and ſo rode in much State to London. But the Cardinal underſtanding his Retinue at Calais was meanly cloathed, and did not make an Appearance ſuitable to the Dignity of his Station and Character, had ſent thither a conſiderable Quantity of ſcarlet Cloth, to do more Credit to his Embaſſy. Men, as they are differently affected to him, will judge of the Motives upon which he might be induced to this Expence. Some may ſuppoſe it was in pure Gratitude for the Services which Campejus had done for him, and which had detained him ſo long in his Way to England: Others may impute it to a magnificent Temper (for he had confeſſedly by his moſt virulent Adverſaries, a Great Mind) or a Deſire of doing Honour to the Engliſh Nation, by ſo handſome an Inſtance of Generoſity to a Stranger. Others may perhaps conjecture, that he had ſome private End of Vanity or Ambition to ſerve, in removing an Occaſion of Contempt or Diſreſpect to One who bore the ſame Character, as a Prince of the Church, with himſelf, and was joined in the ſame Commiſſion. It is ſo eaſy indeed for Perſons, who will give themſelves a Scope that Way, to aſcribe indifferent or good Actions to bad Motives, that if ſuch a Liberty might arbitrarily be uſed, the Character of no Perſon would be ſafe in any Inſtance of his Conduct. It was probably from the ſame Motive, whatever it might be, that the Night before this Legate made his Entry into London, having but eight Mules of his own, the Cardinal, to make it more pompous, ſent him twelve more, with empty Coffers under a red Covering: But one of the Mules in Cheapſide, during the Proceſſion, being unruly, put others into ſuch a Diſorder, as cauſed ſeveral Carriages to be overturned, which breaking in the Fall, inſtead of the rich Furniture they were ſuppoſed to contain, expoſed to the View and Deriſion of the People a Collection of the moſt vile and homely Materials.

11. This Legate not finding the Clergy of England forward to comply with a Demand for a Tenth, for which he was commiſſioned by the Pope, gives him Notice of their Incompliance, and proceeds to another Branch of his Commiſſion, That of Viſiting Monaſteries. But the Cardinal thinking himſelf capable, without an Aſſociate, of diſchargeing that Office, while Campejus was yet in England, ſendeth John Clark Doctor of Laws to the Pope, to requeſt, That the whole Power, as to this Article, might be tranſferred upon himſelf. This was not done without the King's Privity, but rather, as [ſ] Lord Herbert expreſſeth it, by his Commandment. And Clark acquitted himſelf ſo well in the Buſineſs he was ſent to negotiate, that the Cardinal, Campejus being now revoked, obtained a Bull, whereby he was enabled to viſit not only Monaſteries, and all the Clergy of England, but to diſpenſe with the Laws of the Church for the Term of a Year, enſuing the Date of his Commiſſion.

12. This great Acceſſion of Power to the Cardinal gave much Offence, as being injurious to the ordinary Juriſdiction of the Biſhops; but, eſpecially, as one Suggeſtion, upon which the Cardinal endeavoured to procure it, highly reflected upon the Morals of the whole Body of the Clergy [t] as being given up to a reprobate Mind, and repreſented, under ſuch other infamous Characters, that Lord Herbert, out of his great Regard to the Hierarchy, and other religious Perſons, would not deſcend to ſpecify them.

13. But

13. But that whereby the Cardinal ſeemeth to have given the greateſt and moſt general Diſguſt, was his erecting the Legate's Court, and employing a Perſon as Judge in it, charged with much Rapine and Extortion. "For making Inquiry into the Life of "every Body, no Offence eſcaped Cenſure and Puniſhment, un-"leſs privately they gave Money, of which they found two Com-"modities; One, that it coſt Leſs; the Other, that it exempted "them from Shame. Thus as the Rules of Conſcience are in "many Caſes of greater Extent than thoſe of the Law, ſo he found "Means to ſearch into their ſecreteſt Corners. Beſides, under this "Colour he arrogated Power to call in Queſtion the Executors of "Wills and the Like. He ſummoned alſo all religious Perſons of "what Sort ſoever before him, who caſting themſelves at his Feet "were grievouſly chidden, and terrified with Expulſion till they had "compounded. Beſides, all ſpiritual Livings that fell were con-"ferred on his Creatures. The Archbiſhop of Canterbury under-"ſtanding how all Orders were thus ranſacked by the Cardinal, "goes to the King and acquaints him with it: The King replies, "That he ſhould not have heard thereof but by him; adding, That no "Man is ſo blind any where as in his own Houſe. Therefore I pray "you, ſays he, Father, go to Wolſey, and tell him, if any Thing be "amiſs, that he amend it. This grave Perſon hereupon admo-"niſhes him, and afterwards particularly told him, that in med-"ling with the laſt Wills and Teſtaments of the Dead, he aſſumed "a Power not ſo much as claimed by the Pope himſelf; and for "diſpoſing ſome Benefices in the Gift of the Nobility, and other "great Perſons, he thought he took too much upon him. All "the Uſe Wolſey made thereof, was to hate the Archbiſhop, with "whom he was formerly offended, only becauſe, as Polydore hath "it, he ſtiled himſelf in the Subſcription of his Letter, Frater Gu-"lielmus Cantuarienſis. Yet leaſt the Archbiſhop ſhould do him "ill Offices, he tempered his Speech for the Time. But ſhortly "after his Agent John Allen, being accuſed by one John London, "a Prieſt, it appeared ſufficiently that all the former Allegations "againſt Wolſey were true, which made our King rebuke the Car-"dinal ſo ſharply, that after that Time he became, if not better "yet, more wary than before."

14. I have tranſcribed this Charge againſt the Cardinal literally from Lord Herbert; but it being ſupported by no Teſtimony but that of Polydore, an ingenuous Reader may not perhaps think it of ſufficient Force to compel his Aſſent. In the Execution of great and extenſive Powers, where ſeveral Perſons are to be entruſted, it is difficult to avoid all Occaſions of Offence or Complaint. However, if this Allen was really a Perſon of that Character, under which he is here repreſented, and was known, or might have been known to the Cardinal, to commit thoſe Abuſes in executing his Truſt, wherewith he is here charged, the Cardinal could no longer employ him, without being directly involved in the Guilt of thoſe Diſorders himſelf. Tho' he was ſtill more culpable, if they were committed by his Connivance; but above all, if by his Direction, or after Complaint made of them. Nothing can be ſaid to excuſe the Abuſe of Power, eſpecially of judicial Power, the higheſt Truſt under Heaven which God has committed to Men.

15. Another ſpecial [n] Commiſſion granted to the Cardinal, and his Collegue Campejus, was, That when either of them celebrated Maſs, before the King or Queen, they had Power to declare plenary Remiſſion of Sins to all Perſons of both Sexes that were penitent or had confeſſed, or however who were in a true and ſincere Diſpoſition to confeſs, provided they were preſent at the Solemnity, at leaſt when the Benediction ſhould be pronounced. This being ſuch an Indulgence, as implieth the Condition, upon which God doth pardon the Sinner, and ratify the Sentence of the Prieſt; the principal Deſign of it ſeemeth to have been to create a greater perſonal Veneration for the two Legates, by whoſe Mouth the Abſolution was pronounced. And here probably an Objection may ariſe, which I ſhall endeavour, for Controverſy is not the Buſineſs of an Hiſtorian, to obviate in few Words. It may be queſtioned, what could the Declaration of a Truth, by any Perſon or Perſons, ſignify, which would certainly have its Effect, whether it was declared or not? If Man be, by any Means, internally aſſured that he is reconciled to God, what needeth he any further Witneſs? Or of what real Importance is it, that he ſhould be told by Man, more fallible than himſelf in judgeing concerning the State of his Soul, that his Pardon is ſealed?

16. I have given all the Force I could to this popular Argument againſt the ſacerdotal Power of abſolving Sinners, upon Condition of their true Repentance: And in Anſwer to it, ſhall barely propoſe the following Particulars to be conſidered. 1. That our Lord has expreſsly given to the Paſtors of his Church, a Power of remitting and retaining Sins. If this Power import no more, than that they may declare the Conditions upon which God will forgive Sins, there is nothing peculiar to the Paſtors of the Church in it; nothing, but what is common to every Chriſtian, and indeed to every Heathen; for all Perſons indifferently have a Right to declare the Truth. And yet, this is one of the great and diſtinguiſhing Privileges, which our Lord bequeathed to the Paſtors of his Church, the better to ſupport and fortify them in the Adminiſtration of it. But if he intended no more, than what the Enemies of the ſacer-

dotal Powers would infer from this Grant, that they are commiſſioned in it to declare, that God will pardon true Penitents, there is nothing in it new, nothing peculiar to them: I do not ſay as Apoſtles or Prieſts, but as Chriſtians, or rather, as they may be conſidered in common, as Men. It is a Grant, therefore, conferred in the moſt ſolemn Manner, without any ſpecial Donation or Privilege; and the Powers whereof they had antecedently a Right to exerciſe before it was made. 2. We allow God alone can pardon Sins: But we aſſert at the ſame Time, he may convey the Pardon of them in his own Way, or upon ſuch Conditions, as he thinks fit to appoint. True Repentance is very proper in the Nature of it to recommend Sinners to the pardoning Grace of God; but we dare not ſay God is obliged, by the ſole Virtue of the Sinner's Repentance to pardon him; and therefore, if he hath particularly empowered any Men, or Diſtinction of Men, effectually to declare his Pardons, who has a Right to diſpute the Wiſdom or Authority of his Appointment? Or who can be aſſured, he ſhall be pardoned in a voluntary Neglect or Contempt of ſuch Appointment, or in any other Way, where Recourſe may be had to it? For tho' we acknowledge, that the Remiſſion of Sins in general is abſolutely promiſed in the Goſpel to true Repentance, yet we ſay no Perſon, who knowingly neglects any divine Inſtitution, or Means, whereby God has determined to confer his Grace, can be conſidered as truly penitent, as being one who will not ſue for Pardon according to the Method which God has preſcibed. The King only has a Power of Pardoning publick Delinquents, but his Pardon has no Effect, nor is intended to have any, 'till produced or pleaded in the proper Form, what Evidences ſoever ſuch a Delinquent may give of his Repentance. Laſtly, Tho' Men are ſenſible that true Repentance is the main Condition upon which God is pleaſed to pardon their Sins, yet the Lips of the Prieſt ſpeaking to them in the Name of God, and by ſpecial Authority derived from him, and ſealing their Pardon to them by a formal and viſible Act, cannot but give them at once ſtill greater Impreſſions of God's Goodneſs, a more confirmed Aſſurance of their Reconciliation to him, and a higher Regard for ſo holy and ſalutary an Ordinance.

17. The Cardinal in Regard to his civil Adminiſtration, had two * Grants of Power made to him by the King, both of them in the ſame Patent, and which appear to have been of an extraordinary Extent. "He is empowered by the Former to grant Let" ters Patents of Denizin, to be made out under the Great Seal
" from Time to Time, to ſuch Perſon or Perſons, as ſhould at

In the Other he is authoriſed, " To make out the King's Letters Patents under the Great " Seal, from Time to Time, of all Conge de Eſlires, Royal Aſſents, " and Reſtitutions of Temporalities, as well of Archbiſhopricks, " Biſhopricks, Monaſteries, Abbeys, and Priories, as of all other " Houſes of Religion, within the King's Realm of England and " Wales, and the Marches of the Same, unto ſuch Perſon or Per- " ſons as ſhould afterwards in due Form ſue for the Same. Alſo, " That by Virtue of the ſaid Powers from Time to Time, the " Cardinal ſhould cauſe to be made out Commiſſions and Writs " of Dedimus Poteſtatem to ſuch as he ſhould think convenient, to " take the Homages and Fealty of all Manner of Perſons, as well " Archbiſhops, Biſhops, as others, due unto the Crown for the ſaid " Temporalities."

1. THE Uſe which the Cardinal made of his great Powers, and other Advantages before recited, was truly laudable, and worthy of a great Mind: And if we may judge concerning the Motives, upon which he appeared ſo deſirous of accumulating Riches and Honours, from the Ends for which he employed them, Hiſtory affordeth us very few equal, but ſcarce any ſuperior Characters. He had a generous Contempt of thoſe narrow and ſelfiſh Views, whereby we frequently ſee Men act in the Methods they take to enrich themſelves, to raiſe or aggrandize a Family at any Rate. I will not be ſo partial as to confine this Obſervation to Perſons of ſecular Occupations. It cannot be diſſembled, That the Revenues of the Church, and the Powers and Privileges annexed to them, are not always employed for the Service of the Church; That private and domeſtick Conſiderations are frequently of more Weight than the publick Honour and Service of God; That the Uſe which has been ſometimes made of the greateſt Dignities in the Church, has not been to favour and ſupport Men of Piety and Learning; but ſometimes to confer the proper Rewards of Piety and Learning on ignorant, and, in all other reſpects, very undeſerving Perſons; upon the ſole Merit perhaps of a diſtant and not very reputable Relation, if not with a View of ſerving ſome ſecular and ſiniſter Deſign, altogether foreign to the Buſineſs of Religion. What is ſtill more unaccountable, ſuch Perſons will not ſcruple ſometimes to talk of Religion, as if they really had the Intereſts of it above all Things at Heart; or as if there were nothing really ſcandalous or blameable in acting ſo notoriouſly contrary to the high Truſt repoſed in them, and to the proper Ends for which the Piety of our Forefathers originally endowed the Church, with proper Powers and Emoluments. Whatever the perſonal Failures of Cardinal Wolſey might have been in other Reſpects, his Liberality and Greatneſs of Mind, the Neglect he ſhewed, as ſome perhaps may term it, of his [y] private Family, to the End he might wholly employ his immenſe Fortune towards the publick Advancement of every Thing that was laudable and praiſeworthy; and his Encouragement to Men of any ſuperior Abilities, wherever he could find them, will ever tranſmit his Name with Honour to Poſterity; and be an excellent Precedent, whereby, they, who are inveſted with the ſame Powers in the Church, may be taught to regulate the Uſe and Application of them. A remarkable Example of his Munificence, in the latter Reſpect, may be taken from the [z] Choice he made of ſeveral learned Men from the other Univerſity, to ſupply the Vacancies in his new College, notwithſtanding his nearer Alliance to Oxford, the Place of his Education, which had put itſelf in the Manner we have heard, abſolutely under his Protection, and whereof he was the avowed and perpetual Patron.

Piety

2. But at preſent I ſhall only conſider the Acts of his Munificence reſpecting that Univerſity, in founding ſeven [a] Lectures, at his own Expence, reſerving, what it may be proper to obſerve as to the Foundation of his two Colleges, to another Place. That learned and ſedulous Antiquary [b] Mr. Wood obſerveth, that his Lectures were not all founded at the ſame Time; yet, excepting one of them, they certainly were; however that learned Author expreſſeth himſelf after a Manner, which may occaſion a Doubt, whether ſo many, or the greater Part of them were then founded. Whereas in a Letter written that very [c] Year, the Univerſity acknowledgeth to the Cardinal, among other extraordinary Favours, the Foundation of ſix publick Lectures. Tho' it does not indeed appear, and this perhaps might be one Reaſon of what our Hiſtorian has advanced, that the Readers of them were at this time appointed; they were originally read in the Hall of Corpus Chriſti College, before the Cardinal had founded his own.

3. The Firſt of them mentioned by Wood, and I ſhall obſerve the ſame Order of Time with him, in mentioning them, was That of Theology, whereof one Brynknell, an excellent Divine, ſometime Commoner of Lincoln-College, afterwards of Univerſity-College, and who had lately taken his Degree of Doctor in Divinity, was nominated the firſt Lecturer. Honourable Mention is made of him in an [d] Epiſtle from the Univerſity to the Cardinal; where they acquaint his Eminency, that they are not able to expreſs the great Benefit as of his Lectures in general, ſo particularly of his theological Lecture; the Charge of which was committed to Brynknell; for whom the Cardinal had ſo great an Eſteem, that afterwards upon his Eminency's Recommendation, among all the other learned Men in the Univerſity, the King particularly appointed him by Name to write againſt Luther. Tho' others too had their Pens employed in the ſame Cauſe, and not altogether without Direction, and particularly Kidderminſter, concerning whom, mention is made in a Letter from the Univerſity to the King in theſe Words. "The "good Father the Abbot of Winchelcomb, has written upon the "Subject of Indulgences, with that Gravity, Erudition, and Pie"ty, that his Equal will ſcarce any where be found, much leſs "his Superior in the Argument." They afterwards deſcend to ſpecify the Names of ſeveral others who had engaged in the ſame Controverſy, and to whoſe Performance they aſcribe due Praiſe, but give the Preference to That of Dr. Powel, as having eſtabliſhed the Doctrine, he aſſerteth, after a more clear, ſolid, and diſtinct Manner.

4. The Lecture of [e] Civil Law. Mr. Wood profeſſeth he could not certainly determine who was the firſt Perſon that read this Lecture; but he ſuppoſeth, it might, upon credible Grounds, be affirmed, that he was Ludovicus Vives: Tho' he ſaith, there is no Mention of this Lecture till after the Foundation of the Cardinal's College. That Ludovicus Vives was Lecturer of Rhetorick in 1519, we are aſſured from an Epiſtle of the Univerſity to the Cardinal, wherein they ſpeak of him under that [f] Character; and thanking the Cardinal for recommending ſo eloquent a Perſon as that learned Spaniard for the Charge, congratulate themſelves on Account of their having committed the intire Diſpoſition of every Thing that concerned them, to a Father of ſo great Authority and Goodneſs, that there was nothing which they could ask in Juſtice or Decency, but what they might hope to obtain from him.

5. The Lecture of Medicine. The firſt who diſcharged this Province, was Thomas Muſgrave Maſter of Arts, and Licentiate in that Faculty; who read his Lectures in the Year 1522; but whether he read before that Time is uncertain. He was Fellow of Merton-College, and, in Regard to his Merit, the Cardinal appointed him to read this Lecture in Corpus-Chriſti College. It may not be unuſeful to obſerve, from what occurreth in our [g] learned Hiſtorian concerning this Lecturer, how cautious the Univerſity then was in granting publick Diſpenſations for Degrees. For notwithſtanding the perſonal Merit of the Man, at that time Commiſſary of the Univerſity, and in known Favour with the Cardinal, it was not without ſome Difficulty, and upon Condition of performing certain Exerciſes, that he obtained what he deſired. On the 11th of March, that Year, he ſupplicated the venerable Congregation of Regents that he might be diſpenſed with from circuiting, and certain previous Exerciſes, in caſe he ſhould be admitted to read the Sentences. He alledged that he was Commiſſary, and that it did not become a Doctor to circuit for an inferior Degree. This Supplication was granted conditionally, that he ſhould preach a Sermon in the Church of St. Peter in the Eaſt. Afterwards his Exerciſes being all performed, when he had twice anſwered in the Schools, and preached four times in the Church of St. Mary in the Space of one Year, he was admitted to read the Sentences; that is, to the Degree of Batchelor in Divinity, by Dr. John Young Biſhop of Callipolis and Warden of New-College, in the Preſence of eight Doctors of Divinity.

6. A Philoſophical Lecture. We know nothing more concerning the Perſon who was firſt appointed to read this Lecture, than that the initial Letters of his Name were L. B. as we find them in the following Extract, from an Epiſtle of the Univerſity to the Cardinal. "When we underſtood that L. B. was preparing to

7. The Mathematical Lecture. One Nicholas Crutcher, but whoſe Name is variouſly written, was the firſt Reader of it. He is applauded in the following Apograph for his Morals and Learning in theſe Words. " He is a Perſon of ſo great Probity and Good- " neſs, that he deſerves a better Fortune than is common to Ma- " thematicians: And ſo great a Maſter of his Art, that he merits " to be called ſo by Way of Eminence, and peculiar Diſtinction." He was a Native of Holland, and educated in the Univerſities of Cologn and Wittenberg, 'till he commenced Batchelor of Arts; afterwards coming into England, and being known to that great Patron of Learning Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter, he was by him made a Fellow of his College, and admitted to his Fellowſhip on the Fourth of July 1517; about which time he read Aſtronomy in the Univerſity by command of Henry the Eighth; and ſoon after, when the Cardinal founded his Lectures, was conſtituted his Mathematical Reader: In February 1522, he was incorporated Batchelor of Arts, as he had ſtood at Colen and Wittenberg, and in the ſame Month was licenſed to proceed in Arts, and ſo compleated his Degree in an Act kept on the Twenty-third of March following: There are two Manuſcripts in the Library of Corpus-Chriſti College aſcribed to him; there is no Diſpute as to his being the Author of that entitled, Canones Horopti; the Other concerning the Conſtruction of Dials, which bears the Title, De Conſtructione Horologiorum, is generally ſuppoſed to be his; and we may with great probability conclude it to be ſo, from the Annotation at the End of it. He made the old Dial, which formerly ſtood in the Garden, with that ſtanding upon a Pillar in St. Mary's Church-yard, in the High-ſtreet of Oxford, upon which, ſhortly after, the Condemnation of Luther's Doctrine, by the Univerſity, was ordered to be hung. For when the Lutheran Hereſy, as it was then called, began to ſpread it ſelf, and ſeveral Perſons inflamed with Zeal for the Propagation of it, induſtriouſly diſperſed his Books and Doctrine throughout the Univerſity, the Cardinal deſirous to put a Stop to the Progreſs of it, required by his Letters to the Univerſity, that they ſhould depute ſome proper Perſons to be ſent to London, there to examine and refute ſuch Opinions of Luther, as ſhould appear to militate againſt the Catholick Doctrine. In Obedience to his Order, the Uni-

Univerſity delegated [b] four Doctors of Divinity, who repairing to London, celebrated among other learned Men, and ſeveral Prelates, a formal Synod, in the Cardinal's Houſe, and condemned Luther's Doctrine as moſt repugnant to the Chriſtian Faith. A Copy of which Cenſure was ſhortly after tranſmitted to Oxford, and publickly expoſed on the Dial erected by Orutcher in the Southern Part of St. Mary's Church-yard, a Work of great Curioſity: And that even the Share which Eaſt the Stone-cutter had in it, ſhould not be wholly pretermitted, Leland took care to celebrate it by an Eſſay of his Muſe, in a Book written by him, concerning the Praiſes due to illuſtrious Perſons. The Books of Luther were not long after publickly committed to the Flames, in both the Univerſities. How long this learned and famous Mathematician read, does not certainly appear; or whether any other Perſon was ſubſtituted in his Place before the Death of his Patron the Cardinal, in whoſe Favour and Eſteem he ſeems to have had a more than ordinary Intereſt. He was living in the Year 1550, and after his Death, which our learned Antiquary ſuppoſeth to have ſoon followed, many of his Books came into the Hands of that eminent Mathematician Dr. John Dee.

8. The Greek Lecture. One Culphurnius, a Native of Greece, was firſt appointed by the Cardinal to this Province, who firſt taught the Pronunciation of that Language in Oxford, as it is now uſed. It is not certain, tho' Grocyn had rendered himſelf by his Study and Travels abroad, a great Maſter of the Greek Tongue, having been inſtructed in it by Demetrius, Calchondile, and Politian, that yet he was ever employed by the Cardinal to read this Lecture. Yet he certainly taught Greek in the Univerſity, where he became a familiar Friend, or rather as our Antiquary ſuppoſeth, a Tutor to Eraſmus. But what Service he had done in that Kind, was the Effect of a free and generous Choice, and without any Stipend or ſpecial Appointment. However, his new Method of Teaching, and different Pronounciation from what had been formerly uſed, gave great Diſguſt to ſeveral Perſons; the principal Grounds whereof proceeded either from their Ignorance, or the Want of due Application; yet afterwards, the Advice of Sir Thomas Moore, in an Epiſtle to them, and eſpecially the Authority of the Cardinal, very much contributed to remove the Prejudices of ſeveral Scholars; to whom, it is ſaid, certain Cantabrigians, being then in Oxford, joining themſelves, were ſo violent, that they openly inſulted ſuch as had applied themſelves to the Study of the Greek

Tongue: And to the End they might divert them from that Study, not only treated them with opprobrious Language, but assaulted them in their Persons. More's Letter to the University on the Occasion, was to this Effect; That he had heard many times in London, how several of their Members, either in contempt of the Literature of the Greeks, or from some ill Impressions they had received, or (which he rather thinks was the true Cause) out of Idleness, and a false Taste for vain and trifling Amusements, had conspired to form a distinct Body, which should be called by the Name of Trojans: He who was the Captain assumed the Name of Priam, as a Second did of Hector, a Third of Paris, and others such like Trojan Names as they best approved, but principally with Design, to make a Party in a jocular Way, which should outbrave and ridicule those who addicted themselves to the Study of Greek; by which means it came to pass, that no one, who had any Knowledge of that Tongue, or employed his Time in learning it, could be free at home or abroad from the Insults or Raillery of the adverse Party, but was marked out, by one appointed Signal or other, for the Subject of their Diversion. After Sir Thomas Moore came with the King to Abingdon, he understood, that this pueril and foolish Humour still continued among them, and even encreased to a great Degree of Outrage and Disorder; insomuch that a certain Person unknown to him, or whom he does not think fit to name, but who had a good Opinion of himself, did not only in the holy Time of Lent, declaim publickly from the Pulpit against the Literature both of the Greeks and Latins, but inveigh with great Freedom against the liberal Arts in general. His Friends indeed endeavoured to excuse him as a Man naturally loquacious and very free in his Thoughts and Expressions; but others, who considered Things more maturely, were rather inclined to think him under some Disorder of Mind.

What principally put a Stop to the Insolencies of these Men, and made Way towards the Culture of the Greek Learning, was, that the Cardinal not only discountenanced and used his Authority to suppress them, but gave open Encouragement to those of the other Side: So that in a short Time, the Progress which was made in the Knowledge of the Greek Tongue throughout the University, was very considerable. And soon after, the Study of that Tongue was much encouraged in the other University, to which they were still more persuaded by the Arguments and Eloquence of their publick Orator Richard Croke, and out of an Ambition to follow the Example of their Chancellor at that time, a learned Bishop, and one who well understood that Tongue. But tho' the Cardinal ought to be mentioned as the principal Cause of encouraging the Study of Greek, it ought not to be omitted, that several other Perſons had a Share in the Honour of ſo good and neceſſary a Work, particularly Grocyn by his Piety, and a Manner, that created great Veneration; Lynacre by his extenſive Knowledge, and fine Wit; Tunſtall by his eaſy and familiar Eloquence; and Stokeley by his general Skill in the Tongues; to which Wood, from whom I here collect, addeth, the engageing and facetious Temper of More, with the polite Literature and great Humanity of Pace. With theſe acceſſory Helps the Cardinal cauſed the liberal Arts to revive, and by ſenſible Degrees to flouriſh, and produce a plentiful Harveſt. So that foreign Nations entertained the greateſt Eſteem for our Univerſity, and ſent many of their Youth to be educated in it. But after the unhappy and ever to be lamented Diſgrace of the Cardinal, the Demolition of Monaſteries, and the Changes which happened, tho' an Occaſion of introducing the Reformed Religion, to the Republick of Letters, our learned Antiquary ſeemeth to doubt, whether we did not relapſe into a State of Ignorance, (he terms it Barbariſm) more deplorable than that wherein we had been in former Ages. Calphurnius was ſucceeded in this Lecture by John Clement, who before had been deputed to read the Lecture which I am to mention in the laſt Place.

9. That of Rhetorick and Humanity. Concerning this Clement, Sir Thomas More writeth, his Audience, when he read, exceeded that of any before him. He had Chambers in Corpus-Chriſti College, and for ſome time read his Lectures in the publick Hall there. He was ſucceeded by Thomas Lupſet, concerning whom More writeth to his Friend Eraſmus, that he read in both Tongues, with the greateſt Reputation, but with no leſs Benefit to his Audience, which was very numerous; "for he ſucceeded, ſaith that learned Knight, "my Friend John Clement, who applied himſelf wholly afterwards "to the Study of Phyſick." In the Reign of Edward the Sixth, being one of the College of Phyſicians, he left his native Country on Account of the Innovations which were then made in Religion; and returning in the Reign of Queen Mary, practiſed Phyſick with good Succeſs in Eſſex, near London; but upon the Acceſſion of Queen Elizabeth to the Crown, and the Reformation which followed, he left England once more, and ſpent the Remainder of his Life beyond Sea. This Lecture was opened in the Year 1519; for in the Beginning of March that Year, the Regent-Maſters preferred a Supplication, that they might not be obliged to read above half an Hour; to the End, they might have Time to be preſent at the Cardinal's Philological Lectures. Clement was ſucceeded by Lupſet, tho' only at that time Batchelor of Arts, who in the Hall of Corpus-Chriſti College, explicated Cicero's Phillippics. His pregnant Parts, improved by an extraordinary Progreſs in the Sciences, acquired him a great Reputation both in Oxford, and foreign Seminaries of Learning. The Univerſity, in a Letter to Lynacre in 1521, have left this honourable Teſtimony concerning him. "This Seat of Learning is highly indebted for your "excellent Verſion of Proclus his Sphere into Latin, upon which "Lupſet readeth in a moſt numerous Audience, with the greateſt "Reputation: And we cannot, in Point of Gratitude, acquit our "ſelves, without acknowledging, how much we owe this extra-"ordinary Perſon to your Favour." In another Epiſtle from the Univerſity to the Cardinal, they make this Acknowledgement to his Eminency, in Commendation of Lupſet. "We place it in "the Number of your immortal Benefits, that your exuberant "Goodneſs towards the common Advancement of Learning, hath "vouchſafed to ſend Lupſet among us; for whom, though we al-"ways had a very great perſonal Regard; yet it is highly augment-"ed by the [o] Recommendation with which you have been pleaſed "to honour him, after ſo affectionate and diſtinguiſhing a Man-"ner." [p] Dr. Kaye, in his Hiſtory of Cambridge, but without mentioning his Authority, ſaith, that Lupſet was originally educated in Pembroke-Hall of that Univerſity: concerning which Article both Bale and Pits are ſilent; and our learned Antiquary expreſſeth himſelf doubtful, whether this Author went from Lily's School, where he had his Education, to this Univerſity, or That of Cambridge. But he affirmeth, with an Aſſurance, from which nothing but Conviction to the contrary would oblige him to depart, That he took his Degree of Batchelor of Arts in Paris; and coming afterwards into England, ſettled in the Univerſity of Oxford; particularly in Corpus-Chriſti College about the Year 1519, when he ſucceeded John Clement in the Lecture, of which I am now ſpeaking. He proceeded to the Degree of Maſter of Arts in 1521, and ſome time after, as Wood is of Opinion, was alſo made Greek-Lecturer in the Place of the ſaid Clement. His Succeſſor in this Lecture was Ludovicus Vives, who on the Fourth of July 1517, was made Fellow of Corpus-Chriſti College by the Founder Biſhop Fox, tho' he was then ſo far diſtant as Louvain. He was in great Reputation for his Learning, but his Fame ſpread the more in England, on Account of the peculiar Reſpect which Queen Catherine was known to entertain for him. Wood ſaith, He was invited into England by Cardinal Wolſey, as it ſeemeth in the Year 1523, and coming to Oxford in Auguſt or September, did read the Cardinal's Lectures of Humanity in the Hall of the ſaid College, and that (as it was ſaid) of the Civil Law, before the Members of the Univerſity. But this muſt be a Miſtake of that learned Antiquary, occaſioned by his not conſulting the Memoirs he made uſe of with his uſual Accuracy and Diligence: For in a Letter [k] forecited from the Univerſity to the Cardinal in the Year 1519, Mention is made of him as then Reader of Rhetorick, and that by the Cardinal's Appointment. In 1523 indeed the King and Queen, with the principal Perſons of the Court, who then attended them in their Progreſs, to do this learned Spaniard the greater Honour, or to ſatisfy a laudable Curioſity, graced his Auditory with their Preſence. He was ſo much admired by the Members of the Univerſity for his Learning and Eloquence, and more particularly becauſe at that Time they in general addicted themſelves to the Study of Humanity, that they cauſed the Degrees of Grammar, Rhetorick, and Poetry, which had been much neglected among them, to be revived. For to his extenſive Erudition in other Reſpects, he added that in Philology, whereof he was one of the brighteſt Ornaments, and, both by his Example, and Inſtructions, very much contributed to introduce into the Univerſity the Study of the politer Arts.

10. Theſe were the munificent Acts of the Cardinal to the Univerſity, before the Foundation of his College, for the greater Advancement of Learning among them. And it will be natural for the Reader to enquire, what is become of theſe noble and truly praiſe-worthy Foundations? They are now alaſs! no where to be found; nor ſo much as the Ruins or any ſcattered Remains of them, unleſs in the Hands of thoſe Perſons, for whom the Profits of them were leaſt intended by the Founder: They were ſwallowed up in the Ruins of that Great Man, and in the Devaſtation which, after his Fall, was made of Things appropriated to pious Uſes. Not ſo much as the Revenues of the Church eſcaped the common ſacrilegious Invaſions. Whitehall, the ancient Seat of the Archbiſhops of York, and the Patrimony of that See, was transferred to the Crown, upon a Pretence of the Crimes wherewith he was charged, at leaſt by Occaſion of them; tho' no perſonal Forfeiture of his could transfer a Right, which ought to have devolved on his Succeſſors. The Act, which reciteth the Reaſons of this Alienation, and wherein we are told, Whitehall was annexed to the Crown for the King's ſpecial [l] Pleaſure and Paſtime, does not ſeem to give any great Satisfaction to thoſe, who would examine this Point by the Rules of Conſcience and Religion.

11. I ſhall not here repeat what I have ſaid before concerning the other Univerſity, but only obſerve, That the good and munificent Acts of the Cardinal, at this Time, were not confined to theſe ancient Seats of Learning. The [m] College of Phyſicians in London, founded in 1518 by Henry the Eighth, owes a grateful Acknowledgement to his Memory. In the Preamble to the original Charter, where the King reciteth the Motives, upon which he was induced to grant it; he mentions the Cardinal in particular, and after a diſtinguiſhing Manner, among other Perſons, by whoſe Advice, or at whoſe Inſtance he had been incited to ſo good a Work. This is ſo full and honorary a Teſtimony to the Character of the Cardinal, in that Part of it which I am conſidering, that I ſhould not only have been unjuſt to his Memory in omitting it; but wanting in the Reſpect, which I owe to that very learned Society, and to ſeveral worthy and learned Members of it in particular.

1. Negotiations concerning the Surrender of Tournay. 2. Principally introductory to a ſubſequent Treaty. 3. The Payment to which the French King was obliged, upon the Surrender. 4. Inſtructions by the Cardinal relating to it. 5. Advice from Sampſon, the Cardinal's Agent and Collector there.

1. I SHALL now proceed to a Conſideration of the Negotiations and Treaties, wherein the Cardinal was more eſpecially concerned during this Period. I begin with That on Occaſion of which, ſeveral Conventions were held for the Reſtitution of Tournay. I ſhall not recite the political Reaſons beforementioned, upon which the Cardinal was induced to adviſe it, as more advantagious to England upon the Terms propoſed by France, than it would have been to keep that Place: Neither ſhall I recount the preliminary Steps which had been made on both Sides, towards an Accommodation, eſpecially, on the Part of France, wherein there appeared a greater Forwardneſs, than might be thought to conſiſt with the niceſt Maxims of Policy; but ſhall directly proceed to obſerve, That ſo ſoon as the King had conſented, the Embaſſadors of France ſhould come over to treat concerning Peace; and the Cardinal had before, in a Manner, privately ſettled the Preliminaries to it with the French Reſident here, Nicholas de Villeroy; the Embaſſadors of France, accompanied with an extraordinary Retinue, to the Number of Twelve hundred, came to Greenwich, yet did not think fit to open the Matter at once wherewith they were principally charged: But their firſt Overture was, That the Chriſtian Princes ſhould unite in a League againſt the Turk, according to the Plan, which the Pope had projected of it, in the Year preceeding; and that the two Kings of England and France ſhould be the Authors of it: Yet the Pope, Emperor, and King of Spain, might within a Time prefixed, be, at their Deſire, comprehended in it as principal Contractors.

tractors. A League was accordingly concluded on the ſecond Day of October: Lord Herbert, for the excellent Form and Conditions of it, has given an Abſtract, propoſing it as a Precedent in future Times to Princes; and obſerving, That King Henry the Eighth, for many Years after, appeared to regulate his Treaties by the Tenor of it. The Articles were, That there ſhould for ever ſubſiſt a perfect Friendſhip and Amity between the two Kings, their Succeſſors, their Subjects, and their Allies, by Way of Comprehenſion, both by Sea and by Land; That their ſeveral Friends and Enemies ſhould on both Sides be conſidered and treated as ſuch; ſo that if the Dominions reſpectively then belonging to the ſaid Confederates, ſhould be in a hoſtile Manner invaded by any of them, or by any other Power whatever, the Party invaded ſhould admoniſh the Aggreſſor to deſiſt, and to make Reparation; which if he refuſed to do, (within the Space of a Month) the Reſt of the Confederacy might declare themſelves his Enemies, and in two Months after, at an equal Expence, make War upon him both by Sea and Land; That they ſhould to this End, allow to the Troops of each other, free Paſſage through their ſeveral Dominions; but, if in any of them, Civil Wars ſhould ariſe, none of the Confederates might interpoſe, unleſs ſuch Wars ſhould be fomented or maintained by ſome foreign Power; That none of the Confederates ſhould permit their Subjects to bear Arms againſt the Other, or ſhould retain any Forces of Strangers, to ſerve againſt the ſaid Confederates, on Pain of being interpreted to violate the League, which yet ſhould continue in full Force among the Reſt; That none of the ſaid Confederates ſhould take the Vaſſal or Subject of any other Confederate, under Protection, unleſs by Conſent of the Prince, to whom his Obedience was before owing; That no Rebel, Traitor, or Perſon ſuſpected of High Treaſon, or Fugitive, ſhould be received, entertained, or favoured, in any of the Dominions of the ſaid Confederacy; but ſhould, twenty Days after they were demanded, be delivered up; That the Articles of this League ſhould be laid before the Pope, yet upon Condition that if he accepted them within four Months after, he ſhould be eſteemed a principal Contractor in the League, and have a Power of nominating his Allies; That all the Princes, whoſe Names are ſpecified in it, ſhould, within the Space of four Months, if they deſired it, be admitted as principal Contractors; but otherwiſe, not without Notification, and Requeſt to the King's of England and France; That any other King, Potentate, or chief Lord, might, upon his Suit, be entitled to the Benefit of this Confederacy, but not as a principal Contractor: Laſtly, That however other Princes might accept or obſerve this Treaty, yet it ſhould continue firm and inviolable between the two Crowns. 1518.

2. But

2. But after all, the principal Deſign of this Treaty was to prepare the Way towards introducing another, which might facilitate the Reddition of Tournay, and at the ſame Time eſtabliſh and cement an Alliance between the two Crowns by a Contract of Marriage. At preſent, I would only obſerve, the Conditions of the ſubſequent Treaty which they made, ſo far as it reſpected the Reſtiturion of Tournay; which were, that the French King ſhould pardon, and receive to favour, all the Inhabitants of the ſaid City, and of the Places adjacent, reſerving to them all their former Privileges, and that the King of England ſhould thereupon diſcharge them from their Oaths of Fidelity to him: That whereas [n] Twenty three thouſand Livres were yet owing to King Henry from the Citizens of Tournay, which the French King had ſtipulated to pay, he ſhould, by Virtue of the requiſite Powers to be granted by King Henry to that End, receive that Sum again from the ſaid Citizens: That the King might cauſe all the Artillery, Ammunition, and Inſtruments of War, offenſive or defenſive, to be removed, without any Oppoſition or Impediment; with all Sorts of Proviſion, and whatever Materials had been prepared and repoſited there, for the Safety and Defence of the Town, or for any other Cauſe? So that there was nothing omitted in the Conditions of the Surrender, which might oblige the French to ſubmit to an intire Evacuation of the Place; which yet in Caſe the Marriage intended ſhould not take Effect, by the Default of Francis, ſhould be reſtored again to Henry or his Heirs, together with the mean Profits, without any Deduction to be made on Account of the Charge which Francis might have ſuſtained, in Order to fortify or repair it; and, that the Inhabitants of it ſhould be diſcharged from all Allegiance performed, or in any Manner acknowledged to the French King; yet upon Condition, that the King of England ſhould reſtore to the French King the Sum of Six hundred thouſand Crowns, or ſo much as he ſhould have received of that Sum: But if the Occaſion, why the Marriage ſhould not take Effect, might happen to ariſe on the Part of King Henry, then Tournay ſhould remain in the Hands of the French King, upon Payment made by him of the intire Sum of Six hundred thouſand Crowns. But before this Treaty could be fully perfected, many Conſultations were held in both Courts, and ſeveral Meſſages paſſed between them; what Inſtructions were given to our Embaſſadors in the Court of France, and how they conducted themſelves in Relation to it, we may learn in general from a [o] Letter of the Cardinal to them, wherein he approveth their Diligence and Addreſs in expediting the Matters committed to their Charge; and taketh Notice, how conformable the French King had ſhewed himſelf to the Sentiments of his Maſter, in relation to them, and how forward to promote them; not only expreſſing a Deſire to perfect the Treaties, in order to which Conventions had been made, but to remove all Manner of Impediments, that might obſtruct the Operation or Progreſs of them: As he had not only declared, in ample Manner, by the Inſtructions given to Lord Liſle, but by other authentick and corroborating Facts, becoming a virtuous Prince. Upon which, the Cardinal acquaints them, that his Maſter, ſenſible of the good Diſpoſition, the French King was in, and of the very favourable Reception and handſome Treatment our Miniſters found at his Court, had by Letters to that King, given him his moſt ſpecial and hearty Thanks. A Copy of which Letters is tranſmitted at the ſame Time to the Ambaſſadors, who are aſſured by the Cardinal, the King had not only applauded their Zeal for his Service, and their prudent Conduct on ſo important an Occaſion, but after a moſt ſpecial Manner, expreſſed his Complacency on Account of thoſe Proofs the French King had been pleaſed to give him of his Friendſhip and Regard; grounding aſſured Hopes from ſo auſpicious a Beginning, that the Treaty of Peace and Alliance to be concluded between them, would in the Progreſs of it be ſtill more and more fortunate, till at length they ſhould attain the deſired End, to the general Good and Tranquillity of Europe. Concerning certain Difficulties intimated in their former Letters, and the Quality of the Hoſtages to be ſent to England, the Cardinal referreth them to the King's late Letters for their more full and particular Inſtruction, not doubting but they will take care, that the beſt Hoſtages, they may be able to procure, ſhould be delivered; or, however, that the King's ultimate Reſolution in the ſaid Letters, ſhould not be fruſtrated. He inſiſteth, with ſome Degree of Warmth, upon a Point, to which all Princes have a ſpecial Regard; and upon which, not only the Security of Conventions dependeth, but the Suppreſſion of falſe Reports, to the Spreading of which, inſufficient Hoſtages frequently give Occaſion; ſo that he conſidereth this as a Matter of greater Importance, than Tournay it ſelf, with all its Dependencies. The remaining Part of the Letter, is concerning the Enterview propoſed between the two Kings (of which I am to ſpeak in a ſeparate Chapter) and certain Wages to be paid to the Soldiers of Tournay at Dover, after their Diſcharge from that Service.

3. The French King obliged himſelf, upon Surrender of this Town, to pay to the King of England [p] Six hundred thouſand Crowns of Gold, each Crown being equivalent in French Money to Five and thirty Shillings Turnois. What Equivalent was to be made to the Cardinal, in Conſideration of his reſigning the Biſhoprick of this Place, has been obſerved above.

4. The Cardinal, before the [q] Surrender of Tournay, was not wanting in his uſual Vigilance for the Intereſts of his Maſter, but gave the neceſſary Inſtructions to the Officers there, for the Evacuation of it, in ſuch a Manner, as might be moſt for the King's Service. He charged them to act the Part of good and provident Agents for his Majeſty, to expoſe all the Proviſions and Materials to Sale which they found there for his Buildings: To which End, Fernegan, the King's Deputy, received Letters from him to the following Effect, That it was the King's Pleaſure, he ſhould not only uſe the proper Means and Precautions, to the End all Proviſions which had been made for Supplying and Victualling the Citadel of Tournay, ſhould be ſold to the beſt Advantage, but likewiſe all the Timber, Lime, Stone, and other Materials appointed for the Building of it. He further required him, to put every Thing in ſo good Order, and make ſo ready and commodious a Diſpoſition for the Delivery of the Place, that when the French Commiſſioners, to that End, ſhould arrive, it might be put into their Hands without any Difficulty, or Suſpicion of indirect Dealing, according to the true Conditions ſtipulated and agreed to. Laſtly, he directeth, That all the Vagabonds or other idle Perſons, who had no certain Occupation or Settlement, ſhould be put out of the Town, and every Man be obliged to diſcharge his Debts; that when the Lord Chamberlain ſhould come, there might be no Obſtructions, or as few as poſſible, to the Surrender.

5. The private Intereſts of the Cardinal being concerned, on this Occaſion, as well as thoſe of his Maſter, and of the Kingdom in general, his faithful and diligent Official Sampſon was employed in collecting the Profits and Arrears due to him, out of the Revenues belonging to the Biſhoprick, and particularly the Sum contracted to be paid, by the French Biſhop, for quiet Poſſeſſion. Sampſon in a Letter to the Cardinal upon theſe Affairs, informeth him, that he had thought proper to pay the Money received by him, unto the King's Treaſurer at Tournay, for the King's Uſe there, the Value whereof the Cardinal might receive in England; becauſe the Money, if brought into England, would ſuffer great Diminution in the Value, for which it was firſt received. Beſides, not One half of it was then current in England, and if it were changed into Gold, it would only go at ſuch a Price, that in every Piece there would be a ſenſible Loſs. He proceedeth to acquaint the Cardinal, that the Farmers of the Lands and Revenues belonging to the Biſhoprick, were very backward in making Payment; tho' the Time when they had bound themſelves by expreſs Agreement to make it, was now expired: That as to the French Biſhop, he had lately been adviſed by Letter from him, concerning his Intention to come with the French Embaſſadors to Tournay; and then he engaged his Faith, to conform to the Determinations of the King's Ambaſſadors, in all Things relating to the Intereſts of his Grace: In the mean Time he would endeavour to gather up what he could, tho' he was apprehenſive his Collection would be very inſignificant. The Concluſion of his Letter is in Latin, diſcovering how much the People were diſpoſed, as is uſual with the Populace, in any Change of the publick Adminiſtration, to favour the new Biſhop, and render themſelves acceptable to him; and that they would ſtill be more prejudiced againſt the Engliſh, to whom they were before ſo little favourable: Neither could any compulſive Methods be employed to cauſe them to make Payment before the Time limited; That a Coadjutor to the Abbot of St. Martin's had been appointed, a Man void of good Manners and of all moral Honeſty, and who rather deſerved to be expelled the Monaſtery, than to aſſiſt the Abbot in that Capacity. In the Concluſion of the Letter, the Project and Accompliſhment of a Peace ſo much deſired, is not only aſcribed after a peculiar Manner to the Cardinal, but he is repreſented in general as the [r] Father of his Country! A Country moſt happy in the Birth and Education of ſuch a Son!

1518. 1. THE Treaty of Marriage between the Dauphin, only Son of Francis, and Princeſs Mary of England, was perfected and ſigned the ſame Day, with that for the Surrender of Tournay. This Treaty was both originally owing to the Cardinal's Advice, and in the Progreſs of it principally conducted by him: For during the Time of the Embaſſy from France beforementioned, the Biſhop of Paris, being one of the Ambaſſadors, had Conference with the Cardinal concerning the Means of corroborating the Amity between the two Kings their Maſters, and particularly deſired to know the Cardinal's Sentiments upon that Head. To whom his Eminency anſwered, That if the French Queen, who was then great with Child, ſhould have a Son, the beſt and ſtrongeſt Cement of the Amity propoſed, would be a Marriage between him and the Princeſs Mary, who was yet her ſelf but an Infant of two Years old. Reaſons of State frequently oblige Princes to officiate Contracts of Marriage for their Children, while yet in the firſt Years of their Infancy: But, which is not an uſual Caſe, here was a Marriage projected for a young Prince before he was born, and while it was unknown whether a Prince ſhould be born; tho' after his Birth indeed, the Conditions of it were actually ſtipulated and ſigned in Form; which, notwithanding, (ſo deficient is the Wiſdom of Man in putting future and remote Caſes) never took Effect. The Biſhop of Paris, in his Inſtructions to John Gobelin his Secretary, concerning Buſineſs to be negotiated with the Cardinal at our Court, directed him farther to acquaint his Grace, that he had a Deſign, tho' he was prevented in it, to write to his Grace, upon the Subject of the Match, ſo ſoon as the Dauphin was born, and to deſire, he would interpoſe his good Offices in order to facilitate it; but now he renewed his Inſtances to that End, making a Tender to the Cardinal of the beſt Services, on his Part, towards effecting it: Intimating his Opinion, That the King of France, his Maſter, will be willing to accept the Cardinal as a Mediator, and to refer much to his good Offices therein. Full Powers were ſhortly after ſent to Gouffier Admiral of France, and Stephen de Poncher Biſhop of Paris, with the other Ambaſſadors from that Court, to treat and conclude upon this Affair: But I do not find, that the Cardinal was any where empowered by the King of France to act in it, as a Mediator, how much ſoever that Prince might be inclined, or expreſs himſelf inclined, to defer to his Honour and Wiſdom. But the King of England, on his own Part, ſolely and entirely committed the Negotiation to the Cardinal, authorizing him to act with the greateſt Plenitude of Power, and obliging himſelf to ratify and confirm, whatever this Miniſter ſhould think proper to do, or ſtipulate in it.

France

2. The principal Conditions of this Treaty were, That the King of England ſhould give to his Daughter in Dowry, Three hundred thirty three thouſand Crowns, and Francis on his Part ſettle as large a Jointure on her, as any of his Predeceſſors had ever ſettled before; That within four Months the Eſpouſals ſhould be made and celebrated, by the two Kings, in the Name of their Children; That in caſe of the Dauphin's Death before the Marriage ſhould be compleated, the next Son ſhould marry the Princeſs upon the ſame Conditions; and if the Princeſs ſhould happen to die firſt, the next Daughter to the King, proviſionally, he ſhould have any other Daughter, ſhould be comprehended under the ſame Articles. In order ſtill to corroborate an Alliance, ſo much deſired, the King of England condeſcended to reſtore not only Tournay, but Martaign and St. Amand, with all their Dependencies, to the French; but under expreſs Condition, that no Prejudice was hereby intended to be done to the King of Spain, and that no Occaſion ſhould be taken, from theſe Conceſſions of England, to injure or inſult his neighbouring Subjects. The Surrender of theſe Places was to be made upon the Payment of Six hundred thouſand [z] Crowns, for Security of which, Hoſtages were to be given by the French King; concerning the Number and Quality of which, there afterwards happened to be ſome Diſpute. For in a [a] Letter to the Cardinal, our Miniſters at Paris write, That concerning the Hoſtages, they met with much Difficulty; for the French refuſed to deliver more than Four, and affirm'd, a greater Number had never been ſpecified; adding, an expreſs Proviſion had been made, that it ſhould not be known, they were ſent to England in Quality of Hoſtages, but only as Servants to the Queen. And now, ſay they, ſince it is otherwiſe underſtood here, ſeveral of the Nobility, ſome of which they deſcend to Name, are much diſſatisfied. Our Miniſters anſwered, That there was no ſpecifick Mention made in the Treaty, as to the Number of Hoſtages; but only in general, "That ſuch Hoſtages ſhould be "given, wherewith the King of England might be contented." Which, tho' it was a good Anſwer to the French, with reſpect to the Difficulties they raiſed concerning the Number of Hoſtages, does not ſeem fully to account for what they objected, concerning the other ſecret Article. The Treaty notwithſtanding, was not long after finally concluded, and reſpectively ratified in Form by both Courts.

3. The friendly Offices which the two Kings exchanged while this Treaty was depending; and the mutual Amity and Confidence eſtabliſhed between them by the Concluſion of it, prepared the Way for the Conventions, which were ſhortly after made towards an Enterview. And upon this Occaſion, indeed, the King of France ſhewed by a very ſenſible and demonſtrative Proof, how much he eſteemed the Cardinal, and what great Truſt and Confidence he repoſed in his Integrity and Honour: For after it had been agreed and concluded by the Commiſſioners on both Sides in London, that there ſhould be an Enterview of the two Kings, the King of France entirely referred the Regulation of it, with reſpect to the Time, Manner, and Place of the Congreſs, or other requiſite Circumſtances depending on it, to the Cardinal's Direction, and ſent him a [b] Commiſſion containing moſt full and ample Powers to that End; only with a reſerved Condition concerning the [c] Honour and Safety of his Perſon, obliging himſelf to approve and ratify whatever the Cardinal ſhould think proper or neceſſary in ſo important an Affair, as if himſelf had perſonally made the ſame Diſpoſitions, with him, relating to it.

4. After the Cardinal had received this Commiſſion, he refuſed to act by Virtue of the Powers granted to him in it, as importing a Charge of the moſt nice and difficult Nature, 'till he might have the King's Conſent and Licenſe for that Purpoſe: And the King interpreting this Refuſal of the Cardinal, as an Inſtance of that ſingular Fidelity and Obſervance which he bore to his Majeſty, and deſirous that nothing might be omitted on his Part towards attaining theſe publick and great Advantages, which were propoſed from the [d] Congreſs, not only [e] authoriſed the Cardinal to accept that Commiſſion from the French King, but empowered him to act in as full and ample a Manner, to the ſame Effect, by ſpecial Commiſſion from himſelf.

5. But whatever good Ends theſe two Princes might propoſe to themſelves by this Enterview, reſpecting their particular Intereſts, or what was pretended, [f] the common Welfare of Chriſten-

The Cardinal, in anſwer to him, that he might effectually remove all Jealouſies and ſuſpicious Reports, which ſhould ariſe from ſuch Repreſentations, declared the whole Truth of the Matter to him without Diſguiſe; and told him, what Steps had been taken by the King of England towards it, as well as by the Flemiſh Ambaſſadors to obſtruct it; and how the King had hitherto conducted himſelf, and was reſolved to proceed in it: So that, he ſaith, thoſe Embaſſadors ought, both in Reaſon and Honout, to have been ſatisfied with the Meaſures, which the King had hereupon taken. The Cardinal wrote to the ſame Effect to [g] Sir Richard Wingfield, and in his Letter to him incloſed One to the Admiral: In that to Sir Richard, the Cardinal acquaints him, That, as he apprehended, he had not only given a ſufficient Anſwer to the Admiral and other Perſons, but expreſſed himſelf in ſuch a Manner, that they would be more cautious for the Future, how they ſhould give Credit to fugitive and idle Reports, only grounded upon Appearances, but really contrived and propagated, to create Animoſity and Diſtruſt between the two Kings. He further repreſented, " [b] That it did not conſiſt either with the Rules of Honour or Rea- " ſon, that a Prince ſhould be under any Reſtraint from treating " with the Embaſſadors of his ancient Friends or Allies, or that " any Jealouſy or Suſpicions could be juſtly entertained by Occa- " ſion of any Conventions to that End. g The Subſtance of this Letter we have from Mr. Strype, from the Minutes drawn up by the Cardinal's own Hand. Mem. Eccleſ. p. 26.

h In Anſwer to what was ſaid, That it might create a Jealouſy in the French King, ſhould the King of England give an Enterview to the King of Caſtile. Vid. Herbert, p. 87. concerning the King of Caſtile's Landing.

" Slight

" Slight might be a Means of loſing that Prince for ever: That the " French King, if he have really that Regard for the King of En- " gland, which the Cardinal ſuppoſeth him to have, would not " adviſe him to ſuch a Refuſal; ſeeing by a perſonal Meeting with " his Couſin and Ally, on ſuch an Occaſion, no Prejudice or " Diſhonour could ariſe to the French King; tho' it ſhould happen, " which probably it might not; and therefore the King of France " could have no juſt Grounds of Diſtaſte or Complaint on that " Account: eſpecially, ſince the King of England was determined " punctually to make Good all the Conventions between them." He concludeth, " That yet, neither the King, nor himſelf, nor " any of his Council, could believe the French King capable of be- " ing influenced by any ſuch groundleſs and unreaſonable Suſpicions, " conſidering the many demonſtrative Proofs of the fraternal Love, " and firm Alliance between them."

6. Yet it appeared afterwards, the Cardinal was miſtaken in his Calculation: That the French King oppoſed, ſo much as he could, an Enterview between our King and his Nephew, the Emperor-Elect. And therefore cauſed it to be repreſented to our Miniſters at his Court, how it had been agreed and promiſed by both Kings, that neither of them ſhould ſpeak with the Emperor-Elect, before they had ſeen each other: And that a Meeting between the Emperor and our King, might tend to alienate Francis. The Anſwer, which our Miniſter made, was by putting the Caſe, That if Charles ſhould, by Streſs of Weather, or any other Accident, be caſt upon the Coaſt of England, then the King could not in Honour or Decency refuſe to entertain him. The Cardinal found himſelf obliged, on this Occaſion, to write to one of the French King's Council, and to aſſure him, That it was the King's Intention to keep his Promiſe, both in obſerving the Time of the Enterview with him, and by not admitting any Enterview with the Elect King of the Romans: But the ſaid Emperor-Elect having, lately by his Ambaſſador, propoſed in the Way of Queſtion to the King, If his Maſter, being upon the Coaſts of England, ſhould happen to ſail near thoſe Parts, where the King might deſign to embark, whether then his Highneſs would not be pleaſed, either to ſee him upon the Sea, or, in caſe of his landing, to permit, that he might both ſee his Grace and the Queen his Aunt? To this Demand, the King, conſidering the Alliance and ancient Amity between England and Burgundy, and Spain, could not but ſhew himſelf conformable; yet would by no means, by Occaſion of the Enterview with his Nephew, if it ſhould happen, ſuffer his Journey into France, on May following, to be retarded; tho' he added, ſuch an accidental Meeting between him and the King of the Romans, could not, in a ſtrict Acceptation, be an Enterview: However, if it might not happen, happen, he ſhould yet be obliged (for certain Reaſons) to have a formal Enterview with him between Calais and Graveling, after that with the King of France was over.

7. We may probably infer from the Premiſſes; from the Expectation, the Surmiſe at leaſt, on both Sides, that the King of the Romans would land in England, and more particularly from the Queſtion moved by the French Embaſſador to our King, that the Viſit, which this Prince made to him in England, was not purely accidental; tho', to ſave Appearances, and avoid the Occaſion of giving Umbrage to the French, it was thought convenient to pretend, there was no formed or direct Deſign of making it. Such are the refined Arts of Princes, and of great Men acting by Direction from them, or perhaps directing them in their political Conduct. They deceive, and ſuffer themſelves to be deceived knowingly; and, in certain Caſes, without Diſguiſe; that is, without any Diſguiſe, but through which they are as plainly ſeen and diſcovered, as if they had entirely thrown it off: And yet they affect to hide and conceal themſelves, as if thoſe with whom they are concerned, either would not ſee, or had no Power of opening their Eyes.

8. I ſhall only obſerve further, That the Jealouſies between the King of the Romans and the French King, might have proved the Occaſion of preventing this Enterview, had it not been for the full Powers veſted in the Cardinal, by both Kings, to that End. For the French King now beginning to make certain Fortifications towards Ardres, upon an Apprehenſion, that the King of Caſtile might have a Deſign to fall upon him in thoſe Parts, the Cardinal was much diſſatisfied with this Proceeding, as tending to impair the Freedom of the Engliſh Pale. And the Report of it made ſuch an Impreſſion upon the King, that for ſome Time it diverted him from the Thoughts of the Enterview. But the Cardinal having obtained a Promiſe, that theſe Fortifications ſhould be diſcontinued, repreſented to the French King, by Fernegan, how much, if he ſhould proceed in them, it would tend to his Diſgrace, and the Diminution of that Eſteem, which the King of England had for him. This Miniſter is further required to acquaint Francis, That if notwithſtanding, he is determined to proceed, the King will be obliged to raiſe Counter-fortifications on his Side. There was another Circumſtance, tho' conſidered in itſelf of no extraordinary Importance, which yet gave ſome Grounds of Suſpicion to Francis, that King Henry was not altogether to be depended on in the Affair relating to the Enterview; which ſhould indeed have been celebrated the Year before, but ſome Affairs happened contrary to his Intention, which obſtructed it at that time, on the Part of our King. However, to ſatisfy his Brother of France, that he was fully determined to meet him in [i] May following, he made a Reſolution not to cut off his Beard 'till that Time, which when Sir Thomas Bolein had told to Francis, he devoted his own Beard, in the like Manner. This was a Ratification of the Agreement made between theſe two Kings, by a ſenſible, and (ſo the French conſidered it) a ſolemn and religious Token: But one of the Hoſtages being permitted to return out of England to France, and making a Report there, that our King had cut off his Beard, great Diſtaſte was thereupon taken by the French; who repreſented to Sir Thomas, that it was looked upon as a Declaration, the King had no real Deſign the Enterview ſhould take Effect. Sir Thomas excuſed this Exciſion of the King's Beard, as well as he could, without particular Inſtructions, and ſuppoſed it was done in complaiſance to the Queen; who, upon his knowledge, had formerly made preſſing Inſtances to his Majeſty, when his Beard grew long and incommodious, that, to oblige her, he would cut it off. He added Aſſurances, that it was not done with any Deſign of fruſtrating the Enterview, and that the King's Mind and Affection were ſtill the ſame. But this did not give intire Satisfaction to the French King, or perfectly remove the Grounds of his Jealouſy and Reſentment, as appeared from the Manner of his Reply: For, laying his Hand upon his Breaſt, he declared by the Faith of a Gentleman, Had it not been for the Truſt which he repoſed in the Aſſurances given to him by King Henry of this Enterview, he would have been at Milan, before that time.

Occa-

Occaſion, from the common Principles of Morality. 10. To what the Diſappointment of the King of England ſeems principally owing. 11. Secretary Pace not being able to ſucceed, finds good Reaſons why he ought not to have ſucceeded, with a memorable Artifice of that Miniſter.

1. I HAVE reſerved to the laſt Place, the great Negotiation, wherein the Cardinal was at this time concerned, relating to the Election of an Emperor. No ſooner had King Henry received Advice concerning the Death of Maximilian, but he imparted it to the King of France, and repreſented to him by Sir Thomas Bolein, how highly it imported all Chriſtian Princes to conſider, who might be a proper Perſon to ſucceed to the Empire, deſiring to know the real Sentiments and Deſigns of that Prince on the Occaſion, as he ſhould freely communicate to him his own: So that they might entirely concur in their Counſels and Intereſts towards the Choice to be made. Upon which, the French King told Sir Thomas, in Confidence, that ſeveral of the Electors being his Friends and Kinſmen, conſidering the Weakneſs of the late Emperor, and his Unwillingneſs that the Catholick King ſhould ſucceed him, had ſeveral times adviſed him, in caſe of Maximilian's Death, to concert proper Meaſures towards attaining the Empire himſelf, but that he had been very negligent in purſuing their Advice; notwithſtanding, out of Six of the Electors, which, he ſaid, then compoſed the whole Electoral-College, he had the Promiſe of Four, under their Hands and Seals, and he is applying to the other Two, the Electors of Cologn and Treves, in the beſt and moſt effectual Manner he can propoſe: For he will ſpare no Pains or Expence, in order to promote and accompliſh his Deſign; and is extremely rejoiced, that the King of England, having no View that Way himſelf, had been pleaſed to promiſe him his Aſſiſtance, as he underſtood by his Embaſſadors at the Engliſh Court. And in March following, our King confirmed his Promiſe to him by Letter: In Return of which, Francis moſt affectionately thanks him, deſiring the Continuance of reciprocal Amity; which he hopes will ſhortly be corroborated by the Enterview. The Cardinal, in ſo momentous an Affair, when his Influence at home, and in foreign Courts, rendered his Advice and Aſſiſtance neceſſary, was by no means to be neglected: And therefore Francis, conſidering the Paſſion which was ſuppoſed moſt predominant in him, took care to addreſs to it in a Way moſt likely to ſucceed. He offereth him, without Diſguiſe, and in direct Terms, his Aſſiſtance towards attaining the Popedome, deſiring Sir Thomas Bolein to write to the Cardinal upon that Subject, and to aſſure him in his Name, that fourteen Cardinals, and the whole Houſe of Urſini, would 1519.

eſpouſe his Intereſts; inſinuating, withal, that ſince the King of England and himſelf are ſo ſtrictly allied and united, they may make either Emperor or Pope as they ſhall think fit; tho' were it not in regard to the great Affiance, which he hath in the King of England, he ſhould be unwilling that any Engliſhman ſhould be inveſted with the Papal Authority.

2. Yet the French King afterwards grew ſomewhat more cool, in a Deſire, with which he appeared at firſt to be violently poſſeſſed; and his Efforts towards attaining the Empire, began by ſenſible Degrees to abate. Whether it were, that he apprehended the ſuperior Intereſt of Charles would carry it againſt him; or, that he was diverted by any Repreſentation of his Miniſters, or Subjects in general, who might apprehend, that upon his Advancement to the Empire, France would either be rendered little more than a Province to it, or be exhauſted of its Treaſure and Blood, when obliged to follow the Emperor in all his Wars, or to aſſert all his Rights and Pretenſions, however foreign to her own Intereſts. Whatever Reaſons might incline him to purſue this Affair with leſs Ardour, his Council began to be uneaſy at it, and openly to expreſs their Diſcontent, by laying it to the Charge of the Ducheſs of Angouleſm the King's Mother, that the King had diſcovered ſo great an Ambition of ſucceeding to the Empire. They ſuſpected, as Sir Thomas Bolein writeth from France, that his Succeſs might be a Means not only of reducing his native and hereditary Kingdom to great Diſtreſs, but alſo of alienating from him the Swiſs, the Almains, and almoſt all the Princes about them; and that if the Swiſs in particular, ſhould become their Enemy, the Loſs of Milan would be a Conſequence, of which there was great Reaſon to be apprehenſive.

3. By another Diſpatch from Sir Thomas Bolein in the ſame Month to the Cardinal, he acquainteth him, That Advice had been ſent to the French Court, concerning the Removal which the King of England had cauſed to be made of ſeveral Perſons from Court; who had ſo far abuſed his Majeſty's Favour, that they behaved themſelves after an audacious Manner, highly derogatory to his Honour and Dignity. The Cardinal, on this Occaſion, gave the King a ſenſible Proof of the Zeal wherewith he was animated for the Support of his Majeſty's juſt and royal Authority; and, at the ſame time, had an Opportunity of doing an Action very popular in Regard to himſelf, and which highly tended to eſtabliſh the King's Empire in the Hearts of his Subjects; there being nothing more grateful at any time to the People, than when ſuch Perſons are taken away from the Throne, who make uſe of the royal Acts of Grace and Favour, whereby they are diſtinguiſhed, to diſhonour the Author of them, or to cover any illegal Practices whatever: And indeed, the Perſon of the Prince being ſacred and inviolable, the only Method of Redreſs, which ſeems left to the People oppreſſed by any Male-Adminiſtration, is by the Diſgrace or the condign Puniſhment of thoſe, by whom the Prince is known to be miſled, or ill adviſed.

4. When the Reſolution was taken to remove thoſe [k] Perſons from the King's Preſence, they were ordered to appear before the Cardinal and Council, that they might, in a more formal and exemplary Manner, receive the Sentence of their Diſgrace, which was, "That "having taken upon them, as had been publickly reported, to go- "vern the King after their Appetite, which was not Honourable, "they ſhould therefore come no more to Court."

5. While the Election of a King of the Romans was yet depending, Secretary Pace was ſent by the King into Germany, to purſue his Inſtructions with the Electors in Relation to it; and to prevent all Umbrage which might be taken by the Court of France, on Occaſion of his being ſent, Sir Thomas Bolein is ordered to acquaint them, that the Buſineſs of this Secretary was to recommend the French King's Intereſt to the Electors. But if the Electors, on Account of the preſſing Inſtances that were made in Favour of Charles King of Caſtile, ſhould appear averſe to it, then the ſaid Ambaſſador was to move and perſuade the Electoral Princes, that they might make ſuch Choice of any other Perſon, as might be thought moſt conducive to the general Tranquillity and Repoſe of Europe. Francis thanked the King of England for an Anſwer, from which yet he could not infer very much for his own Advantage. But there are ſometimes political Reaſons, why Princes ſhould at leaſt appear ſatisfied with general and even viſibly equivocal Expreſſions from which nothing certain can be concluded.

6. It appeareth indeed from ſeveral Circumſtances, as well as from the Inſtructions given to Pace, when he was ſent to negotiate this Affair with the Electors, that he was privately to inform himſelf how they ſtood affected towards the Choice of his Maſter the King of England, and to try, if he could open any Way for it. The Motives, upon which the King of England proceeded, were theſe following: Firſt, That the Emperor Maximilian, when he was in the Field with the King, and at other times ſince, had promiſed him he would uſe his utmoſt Efforts and Authority, to the End, he might cauſe him to be elected King of the Romans, and accordingly the Archbiſhop of Triers had confeſſed to Pace, that the Emperor had endeavoured to diſcharge this Promiſe. Secondly, The Suſpenſe and Perplexity, which the Electoral Princes were in, concerning the Choice to be made; for they would not have a French Emperor, and yet were afraid to chuſe the King of Arragon, leaſt he might make uſe of his great Power to oppreſs them. Thirdly, The great Competition between the Kings of France and Spain for the Imperial Dignity, which he thought might be a Means of facilitating the Acceſſion of a third Power to it. Laſtly, The Promiſe which was made to him of the Pope's Favour and Aſſiſtance; who, to the Intent he might more eaſily accompliſh his Deſign, had engaged, that he would for ſome time cauſe the Election to be deferred.

7. Pace, according to his Inſtructions in the Cardinal's Minutes, was to go to the Electors ſeverally, and by all politick Means to feel and diſcover their Inclinations, and ſo to comport himſelf in general, and reſpectively, towards them, that the King might not be known to favour or aſſiſt with his Intereſt one of the contending Powers more than the other. But to the French, he ſhould appear to favour their Maſter, and to the Spaniards the Catholick King. As to the Pope's Legate, he might declare himſelf more openly, according to the Tenure of ſuch Letters as the Biſhop of Worceſter had lately written to the Cardinal by Order of his Holineſs. And he was therefore directed to join with the Legate in theſe Particulars, by endeavouring to diſappoint the Kings of France and Caſtile; and if the Meaſures they ſhould take to that End, were found practicable, either to caſt the Election to the King of England, allied to the German Nation, or elſe to chuſe from among themſelves a Native of Germany, and not diſhonourably to ſuffer the Empire, after Seven hundred Years, to devolve to a ſtrange Nation. If Pace found the Electors diſpoſed to a Compliance, he was to offer them Money, but to be paid under this Condition only, that the Matter ſhould be firſt effected, and the King actually choſen. The Cardinal of Mentz, one of the Electors, writeth to Cardinal Wolſey that the King of England had offered a Guard, in order to preſerve and ſecure the Freedom of the Election, wherein he acknowledgeth, [l] That the free and generous Promiſe which the moſt Potent and moſt Chriſtian King (ſo he ſtiles him) had made to this End, affected him with much Joy and Conſolation.

8. The Conteſt between the two Kings of Caſtile and France, grew, by Degrees, very warm. The French, in Hatred or Contempt of the German Nation, and perhaps with a Deſign of ſome ſecret Inſinuation to the Diſadvantage of his Rival, repreſented their King, as a Prince of the greateſt Accompliſhments, and moſt conſummate Wiſdom, in the World. But the Oppoſition of the Germans and the Swiſs, with the Appearance of a numerous Army in the Circle of Suabia, reſolved to defend the Honour of their Nation to the Utmoſt, were too ſtrong for the fineſt or moſt eloquent Harangue. So that the Electors, either awed by ſome Apprehenſions, on that Account, or deſirous to extricate themſelves out of the Difficulties they were under; or perhaps influenced by proper Diſpoſitions of a large Sum of Money, which the King of Caſtile had remitted into thoſe Parts, proceeded on the Twenty-eighth of June, to chooſe him Emperor. And it appears from the Sequel of this Negotiation, what Aſſurances ſoever were at firſt given by our King of Favour and Aſſiſtance to Francis, yet our Ambaſſadors ſecretly encouraged the King of Caſtile to hope for their Maſter's Friendſhip. For it was an Inſtruction of the King for an Anſwer to be given, by the Cardinal, to the Spaniſh Ambaſſadors, "That tho' his Majeſty had himſelf Pretenſions to the Em-"pire, yet having knowledge of the King of Spain's Intentions "towards obtaining that Dignity, he would decline all Practices "that Way, and aſſiſt him the beſt he could." And in caſe the Electors ſhould be more inclined to chuſe Ferdinand, becauſe Charles might not ſo commodiouſly reſide among them, his Grace's Deſire was, "That he might have the Government of Flanders, which he "would diligently take care of and adminiſter, as if it had been "his own, for the Love which he bore to the King his Nephew." It appeareth alſo from one of the Letters of Sir Thomas Bolein, the Admiral of France had told him, That, when he was employed in Germany to negotiate for his Maſter, during the Election, ſtanding behind a Tapet in the Palace of the Marqueſs of Brandenburgh, he heard Secretary Pace, whom our King ſent, as was pretended to eſpouſe the Intereſt of his Maſter, ſpeaking to the ſaid Marqueſs in Behalf of the Catholick King, at leaſt of ſome Native of Germany, or one who was of German Extraction.

Ger-

9. How to reconcile the Conduct of our Court, and particularly of the Cardinal, in this Affair, with the ſtrict Maxims of Truth, Sincerity, and Honour, is what I am neither qualified, nor concerned to undertake. The Buſineſs of an Hiſtorian, is to write Facts, as he findeth them, without thinking himſelf obliged to advance nothing, but what may be demonſtrated to be juſt, and honourable. Such, who are verſed in the profound Arts and Myſteries of State, may have Maxims, whereby they govern themſelves, and account for Difficulties of this Kind, very different from thoſe, whereby Divines and Moraliſts are either to form their own Judgements, or to direct the Conſciences of other Men.

10. It ſeemeth after all, That the Diſappointment of our King, in the View he had of the Imperial Crown, was owing to his Remiſſneſs, miſſneſs, in not ſending the Moneys requiſite, in convenient Time: For Pace writeth to the Legate on the Twentieth of June, "[m] Ye- " ſterday the Cardinal of Mentz, by a Counſellor, informed me, " He was in great Perplexity, and wiſhed I had been ſent hi- " ther fifteen Days ſooner, for then I ſhould have obtained all " my Purpoſe: And yet that there was ſome Remedy, but not " without the ſame Sum of Money, Four hundred and twenty " thouſand Florins of Gold, which the King of Caſtile hath ready " at Franckford. I told him, If his Maſter would effectually " procure the Thing to be done, he ſhould be rewarded after that " Rate. He ſeemed content, and wiſhed me to provide the Mo- " ney. The Pope's Legate will do nothing in our Caſe, alledge- " ing he may not enter Franckford, which is true; but yet there " are other Ways, which he will not take, leaſt he ſhould offend " the French." In a Letter the Day following from the ſaid Mi- niſter, he addeth, "The Pope hath ſent hither a Bull to his Le- " gate, with Authority to publiſh the French King Emperor, as " ſoon as the Legate ſhall have a perfect Knowledge, that the ſaid " King ſhall have three of the Electors: This is for Fear of the " French, but againſt his Promiſe to our King." In a following Diſpatch two Days after, "The Pope hath ſent to his Legate " to proceed no further againſt the King of Caſtile in this Ele- " ction."

11. This Miniſter, when he found all the Efforts he could make for his Maſter's Service were ineffectual, and that the Election would at length certainly determine in the Choice of the Catholick King, took a like Method, to which other People ordinarily have Recourſe, under the certain Apprehenſion of great Diſappoint- ments: Which is to find Reaſons, why they ſhould be diſappoin- ted. "It appeareth, ſaith he, by the Fury of this Nation, all in " Arms for the King of Caſtile, that at any time, when the King " of England ſhould be elected, I ſhould be ſlain. Beſides, if the " King's Grace ſhould obtain, his Realm is like to be undone, for " the Electors will oblige him to live here." There is ſcarce any Misfortune incident to Man, under which certain Topicks of Conſolation may not be drawn to ſupport him. It is pious to ſuppoſe, this may proceed from a wiſe and good Diſpoſition of Pro- vidence; but it may ſometimes too be owing to the Pride of Man's Heart, who would find a Reaſon; a Reaſon if he can, favourable to himſelf, for every Thing.

As ſoon as the Electors underſtood, the Pope had eſpouſed the Intereſt of the Catholick King, they immediately proceeded to an Election, as I obſerved before, on the Twenty-eighth of June; but

1. THE Affairs and Events during the Courſe of theſe three Years, were very memorable. I ſhall begin with thoſe which relate to the Progreſs of Lutheraniſm, and the Methods taken to ſuppreſs it. During the late Election, and for ſome time after, Luther had a little Reſpite: But his Zeal for Reformation did not in the leaſt abate: So that Charles had not long received the Imperial Crown, according to the uſual Solemnities, at Aix, but being apprehenſive, that the Diſſentions of Germany, on Account of Religion, might affect the Peace and Civil Intereſts of the Empire, deſign'd to call a Diet at Wormes in order to compoſe them; or at leaſt to prevent the ill Effects, wherewith they ſeemed to threaten both the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical State. At this Diet Luther was ſummoned to appear, the Emperor having granted him a Paſſport, and promiſed to his Patron, the Elector of Saxony, that he might freely go thither, and be heard. Under this Safe-conduct he came to the Diet in his Frier's Habit, and owned his Books, but required Time to conſider, whether he ſhould approve or retract them. The Day after he appeared again, and after a long Diſcourſe poſitively declared, he did not think himſelf obliged to 1519. 1520. 1521.

retract any of them. The Pope, upon this Anſwer, ſignified his Reſolution in writing to the Diet, to proceed againſt him; yet he had Liberty of conferring with the Deputies of the Diet, who uſed their utmoſt Endeavours to bring him to a Retractation, and to ſubmit himſelf to the Judgement of ſome Tribunal, but their Arguments could make no Impreſſion: He would neither retract, nor acknowledge any other Judge, but the Word of God; that is, as they underſtood him, the Word of God concerning the Senſe of which, he was to be the Judge and Interpreter himſelf. This was thought an undeniable Conſequence in reſpect to one, who was ſaid, excluſive of the Doctrines or Authority of the Church, to make his private Interpretations of Scripture the Rule of Faith. It ſeems impoſſible indeed, upon ſuch a Principle, that the Unity of the Church ſhould be preſerved, or that any Authority in it ſhould have a juſt and regular Power of cenſuring other Perſons, either as Heretical, or obſtinately Heretical: Becauſe every Man having the Rule of his Judgement before him, and an equal Right to judge for himſelf, and all Men being fallible, the Queſtion appeareth unanſwerable, Who art thou that judgeſt another? By what Authority doeſt thou judge? or, Who gave thee this Authority? So naturally do thoſe Principles, which tend to reſolve all the Grounds of Faith into a private Spirit, in Oppoſition to the Doctrine and Authority of the Church, ſet Men free from all Manner of judicial Reſtraints in it, and open a direct Way to Confuſion, and every evil Work; or rather, ſo directly in ſuch a Way of Arguing, will Men, diffident of their Judgement, obſerving the different Senſes wherein the Scriptures are explained by learned Men, and the Difficulties which occur in them, be deſirous of having Recourſe to ſome certain Authority for the Explication of them. For nothing leſs than Certainty, ought to ſatisfy us in an Affair of infinite Concernment to us; at leaſt nothing leſs, than the higheſt Degree of Certainty to which we are here capable of attaining. Now there is in the natural Reaſon of the Thing, to all modeſt and ingenuous Perſons, leſs Danger of their miſtaking the Senſe of the Scriptures, when they regulate their Judgements of it, by the concurrent Senſe and Explications of the Church, than when they interpret them, according to their own private Opinions. Beſides that this appeareth to be the only Method, of avoiding the circular Way of Argumentation beforementioned; except we ſhould have Recourſe to a ſtanding, viſible, and infallible Authority; to which the Deſign of thoſe Men is naturally calculated to lead us, who exclude all Authority out of the Church of Chriſt, except that of private Judgement. Luther, being repreſented to the Emperor as contumacious, and incorrigible, was ordered by him him to depart from Wormes, and retire to ſome Place of Safety: He left that Place on the Twenty-fourth of April, and was conducted by Favour of the Elector of Saxony to the Caſtle of Wurtemberg, where he lay concealed for nine Months. The Elector had projected this Retreat, to avoid certain Inconveniences, to which he might have been expoſed, had he ſuffered Luther to reſide in his own Dominions.

2. Before this Diet ſeparated, the Edict againſt Luther, by Direction of the Emperor, was drawn up in Form, and publiſhed on the Twenty-ſixth of May. By this Edict Luther is declared a Heretick and a Schiſmatick, and all Perſons without Diſtinction, upon Pain of being put in the Bann of the Empire, are charged neither to receive nor protect him. And according to the Form, and Tenor of the Bann, when the twenty Days, allowed to him in his Paſſport, are expired, he is to be proceeded againſt wherever he ſhall be found, and there be kept under Confinement 'till the Emperor's Pleaſure, in relation to him, ſhould be known. By this Edict his Adherents, Friends, and Followers were condemned and proſcribed, and his Books ordered to be burned. But the Princes, and chief Magiſtrates of Germany, ſhewed very little Regard to the Emperor's Edict, but rather a Contempt of it; and Luther was ſtill more eſteemed by the People in general; ſo that returning to Wittemberg, and finding himſelf highly careſſed, and well ſupported, he openly declared againſt the Biſhops, and even againſt the ſecular Princes who adhered to the Romiſh Church, and particulary againſt Henry the Eighth King of England, who in Anſwer to his Book concerning the Babyloniſh Captivity, had publiſhed a learned Defence, as it was then generally eſteemed, of the Seven Sacraments. Luther, before the Publication of his Book, treated the Pope, and thoſe who were employed by his Holineſs to confer with him, with Decency and Reſpect: except perhaps that he uſed Cardinal Cajetan, Legate in Germany, when ſent to propoſe certain Conditions to him towards an Accommodation, and to abſolve him, if he recanted, with leſs Ceremony and Reſpect than were convenient, or thought due to his Character. Tho' the Cardinal was afterwards blamed at Rome, becauſe he had not applied more gentle Methods towards the Recovery of Luther, and ſhewed more Addreſs and Condeſcenſion to a Perſon of his warm Temper, elated with the Succeſs of his Doctrine, and finding himſelf at that Time ſo generally followed and careſſed. Another Miniſter from the Pope called Miltitz, was afterwards ſent into Saxony, on Pretence of carrying a golden Roſe to the Elector, with a Commiſſion to require him, that he would cauſe Luther to retract, or elſe withdraw his Protection from him. Miltitz finding Luther's Credit ſo well eſtabliſhed, that there was no Proſ-pect of effecting any Thing againſt him by Methods of Severity, thought proper to have a Conference with him, wherein he endeavoured to avoid the Error into which Cajetan had fallen, and diſcourſed to him with great Tenderneſs and Moderation; imputing the Troubles, which had been raiſed, to the indiſcreet Zeal of his Adverſaries, particularly of Tetzel a Dominican, Firſt-Commiſſioner for publiſhing Indulgences, and who had publiſhed Theſes in Oppoſition to thoſe of Luther, towards vindicating himſelf and his Collegues from the Reproaches caſt upon them. But notwithſtanding all the Inſinuations he could uſe to perſuade Luther to an Acknowledgement of ſome Errors relating to the Doctrine of Indulgences, Luther would not be induced to make any. All that Miltitz could obtain of him, was to write a Letter in reſpectful Terms to the Pope, wherein he declared, That it was never his Intention to attack the Power of the Church or of the Pope; That he acknowledged the Power of the Church was Supreme; and, as to the particular Queſtion concerning Indulgences, he would write no more upon that Subject, provided his Adverſaries would be ſilent on their Part, and not provoke him to reſume it; That he would even write after a Manner which might create in others a greater Veneration for the Church of Rome; and to conclude, He would own that he had uſed too great Acrimony in his Expreſſions, and had been tranſported, in the Heat of his Zeal, to a blameable Exceſs.

3. By this and another [m] Letter of Luther's, if he was ſincere in his Declarations, we may conclude, he did not at firſt deſign to puſh Things ſo far, as afterwards, being irritated by Oppoſition and ſevere Uſage, he proceeded to carry them: For when he wrote his Book concerning the Babyloniſh Captivity, his Sentiments were altogether different from what he had here propoſed by Way of Submiſſion to the Pope. There he declareth himſelf intirely againſt the Church of Rome. He not only writeth againſt the Primacy of this Church which he called Babylon, and againſt Indulgences, but againſt the Number, and, in many Reſpects, againſt the Doctrine of the Sacraments. And in Revenge to the Pope, who by a Bull had ſolemnly condemned Forty-One of his Propoſitions, and ſent a Brief to Charles the Fifth, praying him to cauſe that it might be executed, He being now more enraged than ever, wrote againſt the Pope's Decree, appealed from it to a general Council, cauſing It and the Decretals to be publickly burned at Wittemberg.

4. Luther was the more encouraged to adhere to his Doctrine, becauſe he found himſelf favoured, not only by the Princes and

People

People of Germany, but by ſome Men of Diſtinction in the learned World at that Time. Zwinglius in Switzerland openly declared for his Doctrine, and imitating his Example, inveighed with great Warmth againſt the Perſon, who was appointed to publiſh the Indulgences in that Country: From declaiming againſt Indulgences, he proceeded to condemn the Invocation of Saints, the Sacrifice of the Maſs, Eccleſiaſtical Laws, Vows, Celibacy of Prieſts, and Abſtinency from Meats, yet without introducing any Change in the Outward-worſhip.

5. Philip Melancthon alſo, a grave and pious Man, of a moſt ſweet and excellent Diſpoſition, well verſed in humane and divine Literature, was Luther's particular Friend, and when the Univerſity of Paris had condemned his Opinion, he wrote a Book in his Vindication againſt them, and accompanied him at Leipſick, where he had a Conference with Eckius, who deſired to begin the Diſpute upon the Article of the Pope's Authority, but Luther looking upon it as an enſnaring Propoſition, at that time declined it.

6. It hath been thought alſo, that Luther was much animated in his Zeal againſt the Romiſh Church, by what Eraſmus wrote to him; telling him, he had not only thoſe who favoured him in the Low-Countries, but ſome of the firſt Diſtinction in England; that yet he would do well to uſe Modeſty and Diſcretion, conforming himſelf to the Example of our Lord and his Apoſtles, who, in oppoſing the received Doctrines, kept themſelves in remote and allegorical Expreſſions, and by that means prepared the Way for a more eaſy Admiſſion of the Chriſtian Doctrine, in place of the legal Inſtitutions. The Inſinuations of Eraſmus concerning Luther's violent Temper, are agreeable to Mr. Claud's Character of him in the [n] Margin.

7. Luther's Fame, and the Reputation he had with ſome learned Men, created him many Enemies; among whom he was made particularly ſenſible, how much he had provoked the Zeal

n I confeſs it were to be wiſhed, that Luther had been more temperate in his Way of Writing, and that with his great and invincible Courage, with his ardent Zeal for the Truth, with the unſhaken Conſtancy he ever manifeſted, he had diſcovered a greater Reſerve and Moderation; but theſe Faults, which are moſt commonly complexional, prevent not our Eſteem of Men, when in other Reſpects we perceive in them a good Fund of Piety, and Vertues perfectly heroick; ſuch as were ſeen to ſhine in Luther. We cannot refuſe to praiſe the Zeal of Lucifer, Biſhop of Cagliari, or to admire the great Qualities of St. Jerom, though we diſcover too much Keenneſs and Outrage in their Style. And perhaps too, there was ſome particular Neceſſity at the Time of the Reformation, to employ the ſtrongeſt Expreſſions, the better to awaken Men from that profound Slumber in which they had been ſo long: However, I grant Luther ought to have been more reſerved in his Writings. "All this, "ſays Bayl, is good and ſolid; yet a general Method of juſtifying People, that their ill Qua- "lities were very proper, conſidering the Poſture of Affairs, to produce good Effects, is a "Source of Deluſion. No-body doubts, Providence knoweth to chuſe the moſt effectual "Means to arrive at its Ends; but as ill Qualities are at certain Seaſons more proper than "the brighteſt Vertues, to execute God's Decrees, it would be very bad Reaſoning to con- "clude, that Violence and Force are commendable, upon Pretence, that the Corruption of "the World, requires the harſheſt Treatment. The Wiſdom of God is eminent, I confeſs, "in employing ſuch Inſtruments, but the Inſtruments for all that may be extremely vi- "cious."

and Animadverſion of the King of England. But before I give any Account of the Book, which this Prince condeſcended to write againſt Luther, it may not be improper to give an Account of a Letter which was written by Tonſtall, from the Diet of Wormes, ſent to aſſiſt there on the Part of our King. He writeth to the Cardinal, " That the Germans every where are ſo addicted to Lu- " ther, that rather than he ſhall be oppreſſed by the Pope's Autho" rity, a Hundred thouſand of the People will ſacrifice their Lives,
" who have repreſented to the Emperor, that beſides his Lear" ning, he is a Man of Vertue and Probity. He offereth to make " his Defence, and retract thoſe Opinions which he cannot de" fend, by Authority of the Holy Scriptures. After he perceived " that he ſhould not be admitted to come to the [o] Diet, for which " he had once Liberty and Safe-conduct granted, (tho' afterwards " revoked at the Inſtance of the Pope's Orators) deſpairing to be " heard in his own Defence, he did openly in the Town of Wit-
" tenberg, gather the People and the Univerſity together, and burn
" the [p] Decretals, &c. as Books erroneous, as he there declared, and
" the Declaration he cauſed to be printed in the Dutch Tongue, and " diſperſed it about the Country, which hath been ſince tranſlated by
" ſome idle Perſon into Latin, a Copy whereof I ſend to your Grace
" incloſed, to the Intent your Grace may ſee it, and burn it when " you have done. And alſo that your Grace may call before you
" the Printers and Bookſellers, and give them a ſtrict Charge that they " bring none of his Books into England, or tranſlate them into En-
" gliſh.

" Matters are puſhed ſo far, that Princes cannot put a Stop to them.
" The Original was the great Sum of Money (from which the Peo" ple would have the Country diſcharged) that goeth every Year to " Rome for Annates; and the Benefices conferred on worthleſs and " illiterate Perſons, who ſerve the Pope in Quality of domeſtick
" Servants, and even ſuch as Cookes and Grooms; ſo that the eaſieſt
" Expedient, I can think of, is, that the Pope ſhould condeſcend " to loſe the ſaid Annates, or appoint ſome other Diſpoſition of the " Benefices. Luther hath written a Book ſince his Condemnation, " of the Babyloniſh Captivity, wherein he holdeth, that four of the " Sacraments are only of poſitive Inſtitution, or by the Pope's Or" dinance, called Confirmation, Orders, Extreme Unction, and Matri- " mony; and that Baptiſm, the Euchariſt, and Penmance, are of evan" gelical and divine Right. They ſay, there are much more ſtrange
" Opinions in it, near to the Principles of the Bohemians; I pray
" God to keep that Book out of England.

o This muſt be underſtood of his Deſign to appear there a Second Time.
p This was Decemb. 10, 1520. Sleid.

" At

" At the Exequy of the Cardinal of Croy, in the Preſence of " the Electors, the Emperor, the Pope's Ambaſſador, and the " Cardinals, a French Preacher made a Sermon, and in the Begin- " ning of it ſaid, The Pope was the Vicar of Chriſt, in Spirituals, " and the Cardinals and Biſhops, Apoſtles. How he came to " change his Note I cannot tell, but afterwards he concluded, " when they do amiſs, the Emperor ſhould reform the Diſorders " they are guilty of, and even have a Power to that End of de- " poſing them. Upon this, the Pope's Nuncio having Commiſ- " ſion againſt Luther, laid the Premiſſes to his Charge; but hath " been openly threatned by ſeveral Gentlemen, not to meddle " with him. In the ſaid Sermon he exhorted the Emperor, and " all the Princes to go into Italy, which depends on the Empire, " and to reform ſuch Abuſes, as ſhould be found there commit- " ted. To which Advice I underſtand many of the Princes are " inclined, becauſe every one may propoſe thereby ſome private " Advantage to himſelf. The ſaid Frier (but by whom I know " not) is ordered to preach here, during the whole Seaſon of " Lent.

" Luther offereth, if the Emperor will go to Rome, to reform " the Church, to bring him a hundred thouſand Men; whereunto " the Emperor, as a virtuous Prince, will not hearken. The ſame " Luther hath many great Clerks that hold with him, except in " ſome Points; in Reſpect to which, he hath advanced more, " than he can, or will juſtify; to the Intent, that in the Sequel " he might be heard, and a Council called for Reformation; " whereof the Pope will not hear, but ſtandeth to his Sentence of " Condemnation."

8. The Sentiments of Tonſtall, in relation to the Conduct and Doctrine of Luther, were at that Time highly agreeable to thoſe of our Court, and eſpecially of the King, whatever Reaſon his Majeſty found afterwards to diſſent or vary from them. His Zeal for the received Doctrines was ſo much irritated by Luther's Book, that he condeſcended to enter the Liſts with him in Quality of a Diſputant, and thought it not below his Royal Dignity, to appear as ſuch, againſt a poor Frier, in Defence of the Truth. I ſhall not pretend to give the Reader an Abſtract of his Book, whereof he may conſult the Original or the Engliſh Verſion, but only take notice of ſome Particulars in the Introductory Part of it addreſſed to the Pope. His Majeſty repreſents to his Holineſs, " he may " be ſurpriſed to find, that a Perſon bred up to War and the Af- " fairs of State, ſhould take upon him a Province of this Kind, " and enter into Controverſy with one, the conſtant Employment " of whoſe Life has been the Study of Letters. But how unequal " ſoever the Conteſt might be, on that Account, the Danger,

" which the Church was in from the Growth of Hereſy and " Schiſm, had awakened and animated his Reſolution to the Com- " bat. That it was Time to fortify and advance againſt an Ene- " my, who had already taken the Field, and committed great De- " vaſtation. That in a Controverſy of this Nature, Neutrality " and Indifference are not to be admitted, and that his moderate " Abilities therefore could not excuſe his being a bare and indo- " lent Spectator of it. Beſides, he was willing to improve the " Occaſion of ſhewing his Regard to the Holy See, as well as his " Concern for the Honour and Intereſts of Religion in general. " And tho' his Talents were but few and ſlender, he hopes the " Grace of God will ſupply his Defects, and aſſiſt him. Yet he " would not be thought altogether unprepared, or incapacitated for " the Charge: The Principles of Religion ſupplying the beſt Rules " of Civil Government, and upon which the Throne is moſt ſe- " curely eſtabliſhed, he had employed ſome Time in the Study " of them, and had cultivated no Part of Learning with equal " Pleaſure or Satisfaction. And tho' he had not made any con- " ſiderable Progreſs in it, yet he hoped, he was in ſome compe- " tent Meaſure qualified to inſtruct the Generality, and to de- " tect the Fallacies in Luther's Method of Reaſoning. Suppor- " ted with theſe Hopes, he had engaged in the Diſpute, and to " render his Performance of more general Uſe and Influence, " had prefixed the Name of his Holineſs to it, who had already " aſſerted his Authority, and diſcountenanced Luther's Hereſy by " the Cenſures of the Church. So that if there were Perſons, who " ſhould be ſtill infected with any Remains of it, they might be " undeceived and convinced by the Reaſons oppoſed to it. That " he was rather induced to take this Method in reſpect to a com- " mon Inclination of Men, to whom it is more agreeable that we " ſhould perſuade, than by any Means overawe, or compel their " Aſſent. As to the Succeſs of his Deſign, he is not capable of " determining any thing: The Deciſion, as to that Point, " muſt be left to the Judgement of his Holineſs, to whoſe " Cenſure and Correction every Thing, that he hath written, is " ſubmitted."

9. This Book was preſented in full Conſiſtory by Dr. John Clark Dean of Windſor, who made an Oration upon the Delive- ry of it. And it was received with all imaginable Ceremony and Demonſtration of Reſpect. The Pope, in Token of the high Value which he ſet upon this royal and learned Preſent, give the Embaſ- ſador firſt his Foot, and afterwards his Cheek to kiſs; then receiv- ing the Book richly Bound, which Lord Herbert ſaith, he remem- bered to have ſeen in the Vatican Library, his Holineſs made the fol- lowing Speech.

" No-

" Nothing could have been more acceptable to us, and to our " venerable Brethren, than this Book, which we receive with great " Joy in Reſpect to the King the Author of it, that moſt potent, " moſt wiſe, and truly chriſtian Prince; we are not able to de- " termine, whether our Praiſe or Admiration be more owing to " him; he having firſt, with happy Succeſs, ſubdued and reduced " the Enemies of the Church, by Force of Arms, who ſought to " rend the Seamleſs-coat of Chriſt; by that Means having reſtored " Peace to the Church, and to this Holy See. But now, as he " hath by Writing this Book, diſcovered both an Inclination and " Capacity to conflict with ſo horrid a Monſter, and given us " equal Proofs of the Strength and Penetration of his Mind, and " the Elegancy of his Stile, we render our moſt humble Thanks " to the Creator of all Things, for his Grace, in raiſing up ſuch " a Prince for the Defence of his Church and the See-Apoſtolick; " praying the ſame God to grant him a happy Life, and Succeſs " to all his Deſires here, and hereafter to crown him with ever- " laſting Glory and Felicity, in his heavenly Kingdom. And ſo " far as our Prayers, or any Powers conferred on us by God, may " render us in any Kind inſtrumental to the Good or Service of " the ſaid moſt wiſe King, we ſhall never be wanting in the due " Uſe and Application of them."

10. The Pope, according to his Promiſe, conferred on his Majeſty the Title, Defender of the Faith: It had been under Conſi- deration before by the Cardinals, whether they ſhould pitch upon any of the following Titles, Protector or Defender of the Romiſh Church, or of the Apoſtolick See; or the Apoſtolick, or Orthodox King; but at laſt that of Defender of the Faith was preferred, for which a Bull was drawn up, and ſent under the Hands of the Pope, and the College of Cardinals to the King; a Tranſcript of whoſe Atteſta- tion may at large be conſulted in Mr. Rymer. But becauſe the Bull itſelf giveth a good Light into the State of Religion in general at that Time, and the Sentimenes of the King particularly in Rela- tion to it, I ſhall for the Sake of the Engliſh Reader, refer him to a Verſion of it in the [q] Collections.

11. How little our Court or the Kingdom in general was, at that Time, in a Diſpoſition to receive the Doctrine of Luther, may be further collected from the Oration of Clark upon the Delivery of the King's Books: It is too long to be tranſcribed: I ſhall only exhibit a Paragraph of it relating to this Obſervation. Beſides, the Invectives in it againſt Luther are ſo ſtrong, and expreſſed in Terms, that appear ſo repugnant to the human and generous Temper of the Engliſh Nation, and indeed to the Rules, which all Perſons who would ſpeak or write politely, will preſcribe to themſelves, that I ſhould not, for this Reaſon, recite that Speech at large.

" Let others, ſaith he, talk of other Nations; certainly my na" tive Country Brittany, called England by our modern Coſmo-
" graphers, ſituated in the utmoſt Part of the World, and ſepa-
" rated from the Continent by the Ocean, as it has not been infe" rior either to Spain, France, Italy, or Germany, in the Expreſſi-
" ons of a holy Zeal for the Worſhip of God, the true Chriſtian
" Faith, and due Obedience to the Church of Rome, I may add,
" to Rome itſelf; ſo there is no Nation that doth more impugn
" this Monſter, and the Hereſies revived by him, and by which " they are more condemned and deteſted: But the firſt and great-
" eſt Share of this Praiſe is owing to him, whom I have now had " the Honour to mention, King Henry, the moſt devoted Son of " your Holineſs; who ſo ſoon as he underſtood how much the " Dignity of that Government, wherewith you are inveſted,
" which is adorned by your Vertue, and aggrandiſed by your Acti" ons, had ſuffered ſo many bitter Invectives, together with the
" univerſal Church, by this Son of Perdition, did not only ingage
" perſonally in this pious Work, wherein the Errors of that im-
" pious Man are learnedly confuted; But the moſt learned Cler" gy alſo of the Realm, have, to the utmoſt of their Power, en" deavoured to diſſipate and remove out of the Minds of the " People, all Fears, Doubts, and Scruples, that might any Ways
" happen to poſſeſs or diſturb the Conſciences of the weaker Sort.
" So that with us the Church of God is in profound Tranquillity:
" No Differences, no Diſputes, no ambiguous Words, Murmu-
" ring, or Complaints are heard among the People; all Troubles
" of Mind, all Apprehenſions of ſtrange Revolutions in the " World, and of the Reign of Antichriſt, are now vaniſhed."

12. If this Speech wholly, or in great Part, repreſented the Diſpoſition of the Clergy and People, and the State of Religion in England, at that Time; the Reformation which was ſhortly after here introduced, contrary to ſuch ſtrong Appearances againſt all Means of introducing it, was ſo much the more unaccountable in any human Way of calculating future Events, and can only be aſcribed to an extraordinary Interpoſition of Providence, which maketh Things that are not, or which do not ſeem to act with any proportional Force or Efficacy, to bring to nought Things that are.

CHAP.

CHAP. XIX.

1. More concerning the general State of the Controverſy about Religion at this Time, and the Character of Luther. 2. The King's Book aſcribed by Luther to the Biſhop of Rocheſter. 3. Whether the Cardinal was concerned in it. 4. Conjectures why he might oppoſe all Innovations in Reſpect to the eſtabliſhed Doctrines, Worſhip, and Government of the Church. 5. His Commiſſion to all the Biſhops in England. 6. Concerning a Bull of the Pope to him. 7. Certain Propoſitions of Luther, that do not appear altogether tenable. 8. A Reflection in particular upon One of them. 9. An offenſive Paſſage in his Book againſt the King. 10. The Cardinal paſſeth a Cenſure upon his Errors.

1. THAT extraordinary, and in a Manner, ſubitaneous Change in the Sentiments and Principles of Men, relating to Religion, which afterwards ſpread itſelf through all Parts of the Kingdom, was ſtill more ſurprizing, as in the Books which began to be written about the controverted Points at that Time, there did not appear to be on either Side, that Force, Strength, or Perſpicuity of Argument, which was ſufficient to produce in the Minds of Men a general Conviction or Change of Principle. And for a conſiderable Time, many learned Men, both among the Clergy and Laity, ſtill adhered to the received Doctrines. In Germany, where there ſeemed to be already a general Diſpoſition in the People for a Change in Religion, Luther, who was in a Manner idolized among them, had ſo great Authority, that very much depended upon his perſonal Conduct. The Princes who favoured him, did not do it ſo much in Oppoſition to the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, in the Communion of which they ſtill continued, as to the Eccleſiaſtical Polity, whereby the Pope and Court of Rome then conducted themſelves, and certainly aſſumed more in Matters of mere temporal Conſideration, than was juſt or reaſonable. They were glad, however, to have their Remonſtrances againſt the papal Encroachments, ſupported by the Authority of Luther; a Man of a fluent Tongue and ready Wit; enterpriſing and magnanimous; of an aſſured Manner and Addreſs, with a competent Share of Learning: So that it highly concerned the Pope and his Collegues, to ſuppreſs ſo dangerous an Enemy; or if any practicable Means could be applied that Way, to make him a Friend. And therefore when Leo the Tenth aſſembled the Cardinals, to adviſe with them concerning the proper Methods of Proceeding againſt Luther, tho' all of them condemned his Conduct, yet it was wiſhed by ſome, that more Reſpect had been ſhewn to 1520. 1521.

him, when in humble and modeſt Terms, he ſubmitted himſelf to the Judgement of the Church. Others thought it a good Way to bring him over, if that could have been done handſomely, by making him an Offer of ſome conſiderable Eccleſiaſtical Preferment. But the Generality thought the Diſtemper was now grown too rageing and violent for Lenitives; and therefore adviſed the Application of more violent Methods; but which only ſerved the more to irritate Luther, and his Adherents, and put them upon ſuch Meaſures, and further Inquiries concerning the State of Religion, as occaſioned ſo general a Seceſſion of the Weſtern Church, from the Obedience, they had formerly profeſſed and paid to the See of Rome.

2. Some have thought, that the King's Book againſt Luther was principally compoſed under the Direction of Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, if he was not properly the Author of it; and for this Reaſon, they who took upon them to collect and publiſh the Works written by that learned and pious Prelate, have inſerted this Book among them. But tho' a Similitude of Stile has been pretended between that Book, and other Parts of the Collection confeſſedly his own, yet there doth not appear any ſufficient Reaſon to doubt, but that the King had the chief Hand in the Compoſition of it; tho' Fiſher might perhaps be conſulted, while it was drawing up. We ought not to ſuſpect a crowned Head capable, in a ſolemn and deliberate Manner, of aſſerting a Fact which he knew to be falſe. Now in a ſubmiſſive Letter which Luther ſome Time after wrote to the King, acknowledgeing his ill Behaviour, in the too warm and offenſive Animadverſions, that he had made on his Majeſty's Book, he is at the ſame Time ſo little Maſter of Addreſs, that he wounds the King in a moſt tender and ſenſible Part; telling his Majeſty, He was credibly informed that the Book of the Seven Sacraments, which paſſed under his Name, was not his own Book, but the Book of ſome artful Sophiſt, who abuſing his Majeſty's Name, did not conſider the Danger he incurred by reflecting ſo great a Diſhonour upon it. In the Anſwer which the King condeſcended to make to this Letter, he ſolemnly declareth the Book of the Seven Sacraments to be his own. And he had indeed diſcovered ſo much Learning and Judgement, and acquired ſo much Applauſe by the Publication of this Book, that he had no Reaſon to diſclaim the Character of an Author, or his Title to it: Eſpecially, if the Judgement, which one of our learned Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtorians had made of it, be well [r] founded. "As to the "Performance, the King ſeemeth to have the Better of the Con"troverſy, and generally ſpeaking, to be much the ſounder Di-

"vine. Generally ſpeaking, I ſay, his Principles are more Ca-"tholick and his Proofs more Cogent. He ſeemeth ſuperior to "his Adverſary in the Vigour and Propriety of his Stile, in the "Force of his Reaſoning, and the Learning of his Citations."

3. It is not probable, that the Cardinal was altogether unconcerned in this Controverſy. There is rather Cauſe to think, that the King, who did nothing without him, would not engage without his Advice, at leaſt in a very nice and difficult Affair, whereby in the Sequel his Dignity and Reputation might be much affected. If what ſome have conjectured be true, that the King was more eſpecially provoked, out of his great Veneration for Thomas of Aquin, to write againſt Luther, who had ſpoken very diſreſpectively of that great Schoolman, and even treated him with ſome Degree of Contempt; It is ſtill more probable that the Cardinal, who was ſo great an Admirer of the angelick Doctor, that he received a Denomination from [f] him, would be glad any Way to contribute his Endeavours towards revenging the Diſhonour done to him.

4. Others have thought the Cardinal was deſirous to engage the King in this Controverſy, that when heated with Diſpute, he might ſtill be poſſeſſed with ſtronger Prejudices againſt Lutheraniſm, ſeveral Books and Writings having been ſometime before brought over in order to diſſeminate the Principles of it in England. It appeareth ſufficiently evident, that the Cardinal was very averſe to any Innovation in Religion, with Reſpect to Doctrine, Worſhip, or the Government of the Church then eſtabliſhed; though he uſed his beſt Efforts, in order to a Reformation of Manners, and eſpecially of all ſcandalous Diſorders, whether among the regular or ſecular Clergy. He ſecretly perhaps ſaw and lamented the Errors of the Church, in the Communion of which he lived, on all the other Accounts, and wiſhed a Regulation in a ſober, pious, and regular Way. But the tumultuous Proceedings, and ungovernable Licentiouſneſs of the Multitude formerly in Bohemia and now in Germany, on Occaſion of introducing a Change in the eſtabliſhed Religion, might make him afraid that any Attempts of introducing it here, would not be better conducted than in other Parts, or on former Occaſions; or profeſſing Obedience to the Church of Rome, tho' he knew the Corruptions in it to be great, yet he apprehended greater might follow upon the Principles of thoſe, who pretended to reform, without any other Commiſſion, than that of a private Spirit, or againſt a ſuperior ſtanding Authority, and which he acknowledged to be ſo. He might poſſibly think, a Government, in many Reſpects defective, or irregular, yet was better than no Government. He might propoſe to himſelf the Example of our

Lord,

Lord, who lived in Communion with the Jewiſh Church, and never commanded his Apoſtles to ſeparate from it, notwithſtanding the Governours of it taught for Doctrines, the Commandments of Men, tho" he had certainly the moſt inconteſted Authority to that End, had he thought fit to exerciſe it. But he would not, ſay they, upon whoſe Principles I now argue, make uſe of a particular Priviledge, againſt a general Obligation, and in Breach of publick Order; the Violation of which, nothing but the laſt Extremity can excuſe, and ſcarce any Thing can compenſate. As to the Pretence of the Reformation from the high Claims of the ſacerdotal Powers, and of the temporal Priviledges and Revenues annexed to the Clergy, he might ſuſpect, what indeed afterwards happened, that Reformers, in the Heat and Tranſport of their Zeal, are very apt to run from one Extreme to another: That the Noiſe, for Inſtance, and Clamour which had been raiſed againſt the Abuſe of the Epiſcopal Powers, might, in the Conſequence tend, as the Event afterwards proved in ſeveral Countries, to the utter Extinction of the Epiſcopal Order among them: That tho' very great Privileges and large Revenues were then appropriated to the Clergy, yet a Reformation on that Account, eſpecially under the Conduct of the ſecular Powers, according to Luther's Propoſal, when he made an Offer of a Hundred thouſand Men to the Emperor, if he would lead them to the Gates of Rome, in Order to reform the Pope, might poſſibly be carried ſo far as to deprive them of their juſt and indubitable Rights. And if this was his Calculation, the ſacrilegious Invaſions which were afterwards made in many Places, both upon the Rights and the Revenues of the Clergy, plainly demonſtrate, that he was not much miſtaken.

5. Whether theſe were the Cardinal's real Sentiments, upon which he oppoſed the Progreſs of Luther's Doctrine, I ſhall not pretend to determine. It is ſufficient to my Purpoſe, that in Fact, he did oppoſe it with much Vigour; I only mention theſe as probable Conjectures in Reference to the Motives upon which he might be induced to do it: And to render his Endeavour to that End more effectual, being inveſted with the Legatine Authority, and animated with the late Title conferred on the King, he ſent a [t] Commiſſion to all the Biſhops of England, requiring them to order Luther's Books and Writings to be brought in, and delivered up to them, in whoſe Hands ſoever they were, or might be found, and from them to be tranſmitted to himſelf, under Pain of Excommunication and the Cenſures due to Hereticks. After a pompous Recital of the Cardinal's Titles and Powers at the Head of this [u] Com-

miſſion, which is addreſſed to all and ſingular Provinces, Cities, and Places within the Kingdom, and other Places adjoining to it; He repreſenteth, That the moſt holy Father, having condemned, upon mature Conſultation, the Doctrines of Luther, as moſt pernicious and heretical, tending to ſeduce weak Minds, and being oppoſite to the Catholick Faith, had condemned his Books, and declared in an authentick and judicial Manner, his Condemnation of them to all the Faithful, and forbidden all Perſons, whether Sacred or Civil, of what Diſtinction ſoever, under the ſevereſt Penalties, to aſſert, defend, or favour any of his Errors, or to read, to publiſh, or diſpenſe privately or publickly, any of his Books, according to the Bull lately ſent to him from his Holineſs. Therefore, in Virtue of his Legatine Authority, and the Obedience due to the Holy See, he thinketh it incumbent on him to prevent the Spreading of this Peſtilence; to which End he had not only expreſs Command from the King, who as the great Defender of the Chriſtian Faith, had been ſpecially moved and deſired by the Pope to exterminate that Hereſy, but alſo had ſolemnly conferred with his Grace the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and received his Advice and Approbation, as well as of other Prelates; and therefore commanded that all Perſons whatever, veſted with any Authority, as all Abbots, Priors, Governors of religious Houſes of what Order ſoever, Exempt or not Exempt, and that all Rectors, Biſhops, and Curates of parochial Churches, ſhould by the Biſhop, be admoniſhed to bring in or deliver up ſuch Books as had been compoſed by the ſaid Martin, or which went under his Name. In Order to which, in every Church, during the Celebration of Maſs, Notice was to be given to the People preſent, the firſt Lord's Day or Holiday, that whoever had ſuch Books in their Poſſeſſion, whether in the Latin or the Vulgar Tongue, ſhould within fifteen Days after ſuch Monition, deliver them up, or cauſe them to be delivered up, to the Biſhop or his Commiſſary; and upon Neglect or Refuſal to deliver them up within the Time ſpecified, ſhould incur the Sentence of the greater Excommunication.

6. The Pope's Bull to which the Cardinal here referreth, is a Direction to him to ſuppreſs, by all proper Methods, Luther's Books: But to the general Prohibition againſt Reading them, there is an Exception in Reſpect to thoſe, who ſhould read them with a ſincere and pious Deſign of confuting the Errors contained in them. This was to remove the Scruples of ſome Perſons, who, from the ſevere Comminations in the Pope's Letters againſt all Perſons without Diſtinction, in whoſe Hands Luther's Books ſhould be found, might apprehend themſelves obnoxious to them. And therefore the Pope declareth it was not his Intention, that they, who read Luther's Books with a pious Mind, ſhould be comprehended in the ſtrict ſtrict Letter of the Bull; and for that Reaſon he empowers the Cardinal, notwithſtanding the ſtrict and general Order to burn, or not to read ſuch Books, to grant a Liberty of reading them to ſuch Perſons, who for the Honour of Religion, or the Holy See, ſhould ſincerely propoſe to confute them.

7. In the Commiſſion from the Cardinal, all Biſhops are enjoined to ſet, upon the Folding-Doors of their Cathedral-Churches, a Liſt of Luther's peſtilent Errors, which was alſo to be placed upon the Doors of Churches, whether Parochial or belonging to the Regulars, as they were ſpecified in a Bull of the Pope in the Year 1520, and whereof the Cardinal tranſmitted a Copy with his Commiſſion. They were Forty-Two in Number: Several of them ſeem capable of being explained in a good Senſe, at leaſt in a Senſe not very offenſive or heretical. I ſhall only recite thoſe, which if they were juſtly charged on Luther, it will be difficult to account for them upon any clear, ſolid, or catholick Principles.

" VI. Contrition, which proceedeth from Remorſe of Mind, " and Deteſtation of Sin, when a Man reflecteth upon his paſt evil " Actions, upon the Guilt and Demerit of them, upon the Loſs " of Heaven, and the Danger of eternal Damnation; is ſuch a " Contrition, as maketh a Hypocrite, or rather a Sinner.

" XIV. In the Sacrament of Penance, and the Remiſſion of a " Fault, the Pope or Biſhop doth not more than the loweſt Prieſt. " Yea, where there is not a Prieſt, then any Chriſtian may do as " well; yea, even a Woman or a Child." What he advanceth in this Article, is more ſurpriſing, as in ſome of the foregoing Articles, he appeareth to carry the ſacerdotal Power of Abſolution to the greateſt Height.

" XII. Do not, ſaith he, by any Means believe, that you are " abſolved on Account of your Contrition, but becauſe of the " Words of Chriſt, whatſoever ye ſhall bind on Earth ſhall be bound " in Heaven; here, I ſay, Truſt. If you obtain the Prieſt's Ab- " ſolution, and believe ſtrongly, you are abſolved, and ſhall be " truly abſolved, whatſoever becomes of Contrition.

" XV. None ought to anſwer a Prieſt, that he is Contrite, nor " the Prieſt to ask him.

" XXV. Chriſtians are to be taught rather to love Excommu- " nication, than to fear it.

" XXVIII.

" XXVIII. It is certain, it is not in the Power of the Church, " or of the Pope, to decree Articles of Faith, no nor to decree " the Laws of Manners, or of good Works.

" XXXII. In every good Work the juſt Man ſinneth.

8. If Luther only intends by the laſt Propoſition, that there is ſome latent Error or Defect in our beſt Actions, either as to the Motives, the Manner, or End of them, what he ſaith may be admitted. But if we are to explain his Words by the Doctrines, advanced by him in other Places, where he hath more fully declared himſelf both upon the Subject of Liberty and Contrition, it will be very difficult here to defend him. In the Theſes, for Inſtance, publiſhed by him in the Year 1519, upon this Principle, That Man is juſtified by Faith: He carried Matters ſo far, that he had the Aſſurance to maintain, not only " That good Works are not " neceſſary to Salvation; but that how good ſoever they might " appear, they were mortal Sins; That Man has no Liberty; " That invincible Ignorance doth not excuſe; and, That the in- " voluntary Motions of Concupiſcence are Sins." Theſe were Maxims which afforded Luther's Adverſaries ample Matter of Triumph againſt him, notwithſtanding the Advantage he had over them, in other Reſpects. Men will never be perſuaded, that a wiſe, a good, and juſt God, will impute thoſe Defects or Actions to them as Sins, which were abſolutely anavoidable, and wherein they had, properly ſpeaking, neither any Power nor Choice. No Truth in the World ſeems more demonſtrable than the following Propoſitions, That Freedom of Choice is neceſſary to the Morality of our Actions; That no Man ought to be treated as a Sinner, or puniſhed, except for voluntary Crimes, or for Crimes which are the natural and proper Effects of the Abuſe, which he may ſometime have made of his Liberty. Men will be very apt to ſuſpect, a Religion cannot come from God, which is inconſiſtent with the fundamental Principles of moral Truth and Equity; which teacheth, That God will inflict Puniſhment, eternal Puniſhment, upon his Creatures, becauſe they have done what they could not poſſibly avoid; or have not done what he afforded them no poſſible Means of doing; and which they had no Power to do of themſelves.

9. Luther at other Times expreſſed himſelf in Terms ſo offenſive and unguarded, in Relation to good Works, as tended much to expoſe him to Cenſure, and his Cauſe to Prejudice. In the Book written by him againſt the King, he ſaith, " It is a ſacrile- " gious and wicked Thing to endeavour to pleaſe God by good " Works, and not by Faith alone." And in his Babyloniſh Captivity, tivity, cited by the King, in Anſwer to Luther's Letter of Submiſſion to him, are theſe Words; "You ſee then, how rich a "baptized Chriſtian is; who, tho' he could be ſuppoſed willing "to loſe his own Soul, yet could not endanger the Loſs of it, by "any Sins whatever, unleſs he would not believe: For there is "no Sin damnable, but that of Incredulity only." The King having oppoſed to theſe bold and indefenſible Aſſertions ſeveral Texts of Scripture, proceedeth to charge Luther with impairing the Faculties of the Mind, and deſtroying the Freedom of the Will to ſuch a Degree, as to render Men utterly incapable of doing or deſigning any Thing that is good. To make him, in all his Motions relating to Morality or Religion, a mere Machine; and ſo entirely paſſive, as to have no Power even of co-operating with the Grace of God. Which Aſſertion is conſidered by the King, as a moſt peſtilent Hereſy, highly derogatory to the Juſtice of God, and tending to excuſe all the Sins of Men, by charging them to inevitable Neceſſity, and the Force of God's abſolute and irreverſible Decrees.

10. The Cardinal, at the Foot of his Commiſſion, to which I return, after having recited the Errors of Luther, concludeth with the following Cenſure upon them. "Which ſeveral Errors, of "how malignant and pernicious a Nature they are; how much "they tend to ſcandalize Chriſtians in general, and to ſeduce pious "and weak Minds; how oppoſite they are to all the Rules of Cha"rity, to the Reverence due to our holy Mother the Church, to "the general Society of the Faithful, and to the common Intereſts "of the Faith; and of how ill Effect towards enervating the Force "of all Eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline, and of Obedience, which is the "Foundation, and Source of all Vertues, no ſober or conſiderate "Perſon can be ignorant."

1. DURING the Proceedings of the Cardinal, in order both to prevent the Importation of Luther's Books into England, and if they ſhould be imported to ſuppreſs them, and to ſtop the Progreſs of his Doctrine, the Jealouſies between the Imperial Court and that of France, which the Cardinal was ſuſpected ſecretly to foment, ſtill continued, and viſibly tended more and more to produce, in the Conſequence, an open Rupture. Francis grounded his Suſpicion of the Cardinal upon the Enterview, which the Emperor had with the King of England, pretended by our Court to be accidental, but which ſufficiently appears to have been made with a formed Intention. For Charles, having Notice of the great Preparations on both Sides towards it, thought it concerned him by any Means, if any could be found practicable, to fruſtrate the Deſign of it. And finding his Embaſſadors had not ſucceeded in their Negotiations to that End, reſolved to try what Effect it might produce, if he ſhould go into England, and confer perſonally with the King upon that Occaſion: And therefore took the Opportunity, in the Manner before recited, to make him a Viſit; but yet to no Effect, as to his Deſign of preventing the appointed Enterview. Both Sides had advanced ſo far in their Engagements upon that Article, that a Retreat could neither in Honour nor Decency be admitted. On the Part of Francis a ſolemn Proclamation had been made at the Engliſh Court, by a King at Arms, declaring, That in June following, the two Kings of England and France, with fourteen Aids, would anſwer all Gentlemen, that ſhould preſent themſelves, at Tilt, Tournay, and Barriers: And the like Proclamation was made, on the Part of England, by Clarencieux, at the Court of France. There were alſo Defiances, according to Form, ſent by our Court to the Low-Countries, Burgundy, and Germany; and by France, to Italy and Spain. It has been ſuſpected by ſeveral of our Hiſtorians, there were other Reaſons reſpecting certain private Views of the Cardinal, why the King declined all Motions of the Emperor tending to obſtruct this Deſign. I ſhall neither diſſemble thoſe Reaſons, nor repeat here what I have ſaid before on the like Occaſion, concerning the Diſingenuity of aſcribing to ill and ſiniſter Arts, Actions which may be reſolved, by an equitable Conſtruction, into good or wiſe Motives. It is however pretended, that it was not ſo much to corroborate the Alliance between the two Kings, by this Enterview, or to give the World a greater Idea of the Grandeur of the Engliſh Nation by the numerous and ſplendid Appearance of our Nobility, and other Perſons of Condition appointed to attend it, that the 1521.

Cardinal oppoſed all the Overtures made by the Emperor againſt it, as that he might have an Opportunity of gratifying a private Affectation for Pomp and external Oſtentation, and for ſhewing himſelf in the Preſence of two Kings, both which he was now ſuppoſed to govern. Others thought, he might be influenced no leſs by a Motive of Avarice than of Vanity, and that he was more deſirous the Enterview ſhould take Effect, from an Expectation of thoſe rich Preſents, which he had a Proſpect of receiving by Means of it.

2. As to another Article propoſed by the Emperor to our King, relating to his Friendſhip, and his Aſſiſtance againſt France, he received a more favourable Anſwer; to which, it was alſo ſurmiſed, his large Gifts to the Cardinal, and particularly the Promiſe of making him Pope, did not a little contribute. During the Time he was entertained by the King, and his Aunt Queen Catherine, at Canterbury, to which Place he was conducted by the King from Dover-Caſtle, he diſcovered the Force of that Paſſion he had formerly entertained for the King's Siſter, now Queen-Dowager of France, to whom he had been contracted: For ſhe being preſent, he was under ſo great Diſorder and Surprize at the Sight of her, that, tho' much invited, he could by no Means be perſuaded to dance, which was attributed not ſo much to his Spaniſh Gravity, (that both on Account of his Age, and of the Company he was in, might have been diſpenſed with) as to the freſh and powerful Impreſſions made on him by that celebrated Beauty.

3. The Manner of the Emperor's Reception and Entertainment, gave great Umbrage to Francis; but his Apprehenſions of ſome clandeſtine Meaſures on the Part of England were much augmented, when the Emperor with the Lady Margaret his Aunt, in July following, met the King of England at Graveling, where ſuch Civilities were exchanged between them, as left little Room to doubt of their having contracted a firm and determined Friendſhip; yet our King was ſo juſt to his Engagements to Francis, that he propoſed to Monſieur de la Roch the French Miniſter, a Renewal of the Tripartite-League; which, upon one Pretence or other, Francis declined or deferred to confirm, being more intent upon his new Schemes projected in Italy, than deſirous to enter into a former Engagement, that interfered with them. Yet the French reſented this ſecond Enterview ſtill more for the two following Reaſons; That Charles confiding in the Friendſhip of our King, had conſtituted him Arbiter of all emergent Differences between the Imperial and the French Court; and, That there was a private Report of a Marriage propoſed by the Lady Margaret, between the Emperor, and, young as ſhe then was, the Princeſs Mary.

4. By

4. By Degrees the Diſſentions and Animoſities between thoſe two Powers grew to ſuch a Height, that they prepared for War; and Acts of Hoſtility were ſoon after committed on both Sides. In the mean time the Cardinal was ſent over to Calais in Quality of a Mediator, and with the Character of King Henry's Lieutenant, to compoſe the Differences between them. Francis having before publiſhed a Memorial repreſenting, "That whereas there had been formerly certain Treaties of Peace and Confederacy ſubſiſting between him and the King of Caſtile, of which there had been an Infraction made by the ſaid King, in Reſpect to ſeveral Articles; particularly, by his Invading, after a hoſtile Manner, certain of the French Territories; by his beſieging the Caſtle of Maſſencourt, and levelling it with the Ground; for which Cauſe he had been obliged, for the neceſſary Defence of his Kingdom and Dominions thereunto belonging, to raiſe an Army at a great Charge, yet with a ſenſible Reluctance, of which the King of England having Advice, and being deſirous to mediate Peace, did, as became a common Friend and Confederate, recommend to him, That deſiſting from all Thoughts and Operations of War, he ſhould renew the former Amity and Friendſhip with the ſaid King; and that being alſo deſirous of Peace, and having, in Contemplation of it, entered into thoſe Treaties; that he might at the ſame Time avoid the Effuſion of Chriſtian Blood, and teſtify the juſt Deference he had to his ſaid Brother the King of England, and to his amicable Advice and Interpoſition, did conſent, upon the Faith and Word of a King, that he would be determined by his Mediation, or that of his Lieutenant in the Town of Calais, as to all Matters of Injuries or Complaints on either Side, relating to the Contravention of the ſaid Treaties. And to the End the ſaid Treaties might be renewed and fortified after ſuch a Manner, that they ſhould be kept with all due Sincerity, and no fraudulent or ſiniſter Arts be employed in Breach or Violation of them; and if the King of Caſtile would ſend his Ambaſſadors to the Place, and at the Time appointed, he promiſed alſo to ſend Miniſters on his Part, furniſhed with proper and ſufficient Powers to the ſame End; who, reſpectively, ſhould lay before the ſaid Lieutenant a Detail of Matters, relating to the Inſtructions, in any Kind, of the ſaid Treaties, and to the Damages or Expences conſequent to them; that full and equal Reparations be made to the Party injured. And the Remonſtrances on both Sides being heard, the ſaid Lieutenant might, by Way of Conference or Advice, amicably compoſe all Differences depending between the two Powers; that yet, to render his Sentence deciſive, the Concurrence of the Ambaſſadors, and of the Pope, ſhould be required." 1521.

5. Accord-

5. According to the Tenor of this Memorial, the King, on the Twenty-ninth of the ſame Month, gave two Commiſſions to the Cardinal, in Quality of his Lieutenant, one more [x] Special, to empower him to treat with the King of France, the other to treat, under the ſame Character, with any Chriſtian Prince, State, or Potentate whatever.

6. When the Cardinal executed his Commiſſion by Conſent of both Powers at [y] Calais, he was attended by their reſpective Miniſters. But it doth not ſufficiently appear what certain Grounds Lord Herbert had to ſay, that he was not thought by Francis an equal Judge, who therefore declined, as much as he could, his Arbitrement. That Prince might eaſily conclude, when he had once referred himſelf in general, to the King's Lieutenant, who would be the Perſon inveſted with that Character. There had paſs'd indeed formerly, as his Lordſhip obſerveth, Jealouſies between our King and Francis, and Wolſey might have great Dependance upon the Promiſe of the Emperor, relating to the Popedom: But theſe Preſumptions, ſtrong as they are, ſhould not be admitted in Proof of a Fact, which doth not appear, and againſt all Appearances from a Fact, which afterwards confeſſedly happened. Whether indeed the Cardinal, in mediating an Accommodation between theſe two Princes, obſerved that exact Neutrality which the Office of a Mediator ſuppoſeth, I ſhall not preſume to ſay; but ſhould rather judge, from certain Circumſtances in the Conduct of this Affair, that notwithſtanding the Truſt and Confidence repoſed in him by the two Powers, he was rather inclined to favour the Emperor. However, he did not fail to communicate to the King, the Reaſons alledged by the French for beginning the Operations of War on their Part, which were, That the Emperor did not reſtore Navarre, as he was obliged to do by the Treaty of Noyon; That he refuſed to pay the Penſion for Naples; That he did not do Homage to Francis for ſuch Lands as he held of him in Flanders; and, That he procured the Pope to make War upon him in Italy.

7. The Cardinal interpoſing, made Anſwer, That the Treaty of Noyon was too diſadvantagious to the Emperor; and then demanding of the French, what they would firſt ask, they anſwer'd, The Reſtitution of Navarre, the Penſion for Naples, Recognition of his Superiority for the Low-Countries, and Aſſurance that the Marriage ſhould be perfected between the Emperor, and a Daughter of France. To the principal Article he anſwer'd, That before a Kingdom ſhould be reſtored, the Title was to be tried; wherefore if they would condeſcend to a Ceſſation of Arms for ſix or ſeven Years, the King his Maſter would be glad in the mean Time to adjuſt all Differences between them. But they declined this Expedient, ſaying, They muſt either have their Demands, or War. Their Claims indeed on both Sides were ſo high and incompatible, and aſſerted with ſo much Heat, that the Cardinal found it very difficult to bring them to a Temper on either Side, even when the Merits of the Caſe were moſt clear. For the Homage in particular required by the French for Flanders and Artois, which as being formerly held of the Crown of France, ſeemed to admit no Diſpute; the Emperor refuſed it, upon a Reaſon, the Weakneſs of which diſcovered it ſelf at firſt Sight: That Eſtate, he ſaid, being devolved upon an Emperor, it acquired thereby a higher Relation and Dignity than could be ſubmitted to any inferior Power. To which it was very well and fully anſwered by the French, in few Words, That it could not be derogatory to the Rights or Honour of any Perſon, to render what was due. Again: They had their different Pretenſions to Milan; whereof the Inveſtiture having been obtained by Lewis the Twelfth, Francis, in Purſuance of his Right and Title, expelled Maximilian Sforza, whoſe Brother and Succeſſor was yet protected by the Emperor; who alſo made claim to the Duchy of Burgundy, as deſcending to him by Right of Inheritance. For tho' it was alledged, That John King of France, in whoſe Diſpoſition it was at that Time, had given it to his younger Son Philip; yet it was given with this Reſtriction, that it ſhould only deſcend to his Male-Heirs; but Charles the laſt Duke of Burgundy having but one Daughter, it conſequently of courſe reverted to the Crown of France, in Virtue of which Claim it had been annexed to that Crown by Lewis the Twelfth.

8. The Emperor otherways explaining the Conveyance made by King John, pretended to Burgundy, as belonging to him in Right of a long Succeſſion from his Anceſtors. Theſe different Pretenſions opened a Way to the Projects of War on both Sides; Francis inſiſting upon the Treaty of Noyon, made Preparations towards the Recovery of Navarre, which Charles was obliged, in Virtue of that Treaty, to reſtore.

9. The French thought, but herein they were miſtaken, the civil Commotions then in Spain would very much tend to facilitate the Execution of that Enterprize. For they were ſoon made ſenſible, it was not in Favour of any foreign Power, the Spaniards had taken Arms, but in order to the Redreſs of their own Grievances; concerning which, theſe were the three principal Grounds of their Complaint, That their King lived in foreign Parts; That he tranſported their Money to ſupply his Occaſions in thoſe Parts; and That, in Prejudice of his native Subjects, he conferred his Favours too much upon Strangers. The Laſt of theſe Articles indeed, deed, according to Sandovel, was that, which chiefly occaſioned the inteſtine Diviſions wherewith the Kingdom of Spain was then and for ſeveral Years violently agitated. The Subſtance of what that Author ſaith, relating to this Head, is, That "Charles, when he "went into Spain, did not underſtand the Spaniſh Tongue; nor "was he acquainted with the Temper or Inclinations of the Peo- "ple; ſo that notwithſtanding he wanted not Capacity, and was "of a very ingenuous Diſpoſition, yet in the Government of the "State he could do no leſs, than ſuffer himſelf to be adviſed; and "having been bred up under Zeures Duke of Sera, in the King- "dom of Naples, an able and experienced Stateſman, he com- "mitted himſelf, and the Management of his Affairs, chiefly to "his Direction. Zeures being himſelf a Stranger, would both for "his better Information, and to decline, in ſome Meaſure, the "Occaſions of Envy, conſult upon any arduous emergent Affairs, "with the Spaniſh Grandees, who yet in Hopes of ingratiating "themſelves with One who had the King's Ear, and was ſuppoſed to "govern him, would ſometimes condeſcend to make Submiſſions "to that Foreigner, that were neither conſiſtent with their Dignity "nor their Duty. Such, ſays my Author, is the Force of Ambi- "tion to corrupt the Hearts even of Noblemen, that there is no- "thing ſo mean or ſervile, to which they will not ſometimes de- "ſcend, ſo they may curry Favour with a Prince's Minion. This "Influence of Strangers gave great Diſtaſte to the People, who "could not endure that they ſhould be the diſtinguiſhed Objects "of Royal Favour, and that Zeures ſhould in a Manner do every "Thing; a Man charged with Avarice, with Extortion, and "other illegal Methods of accumulating Riches. The Flemings in "general, who attended his Majeſty, and eſpecially thoſe, who "were obſerved to receive any extraordinary Marks of his Libera- "lity, ſuffered under the like Imputation. At which, as Sando- "vel ingenuouſly acknowledgeth, we are not to wonder, ſince "the Favourites of all Princes, even where they prove to be more "juſt and deſerving, are yet generally envied and abhorred by the "People. Charles himſelf did not eſcape Cenſure. He was re- "preſented as wilful, intractable, and moroſe; but, which gave "the greateſt and moſt general Offence, as ſhewing little Regard "or Affection for the Natives of Spain."

10. The King of France in endeavouring to take Advantage of theſe inteſtine Diviſions in Spain, did not act altogether upon impolitick Grounds. It was natural enough to expect, from the audacious and high Demands of the Spaniards, that they would be willing to enter into Meaſures with a neighbouring Potentate, who had an Army at Hand, in order to ſupport and enforce them. But, notwithſtanding their many Inſolences, they ſtill retained

ſome Degree of Reſpect for their Sovereign, and for the Liberty and Intereſts of their Country in general; which they would not endanger by calling-in a foreign Power to their Aſſiſtance, who might under that Pretence, improve all emergent Occaſions to circumvent or oppreſs them, and at length perhaps entirely reduce them under a foreign Yoke. The ill Conſequences of having Recourſe to any Power abroad, towards compoſing the civil Diſtractions of a State, have been ſo viſible, and, in particular, ſo much experienced in former Times, by this Nation, that amidſt the ſeveral Errors that were committed in the Reign of James the Second, King of England, and on Account of which he was deprived of his Three Kingdoms, this will be ever mentioned as a bright and glorious Part of his Reign, that he generouſly refuſed the Overtures made to him of certain foreign Troops, at a Time when he had great Reaſon to apprehend, what ſhortly after happened, the Defection of his own. He choſe rather to endanger the Loſs of his Crown, than to declare to the whole World, by an Action, which might have been in other Reſpects of dangerous Conſequence, That he had already loſt the Affections of his People; and that it was only a precarious and mere titular Empire, which he exerciſed upon thoſe, in whom he durſt not confide.

11. Upon theſe Views, tho' the Spaniard, even in a State of actual Rebellion, would not come into his Meaſures, Francis began the War in Navarre, and proſecuted it with various Succeſs; while the Cardinal was mediating a Peace between him and the Emperor at Calais, but without being able to effect an Accommodation; their Miniſters on each Side being very high and reſolute in their Demands, and not omitting to make uſe of ſuch Arguments, in any Kind, as might be proper to incline the Cardinal to the reſpective Intereſts, of which they were ſent to take Care. But the moſt prevalent Argument which the Emperor's Miniſters were thought to have urged, was a repeated Promiſe, and Aſſurance, in his Name, that in Caſe of Leo's Death, his Imperial Majeſty would uſe his utmoſt Efforts, to the End our Cardinal might be choſen Pope. It is not improbable, that a concealed Nuncio of his Holineſs, for he was then without any Character, at Calais, contributed to diſpoſe the Cardinal more to favour the Emperor; he having privately negotiated an Accommodation between the Pope and his Imperial Majeſty; who, it was alſo ſuſpected, was the more averſe to Peace, from a Notion, wherewith he had been poſſeſſed by the Cardinal, That in caſe of a Rupture, our King would be more inclined to unite with him, as having better Pretenſions to his ancient Dominions in France, than to any Part of the Low-Countries.

1521. 1. THE Cardinal not being able or willing to find any effectual Expedient towards an Accommodation between the Empire and Francis; or if he could have found any, the Imperial Miniſters, not being yet fully inſtructed to treat of Peace; he propoſed to go himſelf in Perſon to the Emperor at Bruges, to perſuade him to Peace; or if that could not be effected, to a Truce; propoſing to the French Commiſſioners, that, in the mean Time, they ſhould continue at Calais, and write to their Maſter for more ample Credentials: With which Propoſal they appeared to be well ſatisfied, and did not ſuſpect, the Cardinal took this Journey upon any other View, than that of perſuading the Emperor to ſome amicable Agreement. But there were ſtrong Preſumptions, his Eminency went to Bruges upon theſe two other important Affairs: Firſt, to treat with the Emperor concerning a new Alliance, upon the Propoſal of a Marriage between him and the Princeſs Mary: And Secondly, concerning a Treaty of Indemnity; the Condition of which was, That in Conſideration of the Payments, which were to be made by Francis, for the Reſtitution of Tournay, provided he ſhould diſcontinue or refuſe to make them, the Emperor ſhould take the Payment of them upon himſelf, in purſuance of the League to be entred into between him and the King of England.

2. After thirteen Days the Cardinal returned from Bruges, where he had been received and entertained by the Emperor in the moſt pompous, reſpectful, and magnificent Manner, that the Circumſtance of the Place would admit, and had already ſettled Conditions with the Emperor, in caſe of a Breach between the other two Powers, which he now found, or had contrived to render unavoidable. The French Ambaſſadors impatiently had expected his Return; to whom he diſſembled his private Treaty, giving ſome Hopes, but conſidering the Situation which Affairs were then in, very ſlender Hopes of Succeſs.

3. Theſe ſeparate Negotiations of the Cardinal with the Emperor, at a Time, when he ſuſtained, by conſent of both Powers, the Character of a Mediator, do not appear perfectly reconcileable to the Duties of that Character. There were Reaſons, indeed, of Complaint on both Sides; and though the Cardinal at length declared the French guilty of the firſt Breach of Peace, by invading Navarre, in conſequence of which, our King was bound by Treaty to aſſiſt the Emperor; yet it was alledged, on the other Hand, by the French Miniſters, that the Endeavour of their Maſter to reſtore the young King of Navarre to his Right, was not be conſidered as a hoſtile Invaſion, becauſe the Emperor was bound to reſtore that Kingdom, by the Treaty of Noyon. As to the Homage alſo demanded of the Emperor for the Low-Countries, by the Crown of France, it was too clear and inconteſtable a Claim of that Crown to admit any Diſpute. But without entring into the Merits of their different Pretenſions, it may, in general, be concluded, both from the Progreſs of this Treaty, and the Events conſequent to it, that there was at leaſt ſome Degree of Partiality ſhewed to the Emperor; and that the Cardinal, whether moved by any private or publick Conſiderations, did not act in it with that perfect Indifference that became an Eccleſiaſtick, a Father, and a Prince of the Church, empowered to mediate between theſe two Potentates.

It was ſhortly after indeed repreſented as a direct Breach of Peace with England on the Part of Francis, that the Duke of Albany, contrary to his Engagement, had been permitted to return into Scotland. And this, after our ſecret Negotiations with the Emperor, and what was tranſacted by us more openly in his Favour, left no Room to doubt on which Side we were prepared to declare. Yet, tho' Francis might, perhaps, ſecretly connive at the Duke of Albany's Departure to Scotland, it did not ſufficiently, or in any authentick Manner appear, that it was done with his Privity or Conſent. And Sir Thomas Cheyney, who was ſent into France in Quality of Ambaſſador to ſucceed Fitz Williams, wrote to our Court, " That the French King proteſted, the Duke of Albany " went into Scotland without his Knowledge, and contrary to his " Will; therefore he reſolved to diſcharge the ſaid Duke of all his " Offices in France, and to confiſcate his Goods. As to the Ar- " ticle of declaring himſelf an Enemy to the States of Scotland, " his old Allies, he hoped the King of England will not require ſo " hard a Condition of him, but he would ſend an Agent into Scot- " land to recall the Duke." 1522-3.

Leaſt this Excuſe, by our own Ambaſſador, ſhould not be thought ſufficient, Francis ſends Monſieur de Paſti in Quality of Embaſſador Extraordinary to make it in Form, and at the ſame Time to offer Satisfaction for certain Engliſh Ships, that had been lately taken by the French.

4. The Cardinal, whoſe confeſſed Characters were Aſſiduity and Vigilance, knowing of how great Conſequence it was to the Safety and Benefit of England, that particular Care ſhould be taken of their Maritime Affairs, was not wanting in his Duty, while reſiding at [z] Calais, as to that important Article; the Merchants of England preparing to ſend their Ships, at the uſual Time, to Burdeaux for Wine, proper Directions were given to prevent any Attempts, which the French might make upon them at Sea, at a Juncture, when Freedom of Trade was apprehended to be ſo inſecure. The King, by his Secretary, acquainted the Cardinal with the Meaſures and Reſolutions, which had been taken to that End, requiring his Counſel and Advice upon them. In the Letter which he wrote to the King on this Occaſion, he knew how to expreſs himſelf in Terms that ſhould not give Offence to his Majeſty. He applaudeth him, in great Variety of Expreſſions, for the provident Foreſight of the Dangers to which his Navy might be expoſed, and for the Zeal which he diſcovered in general for the Preſervation of his Subjects, their Rights and Properties, as well as for the juſt and neceſſary Regard which he had to his own Honour. He is farther told by the Cardinal, that his Majeſty's great Wiſdom, in theſe timely Precautions, afforded him one of the moſt ſenſible Conſolations, that he had ever received; That no one could have formed or purſued a better Plan of Government, in theſe his Dominions, nor have more effectually provided for the Preſervation or Security of them; and tho' the King of his great Goodneſs had condeſcended to require his Advice, yet his Majeſty was much more capable himſelf of preſcribing what, on the Occaſion, was requiſite. They who have the Curioſity to conſult theſe Letters at large, may find them in the Collection, under the Number laſt mentioned.

5. Yet the French King, by the repeated Overtures he made of Satisfaction and Peace to England, ſufficiently diſcovered how unwilling he was to loſe ſo potent, and under his Circumſtances at that Time, ſo neceſſary an Ally. He acquainteth the King by his Ambaſſador, "That he hoped he will not be won from him by "his Enemy the Emperor; and yet cannot account for it, that "the King ſhould conclude the Treaty of Bruges without his "Knowledge; that he ſhould ſend Powder and other military Pro-

" viſions to Antwerp; that he ſhould ſuffer his Subjects to ſerve " under the Emperor, and that the Engliſh Scholars at Paris, and " the Daughter of Sir Thomas Bolein, whom he deſcends to ſpecify, " ſhould return home. He deſireth the King to declare himſelf " one Way or other, or to be Neutral; yet hopeth he will not " join with the Emperor, his Enemy, who hath made War upon " him contrary to all Right, repreſenting how uſeful the Amity " and Strength of France may be to him: Yet, if he ſhould unite " with the Emperor againſt him, he hopeth by the Help of God " to defend himſelf; recommending it further to his Majeſty's Con- " ſideration, that the Emperor hath already cauſed a Pope to be elect- " ed, who is entirely at his Devotion; and if the King of England " contribute to a further Augmentation of his Power, he may live " to reflect upon his Error."

6. The French Embaſſador was inſtructed not only to make theſe Inſtances to the King, but to enter into a Negotiation towards perfecting the Treaty which was left unfiniſhed at Calais; yet with private Directions, that if in the Progreſs of it, they ſhould find ſuch Colluſion as was uſed the laſt Year at Calais, they ſhould break it off.

7. But this Miniſter had no Succeſs in any Article wherewith he was charged: Our Court ſeemed now determined to keep no Meaſures with Francis, but upon ſuch Conditions as he thought too favourable to his Enemy, and derogatory his Honour and juſt Pretenſions. The principal Subject of Complaint againſt him was, the Arrival of the Duke of Albany in Scotland contrary to Treaty, and his expreſs Promiſe: Who, to the greater Danger of the young King, had taken upon him the Adminiſtration there, being, as he pretended, next Heir to the Crown. It has been obſerved before, the King of France not only diſclaimed his Concurrence towards that Journey of the Duke of Albany, ſolemnly and by a ſpecial Embaſſy, but in ſuch menacing Terms againſt the Duke, as imported, that he very much reſented it.

8. There were indeed Reaſons, upon which the Conduct of the Duke of Albany herein, might be accounted for, without intereſting the King of France directly or indirectly in it. He went into Scotland, not only at the Deſire of the Nobility and People of that Kingdom, but of the Queen herſelf. He had been employed to ſollicit a Divorce at Rome from her Husband the Earl of Angus; by whom ſhe had not only been treated with an open and perſonal Neglect, when he left her at Harbottle, but injured 1516.
by the Love he was known to entertain for another Lady. Beſides the Affairs of the Kingdom were in ſo confuſed and diſtracted a State, that it was thought the Appearance of a Prince univerſally beloved, among them, would moſt effectually conduce to reſtore and eſtabliſh the Tranquillity of it. Yet it is not improbable, that thoſe very Reaſons, which might, as to this particular Inſtance, be pleaded in Favour and Excuſe of a young Prince, who did not want Spirit, or Ambition, ſerved only to render him more obnoxious to the King of England, who always looked upon him with an oblique and jealous Eye.

9. The King of France did not ſatisfy himſelf with all theſe Methods of juſtifying his Conduct to the King of England, and in courting that Monarch's Friendſhip. Sir Thomas Cheyney writeth in a [a] Letter to the Cardinal, That the French King deſired another Enterview with King Henry, expreſſing his Hopes, that he would not aid the Emperor, who had broken the Peace and ſent to him a Defiance. To whom our Embaſſador anſwered in general, That the Emperor being now determined to return into Spain, had deſired the King of England to be Protector of the Low-Countries in his Abſence, and that his Majeſty would not decline the Offer made to him. This Francis interpreteth, as in effect a plain Declaration, to which Side the King would adhere; yet expreſſeth ſome Diffidence, as to the Truth of it; having given the King no Occaſion of Quarrel, yet hoping to defend himſelf, and if deſerted by the King, reſolved, never, for his Sake, to truſt any Prince living. Theſe Repreſentations had ſo ſenſible an Effect upon Cheyney, that he had the Aſſurance to write in plain and expreſs Terms, "[b] It was great "pity to loſe the French King, who ſeemed to prefer the Amity of "King Henry, before all Things in the World.

10. As to the Motives, upon which the Cardinal might proceed in this Affair, if he really did take his Meaſures from any private or perſonal Views, they may poſſibly be accounted for, from his aſpiring to the Papacy, and from the repeated Aſſurances given to him by the Emperor (which yet were never performed) upon that Proſpect. But whether it was really conſiſtent with the publick Intereſt of Englaud, and by that grand Rule, whereby the Counſels of It ſhould always be governed, of preſerving the Balance of Power in her Hands, that ſhe ſhould unite with a Prince, who, by the Acceſſion of the Empire to the Low-Countries and Spain, was already become ſo formidable, that the Liberties of Europe were apprehended to be in no little Danger, and that againſt a Prince and Ally, from whom there could be no apprehenſion of that Kind, is a political Problem, which I ſhall by no means undertake to reſolve.

11. The Event ſhewed, what Francis had ſufficient Grounds to ſuſpect, that our Intention was to unite with the Emperor; who, in the Progreſs of the War which he made upon Francis, and before we had fully declared for him, ſat down before Tournay, and without any great Reſiſtance took it. Francis was ſenſibly affected with this Diſgrace; but the more, as he was ſtill obliged to continue the Payment of the Penſion claimed by King Henry, in Conſideration of his having reſtored that Place. Yet ſome time after, he not only refuſed to pay it, but detained the French Queen's Dowry. Upon which, the French Hoſtages were kept under a more ſtrict, but not a rigorous Confinement. Towards the Beginning of May Things proceeded on both Sides ſo openly towards a Rupture, that there being no Proſpect of an Accommodation, their reſpective Ambaſſadors were recalled.

12. The Emperor upon his Return to Spain, that he might corroborate the Alliance with the King of England, and give the finiſhing Hand to certain Conventions which had been made at Calais, reſolved perſonally to confer with his Majeſty, from whom he had formerly received the Order of the Garter, and now aſſiſted at a Chapter, while the King ſat Sovereign, at Windſor. Here was a moſt ſignal Honour done to the King, the Emperor having by this Action (as Maximilian had done formerly by receiving and perſonally ſerving under him) viſibly acknowledged to him a Superiority. The Cardinal, to ſhew the more Regard to the Emperor, went to receive him at Dover, where he arrived the Twenty-ſixth of May, and the King on the Second of June: From thence he was conducted to Greenwich, and ſo to London; where Hollingshead and Hall, who are very particular in ſuch Narratives, may be conſulted about the Juſts, and other Solemnities, that were exhibited in Honour to him. My Intention is principally to obſerve what relates, on the Occaſion, to the Cardinal's Conduct, and the more important Affairs of State. On Whitſunday, when his Grace celebrated Maſs in Saint Paul's, at which the Emperor and King were preſent, Dukes and other Lords of the firſt Diſtinction held Water to him. This has been imputed to him as an Inſtance of the higheſt Arrogancy, by ſome Writers, who ſhould rather, according to the candid Rules of Judgeing, have interpreted this Miniſtration of the Lords, on ſo ſolemn an Occaſion, as an Act of religious Piety; at which it cannot derogate from the Dignity of any Perſon whatever to aſſiſt.

13. On the Twenty-ninth of June, the Emperor appeared in the Robes of his Order, and his Stall at Windſor, accompanied, with all the uſual Rites and Formalities, by the other Knights-Companions: And there, He and the King receiving together the Holy Sacrament, took their Oath upon the Holy Evangeliſts faithfully to obſerve the League concluded between them, the Preamble to which I have tranſcribed from Lord Herbert.

" Whereas

" Whereas there was lately War begun betwixt us Charles and " the King of France, and (by Virtue of a League concluded be- " tween Us and King Henry, and the ſaid King of France) both " We and Francis by our Letters required Aid of the ſaid King " Henry, One againſt the Other, and the ſaid King of England " in the Beginning of this War, to compoſe the Differences, ſent " to Calais the moſt reverend Father in God, Thomas Cardinal of " York, as his Lieutenant, before whom, when many Diſputes had " been on both Sides, who firſt began the War, and it was found " that the Fault was in the French King, and that he firſt began " with us, not in Luxemburgh only, by Robert de la March ſubor- " ned by him, but by his Captains alſo in Navarre, and hired fo- " reign Soldiers, which were not his Subjects, to break the pub- " lick Peace, contrary to the Treaty of London; wherefore, when " the moſt reverend Father aforeſaid could not effect at Calais ei- " ther Peace or Truce under any honourable Conditions, the ſaid " King of England underſtanding, (as well by Relation of the ſaid " moſt reverend Father, as by the Letters of Francis King of France, " written to his Orators and Captains, which were ſhewed to the " ſaid King of England) that the ſaid Francis had broken both the " Treaty of London, and all other Treaties and Agreements of Af- " finity concluded between them; not only by ſending the Duke " of Albany into Scotland, (which was againſt his Oath given) " but alſo by denying to the King of England his Penſions, and " violating his Subjects againſt the League. ſwer

ſwer to it. 8. One Occaſion of the Quarrel between the Duke and the Cardinal, as it has been commonly reported.

1. THERE happened within the Time to which I limit my ſelf, a remarkable Proſecution of a great Lord, which terminated in his Death, and wherein the Cardinal had a great Share, if he was not originally the prime Occaſion of it. Edward Stafford Duke of Buckingham, deſcended, as the Heralds have deduced his Pedigree, from Anne Plantagenett Daughter of Thomas of Woodſtock Son to King Edward the Third, at this Time High Conſtable of England, but which Office in Fee expired with him and probably may never be revived, had taken Offence at the Cardinal, on Account of the extraordinary Expence to which himſelf, and other of the Nobility were obliged, on Occaſion of the Enterview with the French King; which had been projected by the Cardinal, and wherein they were required to attend according to the Ceremonial preſcribed by him. The Duke, reported to have been of a Temper ſomewhat tenacious, and not the moſt humble, was ſo irritated at the Summons, and the conſequent Charge for his Attendance, that ſome unguarded Expreſſions eſcaped from him, highly reflecting upon the Cardinal, and interminating certain Effects of his Diſpleaſure againſt him. 1522.

2. It concerned the Cardinal to take all the Precautions, that might conſiſt with Juſtice and Honour, againſt ſo potent and formidable an Enemy. But whether in the Proceſs that was formed againſt the Duke, he proceeded upon any ſecret Motives of Revenge, or which reſpected his own Safety, I have no Right to judge. If the Duke was condemned after a fair and legal Trial before his Peers, and upon full Evidence, it is only Matter of ſuſpicious Curioſity to enquire, whether his Proſecutors acted upon other Views, than thoſe which related to the publick Good; except clear and ſufficient Proofs of their having ſo acted, could be produced. What the Cardinal was, in ſtrict Juſtice, obliged to do for the Safety of his Prince and the publick Good of his Country, ought by thoſe without Doors to be aſcribed to a Senſe of his Duty; though he might poſſibly (but concerning this we can form no certain Judgement) gratify thereby ſome private Animoſity. Upon a general Conſideration, that can never be juſtly interpreted as an Action of the Cardinal, proceeding from a Motive of Enmity to the Duke of Buckingham, in doing which he had diſcharged the Duty of a faithful Miniſter and good Subject, ſuppoſing the Duke of Buckingham had been his ſpecial Friend or Benefactor. He made uſe, indeed, of one of the Duke's principal Secretaries, to betray the Confidence which his Maſter had repoſed in him. This hath been objected to him as a mean ignoble Action, to which a truly truly great and generous Mind could not have ſubmitted. And it muſt be owned, Methods of this Kind, however neceſſary on certain Occaſions, yet can never be taken, except by Perſons of a very ignoble Temper, without ſome Kind of Regret.

3. But the Reader will beſt judge concerning the Reaſons and Equity of the Cardinal's Procedure in Relation to a Fact, for which he has been loaded with Reproaches from a brief, but, according to the beſt Information I could diſcover, a true State of it. When the Duke of Buckingham had prepared to attend the King after a Manner ſuitable to his Quality and high Poſts, and before his Majeſty had yet made all the neceſſary Diſpoſitions for his Journey; he took an Opportunity during that Interval, of going before to ſee ſome Lands belonging to him in Kent, where the Tenants preferring ſeveral Complaints againſt Charles Knevet his Steward or Surveyor, for the Exactions and other oppreſſive Methods, which he had exerciſed among them, the Duke thought fit to diſcharge him. But this Action, though performed both upon Reaſons of Juſtice and Goodneſs, afterwards proved an accidental Occaſion of that great Man's Ruin: From which, and other Caſes of like Kind incident to the Houſe of the Staffords, it has been obſerved more peculiarly fatal to them, to have ſuffered by their own Servants. Knevet, whether ſtimulated with the Deſire of Revenge againſt his Maſter, from a Diſgrace, which he could not eaſily bear, or allured by the Proſpect of Reward, or poſſibly from a conſcientious Motive, for we ought to put the beſt Conſtruction on the Actions of Men which they will reaſonably admit, made a full Confeſſion to the Cardinal (the Effect whereof he afterwards delivered upon Oath, at the Duke's Tryal) concerning ſeveral treaſonable Deſigns and Actions, of which the Duke with his Privity and to his certain Knowledge ſtood chargeable. He depoſed, That the Duke had a Deſign of uſurping the Crown, and of dethroning the King, in order to take the Government upon himſelf, and in Caſe of the King's Demiſe, of ſeizing the Crown in Spight of all that ſhould oppoſe him, and of putting ſeveral of his Miniſters, in particular Cardinal Wolſey and Sir Thomas Lovel to Death. His Depoſition was confirmed by the Teſtimony of [b] two other of the Duke's Servants with ſome additional Circumſtances, tending to prove, that the Duke actually prepared Arms towards the Execution of his treaſonable Projects; that he cauſed Cloaths to be bought and diſtributed among ſeveral Perſons to engage them to aſſiſt in it; conſtituting, upon the ſame View, more Officers in his Service, than he had formerly retained, who under that Pretence might better cover and carry on the Buſineſs, to which they ſhould be ſeverally appointed. One Hopkins alſo a Monk, appeared in Evidence againſt him, who formerly pretended to a prophetick Spirit, and whom the Duke had not only ſeveral Times conſulted by de la Cour, his Chaplain, but twice in Perſon, concerning his Proſpect of ſucceeding to the Crown. Upon the whole Evidence, the Charge of High Treaſon againſt the Duke appeared ſo fully proved, that though he pleaded with much Art and Eloquence, in order to invalidate the Indictment, yet he was found guilty by a Duke, a Marqueſs, ſeven Earls, and twelve Barons his Peers, the Duke of Norfolk being for the Time conſtituted High Steward of England, who pronounced Sentence againſt him, but not without a moſt ſenſible Concern, which he diſcovered by a Flood of Tears. But ſtill the Duke of Buckingham perſiſted in aſſerting his Innocence, praying, that God would forgive to the Lords his Death, and declaring he would never ſue to the King for Life; yet it ſufficiently appeared from what he ſaid at the ſame Time, that a Pardon would not have been unacceptable to him: For he added, "The King is "a gracious Prince, and more Grace may come from him, than "I deſire." The Edge of the Ax being turned towards him, he was remanded to the Tower; upon his entring the Barge, wherein he was brought to Weſtminſter, Sir Thomas Lovel, who had the Charge of conducting him, deſired he would ſit as before upon the Cuſhions, which he refuſed to do, ſaying to this Effect, "That he "came in Quality of a Duke of Buckingham, but was now reduced "to the Condition of a private and mean Perſon." He was beheaded, having, by Favour of the King, received a Mitigation of his Sentence, on Tower-hill, and died much lamented by the People.

4. This Duke had great Qualities, but was given to Superſtition, the moſt chimerical Kind of it, that of preſaging future contingent Events, by a pretended prophetick Spirit; and did not always conduct himſelf by the Rules of a ſtrict Morality. It is ſaid, exceſſive Grief haſtened the Death of Knevet, becauſe he had been the Author of ſo much Miſchief; but it is uncertain whether this might proceed from a Conſciouſneſs of his Guilt, in being Evidence againſt the Duke; or from an Apprehenſion that he was thereby the occaſional Cauſe of deſtroying a great Lord who had employed him in one of the moſt conſiderable Offices under him, and honoured him with ſpecial Marks of his Truſt and Confidence. If any Credit may be given to the Teſtimony of this Man, it may be inferred, that he did not approve the Methods, which the Duke took to execute his Deſigns, and particularly in conſulting Hopkins the Monk, and following his capricious Predictions. For he depoſed, That on the Twentieth of May, in the twelfth Year of the King's Reign, the Duke demanding of him, what was the Talk of the Londoners about the King's Journey beyond Seas, he anſwered, Many apprehended ſome ſiniſter Dealing from the French. Upon which the Duke ſaid, There might indeed be Grounds for ſuch Apprehenſions, according to the Prediction of a holy Monk, with whom he had ſeveral Times correſponded by his Chaplain, and who had told him the King ſhould not proſper, and that himſelf ſhould have the Rule. Upon which Knevet, with good Reaſon, and as became an honeſt Servant, repreſented, that the Monk might be deceived by Illuſion of the Devil; and that it was evil to meddle in ſuch Matters: To which the Duke anſwered, it could not hurt him, and ſeemed to rejoice in the Monk's Propheey.

5. I would decline, as much as poſſible, an apologetick Way of Writing for the Cardinal, but there is a Neceſſity in the preſent Caſe of having Recourſe to it. He not only incurred the Hatred of the Populace at that Time, as being the principal Author of the Proſecution againſt the Duke, but ſeveral Authors of Diſtinction have ſince cenſured him for it: Yet in Honour to the Lords, who judged and unanimouſly condemned him, it ſeems more reaſonable, that the Cardinal's Memory ſhould be vindicated from the Imputations caſt on him on this Account. Would the Peers of England then acting in a judicial Capacity, to gratify the Reſentments of any private Perſon whatever, and contrary to the Engagements of their Duty and Honour, have found an innocent Perſon, and one of their own Members, guilty? And if the Duke really was guilty, it will be very difficult to prove, that a Prime Miniſter, entruſted with the Care of the Government, could be criminal, in being the Inſtrument of bringing him to Juſtice.

6. It is ſaid indeed, that the Cardinal fearing the great Power of the Duke, had taken Care, before the Proceſs againſt him was formed, to weaken him in his Friends and Alliances. The Duke had married the Daughter of Henry Earl of Northamberland, and the Earl of Surrey had married the Duke's Daughter. Here was a Combination of ſuch ſtrong and formidable Intereſts, that there might be great Danger in impeaching the Duke, unleſs Means could be found, if not to diſſolve it, at leaſt for a Time to hinder the Parties, who formed it, from acting in Concert. Northumberland having claimed certain Wards, which were ſaid of Right to belong to the King, Occaſion was thereby taken of committing him to the Tower, from whence, at the Cardinal's Interceſſion, which he acknowledged as a ſingular Favour, he was ſome Time after diſcharged. As to the Earl of Surrey, an Opportunity offered of ſending him away upon a very honourable Employment. The Earl of Kildair, late Deputy of Ireland, having been charged with ſeveral Crimes and Miſdemeanors in that high Poſt, was removed, and the Earl of Surrey appointed to ſucceed him; by which Means, the Duke being left more defenceleſs and expoſed, it was leſs difficult to effect what had been deſigned againſt him.

7. Suppoſing this Charge in all the Parts of it true, which yet is only founded on preſumptive Conjectures, it could only be inferred from it, that ſuch ſtrong Alliances might be a Means of skreening the Duke, tho' the Proofs of his Guilt ſhould perhaps have been made ſufficiently to appear. In criminal Caſes, Humanity, good Nature, Friendſhip, and the Ties of Blood, often cauſe even good Men to act with a Tenderneſs, which they cannot, in ſtrict Duty, approve. But one would think there could poſſibly be no Danger in a Caſe of Blood, except from the moſt wicked and abandoned of Mankind, that an innocent Perſon ſhould ſuffer on any Account, for want of a fair, humane, or equal Method of Trial.

8. That there was no perfect Underſtanding between the Duke, and the Cardinal, all Hiſtorians are agreed; but this could be no good Reaſon, why the Cardinal ſhould have thirſted, or be thought to have thirſted, after the Blood of that great Lord. One Occaſion, as it has been reported, of their Quarrel, did not ſeem to afford Matter for any ſuch Conſequence. The Cardinal, once when the Duke was preſent, waſhing his Hands in the ſame Water after the King, the Duke conceived ſo great Indignation at the bold and unbecoming Freedom he took, that he threw the Water upon his Feet. The Cardinal being provoked in his Turn, Threatned, that was his Expreſſion, to ſit upon the Duke's Skirts. The Duke, in Contempt of his Threat, or to ridicule him for ſo vulgar an Expreſſion, appeared the next Day at Court before the King in a Dreſs without any Skirts, and told the King, he did it to prevent what the Cardinal had threatned. From ſuch little or ludicrous Beginnings do Events ſometimes proceed, which occaſion conſiderable Revolutions as well in the Courts of Princes, as in private Families.

1521. 1. IN this Chapter I propoſe to give ſome Account concerning the Methods which were taken by the Cardinal to ſucceed Leo the Tenth in the Papacy, and of an Imputation by the Way, under which that Pope has ſuffered perhaps by the Pens of more than a thouſand Authors. Nothing hath been ſo univerſally handed down to us by written Tradition, as the Story, That his Secretary Bembo, upon citing a Paſſage out of the Goſpel, was anſwered by him, [c] It hath been long and very well known, how beneficial this Fable of Jeſus Chriſt hath been to us, and to our Predeceſſors. This Story, tho' we meet with it in innumerable Books, is not founded upon one good Authority. All the Teſtimonies concerning it are to be reſolved into the original Calumny of Bale, who himſelf ſaith nothing to ſupport it: A Teſtimony, ſaith a modern Writer who was far from being in the Intereſts of Popery, manifeſtly exceptionable; ſince Bale wrote in open War againſt the Pope, and againſt all the Roman Church. What this Writer addeth, is ſo juſt and ingenuous, that it cannot be unacceptable to the Reader. " [d] No Tribunal in the World will receive the Depoſition of ſuch " a Witneſs, ſwearing, He hath heard ſo or ſo. For, when once " the Perſon, againſt whom he depoſeth, does appear to be his " Enemy, the Challenges of the Party accuſed are preſumed to be " reaſonable and good. Since Books of Controverſy then are " Pieces, which the Parties produce in a Suit before the Publick, " it is certain, the Teſtimony of a proteſtant Controvertiſt upon " a Fact reflecting upon the Catholicks, ought to be reckoned as " nothing. The Publick, which is Judge of the Proceſs, ought " to reject all theſe Teſtimonies, and have no more Regard to " them, than if they had never happened. Private Perſons may " be allowed, if once perſuaded of Bale's Probity, to believe what " he affirmeth. But they ought to keep their Perſuaſion to them- " ſelves, and not to produce it to publick View, as a juſtifiable " Warrant of an Allegation againſt their Adverſaries.

2. Men are too apt indeed to think all Advantages allowable againſt an Enemy; and it may be affirmed, pious Frauds have, on Occaſion, been practiſed by other Writers beſides thoſe of the Church of Rome. But the Cauſe of true Religion has ſuffered more by ſuch an irregular and culpable Zeal, than the Service thereby done to it could compenſate. Hiſtorical Frauds, for Inſtance, whereby ſome Men have propoſed to ſet off the Character of certain Reformers in a brighter Light, by endeavouring to repreſent their Adverſaries under black and odious Colours, without producing any Proof of what they advanced, have ſerved only to render their Probity more ſuſpected, and to bring a greater Reproach upon the Reformation in general. True Religion inſpires Men with brave and generous Sentiments, and as it doth not need, will ſcorn to employ thoſe little Artifices, that are neceſſary to the Support of a weak or wicked Cauſe. A Man, who would diſcover that Spirit and Magnanimity in his Writings, wherewith they, who have Truth on their Side, are naturally animated, will reject all unfair Occaſions againſt an Adverſary, with a noble and becoming Diſdain. He will be ſo far from divulging what he knoweth to be falſe, or for which he can bring no ſufficient Proof, that he will rather conceal even ſuch Reflections as may be true, where he is not under any moral Obligation to publiſh them.

3. It is the Duty not only of eccleſiaſtical, but civil Hiſtorians, carefully to avoid all Appearances of Prejudice, whether againſt particular Perſons, or collective Bodies of Men. I ſhall take Leave to charge that juſtly celebrated Hiſtorian Guicciardine with a Breach of this Rule, in Reſpect to the preſent Occaſion, the Death of Pope Leo. The Character of that Hiſtorian is a free and bold Sincerity, in laying before the World, without Diſguiſe, ſuch Actions, wherein himſelf or Friends were concerned, and which would not always admit of a ſtrict Examination. Yet he hath been charged with Reflecting on the French Nation in general, and on particular Perſons of that Nation, after a Manner, that could only proceed from ſome latent Motives of Enmity or Reſentment againſt them. The Truth of which Animadverſion upon him, will ſufficiently appear from the Inſtance, I am going to mention.

4. One Barnaby Maleſpine, Chamberlain to Pope Leo the Tenth, was impriſoned on Suſpicion of having poiſoned that Pope. But the Proſecution was dropped, and the Cardinal de Medicis, made uſe of the Authority he had then at Rome, which was very great, to procure his Diſcharge. Fearing, ſaith Guicciardine, further to incur the Diſpleaſure of the French King, by whoſe Practice it was ſecretly whiſpered, but by Authors and Conjectures uncertain, that the French King had given him Poyſon.

5. Here is an Inſinuation, but from Authors and Conjectures confeſſedly uncertain, That Francis the Firſt, King of France, was thought capable of One of the moſt execrable Crimes: An Inſinuation of this Nature ought not to have been made. Nothing but the moſt clear and inconteſted Proofs could have juſtified or excuſed a Charge, which if found true, muſt have expoſed One of the greateſt Monarchs in the World to the laſt Degree of Hatred and and Contempt. We may conclude therefore, without being injurious to the Memory of Guicciardine, that he ſometimes made no Scruple of preferring the Regard, which he had for his Country, and the Cauſe wherein he was engaged, to the Duty of an Hiſtorian, and the Character of a Man of Honour. But leaſt this ſhould be thought an Imputation too general to be founded upon a ſingle Fact, I ſhall, to confirm it, produce an Inſtance, and that reſpecting another King of France, from the ſame Author. Who, without any Authority, or other Teſtimony to corroborate, what he ſaith, has repreſented Charles the Eighth, King of France, as being of a monſtrous Shape. This Calumny may be confuted by as ſtrong negative an Argument, as can well be produced. If Charles the Eighth had been ſuch a Perſon, or of an Appearance any Thing like it, tho' the French Authors poſſibly might, yet thoſe of Italy, as great Enemies to Charles for diſturbing the Repoſe of it, as Guicciardine, would not have omitted to mention it. The like Anſwer may be made to what Saunders hath obſerved upon the Shape of Ann Bolein, as being very deformed and irregular; if it had really been ſo, other Authors, profeſſed Enemies to the Cauſe ſhe favoured, would have taken care not to miſrepreſent her. But, indeed, there are Preſumptions from Saunders his own Account to confute this Calumny. It is very improbable that a Lady of ſuch a Form, as he hath drawn it, ſhould have been ſo generally careſſed in the Court of France, after the Manner, deſcribed by him. But it is much more improbable, that the King of England, who could not be a Stranger to her Conduct there, if it was ſo notorious, as this Author hath reported it, would have been poſſeſſed with that violent Paſſion for ſuch a Creature, ſo diſagreeable withal, as he hath made her, in her Perſon.

6. The Cardinal, upon the Death of Leo, thinking he had a fair Opportunity of offering himſelf a Candidate for the Papal Chair, took care to ſend Secretary Pace, with proper Inſtructions, upon that View, to Rome. He wrote alſo to the Emperor, reminding him of his Promiſe, and repreſenting to him how unreaſonable it would appear in the Eye of the World, ſhould he openly have a Pope of his own Nomination. For ſo many Affairs, wherein he was perſonally intereſted, were to be laid before the Conſiſtory, that too great an Influence upon the Proceedings of it would be reputed unjuſt. And the particular Advantage, which he might reap thereby, would not be equivalent to the Diſgrace, which the Chriſtian Church would ſuffer by a partial or over-ruled Election; eſpecially, when all the Ends, he could propoſe from the Choice to be made, might be attained in a more ſafe and honourable Way. For if himſelf could be preferred to the Papacy, his Majeſty might be aſſured of the ſame Fidelity and Zeal for his Service, which he had had diſcovered in the Conduct of the late Treaty. Since therefore this was both the moſt reputable and ſalutary Expedient, he hopeth his Imperial Majeſty will approve it. And as the King of England claimed a Right to be Arbiter of Chriſtendom, it would then be his Part to be Inſtrumental towards the Exerciſe of that Right; and he ſhould always be ready to diſpoſe that King to the beſt Offices, and the ſtricteſt Correſpondence with his Imperial Majeſty. That, upon his being made Pope, he ſhould have no Cauſe to alter his Sentiments or Language; it being evident, that the only Way to preſerve the Peace of Italy, which our King deſired, was to aſſert and maintain in it the Emperor's Authority.

7. Pace was inſtructed to impart ſome of theſe Reaſons to the Cardinals at Rome; and further charged to repreſent to them what great Occaſion of Scandal and Calumny it might give to the Lutherans, if an improper Choice of a Perſon to ſit in St. Peter's Chair ſhould be made at this Conjuncture: Yet this Conſequence would be unavoidable, if any one avowedly in the Intereſts of the Emperor, or the King of France, ſhould be elected; and that in either Caſe, the Differences between theſe two Powers would be rendered more irreconcileable. Neither was it convenient, that any Italian ſhould be preferred to the Papacy, who, being of a more narrow Fortune, or not well ſupported by powerful Alliances, ſhould not be able to maintain the Honour, Dignity, and Rights of the Triple Crown: That the beſt Expedient, in order to prevent theſe Inconveniences, would be to chuſe one, who might be ſupported by a Prince, both able and willing, in thoſe dangerous Times, to aſſert and defend the Cauſe of Religion. Neither was the King of France, on this Occaſion, to be wholly neglected; to whom the Cardinal therefore promiſed, in Caſe of his being elected Pope, if not directly, that he would promote his Intereſts, yet that he might expect ſuch indifferent and equitable Treatment from him, as he could not propoſe from any other Quarter.

8. But before Pace arrived at Rome, the Election was over; and Adrian Biſhop of Tortoſa choſen Pope; though the Cardinal, which ſheweth that his Hopes of the Papacy were not altogether ill founded, had at different Scrutinies, Nine, Twelve, and Nineteen Voices.

9. Adrian was a Perſon, who had raiſed himſelf by his Merit, from a low, obſcure, and indigent Condition, to very honourable and great Preferments, and at laſt to the Greateſt in the Church. His Parents were in ſuch mean Circumſtances, that they were not able to bear the Expence of maintaining him at School: But as he diſcovered an early Inclination and Capacity for Learning, the Univerſity of Louvain ſupplied that Deficiency, and admitted him into a College to be taught without any Charge to them. In the Year 1507 he was removed to Court from his Profeſſorſhip at Louvain, where he was Vice-Chancellor, and Dean of St. Peter's, to be Preceptor to Arch-Duke Charles, under whom yet that Prince was ſaid to make no great Progreſs in the Latin Tongue, delighting more in corporeal Exerciſes, than thoſe of the Mind. Adrian afterwards divided the Regency of Spain with Cardinal Ximenes. But ſome Time after Charles had taken Poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Spain, upon his Return to Germany Adrian was made ſole Regent, and governed with more Addreſs, than was expected from one, that had been long uſed to a collegiate Life, and ſpent ſo much of his Time in the Studies proper to it. What may be conſidered as more extraordinary in his Riſe, He was a Perſon of a ſimple Manner, a Stranger to thoſe intrigueing Arts and bold Methods of obtruding themſelves upon the World, by which worthleſs and ſometimes very ignorant Perſons, have made their Way to the firſt Stations in the Church. He had the Character, after his Election, rather of a virtuous Man, and an able Divine, than of a good Pope. This Diſtinction, for which Pallavicini has been much rallied, is not altogether indefenſible. A Man may be capable, to diſcharge with Credit, all the Parts of his paſtoral Duty, and to do excellent Service in the Church, without knowing how to direct the Motions, or regulate the Diſorders of the State. The Morals of a Prieſt, and the Talents requiſite to form the Mind of a Prince, are very different. The Rules of the ſacerdotal Office, and of chriſtian Morality in general, are much leſs complicated, than thoſe of a Governour, who is to watch and improve all Occaſions, according to the Maxims of the moſt refined Policy, and to negotiate with foreign Courts, who have different Views and Intereſts, after ſuch a Manner, as may moſt effectually contribute to advance thoſe of the State. A Buſineſs, for which a ſcrupulous and devout Eccleſiaſtick is not ſo well qualified, as one who knoweth how to adapt his Meaſures, in a Way of greater Latitude to the temporal Intereſts of the Church, or of his own Family.

10. For theſe Reaſons, the Election of Adrian Biſhop of Tortoſa, to the Popedom, ſurprized the World. But the Italians had alſo ſeveral other Objections to him; and, during the ſhort Time of his Pontificate, did not fail to load him with the vileſt Reproaches, and with ſome, that cannot be named with Decency. His Advancement indeed to the firſt Dignity in the Church was more owing to the Factions, which divided the Conclave, than to any formed or previouſly concerted Meaſures in his Favour. The Cardinal de Medicis, finding he could not carry his Point againſt the old Cardinals, who united, amidſt the ſeveral Factions that had prevailed among them, in oppoſing him, obliged the younger Cardinals, who were in his Intereſt, to promiſe him all their Votes at once.

once. Upon his propoſing the Biſhop of Tortoſa, who had been made a Cardinal by Pope Leo in the general Creation beforementioned, there was obſerved an extraordinary Surprize in the Conclave. Cajetan, a Cardinal of Weight and Authority, ſtanding up, ſaid, the Motion came from God and Man; and, immediately, the Reſt haſtned to come in with a good Grace, but by what Impulſe it is hard to determine. For they could give no Reaſon for preferring a Foreigner, One who was a Stranger to the Affairs of the Church, at a Time of much Trouble and Diſtraction in it; One, to whoſe former Merits there was no Regard; who had never ſeen Italy, being ſcarce known by Name to the Cardinals, and concerning whom there had not been ſo much as any previous Conſultation among them. Guicciardine, whoſe Terms on that Occaſion are very harſh, and unbecoming one of his Principles, pretendeth, that they who elected him to the Popedom, were rather led by a blind Impulſe, than by Choice and Deliberation; and not being able to aſſign any good Reaſon for their extravagant Conduct, excuſed themſelves upon a Pretence, that they were moved to it by the Holy Ghoſt. However, the People of Rome, after the Election, were much enraged, that it was fallen upon a Perſon ſo little known, and a Foreigner; but ſtill more enraged, after they did know him, on Account of his Averſion to Pomp, and all Kind of Luxury; and as he appeared to affect a Simplicity of Manners, which they had ſeen ſo little exemplified in the Conduct of Leo the Tenth.

11. Secretary Pace, tho' he heard by the Way, that Adrian was choſen, yet continued his Journey to Rome; and when he came there, congratulated the new Pope in Cardinal Wolſey's Name, having ſecret Inſtructions, if he did not ſucceed for the Cardinal, to pretend as if he had been commanded to favour the Promotion of Adrian. Though it is more probable, in Caſe the Cardinal of England ſhould have had no Proſpect of ſucceeding, the Intereſt of the Court of England would have been employed in Favour of the Cardinal de Medicis, with whom there had been for a conſiderable Time a ſettled and intimate Correſpondence.

1522. 1. THERE was not at this Time any great Proſpect of a Reformation in England, if we may judge from the Maxims, whereby either the Court, or the Clergy, who were principally veſted with the eccleſiaſtical Authority, appeared to be governed. The King was ſtill animated with the ſame Zeal, which he had formerly affected to ſhew, in Defence of the Papal Cauſe and Authority, and againſt the Doctrine of Luther. His Zeal, in both Reſpects, was thought to be rather more inflamed, on Occaſion of the Title lately conferred on him by the Pope: With which, tho' it appeareth, from a Charter of Richard the Second to the Univerſity of Oxford, to have been uſed by that Prince, he was yet ſo well pleaſed, that in his Letters Patents for printing a Book publiſhed by Fiſher againſt Luther, he reciteth that Title after a Manner, and in Terms, that plainly diſcover, he looked upon it as a very honorary additional Engagement upon him to aſſert the Catholick [e] Cauſe (according to his Notion of it at that Time) with greater Ardor, in Oppoſition to the Enemies of it. Having empowered the Perſon, who had the Right of the Copy, to prevent any indirect Methods of printing upon him, and applauded the Deſign of ſuch Works as were written in Defence of the catholick Church, and the chriſtian Faith; he addeth, "whereof we have "undertaken the Defence and Protection, as we are obliged to do, "by Virtue of the Title lately conferred on us by Pope Leo of "pious Memory. And therefore, it is Matter of great Conſola-"tion and Joy to us, that the Cauſe of Religion and the Church, "has been [f] undertaken by a Perſon of ſo great Abilities, as Fiſher "Biſhop of Rocheſter."

2. This

2. This Title was thought of ſo great Importance abroad, or at leaſt the King was ſuppoſed to value himſelf ſo much upon it, that the Duke of Venice, Anthony Griman, wrote a formal congratulory [g] Letter upon that ſole Occaſion to the Cardinal, and without ſo much as mentioning incidentally any other Buſineſs. And no ſooner was Clement the Seventh advanced to the papal Chair, but as an acceptable Preſent to the King, he ſent him a ſolemn and authentick Confirmation of the ſame Title, with a Recital of the Reaſons upon which it was originally granted.

3. The King did not ſatisfy himſelf with oppoſing the Growth of Lutheraniſm at home; but he wrote Letters to the Princes of Germany to incite them againſt Luther; and withal ſent a ſplendid Embaſſy to the Archduke Ferdinand, then reſididing at the Diet of Nuremberg, where he repreſented his Brother the Emperor, in Quality of his Deputy, to engage him in the ſame Meaſures towards ſuppreſſing the Doctrine of that Friar; which that he might do more effectually, he ſent him by the Hands of Garter principal King of Arms, (accompanying the ſame Embaſſadors,) the moſt Noble Order of the Garter, with ample Inſtructions to them relating to the Form and Manner of Preſenting it, and the Reaſons upon which the King was induced to give the Archduke ſo ſignal a Proof of the Eſteem and Affection, which his Majeſty had entertained for him. That theſe Inſtructions were drawn up by the Cardinal, or at leaſt reviſed and approved by him, may probably be concluded, from the Letter ſubjoined to the Embaſſadors from the Cardinal, whereby they are inſtructed to obviate ſuch Exceptions, as the Archduke might poſſibly make againſt the Form or Manner preſcribed for the Preſentment of the Order, or his Inveſtiture with the Same.

4. Adrian on his Part being advanced to the Pontificate, ſends a Nuncio to the Diet at Nuremberg, to engage the Members of it to ſuppreſs the Doctrine of Luther; and that he might the more effectually attain his End, offered, at the ſame Time to concert proper Meaſures towards the Reformation of the Church. The Letter which he wrote to the Diet on this Occaſion, was ſo handſomely drawn up, with ſuch an Appearance of Piety and a well-tempered Zeal, and containeth ſo many Things relating to the State of Religion at that Time, that it may not be improper to preſent the Reader with a ſhort Abſtract of it.

5. He beginneth with expreſſing his Concern at the Troubles occaſioned in Germany by Luther; not only on Account of the Diſperſion of Chriſt's Flock, and the Danger thereby to Religion in general; but becauſe thoſe Troubles happened in his native Country

among a People celebrated for their firm Adherence to the catholick Church, and who had been ever free from all Suſpicion of Hereſy. He deſireth therefore to put a Stop to ſo great an Evil, leaſt it ſhould be attended with thoſe fatal Conſequences in Germany, which the Bohemians had formerly experienced from a like Original. The Reaſons, which he employeth to animate their Zeal in this Work, were conſidered in themſelves of great Force to perſuade. They are told, that the Glory and Honour of God require, they ſhould aſſiſt in it; the Rites and Ceremonies of whoſe Worſhip, as thoſe of Religion in general, are ſtruck at; that it is a Breach of brotherly Love and Charity, not to direct ſuch, who err, into the right Way; that it is particularly a Shame and Diſgrace to the German Nation, juſtly praiſed before for the Orthodoxy of their Faith, and of their Obedience to the Apoſtolick See, to be now grown into Contempt for Want of them. That they would ſuffer in their own Reputation, if they ſhould not attain the End propoſed in the Diet, by being thought inconſtant, and in degenerating from their Forefathers, who left behind them ſo noble an Inſtance of their Vertue and Piety at Conſtance. That according to the Doctrines of Luther, their Anceſtors ſtood condemned, and excluded from the Hopes of Salvation. That they would do well to conſider the Tendency and Deſign of his Doctrine, which was only under a Colour of Liberty to ſubvert all Order and Government. That, at firſt indeed Luther only pretended to oppugn the eccleſiaſtical Power; but the Troubles and Commotions in Germany plainly diſcovered, what he deſigned, and what Apprehenſions the civil Power might juſtly entertain from his Doctrine. That, having the Power of the Sword committed to them by God for the Puniſhment of Evil, he would puniſh them for neglecting to make uſe of it. That Luther had the ſame Deſign with Mahomet; who allowed his Followers to marry ſeveral Wives, and to put them away at Pleaſure: It is true, the Doctrine of Luther did not extend to ſuch Enormities; but yet by abſolving Perſons from their Vows of Celibacy, and all Obligation to it, he opened a wide Door to Impurity and Licentiouſneſs; and it was therefore their Part to ſee the Decree of the Emperor put in Execution; yet, to pardon ſuch, as retracted, or gave any proper Teſtimonies of a penitential Sorrow for what they had done. To obviate what might be alledged, concerning the Condemnation of Luther before he was heard, it is ſaid, The Duty of Chriſtians requires them to ſubmit to the Rule of Faith, not to diſpute it. That Luther might be heard, indeed, as to Matter of Fact, whether he had ſaid, or written ſo or ſo; but not in Defence of what he had ſaid or written, againſt the Doctrine of the Church. That there could be no End of Controverſy, if what wiſe and good Men, after long and mature

Con-

Conſultation, have reſolved, might be brought again into Queſtion by every private Perſon. And laſtly, That if every other Society in the World has fixed Laws, which the Members of it are bound to obſerve, and whereby they ought to be concluded, much more are Chriſtians obliged by ſuch Eſtabliſhments or Deciſions, that are made by Authority of the Church; whereas Luther had not only rejected, but burned the Decrees of the Council and Fathers. After all, the Pope doth not diſſemble, that he conſiders theſe Diſtractions in the Church, as a judicial Viſitation of God for the Sins of Men; eſpecially, of the Clergy; from which thoſe of the People too naturally proceed. He acknowledgeth, that the Malignity of the Diſeaſe had ſpread itſelf among the inferior Clergy, by Communication from the very Head; all having gone aſtray, and that Glory was only to be given to God, whoſe Grace and Pardon they ought to implore. He expreſſeth an Inclination to comply with their Demands, and to begin at the very Root of the Evil whereof they complain, by reforming the Court of Rome; declaring, he would have been much better pleaſed with a private Life; yet would not decline the Province, to which by the Grace of God he had been appointed, and which he did not accept from a Deſire of Dominion, but from Motives reſpecting the Peace and Welfare of the Church; that the Diſeaſe being obſtinate, and of a confirmed Malignity, he muſt proceed gradually to effect the Cure, and not by too ſudden and violent Applications.

6. Theſe Acknowledgements concerning the corrupt State of the Clergy, and of the Court of Rome, tho' founded upon certain and known Facts, gave great Offence to ſeveral of the Cardinals; yet had not the Effect, deſigned by them, towards compoſing the Troubles occaſioned by Luther's Doctrine. It was pretended, the Pope only made ſpecious and fair Promiſes to gain Time; to form Parties among chriſtian Princes; and to delay the Calling of a Council, 'till ſuch previous Diſpoſitions might be made for it, that they ſhould have nothing to fear from the Fathers, who ſhould compoſe it. This Method of ſoftning the Reſentments of the Diſcontented, by making fine and large Promiſes, which are never deſigned to be performed, has nothing in it new or extraordinary; it is the common Artifice of all wicked and corrupt Men in Power, to ſuppreſs Complaints, 'till by Degrees they can fortify themſelves in ſuch a Manner, as to be in a Condition to deſpiſe them.

7. However, in Anſwer to the Pope's Letter, the Diet promiſed his Holineſs, that they would uſe their beſt Endeavours to extirpate the Errors of Luther; repreſenting to him, that the Reaſon, why they had not, as his Holineſs complained, proceeded to execute the Emperor's Decree againſt him, was, That his Books were in ſo many many Hands, and himſelf ſo much followed, the Execution of it might have been of dangerous Conſequence to the Peace of Germany: That the Diſorders among the Clergy wherewith Luther had charged them, were, in Effect, confeſſed by the Pope himſelf; and that, ſhould they have proceeded with Rigour againſt him, it would have given Occaſion to the World to put an ill Conſtruction upon their Conduct, as if they had a Deſign to countenance Crimes that were too notorious to be diſſembled. They demand, at the ſame Time, that a Council may be called to terminate the Points in Diſpute relating to Doctrine, and to reform eccleſiaſtical Diſcipline: In the mean Time they will endeavour to preſerve Peace, and compoſe Differences.

8. This Anſwer of the Diet was not ſatisfactory to the Pope's Nuncio, who made a Reply to it: but which ſerved only to cauſe the Diet to riſe in their Demands: For they drew up a Paper, which was ſent to the Pope, containing a Specification of a hundred Grievances, or Complaints of the German Nation, againſt the Court of Rome; but principally, in Regard to the Encroachments, that had been made by that Court againſt their civil Rights and Liberties, and the Exportation of Money out of Germany. The Reſolution of the Diet was, That the Goſpel ſhould be taught according to the received Doctrine, and Expoſitions of the Church. This Reſolution was differently explained by the Lutherans and Papiſts, in a Senſe, agreeing to their different Principles. Inſtead of Silence, which the Diet intended they ſhould be obliged to keep, Luther compiled a new Form of celebrating Maſs; openly exhorted the Prieſts and Monks to marry; and that he might at once recommend Matrimony to them, and ſhew that the Vows of Celibacy are not, in either Sex, of any Force to oblige, himſelf married Catherine de Borea, one of the nine Nuns, that had been taken out of the Nunnery of Nimptchen. After which, he publiſhed a Kind of [h] Memorial, wherein he propoſed, That a Diſtribution ſhould be made of the Goods of Churches and Monaſteries for different Uſes.

9. While the Diet was ſitting, the King of England wrote to the Princes of the Houſe of Saxony, complaining highly of Luther and his Doctrine, and making preſſing Inſtances, that they would interpoſe by their Authority to ſuppreſs it. He reminds them of the common Danger which threatned the Church, and of the Example of their Neighbours in Bohemia; from whence they might learn, how much it concerned them to ſtop an Evil in the Beginning, before it ſhould have Time to ſpread itſelf, and gather more Strength. Among other Things he adviſeth them, not to ſuffer the New Teſtament to be publiſhed in the vulgar Tongue: Not that he declared himſelf in general againſt a Verſion of the Holy Scriptures, or any Part of them, but becauſe he apprehended there might be Danger at that Time of a corrupt Verſion.

10. Beſides the Pope's Nuncio mentioned before, who aſſiſted at this Diet, he ſome time after ſent Campejus to Nuremberg in Quality of his Legate; a Man, as he is ſtiled in his Letters Credentials, of great Vertue; and from one Inſtance of whoſe Conduct, during his Legacy in theſe Parts, we may conclude, that the Reſtraints which the Clergy were then under, in Reſpect to the common Liberty of Marriage, to which all Men are preſumed to have a natural and diſcretionary Right, did not a little contribute towards opening a Way to the Reformation. Several of the Clergy in the Dependencies of Strasburg, had at that Time married, contrary to their Vows of Celibacy, and the Laws of the Church: For which Reaſon a Proſecution was commenced againſt them by the Biſhop of the Place; but the civil Magiſtrates oppoſed him, and protected them from Puniſhment, repreſenting, that the unmarried Clergy lived after a Manner which was of ill Example, and gave very much Scandal and Offence; yet the Biſhop either took no Notice of their Diſorders, or would not proceed to puniſh them: And it would appear very ſtrange, if Offences againſt the Laws of the Pope ſhould be puniſhed, while thoſe againſt the Law of God were openly ſuffered to eſcape with Impunity: They judged it therefore more reaſonable that the Clergy, who lived in ſo ſcandalous a Manner ſhould be puniſhed; and oppoſed the Puniſhment of the married Clergy.

11. To which Campejus anſwered, That the Crime of the married Clergy was notorious; and that there needed not much Formality in the Proceſs againſt them, ſeeing they were, by the very Fact, excommunicated: That the Magiſtrate ought therefore to aſſiſt the Biſhop in executing the Cenſures denounced by him; That, the criminal Liberties of the unmarried Clergy did not excuſe the Sins of the Married: That they who ſhewed ſuch bad Example, did very ill, and the Biſhop in conniving at them was chargeable with Neglect of Duty: But ſtill [b] the married Clergy had the greater Sin than thoſe who kept many Concubines; for they might probably be perſuaded, that Concubinage was lawful, but the Married were conſcious, that they ſinned againſt their known Duty; that all Perſons had not the Continency of John the Baptiſt; but no Inſtance could be produced to ſhew, it was lawful for the Clergy to quit the State of Celibacy, no not among the Greeks, notwithſtanding their Difference, in ſeveral Rites, from the Romiſh Church.

12. Few Perſons will allow Campejus, however celebrated for his great Knowledge of the Canon and Civil Laws, to have argued here like a good Caſuiſt. An Offence againſt a moral Law founded in the natural Reaſon and Order of Things, is certainly conſidered in it ſelf much greater, than an Offence againſt humane, or mere poſitive Inſtitution, even ſuppoſing ſuch Laws to be really enacted, not only by a competent Authority, but upon juſt and reaſonable Grounds. But, it was pretended, that the Laws, which prohibited Marriage to the Clergy, could have no ſuch Foundation; becauſe Marriage, according to the original Inſtitution of it, is indifferently permitted to all Perſons; is neceſſary to the Ends of Creation in general; and, to the Good of civil Society: That the Inclination, whereby we are excited to the proper Functions of it, is the moſt general, and the moſt difficult to be overcome; and, to reſtrain Men from the natural Means of gratifying it, is to put them in a State of Temptation, wherein they can have no Security, that they ſhall be able to preſerve their Innocence. For theſe, and other like Reaſons, Zuinglius, who had now made ſome Progreſs towards a Reformation in Switzerland, wrote to the Magiſtrates, that they ſhould not give any Diſturbance to the married Prieſts: Repreſenting to them, [i] That the Devil was the Author of Celibacy, and, at the ſame Time, reminding them of a Cuſtom, which had obtained in ſome of their Cantons, that when a new Curate was received among them, they enjoined him to keep a Concubine, leſt he ſhould attempt the Chaſtity of their Wives; which tho' it was thought, ſaith Zuinglius, a ridiculous Cuſtom, yet was prudently eſtabliſhed in the Darkneſs and Depravation of Religion.

13. It is as difficult to reconcile this Aſſertion, as that of Campejus beforementioned, with the ſound Maxims of Morality; a vicious Eſtabliſhment can never be ſuppoſed agreeable to the Rules of Prudence. Nor can it be proved under any Circumſtances lawful, that we may directly commit a known Sin, to avoid the Occaſions of Sinning. This Reformer was a Man of a warm Temper, and his Zeal for a Reformation of certain Abuſes, which were too flagrant to admit any Excuſe, or further Toleration, ſometimes carried him, with too impetuous a Force, to an Exceſs on the other Side. Had he argued no better in Relation to other controverted Points at that Time, the Reformation would have made but very little Progreſs under his Conduct. The only Apology, which can be made for him, is, That he did not look upon Concubinage, as in itſelf ſimply unlawful. But this Argument, inſtead of confirming his Aſſertion, That the Devil was the Author of

Concubinage, might be improved to militate againſt him, and to ſhew, that Matrimony was not therefore neceſſary to prevent thoſe Effects of Concupiſcence, which were ſaid to be inevitable; becauſe a lawful Proviſion might otherwiſe have been made againſt them.

14. Yet having mentioned the Reaſons in general, which were urged at that Time, againſt the Celibacy of the Clergy, as an Hiſtorian of Opinions, under which Character I would be underſtood to write, except in Relation to ſuch Harmony and inconteſted Principles of Religion or Morality, which will admit of no Diſpute; I think it incumbent on me, to ſet the Arguments on the other ſide for the Celibacy of the Clergy, ſo far as I am able, in a due Light.

It was ſaid, Then, tho' Marriage was originally permitted to all Perſons, and to which therefore every one had a natural Right; yet natural Rights might be, and are in Fact, in many Reſpects, ſuperſeded by poſitive and humane Laws: That Marriage indeed, is generally neceſſary to certain wiſe Ends of Providence, yet there is no Neceſſity, in order to thoſe Ends, why all Perſons ſhould marry. That a like Anſwer may indifferently ſerve, with Reſpect to the Good of civil Society. As to the Difficulty of overcoming the Motions of Concupiſcence, it was alledged, Celibacy argued a more ſublime, but not an impracticable Degree of Vertue in thoſe, who made a Vow of it, or were otherwiſe obliged to that State: That God will proportion the Meaſures of his Grace to the Strength of Temptations incident to us in every State of Life, to which Reaſons of Prudence or Piety may determine our Choice, and which doth not interfere with any other Duty neceſſarily incumbent on us: That when the Apoſtle recommended Celibacy by Reaſon of the preſent Diſtreſs, he plainly ſuppoſeth a diſcretionary Liberty in Men, upon prudential Conſiderations whether to marry or not. And there may be other Conſiderations of that Kind, to render a ſingle State more eligible, even when the Church is not in a State of Perſecution; eſpecially, to the Clergy, whoſe Character renders it more particularly incumbent on them to attain the Things which are excellent, and to exemplify to others the Duties of the moſt ſtrict and pure Morality. That Children are not allowed to marry without conſent of their Parents, at a Time when the Paſſion perhaps for Marriage is moſt violent; which yet would be very unjuſt, upon a Suppoſition, that ſuch Paſſions are really invincible: that the Members of ſeveral Societies cannot marry without forfeiting all the Privileges to which they are, as ſuch, entitled; and yet, that this Condition is not thought to reflect either on the Wiſdom or Goodneſs of thoſe, who founded ſuch Societies: That Chaſtity is indeed a ſpecial Gift of God's Grace, but ſo are other Duties, which we oblige our ſelves in the baptiſmal Covenant to practiſe; and in the Uſe of proper Means or Auſterities towards performing any pious Vow or Reſolution, we may rely on thoſe Aſſiſtances, which are neceſſary to the Performance of it: That upon this Ground, Perſons in the married State are allowed, on their lawful Occaſions, to be long abſent; and Decency, when either Party dies, is ſuppoſed to require, that the Survivor ſhould not, 'till after ſome convenient Time, proceed to a ſecond Marriage; and among the Clergy, thoſe of the firſt Order are debarred the Liberty of a ſecond Marriage, by Virtue of an apoſtolical Rule.

15. All theſe Reaſons ſeem to prove, that the Church may, upon wiſe and good Conſiderations, reſtrain her Children from Marriage: But ſeeing it is Matter of Prudence, whether ſhe ſhould make uſe of the Plenitude of her Power to this End, ſhe may alſo, for the very ſame Reaſon, according to the different Circumſtances of Time, or State of Affairs, allow her Children to marry.

16. The great Objection againſt ſuch an Allowance hath been, That a married State involved the Clergy too much in the Cares and Troubles of the World; That their domeſtick Dependencies rendered them leſs capable of that Freedom and Greatneſs of Mind, wherewith it became them to act; That the Tenderneſs for a diſtreſſed Family would, in Caſes of great Difficulty or Danger, impair their Courage, and depreſs their Spirits in ſuch manner, that the Temptations which they might lie under to vile and ſcandalous Compliances, would be much more difficultly reſiſted; and that, as the Church can only be ruined by Churchmen, ſhould the State at any Time make an Attempt to deſtroy the Rights and Powers of it, a married Clergy would probably diſcover leſs Reſolution in oppoſing ſuch an Attempt, if they would not rather be thought the proper Inſtruments of effecting it. They urged further, That the very Nature of the miniſterial Office requires Heavenly-mindedneſs, and a generous Contempt of the World; but the Neceſſity of providing for a Family, and eſpecially of raiſing One, would ſometimes put the Clergy upon doing Things, which would appear, at leaſt, to proceed from an avaricious Temper, if Avarice might not be the true and real Motive to them. There was ſtill another popular Objection againſt the Marriage of the Clergy, from the Danger of a more irregular Diſpoſition of ſuch Preferments as might happen to be in their Patronage. If Nepotiſm was practiſed in a Manner, which gave ſuch open Scandal and Offence, when the Paſtors of the Church were unmarried, it was inferred, much greater Enormities of this Kind might be apprehended, when they had legitimate Children or Deſcendants from them to provide for, with whom the Dignities of the Church, deſigned as Marks of Diſtinction to Perſons of Merit, ſhould, without any Regard to Merit, be filled, to the Diſcouragement of Learning, and the Scandal of all good Men.

17. But my Buſineſs is only to propoſe theſe Arguments in a hiſtorical Way, without making any Reflections on them, whether as having at that Time any reaſonable Foundation, or whether future Time hath given any juſt Occaſion of applying them.

1. THE next remarkable Occurrence, which I ſhall take notice of at this Time, was the Advancement of Clement the Seventh to the papal Chair, vacant upon the Death of Pope Adrian, and which our Cardinal was not without ſome Proſpect of filling himſelf. Upon Notice of that Pope's Death, the Cardinal took the firſt Opportunity of [g] writing to the King, and acquainted him, that his Abſence from Rome was the only Thing that could fruſtrate his Pretenſions; yet he was of Opinion, conſidering the Factions among the Cardinals, they would not haſtily proceed to chuſe one upon the Place; ſo that if his Majeſty thought him not unworthy of ſo high a Dignity, tho' he ſhould prefer his Service to all the Honours of the Popedom, He humbly deſired his Favour and Aſſiſtance, and that he might have Leave to draw up proper Inſtructions to be laid before Him, for his Approbation, upon that View. In a former [b] Letter to the King he had made it his Requeſt, that his Majeſty would be pleaſed to ſign 1523. 1524.

a Letter, which he had written in his own Behalf, and in his Majeſty's Name.

2. But all his Schemes upon this ſecond Attempt for the Pontificate, proved ineffectual, as to his main End, tho' ſeveral of the Cardinals were much inclined to ſerve him. Upon what Motives he was ſo ambitious of ſucceeding to the papal Chair, and what Methods he took to accompliſh his Deſign, will appear from a Letter of [i] Inſtructions, that he wrote to Secretary Pace, who was ſent to negotiate for him, and wherein there are ſeveral Particulars, which do not ſeem to conſiſt with that intire Freedom, and diſintereſted Manner of Proceeding, which ought to be obſerved in all publick Elections for the Service whether of Church or State, but eſpecially on Occaſion of electing the firſt Paſtor of the chriſtian Church.

3. Upon Advice that Julio de Medicis, who took upon him the Name of Clement the Seventh, was choſen Pope, the Cardinal wrote a long Letter of [k] Inſtructions to the Biſhop of Bath at Rome, wherein he is ordered to congratulate the new Pope, in his Majeſty's and the Cardinal's Name, upon his Elevation; tho' it had not as yet been formally notified to the Engliſh Court by his Holineſs. The Terms wherein they expreſs their Joy and Complacency at his Advancement, are the moſt ſtrong, full, and affectionate, that could be employed: And for which the Cardinal therefore has been charged with Prevarication and Inſincerity. But there appeareth no great Difficulty in acquitting him from this Imputation, as to the Inſtance before us. Some Allowances are to be made for the uſual Forms and Ceremonies of Expreſſion in Addreſſes of this Nature. But the Inſtructions in the Letter to Pace, diſcover, that if He and the other Ambaſſadors had no Proſpect of Succeſs for the Legate, they ſhould Intereſt themſelves for the [l] Cardinal de Medicis, and that they would hereby do an acceptable Service both to himſelf, and to the King: Nay, they had Orders not to appear for him, 'till that Cardinal had either declined the Election, or had no probable Expectation of carrying it. The Letter to the Biſhop of Bath I have recited in the Collections at large, not only as relating to the preſent Subject, but as it diſcovereth to us the Grounds of our proſecuting the War with ſo much Vigour, in conjunction with the Emperor, againſt France. The State of our military Preparations, the Progreſs of our Arms; the Maxims and Intereſts at that Time of our own, and, in a Manner, of all the Courts in Europe. But the l It further appears from a Letter written by the Legate to the King, on Occaſion of this Cardinal's Election, that it was very agreeable to the Legate's Sentiments and Deſires; for however he might diſſemble them to the Cardinal de Medicis himſelf, or to the Court of Rome, there is no Reaſon to ſuſpect, but he was ſincere in what he wrote concerning that Election to the King. See Coll. prinprincipal and more direct Deſign of this Letter, is to engage the Pope to come into the Confederacy againſt the common Enemy, as Francis was then termed; and here we may obſerve with how much Art, Addreſs, and Amplification, the Cardinal employeth all the Arguments that could be ſuppoſed proper either to ingratiate or perſuade, either to move the Affections, or enlighten the Underſtanding: He ſeems to omit nothing, that could have been ſaid pertinently on the Subject; and he obviates every Thing, which might be ſuggeſted to his Holineſs, on the other Side.

4. Theſe Inſtructions to our Ambaſſadors at Rome, tho' the Pope thought it more adviſeable for the Time preſent to preſerve a Neutrality between the contending Powers, and not to embroil himſelf upon his firſt Acceſſion to the Pontificate, in the Wars of Italy, yet were a good Preparative towards expediting another private [m] Diſpatch of the Cardinal to Secretary Pace, wherein he deſired, that his Holineſs might be moved to grant him an Amplification of his Legatine Powers; declaring, that tho' for Reaſons reſpecting the King's Prerogative and other Deductions, it was not worth to him a thouſand Ducats yearly, yet if his Authority or Faculties might be augmented, he ſhould moſt thankfully acknowledge the Honour done to him. The Requeſt was complied with, and his Character of Legate, which was at firſt only granted from Year to Year, at moſt to two Years, and afterwards by Adrian from five Years to five Years, was now, by a new Precedent, aſſured to him for Term of Life. I have alſo added in the Collections, a [n] Copy, but not that whereby he was conſtituted Legate for his Life, which he received towards the Augmentation of his Legatine Character by Pope Leo, with another from [o] Adrian; and which may ſerve, in general, to ſhew, how great Authority this Legate exerciſed, or might exerciſe over all Orders and Degrees of Men; and what prodigious Advantage, he might have made by an Abuſe of his Truſt, or even by acting to the Extent of his Commiſſion. For he was empowered to viſit all Perſons, and all Places, exempt and not exempt, to reform and correct them; or to inflict Mulcts on them at Pleaſure. He had Power to diſpenſe with ſeveral Irregularities and Defects; and to legitimate, in caſe of diſhoneſt Births, and to abſolve from Diſqualifications or Incapacities in ſeveral other Reſpects. The Powers granted to him of making Knights, Counts Palatine, and of conferring Degrees, ſeem rather to have been mentioned for the Sake of Form, than with a Deſign of being executed; at leaſt, no Inſtances have occurred to me of his executing them; or if he did, it would ſtill remain to be proved, that they were any thing more, than mere titular Honours, or that they were attended with any legal or operative Effects.

5. But notwithſtanding the Extent of the Legate's Commiſſion, whereby he was in expreſs Terms empowered to viſit Monaſteries exempt and not exempt, ſome of them, and in particular the Friers obſervant, made a Difficulty of ſubmitting to this Order; pretending they could not be comprehended in it, except ſuch Privileges and Indulgences, upon which they pleaded their Exemption, had been diſtinctly ſpecified, and recited in ſo many expreſs Words, in his ſaid Legatine Powers. They alſo made uſe of this other Reaſon, in their Appeal to the Pope againſt the Cardinal's Procedure, in relation to them, that they were obliged by Vow, and the Rules of their Order, to obey their proper Superior; and that they could not, without his Conſent, transfer their Obedience to any other Perſon.

6. The Oppoſition which the Cardinal had formerly met with on this Account, obliged him to have recourſe to Leo the Tenth for ſuch an explanatory Specification of his Legatine Powers, as might obviate and remove any ſuch future Pretenſions in order to over-rule them. This [p] Clement granted in as full and ample a Manner, as the Legate himſelf could have propoſed; having recited that ſome of the religious Houſes, who pleaded Exemption, had preferred Complaint to him againſt the Legate, as if in appointing to viſit them, he had aſſumed any unjuſt Power, and had therefore refuſed to ſubmit to his Viſitation: He determines notwithſtanding, out of the Plenitude of his Power, and in Regard to the Cardinal's great Zeal for Religion, his extraordinary Vertue, Probity, and Merits, and to the End, Vice and the Lutheran Hereſy may be exterminated, that he ſhall viſit all ſuch Places pretending an Exemption; and to render this Declaration ſtill more full and expreſs, he deſcendeth to ſpecify ſeveral ſuch Places, and in particular of the Friers obſervant; authorizing the Cardinal, whatever Places he ſhould viſit, to reform and puniſh the Members of them; and even, if he ſhould ſee Occaſion, to eject or deprive them, without Regard to any Appeals, or pretended Privileges whatſoever. And as to all other Perſons of what Diſtinction ſoever, he is empowered, if he ſhall find Cauſe, to proceed againſt them, upon Pain of Excommunication.

7. But ſeveral Complaints having been preferred againſt the Clergy in general, on Account of their looſe and immoral Lives, the Cardinal, to prevent the Scandal and other evil Effects occaſioned thereby to Religion, reſolved upon a general Viſitation of

8. Fox Biſhop of Wincheſter took this Occaſion of [r] Writing to the Cardinal in the moſt reſpectful Terms, and which diſcovered the high Regard and Affection which that excellent Prelate ſtill retained for him. It has been commonly ſaid indeed, that Biſhop Fox retired from Court in Diſguſt, at the inſolent and ungrateful Behaviour of one, who had been introduced there by his Means. But I have not been able to find any ſufficient Grounds to believe this the true, or indeed any Cauſe of that Biſhop's leaving the Court; except in his Life, written by that learned Antiquary Mr. Fullman, Part of which, (becauſe I cannot ſuppoſe it to conſiſt with the Character of a faithful Hiſtorian, to diſſemble any competent Evidence againſt his private Opinion, concerning any important Subject of his Hiſtory) I ſhall tranſcribe ſo far as it has a Relation to the preſent Caſe.

" [rr] About that Time he preferred one of his own Chaplains " Thomas Wolſey, to the King's Service. Who finding him a Man " of Diligence and Diſpatch, took him into the Number of his " Domeſticks, and ſhortly after made him Dean of Lincoln. The " firſt Step to that exceſſive Greatneſs that made him afterwards " forget his Friend and Promoter.

" The Biſhop, by the Gravity of his Age and Place, being leſs " fit (and perhaps leſs acceptable) for continual Attendance upon " a youthful Prince, thought it requiſite to introduce ſome other " Perſon that might ſupply that Defect, and oppoſe the Earl of " Surrey, in thoſe Opportunities of ſtrengthning himſelf, by bring- " ing in his own Kindred and Friends. To this Purpoſe he made " choice of Thomas Wolſey Dean of Lincoln, formerly his Chaplain " and now the King's, to whom he now more effectually recom- " mended him, with the Aſſiſtance of Sir Thomas Lovell Maſter of " the Wards, a Counſellor of great Eſteem.

" In ſhort Time Wolſey was become the only Man with the " King, but withal, ſo inſolent and imperious as was irkſome; not " only to thoſe great One's, that well remembred his Meanneſs, " but even to thoſe, who had moſt aſſiſted to raiſe him from it. " This made the grave Counſellors leſs frequent at Court. Arch- " biſhop Warham and Biſhop Fox, began to look towards their " own Dioceſes. " rately replied, That it ſhould be his Care, that every Servant " ſhould obey and not command.

" The great Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk (notwithſtanding the " ſignal Services of the One, and the near Alliance of the Other, " having lately married the King's Siſter) were ſometimes glad to " give Way to the Stream, which carried all before the Cardinal; " for that Dignity was lately added to his Power and his Pride. " And yet further, to join the Height of civil Honour to that of " Eccleſiaſtical, Archbiſhop Warham delivering up the Great Seal, " which he had held many Years, the Cardinal ſucceeded in the " Office of Lord High Chancellor, ſo that all Authority and Ad- " vice was in a Manner engroſſed into one Head and one Hand. " But yet the King, in Matters of high Importance, would ſome- " times recall his old Counſellors, and ſo far hearken unto them, " as to moderate the Extravagance of the New."

9. As to the Charge of Ingratitude, the only Article of which I ſhall here take Notice, it were to be wiſhed Mr. Fulman had produced any one Inſtance, if it might have been found, to ſupport it. The Reaſon which himſelf aſſigns, reſpecting the Biſhop's Age and Office, was ſufficient to render an eaſy and calm Retreat in his own Dioceſe, where he might attend the Cure of it, much preferable to all the ſplendid Cares and Diſtractions of a Court; there was no Neceſſity therefore of ſuppoſing, that his Receſs did proceed from the Cauſe here inſinuated; from a Letter before recited, which Mr. Wolſey, for he was only ſo then, wrote to the Biſhop, who had retired from Court, it is reaſonable to conclude, he had done nothing to incur his Diſpleaſure; for he writes to his Patron with all the Freedom and Aſſurance, but with all that profound Veneration, which might become one, who could not be reproached with the leaſt Inſtance of Ingratitude or Neglect. Neither is it probable, that Biſhop Fox, who was a wiſe pious and good Man, but not incapable of reſenting a baſe Action, would have addreſſed a Letter to the Cardinal, in a Manner ſo expreſſive of his Eſteem, had he known him chargeable with a Crime whereof none but the moſt baſe, ignoble, and ſervile Minds can be guilty.

10. The Reformation of Abuſes in the Church, was not the only End, which the Legate propoſed in calling a Convocation. The extraordinary Exigencies of the State required a large Supply; and the Demands of the Legate roſe to an unuſual Height upon the Clergy. He moved for one full Moiety of their Livings according to their annual Value; but towards their Relief in ſome Meaſure, they had the Space of five Years allowed for the Payment of it. The Cardinal to induce them to a Compliance, employed all all the Force of his Eloquence. He repreſented how much the King had merited of the Church, that he had been the Author of ſuppreſſing the dangerous Schiſm in the Time of Pope Julius, and that he had protected the Rights of the apoſtolick See, and the Liberties of Italy, from the Attempts which had been made upon them by the French King. But the Subject upon which he principally exſpatiated, was the King's Book againſt Fiſher. He did not omit to remind them, that the French King was making War upon England; That the Duke of Albany had been ſent into Scotland to excite Troubles, and foment Animoſities on that Side, and that they ought therefore to proportion the Meaſure of their Supply to the Exigency of the Occaſion: That as the King had ſurpaſſed all his Predeceſſors in his Zeal, and the Merit of his Services for the Church, the Returns of their Duty and Gratitude to him ought to be more ſignal and exemplary.

11. But beſides that this Motion was oppoſed by the Biſhops of Wincheſter and Rocheſter, it was thought ſuch an irregular Step had been taken by the Cardinal, in removing the Convocation ſummoned to meet at St. Paul's, by Virtue of his Legatine Authority, to Weſtminſter, that all their Proceedings in this latter Place would be of no Validity. So that they ſat not many Days at Weſtminſter, before they returned to the Aſſembly from which they had been called, and where they continued ſitting 'till the 14th of Auguſt, and then granted a Subſidy to the King: The Clergy of York did the ſame four Days after, and ſo concluded their Aſſembly: They both agreed to a Subſidy of one Half of their annual Eccleſiaſtical Revenues, to be paid in five Years.

12. Parker, in his Britiſh Antiquities, has repreſented this Part of the Cardinal's Conduct, not only as having no Precedent in Hiſtory, but as importing a [n] Crime of a moſt enormous Nature; imputing it to an intolerable Exceſs of Pride and Ambition, which cauſed him to violate all Rules of Order and Right, and made him deſirous of drawing every Thing within the Sphere of his own Action as Legate; and therefore, becauſe, as Archbiſhop of York he had no Place in the Convocation called by Warham, by Virtue of his Legatine Power he diſſolved it, and ſummoned the Clergy to appear before him the Day after at Weſtminſter.

13. This Cenſure of Archbiſhop Parker upon the Cardinal, may be more eaſily accounted for, than ſome other which occur in his Antiquities; as it is founded upon a Fact, wherein there was confeſſedly ſomething ſingular and extraordinary: Yet it might poſſibly, in Reſpect to the Dignity and Character of the Cardinal, have been expreſſed in more ſoft and gentle Terms. The Cardinal perhaps ſuppoſed himſelf really veſted with the Power which he pretended to exerciſe; or he deſired to exerciſe it, as thinking he ſhould be more able, in his Character of Legate, at the Head of the Convocation, to do the King greater Service in moving the Supply, which after all did not paſs without much Oppoſition from two Prelates of the moſt Weight and Authority in it. Their chief Arguments were, that it was a heavy and unuſual Tax, under which the Clergy would not be able to ſupport themſelves: That it would be an ill Precedent to future Times, and might entail an intolerable Burthen upon the Church. But the Cardinal, who deſigned the Convocation ſhould give ſome ſignal Proof of their Zeal for the King's Service, and ſuch as might be exemplary to the Parliament, was reſolved to carry his Point, by making uſe of thoſe Influences which were proper to animate his Friends, which might bring over ſome, and oblige others to be abſent.

14. Upon granting the Supply, a Clauſe however was thrown in, towards preventing any ſuch future Demand, That it ſhould not be a Precedent: Which yet, in the very Nature of the Thing, can never be ſuppoſed to limit the ſame Authority on any future Occaſion, when the ſame Reaſons for their acting in the like manner ſhall again occur. The Preamble to the Bill is full of dutiful Expreſſions and Acknowledgements to the King: Strangers who were beneficed in England, were charged to the full annual Value of their Benefices to be paid in five Years. But there was an Exception in Favour of the Biſhops of Worceſter, and Llandaff, of Polydore Virgil, Peter the Carmelite, Eraſmus, Silveſter Carius, and Peter Vannes, who were obliged to pay no more, than the Natives.

15. But what Oppoſition there was on Account of this Subſidy, both in [o] Parliament and Convocation, may be more particularly learned from the anonymous Letter in the Collections out of the [p] Cotton Library, relating to this Affair. The Parliamentary Tax was generally complained of, and thought ſo rigorous and oppreſſive, that it occaſioned an Inſurrection of Four thouſand People in Suffolk, againſt the Commiſſioners, which yet was ſoon ſuppreſſed by the Duke of Norfolk.

1. NO Affairs, relating either to Church or State, however arduous, could obſtruct the Cardinal's great and generous Deſigns for the Advancement of Learning. With that View he had projected to found two Colleges, one at Ipſwich, the Place of his Birth, and the other at Oxford; the great Difficulty was, in finding Means of endowing them with Revenues ſuitable to the Extent and Magnificence of his Plan. The beſt Expedient that could be propoſed, was to transfer the Revenues of certain Monaſteries of leſs Value, or conſiſting of fewer Members, towards the Support of his Colleges. And Reaſons were not wanting to induce the Pope to grant Bulls to this End, provided the King and other Founders of the Monaſteries to be diſſolved, ſhould give their Conſent for that Purpoſe. Some have made it a Queſtion, whether the Pope ought, or could, in the Plenitude of his Power, make Alienations of the Rights or Revenues appropriated to religious Societies, and confirmed with the moſt religious Solemnities, to any other Uſes, than thoſe for which they were originally intended. 1522. 1523. 1524.

2. It

2. It will appear more fully afterwards, that the Pope, upon the Principles of the Church of Rome, had ſuch a Power, and that Perſons veſted with the ſupreme Authority in every Nation, ought to have it; ſo that upon wiſe and good Reaſons, for thoſe are always to be taken as implied, they may lawfully exerciſe it. Suppoſing it evident, for Inſtance, that any pious Foundation could be put under a better tho' very different Rule, ſo as more effectually to attain thoſe Ends of Piety, for which it was firſt inſtituted, there would be no Injury done to the Founder in modelling it anew according to that Rule; but the Authority by which it is done, will rather be ſuppoſed to act agreeably to what the Founder himſelf would have deſigned, upon Suppoſition he had foreſeen the Advantage of the Change. The ſame Reaſon will hold for altering every poſitive Inſtitution, ſo as to render it really more beneficial to the Uſes propoſed. It is upon this Principle, that Courts of Equity proceed in diſpenſing with the Letter of the Law, and making ſuch Appointments, as appear evidently moſt agreeable to the Reaſon and primary Intention of it. Now the ſupreme Authority of any Nation is always to be conſidered, as the ſtanding and ſupreme Court of Equity in it; and muſt therefore be allowed to have an equal Right at leaſt with inferiour Courts, of regulating it ſelf by the ſettled Maxims of Equity.

3. Had the Cardinal indeed propoſed to diſſolve the leſſer Monaſteries, merely to transfer them into Lay-hands, to enrich or aggrandize private Families, to which Purpoſe the Founders of them neither did, nor could, by any equitable Conſtruction, be preſumed to intend them; this had been a wicked and ſacrilegious Attempt indeed, and a notorious Violation of the common Rules of Juſtice, which nothing could have been ſaid by the Wit of Man to palliate or excuſe. But as the Cardinal's Deſign, in the Diſſolution of them, was laudable and excellent, and in purſuit of a general Good, the greateſt Good that can accrue to Mankind, that of a pious and learned Education; they who have charged him with Sacrilege on this Account, ſeem not to have in the leaſt conſidered the Reaſons or Grounds of their Cenſure.

4. What the Author of the eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory of Great-Britain has advanced, as to this Charge, in Defence of the Cardinal, is ſo juſt in the main Foundation of it, that I ſhall here take Leave to tranſcribe it, with what followeth, relating to the Foundation of his College, out of our learned Oxford Hiſtorian.

" [q] To take off this Imputation of Sacrilege, we are to conſider,
" That the Cardinal was governed by the Principles of that Age,
" and did nothing but what was juſtified by the received Doctrines.

" He owned the Supremacy of the papal See, and maintained the " Privileges claimed by the Court of Rome. Now, under this " Perſwaſion, he muſt believe the Pope had an Authority of tranſ- " ferring the Lands and Revenues of the Church to what Uſes he " thought fit; and eſpecially of turning religious Houſes into So- " cieties for ſecular Prieſts, and for the Advancement of Learning. " And the Popes had formerly given Inſtances of their Authority " in this Kind. Further: Since Popes have given Monks Leave " to throw off their Habits and return to the World, what ſhould " hinder them from altering a Settlement, and making a ſmall Re- " volution in the Lands and Tenements; Why ſhould the Con- " ſecration of Eſtates go deeper, and be more irrevocable, than " that of Perſons.

" Beſides, if we conſider the new Application, there will be no " Reaſon to charge the Cardinal with Sacrilege. For he did not " alienate the Revenues from religious Service, but only made a " Change in the Diſpoſal. Now every Body knows, theſe " Societies are expreſsly dedicated to the Honour of God Al- " mighty.

" Further: Whereas it is objected the Cardinal's Precedent led " the Way to future Liberties, and proved fatal to the Reſt of the " Monaſteries: To this it may be anſwered by asking a Queſtion, " Did ever any Body lay the Imputation of Sacrilege on Wainfleet " or Chichely? Not to mention other Founders of Colleges. Did " ever any Body charge theſe Prelates with ſacrilegious Invaſion for " building their Colleges on the Ruins of the Priors alien? For " receiving the Revenues of thoſe forfeited Eſtates to endow their " Foundations? Laſtly, Were not the Templers ſuppreſſed, and " their Lands every where ſeized in the fourteenth Century? And " was not the Diſſolution of their Houſes countenanced by the " Pope himſelf?

" To proceed: The Cardinal having procured the King's Let- " ters Patents, went vigorouſly on with the Building of his Col- " lege in Oxford. The Patent gives great Commendations of the " Cardinal's Adminiſtration, and that the Weight of the Govern- " ment had reſted upon him for ſeveral Years. By this Patent the " College was to be built upon the Site of St. Frideſwed Priory " (lately diſſolved for that Purpoſe) and to be called Cardinal Col- " lege. This Inſtrument likewiſe gave Authority for ſettling Two " thouſand Pounds a Year in clear Revenue, upon the Founda- " tion. The Cardinal's Plan in this Benefaction was large and " noble, as appears by a Draught of the Statutes ſent to the So- " ciety under his Hand and Seal. By this Scheme, there was a " Dean and Sub-dean, threeſcore Canons of the firſt Rank, and " forty of the Second, thirteen Chaplains, twelve Clerks, and ſix-

" teen Choriſters; to which we muſt add, Lecturers or Profeſſors " in Divinity, Canon Law, Civil Law, Phyſick, Philoſophy, Lo- " gick, and Humanity: There were likewiſe four Cenſors of Man- " ners and Examiners of the Proficiency of the Students; there " were alſo three Treaſurers, four Stewards, and twenty inferior " Servants; in all, One hundred and eighty ſix. And laſtly, there " was a Revenue ſettled for the Entertainment of Strangers, the " Relief of the Poor, and the Keeping of Horſes for College- " buſineſs. As to the Building, it was magnificent in the Model, " curious in the Workmanſhip, and rich in the Materials. And " if the Cardinal had lived to execute the Deſign, few Palaces of " Princes would have exceeded it. Neither would the Library have " been ſhort of the Nobleneſs of the Structure: For the Cardinal " intended to have furniſhed it with the Learning and Curioſities " of the Vatican, and to have tranſcribed the Pope's Manuſcripts " for that Purpoſe. But this noble Foundation had but four Years " Continuance: For in the Year 1529, when the Cardinal was " caſt in a Premunire, the Deſign dropped, the Buildings were " left unfiniſhed, and all the Eſtate of the Foundation both real " and perſonal, was forfeited to the King: And thus it continued " in his Majeſty's Hand, 'till the Year 1532, in which Time ſe- " veral Mannors and other Branches of the Revenue, were ſnatched " by the Courtiers. In the Year laſt mentioned, the King founded " the College anew, with the Settlement of Two thouſand Pounds " yearly. In this Foundation there was a Dean and twelve ſecular " Canons: But this Settlement laſted not much longer than the " Firſt; for in the Year 1545, this Corporation was diſſolved by " Commiſſion, and reſigned by the Dean and Canons into the " King's Hand. About two Months after, it was revived by his " Majeſty's Letters Patents: And the next Year by an Inſtrument " of the ſame Kind, the King tranſlated the Epiſcopal See from " Oſney to this College. Thus the Church of this Society was " made the Cathedral, and the College called Chriſt-Church. In " this laſt Foundation, there is a Proviſion for the Dean, eight " Canons, three publick Profeſſors of Divinity, of Hebrew and " Greek, ſixty Students, eight Chaplains, eight Singing-men, an " Organiſt, a Schoolmaſter, an Uſher, forty Boys, and twenty " four Almſmen."

5. This is a ſummary Account, ſeveral Particulars whereof will be afterwards enlarged upon, of the Riſe and Fall of Cardinal Wolſey's College; for I do not find, how any ſubſequent Alienation could juſtly diveſt him of the Name, or his Aſſigns, of the Revenues appropriated to it; ſince after ſuch Appropriation, and a formal Conveyance of his Right into other Hands, by the King's Conſent, not himſelf, but the Society to which it was conveyed, ought ought to have been conſidered as the Proprietor. And no Forfeiture of his own (if what was done, not only by the King's Conſent, but at his ſpecial Inſtance, could, in any good Senſe, be forfeited to the King) would yet extend to forfeit the Right of other Perſons. I do not deny, but that upon the Principles before laid down, the ſupreme Authority might transfer the Revenues appropriated by the Cardinal to the publick Advancement of Piety and Learning into other Hands, and upon a quite different Model from what he originally deſigned, provided ſuch Alienation had really been of more general Uſe towards Attaining theſe Ends, than could be propoſed in his Method. But it is not eaſy to conceive how thoſe Ends could be more effectually promoted, by transferring the Revenues ſettled upon a publick and well-regulated Society, into the Hands of private Perſons, or rapacious Courtiers. The only Argument for ſuch a Procedure, is the Plenitude of Power in the laſt Reſource of it. But tho' no Perſon will be ſo audacious as to diſpute, whether an Act of Parliament may alienate a legal Right, it may ſtill be queſtioned with all the Deference to the Legiſlature, whether any Act of Parliament ever was, or could be intended, to hinder Men from enquiring into the natural Reaſon and Equity of Things.

6. Having cited this Extract at large, I ſhall take the Liberty to reflect upon two or three Particulars in it. Firſt, I take the Aſſertion, that the Pope had an Authority of transferring the Lands and Revenues of the Church, to what Uſes he thought fit, to be too general. The Pope never had nor could be preſumed to have a Power of diſpenſing in any Caſe, contrary to the moral Reaſon and Equity of Things. Upon which, we aſſert the Clergy have a Right, an inalienable Right to a competent Maintenance, becauſe otherways they can neither preſerve the Regard due to their Character, neither attend nor diſcharge their Duty, as they ought to do; and ſo the End of God in appointing them to the Work of the Miniſtry, would neceſſarily be fruſtrated. The Pope therefore, for Inſtance, could never, upon any Pretence, have a Power of alienating the Revenues belonging to a particular Church, in ſuch a Manner, as not to reſerve a ſufficient Support for the Perſon, who was to adminiſter in it: Neither can any Power upon Earth, without deſtroying the Reaſons upon which God inſtituted the Miniſtry, exerciſe ſuch a Power; much leſs might it be expected, that we ſhould find any Inſtances of ſuch a Power in thoſe reformed Countries, where the civil Magiſtrates are Proteſtant, leaſt under a Pretence of oppoſing the papal Uſurpations, they ſhould really be found to fight againſt God. And therefore it may be preſumed, the Reaſon why the Enemies of the Clergy ſo generally conſpire in denying their divine Miſſion, and would render them mere Creatures of the State, is not ſo much with a direct Deſign of depretiating their Character, tho' that may be one Reaſon of their Prejudice, as in ſome Meaſure to excuſe thoſe ſacrilegious Invaſions that have been made by the Laity upon their Rights; and which, ſuppoſing their divine Inſtitution, muſt ſtill appear more flagrant, and impious in the Eyes of the whole World.

7. The Defence of the Cardinal, in Anſwer to the Objection, that his Precedent would lead a Way to future and unjuſt Liberties, is not ſo full, as might have been expected; it is only founded upon the Approbation given to former Precedents of the ſame Kind; which ſhew indeed, the Thing was practicable, but do not remove what was objected againſt the Practice. It might have been added, that the beſt Examples are liable to Miſapplication and Abuſe; that we are to diſtinguiſh the natural Tendency, from the accidental Event of Things, and that there could have been no ill Conſequence from the Cardinal's Example, if thoſe who were afterwards employed in demoliſhing religious Houſes, had proceeded upon his Motives, or conformed to his Model. As to the original Name of the College to be founded, which is here called Cardinal's College, there appears to be ſome Miſtake; becauſe in the firſt Bull from the Pope, for transferring the Revenues of Frideſwed, and in the King's [r] Patent, confirming to the Cardinal the Powers of that Bull, it is called the College of Secular Prieſts, and that is expreſſed as one Condition of the Grant.

8. In the Pope's Bull, the principal Reaſon aſſigned for the Powers granted to the Cardinal for ſuppreſſing the Monaſtery of [s] Frideſwed, was, That the Knowledge of Letters, the great Support of the catholick Faith and Religion, might be hereby promoted. And to this End, he is authorized, the King's Conſent being pre-ſuppoſed, to remove the Canons reſiding there to ſome other Place of the ſame Order, and to aboliſh the Name, Dignity, and Rules of the Priory, giving it the [t] Name beforementioned, and appropriating to it all the Revenues of the former Society.

9. The Reaſon ſpecified for the Confirmation of this Bull, by the King, was, That the Revenues of it were deſigned to be converted to a better Uſe; and it is expreſsly provided in the Patent, that the Name beforementioned, ſhould be impoſed: And to pre-

10. From the Cardinal's Deſign, in founding this College, the Tranſition is very natural to other his Benefactions, about this Time, to the Univerſity in general; which, that I may preſent a Train of them in one View to the Reader, I ſhall go ſo far back as the Year 1522, having for that Reaſon purpoſely omitted ſeveral Inſtances of his Favour and Regard for that learned Body, where they might not improperly have been mentioned.

11. In this Year there were great Diſſentions among the Maſters about the Choice of the Proctors, which could not otherways be determined, than by remitting a State of them to the Cardinal, yet without previous Notice to the Chancellor. 1522.

12. There is a [u] Letter on this Occaſion from the Cardinal to the Univerſity, wherein he takes Notice of the Deputation ſent to him, to repair the State of the Differences among them, expreſſing his Deſire of making his due Acknowledgements to them, for that Teſtimony of their Regard, not only by Letters, but other real and ſenſible Effects. In the mean time, towards re-eſtabliſhing the common Tranquillity, he thinks it adviſeable to defer the Election of Proctors for ſome Time, and that two Perſons of good Reputation, who were not of a turbulent, aſpiring Temper, ſhould be choſen 'till Michaelmas following, to do the Office; but that this Province ſhould not be committed to them, under the Title of Proctors, but only of Maſters of the Schools; and upon the Expiration of that Term, he hopes to be more at Leiſure to attend the Affairs of the Univerſity, and to ſee Things ſettled upon ſo good a Foundation, that the State of it will be continually more ſplendid and flouriſhing.

13. In Anſwer to this Letter, the Univerſity handſomely excuſe themſelves on Account of the frequent Occaſions they have had of addreſſing to the Cardinal, repreſenting, [x] That their Importunity has been in a Manner the Effect of Conſtraint, and that they have no other Proſpect of Relief, in the preſent Situation of their Affairs, but from his favourable Interpoſition; they acquaint him, that the Univerſity had readily conformed to his Direction concerning the Perſons recommended by him, Barber and Stark; but withal requeſt, that he would be pleaſed to remit to them the cuſtomary Form of electing Proctors, 'till he may have more Reſpit from the great Affairs of State to regulate thoſe of the Univerſity. And then they deſcend among other innumerable Benefits conferred on them, to acknowledge his ſingular Favour, in procuring to them an Exemption from the general Tax levied towards the Support of the War againſt France, and for which they had by former[y] Letters interceeded to him, repreſenting, that Colleges and their immediate Dependencies, had been exempted from the Charge of contributing to the publick Wars. This Cuſtom the Cardinal inſiſted upon to the King, as a Matter of academical Right, and, at his Inſtance, the Immunity deſired was obtained for the Univerſity; and they requeſt, in Caſe of a ſecond Demand, it might be continued.

14. In [z] Anſwer to this, the Cardinal refers them to their former cuſtomary Methods of electing the Proctors, adviſing them to take all ſuch fit Precautions againſt ſeditious and tumultuous Proceedings, whereby the Peace and Dignity of the Univerſity may be beſt preſerved. As to their Requeſt relating to a Diſcharge from the Subſidy, he informs them, that he cannot make any final Determination of the Matter, 'till he lay it before the Council, which he hopes to do in ſuch a Manner, as to make them ſenſible of the Effect of his Zeal for their Advantage. He adviſeth them in the Concluſion, to preſerve a good Spirit, to apply themſelves to the Study of Learning, and the Practice of wholſome Diſcipline; and to be particularly careful, that they do not from any Motive of vain Glory, or in Purſuit of any private Quarrels, or Animoſities, ſuffer themſelves to be diverted from the Opportunities of improving themſelves in true and uſeful Learning.

15. In the following Year, the King granted to the Univerſity, at the Cardinal's Inſtance, as is recited in a previous [a] Entry to it, a moſt gracious and ample Charter of Privileges, which the Cardinal cauſed to be tranſmitted to the Univerſity by a ſpecial Deputation. When it was promulged there, the Townſmen were ſo much irritated, that they openly refuſed to ſubmit to it. Upon which Account it was remitted to the King, and propoſed to be conſidered in Council. But the Reſult of the Matter will be more properly reſerved to the Year 1528.

16. About this Time Longland Biſhop of Lincoln came to Oxford in Quality of the Cardinal's Orator, who was to give them Aſſurances in the Cardinal's Name, that he was fully determined to proceed according to the Plan of his Deſign communicated to them the former Year: For that all his Thoughts were taken up in concerting proper Meaſures, to the End he might lay an ample Foundation for a College, and endow it with ſuch Revenues as would afford a handſome Maintenance for Two hundred Scholars and ſeven Lecturers; and as they ſo intirely repoſed their Truſt and Confidence in him, he deſired nothing more than to render his Services on all Occaſions acceptable to the Univerſity; declaring that his whole Study and Endeavour ſhould be to render it, (tho' at that Time in an ill State, both in Reſpect to its Privileges, and the proper Means of Erudition,) the moſt celebrated and flouriſhing Seminary of Learning in the whole World: And that he might have an Opportunity of teſtifying his benevolent Deſigns towards them in a more ſenſible and publick Manner, he repeated his Promiſe of attending the King and Queen to Oxford about the Beginning of Lent, and declared he would not return before he had firſt given ſome memorable Proofs of his ſingular Eſteem and Affection for the Univerſity.

17. Biſhop Longland having diſcharged his Commiſſion, took Leave of the Univerſity; whoſe principal Buſineſs was now to conſult, how they ſhould receive and entertain the King; and what Appointments they ſhould make, concerning the Orations to be ſpoken, and the Exerciſes to be performed on that Occaſion. And to make the Appearance of Scholars ſtill more numerous, ſpecial Orders were iſſued to recall ſuch of them as were abſent in the Country. But when they had made Preparations with much Care and Solemnity, and at no little Expence, towards the Reception of the Court, yet with a particular View of ſhewing their profound Veneration for the Cardinal, to whom, ſaith my [f] Author, they paid Honours little leſs than divine, a Peſtilence ſuddenly raged, which occaſioned both the Court and the Members of the Univerſity to withdraw. Some Time after Longland returned to Oxford, by Commiſſion from the Cardinal, to make the proper Regulations towards building his College; and he was empowered to eject the Monks of Frideſwyde, that Room might be made for introducing the Scholars and Lecturers of the Cardinal's Foundation; ſo that they might form a regular independent Body, whereas they had lived diſperſed before in ſeveral Halls and Colleges: And this the Cardinal is ſaid to have done by Advice of Veſey Biſhop of Exeter.

18. But it may be obſerved, that the Cardinal was not the firſt Author of adviſing the Diſſolution of Abbey-Lands, towards appropriating them to more beneficial Purpoſes, whether in Reſpect to Religion or Learning. Neither was this the firſt Inſtance, in the Reign of Henry the Eighth, of ſuch an Appropriation. The Monaſtery of Bromhall, was [g] diſſolved in the Year 1521, by Advice, and at the Inſtance of Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter; to the End the Revenues of it might be annexed towards the better Maintenance and Support of St. John's College in Cambridge. And about the ſame Time the Priory of Heigham in Kent was alſo diſſolved, and the Demeſnes thereof granted to the ſame College. Upon which Occaſion the King wrote a very preſſing [c] Letter to the Biſhop of Rocheſter: From whence it is reaſonably concluded, this Prelate was the chief Adviſer, and Inſtrument of thoſe Benefactions to a Society, which has ſucceſſively from that Time produced ſome of the greateſt Lights, both in the eccleſiaſtical State and the Republick of Letters; but none of a more diffuſive Influence, or more willing to communicate, than the [d] excellent Perſon here referred to, who has been pleaſed to favour me with the preſent, and ſeveral other Informations.

19. In a Letter from the King to the Biſhop of [e] Sarum, for which I am alſo indebted to the ſame Hand, concerning the Diſſolution of the Priory of Bromhall, his Majeſty acknowledgeth the effectual Diligence that Prelate had uſed, in aſſerting his paſtoral Authority towards excluding the Prioreſs and Nuns out of the Monaſtery, for the ſcandalous Diſorders and Impieties wherewith they had been charged, and in removing them to another Houſe, where a more ſtrict and religious Diſcipline was obſerved. January following [g] all the Evidences, Deeds, Charters, Court-Rolls, and other Papers, to the Number of a Hundred and twenty-one, were delivered to the College-Officer for the Uſe of St. John's College.

21. So far, that excellent Prelate Fiſher, did nothing, wherein he could, on any Account, be charged with ſhewing a partial Regard to the Univerſity of Cambridge: There was no Competition in the preſent Caſe between the two Univerſities, nor any Pretence, upon which Oxford could found a previous Claim to theſe Benefactions. But the Caſe was ſomewhat different as to the [b] Applications which were made by this Biſhop, in Favour of the ſame College, to Margaret Counteſs of Richmond. Certain Doctors of Oxford at that Time in her Family, and one in particular of great Name and Authority, moved her Highneſs to leave ſome ſuch Monument of her Magnificence in Oxford, as ſhe had already done in Cambridge. They laid before her a State of the Monaſtery of Frydeſwyde, and repreſented to her, by Way of Requeſt, the Advantage of converting it into a College of Students: They ſhewed how practicable ſuch a Deſign might be to a Lady of her Power and Fortune, and that, by this Means, her Name would be equally, and for ever celebrated in both Univerſities. So great Aſſiduity and Addreſs were uſed on this Occaſion, that this moſt pious and excellent Princeſs diſcovered an Inclination to gratify their Requeſt, which gave them no Cauſe to deſpair of ſucceeding in it, 'till the Biſhop of Rocheſter, who had taken Notice of their Sollicitude and Importunity in this Affair, interceeded to her Highneſs, to the End he might divert the Current of her Liberality into another Channel: He deſcribed, in ſo moving a Manner, the unhappy Condition, to which St. John's College in Cambridge was reduced, by the Miſconduct of their Members, by the Alienation of their Lands; the Neceſſity they were under of expoſing their Goods and very Ornaments to Sale, and even of intermitting divine Offices; but above all, to mention no other Inſtances of their Diſtreſs, by the heavy Load of Debts, they had contracted, and from which, in their preſent Circumſtances, they had no Proſpect of being delivered; that the good Princeſs deeply affected with Sentiments of Tenderneſs and Compaſſion at what he ſaid, was determined, notwithſtanding all the powerful Applications which were made on the other Side, to prefer his Advice. He told her, and herein he gave an Inſtance of that prophetick Spirit wherewith he was ſaid to be endowed, That no Benefit could be placed to greater Advantage, than that, which ſhould be employed to extirpate barren or noxious Weeds out of a neglected Soil, towards repleniſhing it with ſuch Seeds, as would in Time produce a moſt rich and plentiful Harveſt; alluding to the great Progreſs, which ſhould afterwards be made in that celebrated Nurſery of all divine and human Learning. And the Event has continually ſhewed, that this moſt pious and venerable Father, if in a ſtricter Senſe a Prophet, did not propheſy falſely.

Weeds

22. So that though Oxford might not be thought under any Obligation to this Biſhop for oppoſing them in an Affair of ſo great Importance, and wherein they ſo much intereſted themſelves; yet they have leſs Reaſon to regret the Effects of his Oppoſition, when they conſider the many good, excellent, and ſalutary Uſes which have been made, and ſtill continue to be made, by Means of it.

23. I wiſh the Partiality of our Oxford Hiſtorian could be as eaſily excuſed; who, ſpeaking of the Members of the other Univerſity at this Time, that removed to proſecute their Studies at Oxford, and eſpecially of thoſe, who were firſt tranſplanted from thence to repleniſh the Cardinal's College; repreſents them, in Point of Learning, tho' he cites the Authority of Fox for it, under a Character very little favourable to them, or to the former Place of their Reſidence. Oxford might perhaps, at that Time, under the auſpicious Influences of the Cardinal, enjoy ſeveral Advantages towards rendering the State of Learning more flouriſhing. But that Wood ſhould deſcribe it in ſo very low and forlorn a Condition, as he then does, in the other Univerſity; and that he ſhould bring in Fox, whom he does not ordinarily treat with much Regard, as a Party to countenance [i] his Reflections, ſeems rather to have proceeded from certain invidious Motives, which ought to have no Place in either Univerſity, than from an impartial Examination of ſuch other Evidences, as he might have conſulted, and from which it would have appeared, there were ſeveral Perſons in Cambridge, at that Time, of no inconſiderable Diſtinction for their Learning.

24. The Cardinal's Deſigns for the Advancement of Learning did not terminate in his magnificent Foundation at Oxford: He erected at [k] Ipſwych, the Place of his Birth, a [l] College, CHAP. XXVII.

1. An uncommon Quality in the Cardinal. 2. His long and ſeemingly elaborate Diſpatches. 3. He writes a political Eſſay. 4. Reaſon of the Duke of Bourbon's Diſguſt at the French Court. 5. Whether the Advantage taken of it by England, was according to the Rules of ſtrict Juſtice. 6. Yet neither the Engliſh nor Imperial Court ſeem to have been ſcrupulous on this Head. 7. A former Letter of the Cardinal farther cited. 8. The Sentiments of the King concerning the Operations of War, wherein the Cardinal at firſt concurred. 9. Letter from the Cardinal to our Ambaſſadors with the Emperor. 10. The Import of it. 11. Particularly of the Concluſion relating to the Duke of Albany, and the Engliſh Fleet.

1. SOllicitous as the Cardinal was, at this Time, to advance the Intereſts of the Republick of Letters, he was involved in the moſt difficult and weighty Affairs of State. Nothing ſhewed the Force or Extent of his Genius more, than that he was able to form and attend ſo many different Projects, at home, and abroad in different Courts, without Diſtraction, or the leaſt viſible Diſcompoſure of Mind. For he ever appeared to preſerve the ſame eaſy and diſengaged Temper, and diſcovered a Complacency in his Diſcourſe and Manner, as if his whole Attention were taken up with what related to the Rules or Subject of the preſent Converſation. There are few Inſtances of Men, who among a thouſand Perplexities, can have ſo abſolute a Command over their own Thoughts, or be able, on any Emergency, to give their Minds an intire Vacation from all former Buſineſs, and turn them, with equal Freedom and Facility, on any other Subject: Tho' Cardinal Wolſey indeed was not the only great Miniſter I could name, of whoſe Character this ſeems to have been one principal Diſtinction. 1522. 1523.

2. The Cardinal did not only aſſiſt, by his Advice, in the great Councils of the Realm, where, one would have thought, his very Attendance, with the Care of all the Churches, and with his other Legatine-Offices, might have been ſufficient to employ whatever Time he could ſpare from the convenient Support or Refreſhments of Life, but he wrote long, and which, if we conſider the important Matters contained in them, might ſeem laboured Diſpatches; tho' he hath had few Superiors in Reſpect to an eaſy and flowing, but rather too diffuſive Stile. And therefore, tho' we have no Work of his extant, which may properly entitle him to the Character of an Author; yet if all his Letters and Inſtructions could be found and collected into one or more Volumes, there are an infinite Number of Authors, who, upon a Compariſon of their Works with his, would appear much leſs to deſerve that Name. The Remains which are preſerved to us of this Kind, fall principally within the [n] Compaſs of three Years. If we may take an Eſtimate concerning thoſe Diſpatches, which are wanting, during the whole Courſe of his Miniſtry, from the Proportion they might be ſuppoſed to bear to thoſe which we have, they would, if recovered, compoſe ſeveral Volumes.

3. Yet the Cardinal, at the King's Inſtance, wrote a political [o] Eſſay about this Time, being at Calais, which went under the Name of a Book, and is called ſo by himſelf. The Subject of it was concerning the Reaſons and Operations of the War againſt France, and the Method of ſupporting it with Vigour and Effect; Yet with all poſſible Regard to his Majeſty's ſuperior Judgement and Determination. And therefore, when his Majeſty, upon a Peruſal of it, thought proper to diſſent from him in certain Particulars, he readily ſubmitted to the King's Regulations, excuſing himſelf from the Avocations, and Want of Leiſure in his Journey, which would not permit him to attend, as the Nature of it required, an Affair of ſo great Importance: Yet ſtill propoſing his own Opinion in the moſt diſtant and reſpectful Manner, that Words could expreſs, he is entirely reſigned to ſuch Corrections of it, as his Majeſty hath already made, or may further think fit to make.

4. And the Affair indeed upon which the Cardinal appeared moſt intent, was the War againſt France. To this End large Supplies were to be ſent to the Emperor for the Support of his Armies both in Italy and the Netherlands; and becauſe it was apprehended, of great Conſequence to the common Cauſe, if the Duke of Bourbon, lately diſguſted at the French King, could be brought to engage in it, no proper Means or Applications were omitted to that End. The Cauſe of his Diſcontent is ſaid to have been the Loſs of a Lawſuit, in the Progreſs and Determination whereof, he thought great Injuſtice was done to him, by the Influence of the French Court.

But

But it is not improbable, that being a Perſon of a great Spirit, ambitious, and impatient of every Thing that had the leaſt Appearance of a Diſgrace, he could not bear that a [p] Poſt of Honour to which, as Conſtable of France, he pretended a prior Right, ſhould be given from him to the Duke of Alancon, Brother-in-Law to the King. Nothing could have touched a Man of War, in ſo ſenſible a Part. A General-Officer, though of inferior Degree, who has ſerved long and faithfully, cannot eaſily bear to ſee the proper Rewards of his Service openly ſnatched away from him by an intruding Hand. Honour, above all Things, animates the Heroe, and makes him enterpriſing and reſolute; and therefore wiſe Princes have ever taken care, by due Encouragements, to cultivate and preſerve a general Senſe of it: And a Failure in this one Point of political Prudence, was attended with more fatal Conſequences to Francis the Firſt, than all other Miſcarriages of his Reign put together. Nothing, however, can be ſaid in Defence of Bourbon's Diſloyalty; he ſhould have ſacrificed his Reſentments, to the Duty which he owed to his Prince, and to his Country. At the ſame Time his Prince cannot perhaps be juſtified in giving him an Occaſion of Diſloyalty, which he ought not to have taken: For violent Paſſions, and ſuch are thoſe whereby we are agitated when we apprehend our Reputation or Honour much concerned, will not eaſily ſuffer even good Men to attend in Silence to the Voice of Reaſon, and to follow her Orders.

5. Whether the Confederate-Powers in ſolliciting a diſcontented Subject to take Arms againſt his lawful Sovereign, acted agreeably to the ſtrict Rules of Conſcience and moral Honeſty, is another Queſtion; which, if common Practice ſhould be allowed good Evidence in the Caſe, might eaſily be determined in the Affirmative; but does not ſeem ſo perfectly clear from the natural Reaſon of the Thing. Nay, if my Concurrence with another Perſon, if my Perſuaſion or other Encouragement to him, in the Breach of his Duty, doth involve me, as it certainly doth, in the ſame Guilt, then I conceive there is the cleareſt Reaſon in the World, why this Queſtion ought to be determined in the Negative.

6. It doth not, however, appear, that either the Emperor, King Henry, or the Cardinal, had any Scruples of Conſcience, in an Affair, from which they might have been ſo naturally expected to ariſe. They governed themſelves by the political Maxims commonly received, without ſo much as enquiring perhaps whether they were conformable to the Rules either of moral or evangelical Truth. But that, in Fact, the Duke of Bourbon was ſollicited, and engaged by our Court, to enter into the Confederacy againſt his Sovereign; how much he was esteemed, and how well supported for this Service, appears, at large, from a Letter of the Cardinal's in the Collections to Samson and Jerningham, then residing in Quality of Ambassadors from our King, at the Emperor's Court, at the Time when the Cardinals were in Conclave to elect a new Pope, and from which we may learn the State of our Army then under the Conduct of the Duke of Suffolk in France; and the Conditions which Sir John Russel had been empowered to make with the Duke of Bourbon; with the Order which the Cardinal desireth may be taken by the Emperor, towards the Payment of his General Count de Buren, and the Troops which had served with the Duke of Suffolk in France. There are several Particulars in this and other Letters of the Cardinal following in the Collections, from which the Reader may discover the great Penetration and Address which he shewed in negotiating State-Affairs; the Copiousness of his Thoughts and Expressions; his Amplification more than could otherways seem necessary towards preventing all Misconstruction of his Design; an Exactness, in examining the minutest Circumstances of Things, which shews that nothing which might deserve to be considered, could possibly escape him; in a Word, the Fineness of his Politicks, and the over-ruling Influence he had in the principal Courts of Europe, as if he had really held the Ballance of Power, so much talked of since that Time, in his own Hands.

7. A Judgement, may be better formed concerning these and other great Qualities, whereby the Cardinal was distinguished, from his own Manner and Words, than from any Application which can be made of them. But for the most Part, I shall satisfy my self with such References to his Dispatches, or summary Extracts from them, as may only serve to continue a clear Thred of my History.

8. Some Time after the Duke of Bourbon came into the Measures proposed to him, on the Part of the Confederate Powers, which yet he did not do without some Reluctancy; the Duke of Suffolk was sent over to meet the Imperial General, Count de Buren, and to join the English Forces with those under that Count's Command. When the two Armies came together near St. Omer, they could not agree where to begin the Operations of War. The English Generals, conforming to their Instructions, moved, that Bolein should be first besieged: The Imperial Generals liked not this Project, considering the Place as impregnable; and which, if taken, would only affect the Enemy in a distant and less sensible Part: And therefore they thought it more adviseable to enter the Enemy's Country, passing along the River Soame, and attacking such Places as the Duke of Bourbon ſhould direct. This Advice the King of England did not approve, having already formed his Army with a Deſign that they ſhould undertake the foreſaid Siege. And the Duke having not yet given ſufficient Aſſurance of his firm Attachment to the common Cauſe: To which was added, there would be great Difficulty in procuring Proviſions, in Caſe they ſhould penetrate the Enemy's Country; that the Year was far ſpent, and the Ground, eſpecially near the River, could not bear the Carriages for the Ordnance, which would be neceſſary to the ſeveral Sieges or Attacks they ſhould propoſe to make, in Caſe the Towns were hard to be taken: But if eaſy, it was ſaid, they might be as eaſily recovered by the French, who perhaps would come with a greater Force than was ſuppoſed, and preclude them from receiving neceſſary Supplies.

9. Theſe were the King's Sentiments, wherein the Cardinal at firſt concurred with his Majeſty; as appears by by one of his [9] Letters to Dr. Samſon Dean of the King's Chappel, and Sir Richard Jerningham, two Miniſters in whom the Cardinal much confided; in which, he not only adviſeth the Siege of Bolein, but refers them to former Inſtructions relating to this Affair, and wherein it is mentioned more at large.

10. That Letter contains an Account of ſeveral important Counſels, and memorable Facts. After the uſual Form, wherewith the Cardinal begins his Letters, he acquaints the Embaſſadors that the King had received the original Treaty lately paſſed by them with the Emperor's Commiſſioners, concerning the Projects of War to be executed that Summer againſt France. Then he proceeds to mention the Treaty, which had been concluded with the Duke of Bourbon, and the Overtures made by the King to engage him in the Alliance, and towards advancing ſuch Supplies on his Part, as might effectually contribute to attain the Ends of it. In Purſuance of which, he had cauſed a well-appointed Army, and furniſhed with all Manner of martial Stores, to be raiſed under the Command of the Duke of Suffolk, who was already arrived with his Troops at Calais. They are therefore to move the Emperor to haſten the military Preparations on his Side: And indeed the ſlow Motions of the Imperialiſts, is what we find the Subject-matter of Complaint in moſt of the Cardinal's Diſpatches. Their Conduct, in this Reſpect, was the more diſagreeable to him, as however cautious he might be, in forming his Deſigns, yet when they were once formed, he executed them with all the Vigour and Reſolution imaginable. It ſeems to have been his ſettled Maxim, Never to loſe Time: And it is a Maxim in Politicks, ſo generally true, that a bold

Temerity,

Temerity, if not very ill conducted, is much preferable to a ſlow and ſaturnine Gravity, whatever Appearances of Wiſdom it may affect to put on. A dubious, or dilatory Stateſman, who ſuffers a fair, much more a certain Opportunity of effecting any great Deſign, to be loſt, deſerves all he can ſuffer, for a Neglect which may perhaps in its Conſequences be irretrievable.

11. In the Sequel of the Letter, the Cardinal acquaints them with the Precautions that had been taken to prevent the Duke of Albany's Return, for which he was making Preparation, into Scotland. Upon this Occaſion ſeveral Things are obſerved relating to the State of our Fleet, and certain Advantages obtained over the Enemy at Sea. And in particular, an Account given concerning a Deſcent into France, from that Part of the Fleet, which was commanded by Sir William Fitzwilliams, wherein ſix hundred Frenchmen were ſlain, with the Loſs only of twelve Engliſhmen; a remarkable Inſtance of that ſuperior Force, which our Countrymen have on innumerable Occaſions exerted againſt that ancient rival Nation. We are not to be ſurprized, after this, if when our Fleet appeared before the Haven of Finhead, where the Duke of Albany had made Diſpoſitions for his Embarking, and the Engliſh Admiral offered him Battle, with an equal Number of Men and Ships, as he ſhould appoint, that the French prudently declined the Challenge, and ſatisfied themſelves with keeping on the defenſive Part: However, after our Admiral had for ſome Time inſulted them, he was compelled by a Storm to return, with the Fleet under his Command, to the Downs. An Expedition which was not only honorary to the Engliſh Nation, but attended with this good Effect, that the Duke of Albany being ſo long retarded in his Deſign of returning to Scotland, the People of that Nation beginning to deſpair of his coming, were inclined to enter into Meaſures towards reconciling themſelves to the Government, and threat'ned, if he did not land ſhortly, or before a Time prefixed, they would abandon both Him and the French, adhere faithfully to the Queen, and ſue to the King of England for Peace. Yet, in Caſe he ſhould arrive, the Cardinal obſerves, how well the Earl of Surrey, General of our Forces in the North, was prepared to give him a warm Reception. He had already indeed made thoſe Devaſtations in Twedale and March, which, if practicable according to the ordinary Rules of making War in an Enemy's Country, yet do not appear ſo perfectly reconcileable to the Maxims of our holy Religion: For he left neither Fortreſs, Village, Tree, Cattel, Corn, or other Succour for the poor [r] Inhabitants, who were in no Condition to reſiſt or annoy him, ſuch as Children, aged, ſick and infirm Perſons. So that the People who fled, finding, upon their Return, none of the neceſſary Supports of Life, came into England, in the moſt deplorable Circumſtances of Want and Diſtreſs, begging Relief, and ſo ſoon as Bread was given them to eat, many of them died for Want of Strength to digeſt it; or becauſe perhaps the Paſſages proper to receive it, were by long Hunger ſuffocated, or deprived of their natural Uſe. The Cardinal has a moral Reflection upon the Miſery to which theſe wretched Creatures were reduced, as the juſt Puniſhment of Almighty God, upon thoſe who diſturb the publick Peace, and Tranquillity of chriſtian States; but ſays nothing concerning a Practice, which it will be difficult to prove any Exigencies of War can juſtify upon chriſtian Principles, or, in my humble Opinion, upon the common Principles of Humanity.

CHAP. XXVIII.

1. The Cardinal alters his former Opinion, as to the Seige of Bolein. 2. The ill State of the Imperialiſts. 3. And of both Armies in France. 4. A Conjecture concerning the true Reaſon, why the Armies ſeparated. 5. Large Extract from a Letter of Inſtructions written by the Cardinal. 6. Concerning the Cardinal's Manner of Writing. 7. The Cardinal vindicated from an Imputation caſt on him by Cavendiſh. 8. The principal Ground upon which he was ſuſpected. 9. Confuted by a Letter he wrote to Pace. 10. 1. THE Cardinal afterwards changed his Opinion in Reſpect to the Siege of Bolein, and concurred with the Count de Buren, who was for entering directly into the Bowels of France; and the King at laſt, by Perſwaſion of the Cardinal, came into this Project. So the Engliſh, commanded by the Duke of Suffolk, and the Burgonians under the Imperial General, the Count de Buren, marched forward into the Enemy's Country, burning their Villages, and taking ſeveral fortified Places. 1523. 1524. 1525.

2. But, it was not long before the imperial Army wanted both Proviſion and a Reinforcement of Men; upon which, Buren wrote to the King, ſolliciting a Supply, and repreſenting, that the Emperor was not in Condition to ſuſtain any adventitious Charge of the War; being at a great Diſtance, and, while Flanders was, at the ſame Time, in Arms againſt the Duke of Guelders: So that unleſs the King ſhould ſpeedily ſend Moneys to entertain the Burgonians, and ſatisfy their Demands, they would, which afterwards happened for Want of Pay, mutiny and disband; the Lady Margaret not thinking herſelf under Obligation to ſupport them any longer. In Anſwer to which the King ſaid, tho' he was not bound to maintain his Army in thoſe Parts, any longer than to the End of October, yet for the Service of the Emperor and the Duke of Bourbon, he was willing they ſhould continue there all Winter; on Condition, the Lady Margaret would undertake the Charge of the Burgonians; from which ſhe excuſed her ſelf, as not being able to ſuſtain it. In Concluſion, there being nothing effectually determined for their Satisfaction, the Burgonians ſeparated; and our Army prepared to return for England, whereof the Lady Margaret ſent Intelligence to the King, yet acquainting him, it was not for Want of Pay that the Army diſſolved, but for Want of Proviſions, and more temperate Weather; the Froſt having killed many Men, and the Way being rendered impracticable for the Carriage of the Artillery: So that the Army broke up at the common Deſire of the Soldiers, and by Conſent of the Generals.

3. Several of theſe Particulars are confirmed by other [ſ] Letters of the Cardinal to our Ambaſſadors. The ill State of the Army in France at that Time, as he [t] deſcribes it, was really deplorable. He ſaith, neither Man nor Beaſt could endure the Extremity of the Cold; that ſeveral loſt their Fingers, Hands, and Feet, and ſome were found dead upon their Beds. He mentions other Reaſons, why the Armies ſeparated; but obſerves, before the King was perfectly informed concerning the ill State of it, he had adviſed the Generals to contrive, ſo the Cardinal expreſſeth it, an Evaſive War, in Caſe ſuch Troops, as had withdrawn themſelves, could be induced to return under the Command of the Count de Buren. But there being no Proſpect of recovering the ſcattered Forces in leſs than ſix Months, and the King having maturely conſidered the other Reaſons for diſſolving the Army, was at length reconciled to the Conduct of the Generals, and, in particular, received the Duke of Suffolk to Favour, againſt whom he had before, on that Occaſion, expreſſed ſome Diſguſt.

4. Theſe were the Reaſons aſſigned on both Sides, for diſcontinuing the Operations of War at this Time in France; but it has been

ſuppoſed, the true Reaſon on each Side, was concealed. The Emperor was afraid, leſt the King of England ſhould forſake him in a bloody and expenſive War, to which he apprehended himſelf unequal: And the King ſuſpected, leſt the Emperor or the Duke of Bourbon, of whom he was not yet perfectly ſecure, ſhould have any private or ſeparate Views; to which, when a proper Opportunity ſhould offer, they might ſacrifice the Intereſts of the common Alliance; and ſo they agreed in the ſame common Pretences for diſſolving the Army, yet laying the Blame upon each other. Whatever Grounds there may be for this Conjecture, the forecited Letter is followed with large and ſpecial [u] Inſtructions from the Cardinal to the Ambaſſadors, in purſuance of which, they are to make preſſing Inſtances to the Emperor, that he ſhould cauſe the Duke of Bourbon to come into England, and confer perſonally with the King, concerning the beſt Methods of proſecuting the War under the Conduct of the Duke, and entring France with an Army. Thoſe Inſtructions will let the Reader into many Particulars, whereby we may judge upon what Views, and by what Maxims, the King of England and his prime Miniſter governed themſelves at this Time.

5. But there is one Letter eſpecially from the Cardinal to the Biſhop of Bath at Rome, the general Deſign whereof is to engage the Pope to unite in the Confederacy againſt France, of which I ſhall give a more copious Account, as it contains ſeveral Things, relating not only to the State of civil, but of religious Affairs, at that Time, both at home and abroad.

He takes notice, That the French King was then with his Army before Parma, and, in order to oblige the Vice-Roy of Naples to abandon Italy for the Defence of that Kingdom, had formed a Deſign of ſending the Duke of Albany to invade it. He proceedeth to expreſs a Suſpicion concerning a private Treaty between his Holineſs and France; particularly upon this Ground, that the Pope had not yet effectually made good the Aſſurances, which he had given to the King: On which Account he declares, it is now Time to be plain with his Holineſs, who had an Opportunity, above any of his Predeceſſors for ſeveral Years, of doing eminent Service to the apoſtolick See, and to Religion in general. He directly charges the Pope, as tending by his Conduct to protract the War, and hinder the Progreſs of Chriſtianity. Theſe are Sentiments and Expreſſions which ſhew, that notwithſtanding the Cardinal's Attachment to the Court of Rome, and his perſonal Eſteem for Clement the Seventh, heightned by the late Amplification of his Legatine Powers, yet he would not ſacrifice to them, either the Honour of his Maſter, the Intereſts of his Country, or, as he then apprehended them, of true Religion. He doth not ſatisfy himſelf with being negatively brave and honeſt, he takes a generous Freedom with the firſt Paſtor of the Church, to remind him of his Duty, where he conceived his Holineſs had been, or, on a future Occaſion, might be defective in it; yet, he deſires, with all Reverence, Obedience, and Humility, that this Inſtance of his pious and dutiful Regard for the Pope, may be accepted by him, in good Part. After this, the Ambaſſadors are charged to inform his Holineſs concerning the intire Confidence which the King and the Legate had repoſed in him; and to enquire, whether there be any real Grounds for the Report, that he is inclined to favour the French Intereſt. They are to aſſure his Holineſs, that the Deſign of the King in all his Wars, is to procure the publick Peace of Chriſtendom, to chaſtiſe and repreſs the Diſturbers of it, to the End, eſpecially, that chriſtian Princes may unite in turning their Arms againſt the Infidels. They are particularly required to repreſent to his Holineſs, how much the King has ſignalized his Zeal againſt Luther, both by his Sword, and by his Pen; and that, notwithſtanding the Progreſs of the Turkiſh Arms in taking Rhodes, and of Lutheraniſm in Germany, yet by an Union of chriſtian Princes, in Defence of their holy Religion, they may both be ſuppreſſed. Yet he acknowledgeth, that the Lutheran Sect does not only ſpread through all Germany, but the Seeds of it begin to ſpring up and unfold themſelves in France, Spain, Flanders, Denmark, Scotland, and he apprehends, in many Parts of England. The only Remedy is to be expected from the Zeal, which his Holineſs, the Head of the Church, ſhall diſcover in reforming Diſorders, and in taking ſuch Meaſures, as may reſtore Diſcipline, and cauſe Obedience to the Laws of Chriſt to be obſerved. And if the Lutherans ſhould not experience theſe wholſome Effects from his paternal Care and Wiſdom, it is hard to know how far, or to what Exceſſes they may be inſtigated by the Power of the Devil. They are to ſhew further, how incredible it is, that his Holineſs, whom God hath endowed with ſo great Wiſdom and Vertue, and with all the Qualities proper to his high Dignity, ſhould omit any Thing requiſite to theſe pious and moſt excellent Ends. But yet if, poſſibly, he ſhould any ways be induced to favour the Pretenſions of the French King, againſt the Emperor's Claim to Naples and Milain, he would be the principal Author and Occaſion of God's Diſpleaſure, of the future Diſturbances in Chriſtendom, of his own Diſhonour, and of infinite Evils both in the preſent and ſucceeding Ages. Then our Ambaſſadors are to proceed to ſuch Arguments, whereby the Pope, may be more immediately preſſed and affected: They are to repreſent the perſonal Danger, to which he may be expoſed, from the boundleſs Ambition of Francis, from his Conqueſts in Italy, which will open open a Paſſage to him, whenever he ſhall think fit to attempt it, to the very Gates of Rome. His Holineſs is to be farther cautioned, leſt out of any private Regards to his Family, he ſhould ſuffer, or conſent to any Diminution of the Rights belonging to the Church, to the Prejudice of his Succeſſors, of the Dignity Eccleſiaſtical, and contrary to what the whole chriſtian World expected from him. That he ſhould not only endeavour to preſerve, but to amplify and extend the eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction; eſpecially, conſidering that Germany being now ſo much infected with the Lutheran Hereſy, ſuch Members of it, as ſtill continue in the Communion of the Church, may be provoked to withdraw their Obedience, ſhould his Holineſs appear to act in Favour of the French King againſt the Emperor: nay, it might be feared, ſuch a Procedure would produce very ill Conſequences in Spain itſelf. Even in England, he obſerves, ſo many both of the Clergy and People are inclined that Way, that he is apprehenſive, a bad Example given by others, may be attended with pernicious Effects; to prevent which, and that his Holineſs may be able to conſerve and ſupport the papal Dignity, the Ambaſſadors are to adviſe him, not to endanger the Loſs of ſo potent a Friend, as the Emperor, the firſt Prince in Chriſtendom, but to come heartily into the Meaſures propoſed by them. The Cardinal has yet ſeveral Arguments, in Reſerve, to enforce this Advice: Hopes had been given, from the Addreſs and prudent Methods uſed by Campejus, in executing his Charge, after he was ſent Legate into Germany, that the Differences there, relating to Religion, were in a fair Way of being compoſed by the Extirpation of Lutheraniſm; whereas, if the Pope ſhould take Part with France, againſt the Emperor, the Life of the ſaid Cardinal would not only be expoſed to the utmoſt Danger, but the apoſtolick See ſuffer the greateſt Diſtreſs by the Defection of all Germany; ſo that beſides the Danger to be apprehended, on many Accounts, from the Turk, the preſent Situation of Affairs in Germany ought to be very well conſidered. And now is the Time, if the Pope will aſſert his Character, and act as Head of the Church, not to conſult any private Intereſt or Affection, but the general Good of the Church, and the Dignity to which he has been called; and on this Occaſion the Cardinal delivereth his Sentiments with ſo juſt and ingenuous a Freedom, that I ſhall recite his own Words. " And herein to ſay the very Truth, and to acquit " my ſelf of my Duty and moſt tender Zeal towards his Holineſs, " I cannot ſee how it may ſtand with the Pleaſure of Almighty God, " that the Heads of the Church ſhould thus involve and mix them- " ſelves and the State by conjunction unto temporal Princes in the " Wars: But that as I verily ſuppoſe, ſince the Leagues Offenſive " or Defenſive, or both, have been uſed to be made in the Name " of the Pope, God hath ſtricken and ſent Affliction to the Holy

" Church, and generally to the State of Chriſtendom for the ſame, " and the Contraſts and Contentions uſed for advancing particu- " lar Families or Countries to the Papal Dignity; but that all " which one Pope hath gone about in ſuch Affairs, with much La- " bour, Coſt, and Difficulty, hath either, in his own Time, or " ſoon after, been diſappointed, and always with Detriment and " Damage to the See Apoſtolick." The Cardinal having made this free Remonſtrance, and obſerved how great Diminution the Pope's Authority had ſuffered by ſuch Practices, he again excuſeth himſelf for notifying to the Pope, the impending Dangers to his Holineſs and the Papal See, which he foreſaw; and, if we may judge from what happened to the Pope not long after, his Calculations were not ill grounded. His Holineſs being thus prepared, the Ambaſſadors were to open to him, yet with due Caution, the Specialties of their Charge; and to propoſe three Expedients towards diſappointing the Deſigns of the French King againſt Naples.

Firſt, The Firſt was to bring, or provoke, the French King to Battle, before he ſhould receive any Reinforcements; for he had ordered ſeveral Troops from his Frontiers, as well on the Side of Spain as of Picardy and other Parts, to repair to him. Which plainly diſcovered both the Apprehenſions he was under of being attacked, and in caſe he ſhould be attacked, of the ſuperior Force and Advantage which the Imperialiſts at that Time had over him: And therefore they ought not to neglect the preſent Opportunity of falling upon him, of obliging him to abandon his Deſigns in the Milaneze, and to cauſe a Diverſion from the Enterprize upon which the Duke of Albany was ſent againſt Naples.

Yet Secondly, if the Vice-Roy, by Reaſon of any Incidents, unknown at ſuch a Diſtance, to the King, ſhould determine to follow the Duke of Albany, it would not be adviſeable to leave Cremona or other Places of Importance behind them unfortified. For that the Pope obſerving ſuch wiſe and neceſſary Precautions taken by the Imperialiſts, would for the Time decline all Conventions with the French, his Holineſs having probably been induced to treat with them before, upon a Suſpicion, that the Emperor was unable to oppoſe the Progreſs of their Arms. In the mean Time, the Venetians were to be adviſed to haſten their Preparations for the War, and to come with all Expedition to the Emperor's Aſſiſtance: Poſſeſſing themſelves by the Way, of ſuch Defiles, through which the French might propoſe to paſs: Who, by this means, might be driven out of Italy, or brought to Reaſon; notwithſtanding the obſtinate Refuſal they had hitherto ſhewed to all Overtures of Peace.

Thirdly,

Thirdly, If neither of theſe Ways were thought practicable, or ſhould not be attended with the deſired Effect, then they are to propoſe an Expedient, formerly offered on Behalf of the Pope to the Vice-Roy of Naples, which was, that ſo much of the Milaneze as yet remained in the Emperor's Poſſeſſion, ſhould for a limited Time be put into the Pope's Hands; during which Interval, a Treaty of Peace might be ſet on Foot, provided the French King would agree to the ſame Conditions, on his Part, with reſpect to ſuch Towns and Places whereof he was ſeized, in that Duchy. By this Means the Kingdom of Naples would be, for the Time, out of all Danger; and yet the Emperor's Pretenſions to the Duchy of Milan, and his Hopes one time or other of recovering it, ſtill be kept up. For perhaps a Diſpoſition might, in the Progreſs of the Treaty, be made of it to his Advantage and Satisfaction. The French King too, upon theſe Terms of a preſent Accommodation, might return home with Honour, and under a favourable Appearance of Satisfaction made to him, for any juſt and reaſonable Claim, he might have to the ſaid Duchy, or to any Part of it. He obſerves, that Secretary Pace was now with the Venetians forwarding the Diſpoſitions they were making to join the Army in Italy. And that Gregory Caſſal was at the ſame time with the Vice-Roy of Naples, perſuading him to a Compliance with the Overtures beforementioned, relating to him. Sir John Ruſſel, intruſted with the King's Money, was charged to repair to the Duke of Bourbon, and to reſide with him. Among other Inſtructions to Pace, he was to tell the Venetians, if they did not agree to the Conditions tendered to them, the King his Maſter would conſider and treat them as Enemies to the Emperor. There were alſo Propoſitions made to the Duke and Senate of Venice towards inveſting his Highneſs with the Duchy of Milan, which were to be communicated to the Pope, to the End he might be more readily induced to approve the ſole Means of expelling at once the French out of Italy, and the Spaniards, who, of the two Nations, were more hated for their cruel Ravages. The Cardinal in the Application and Enforcement of all theſe Arguments, is very pathetical, and ſhews that he ſpake from a full Heart. "If, ſaith "he, the Pope's Holineſs love God, Himſelf, and Chriſtendom; "now is the Time, ſince the three Things be ſo feaſible, to ſhew "the ſame; unleſs there be other good Remedy, and the Matter "in other Train than is here known: If the Inconveniences be- "fore ſpecified, ſhall happen to enſue the Neglect thereof, the "King's Highneſs, I, and others, which thus would give unto "the Pope's Holineſs wholſome Admonition and Exhortation, be "diſcharged before God and the World; and the Culp, Diſhonour, "Blame, and Reproach, ſhall be imputed to thoſe, which have "deſerved the ſame."

He

He proceeds to direct the Ambaſſadors more particularly, how they ſhall conduct themſelves, in declaring theſe Things to the Pope. They are to uſe great Addreſs on that Occaſion; and to be more free or cautious, as they find his Holineſs differently moved on Behalf of the French, by Fear, or Inclination: If they find him really inclined to favour them, they are to be more reſerved in opening their Inſtructions, leaſt he ſhould diſcover the Subject-matter of them to the French; but, in that Caſe, repreſenting to his Holineſs the imminent Danger which threatned the Apoſtolical See, and all Chriſtendom, they ſhould keep themſelves, as to the Secrets of their Charge, in ſuch diſtant or general Terms, as they ſhould think moſt adviſeable. And further, to ſhew the King's Zeal for advancing the common Cauſe, tho' the Emperor had lately ſent Twenty thouſand Ducats into Italy; yet leaſt, by any Accident, Payment of it ſhould not be made in convenient Time, or the Want of a ſmall Sum might be a Means of fruſtrating the whole Deſign; he empowers them, to advance a Supply for the Service of the Army before the Battle; but this Truſt is to be managed with great Diſcretion; and they are not to execute it, except upon a Proſpect of great Advantage, or in caſe of extreme Neceſſity. Then he refers them to a Copy of the Emperor's Letters, to ſhew, how reſolved his Imperial Majeſty, as well as the King their Maſter is, in proſecuting the War; this being a Matter, which deſerved to be very well conſidered by the Pope; whom they are farther to remind, that the French King hath not yet acquired either any great Glory or Advantage; and with what Hopes ſoever of Succeſs, he may flatter himſelf, the Emperor ſhall be ſupplied with ſufficient Means of defending his Right and Honour.

He acquaints them, in concluſion, That with theſe Inſtructions, they will receive a Copy of the Overtures made by the Archbiſhop of Capua, when he came from the French King to the Emperor, and of the Anſwer made unto him, on the Part of both theſe Potentates; chargeing them to aſſure his Holineſs, that whatever Suſpicions might be entertained of any clandeſtine Negotiations, on Account of ſome Perſons who had come, or ſhould come from France to England, yet no Peace ſhould be concluded without his and the Emperor's Conſent or Privity. And though any reaſonable Offers ſhould be made to the King, they ſhould be communicated to both Powers, before his Majeſty would determine any thing concerning them. But the ultimate Deciſion of them, as he had often written, ſhould be referred to his Holineſs.

6. In all the other Letters of the Cardinal we diſcover the ſame Manner and Spirit, the ſame Fluency of Words and Argument, and the ſame Ardor in proſecuting what he adviſeth. And however diffuse and negligent his Way of Reasoning may sometimes appear to be, yet, when we consider it more narrowly, there is not only a secret methodical Train of Arguments observable in it, but a visible Force and Energy, not easy to be resisted. He foresees and obviates contingent Difficulties; he examines all Things, and all Circumstances; and though at last, he gains our Assent, yet it is with so insensible a Violence, and by a Turn of our Thoughts so natural, that the Reasons, whereby we are persuaded, seem wholly to arise from our own Discovery.

7. Besides these Reflections, to which my Recital of the principal Heads in this Letter has given Occasion, there are two Things especially observable from it, that may serve to give a better Light than Men have hitherto commonly had, concerning the History of that Time, and wherein the Reputation of the Cardinal has very much suffered. In the first Place, there are several Passages in this Letter, which may tend to remove a very unjust Imputation cast upon the Cardinal by Cavendish, as if, by his Means, Payment had not only been omitted of Moneys necessary to the Support of the Army in Italy; but as if, some time before the Battle of Pavia, he had actually caused a separate Treaty of Peace to be made with the French King. This Letter was written just before the Battle of Pavia, tho' it bears no Date, as appears from several Circumstances in it, when no such Treaty could be supposed to subsist; nor was there, if we may judge from the Cardinal's Sentiments in these Instructions, the least Appearance of his designing any separate Treaty with France. He is so far from discovering any Tendency that Way, that he speaks of the French King in Terms, as if besides the general Reasons for opposing him, as a common Enemy to the Allies, and to the Peace of Christendom, he was acted by some special Motives of Resentment, or personal Prejudice, against that Monarch. There was, indeed, a reasonable Caution given to Sir John Russell, not to dispose of the Moneys wherewith he was charged, without good Advice, and where the Exigency of the Case should require: But this very Limitation proceeded, not from Want of Zeal for the Emperor's Service, but from a sincere Desire of serving him more effectually; least, by a fruitless, or improper Application of the Moneys, all the Projects of War, which had been agreed upon, should be intirely defeated. How Cavendish came to divulge a Report so injurious to the Honour and Memory of his Master, without any Grounds in Fact, or probable Reasons from the Nature of the Thing; nay, contrary to the strongest Assurances that could be made, and confirmed either by Facts or Words, is not easy to be determined. But having on another Occasion mentioned this Mistake of Cavendish, I shall not here make any further Reflections upon it, except on Account of the Connexion, which it has with the following Charge againſt the Cardinal; from which too, tho' exhibited againſt him by a more general Conſent of Hiſtorians, I ſhall take Occaſion, not ſo much from the general Tenor of this Letter, which would be ſufficient to that End, but from a particular Paſſage towards the Concluſion of it, clearly to acquit him.

8. It is ſaid then, notwithſtanding all theſe ſpecious Appearances, and copious Declarations of the Zeal and Fidelity of our Court and of the Cardinal particularly, in the Emperor's Cauſe; there was at the ſame Time a private Treaty carried on in London, by Means of one Joachim, (ſent from Louis Regent of France for that purpoſe) under the Cardinal's Conduct and Direction. This is an Imputation which not only affects the Cardinal, but alſo the common Faith of England: And therefore ought to be removed, if we can find juſt Grounds to detect the Falſity of it. Tho' I ſhall not diſſemble, by the Way, that the Imperialiſts did take umbrage at Joachim's coming over, and eſpecially at his recluſe Way of Living, and the private Conſultations he was known to have had with the Cardinal. And it was probably from ſome Intelligence of this Kind, that the Pope was more eaſily induced to make his Terms with France; which he induſtriouſly concealed, ſo long as he could, both from our Miniſters, and thoſe of the Emperor; but found himſelf at laſt, obliged to acknowledge, that he was compelled to it by the French. It was to obviate theſe Suſpicions, which yet do not appear altogether groundleſs, though in Fact they really were ſo, that the Cardinal in the Cloſe of his Letter gives the following Charge to the Ambaſſadors. "And among other Things, ye "may well aſſure the Pope's Holineſs, that whatever ſiniſter Re- "port may be ſpread by the French, or other, of any Practice made "on this Side, by Reaſon of the being here of my Lady the French "King's Mother's Servant, or by any other Perſon that may be "ſent hither on the French King's Behalf, his Holineſs may truſt, "that nothing is meant, or ſhall be paſſed, or concluded here, di- "rectly, or indirectly, but by the Emperor's Conſent, and as the "Pope's Holineſs ſhall be made privy."

9. And, becauſe it may be pretended, ſuch open Declarations have ſometimes been made by Princes, in the Conduct of their Treaties, which yet have been repugnant to certain clandeſtine Engagements, entred into by them, it may not be improper, in Vindication of the Engliſh Court, as well as of the Cardinal, with reſpect to the preſent Charge, to give ſuch a ſummary Account of another Letter written by him to Dr. Samſon our Ambaſſador with the Emperor, as will put every Thing, that may affect his own, his Maſter's, or the Nation's Honour, entirely out of queſtion. The principal Deſign of the Cardinal in this Letter, is to complain of an Abuſe done to the King, and himſelf, by Mr. de Praet, the Emperor's peror's Ambaſſador, who had made a Report, which he was going to tranſmit with Part of it in the French Tongue, highly injurious both to the King and the Cardinal. But his Letters were as the Cardinal writes fortuitouſly intercepted, tho' it is not improbable, from ſome Circumſtances, the Deſign of intercepting them was previouſly determined: However, the Miniſters of that Time were ſo wiſe, as to avoid as much as poſſible, all Appearances of Violence; in a Caſe where the common Law of Nations required the greateſt Tenderneſs and Precautions ſhould be uſed, they would not uſe open Force where the Thing deſigned might ſeem at laſt to be effected by Accident.

10. But to give, as I propoſed, a general Abſtract of this Letter, ſo far as it may be of uſe to my preſent Purpoſe; After the Cardinal had acquainted the Ambaſſador, with ſeveral Schemes, and Conſultations at our Court, relating to the common Intereſts of the Alliance, and the Operations of War, wherein Praet, the Emperor's Ambaſſador appeared ſo intirely to concur, that he thanked the Cardinal on that Occaſion in the Emperor's Name; the Cardinal proceeds to acquaint Dr. Samſon, how, upon the Appointment of a Privy-Watch, as was uſual, on the Evening before the Twelfth Day in Chriſtmas, within a certain Circuit near London, a Perſon travelling between London and Bradford, was examined by the Watch on that Road, and he not being able to give any good Account of himſelf, they ſeized him, with a concealed Packet of Letters, directed in French, and carried him before a Clark belonging to the ſaid Watch; who taking him for a Spy, or a private Agent of ſome foreign Merchant, and obſerving the Packet to have been broken, and ill-uſed by the Watch-men, looked upon the Letters, and the Suſpicions he had of ſome clandeſtine and indirect Practice, being heightned by his obſerving the Cyphers, carried them to the King's Sollicitor, who was in the Precincts of the ſaid Watch: But he, not being acquainted with the Name, went with them ſo opened to Sir Thomas More, being in a neighbouring Watch, who delivered them next Morning in Chancery to the Cardinal. The Cardinal makes ſeveral Reflections upon this Incident in the Sequel of his Letter, which may not be unacceptable to the Reader. He juſtifies himſelf in the firſt Place for cauſing a Meſſenger, by an expreſs Order to be intercepted, who had been ſent with Letters from the ſaid Praet towards Spain; who was alſo ſeized with a Packet directed to the Lady Margaret, with original Letters to the Emperor, and Copies of thoſe addreſſed to the Lady. From whence the Cardinal concludes, there was ſtrong Preſumption, de Praet had long uſed this Practice of ſpreading abroad falſe and ſiniſter Reports, eſpecially from the ſlow and dilatory Proceedings of the Emperor in Flanders and other Parts; That the ſaid de Praet hath done great Injury to the common Cauſe; That the Ambaſſadors ſhould propoſe it to be conſidered by the Emperor, whether his Miniſter durſt write after ſuch a Manner, if he were not encouraged by ſome Perſons about his Imperial Majeſty ill affected to the King; which if true, would be an Inſtance of the higheſt Ingratitude to a Prince, who had done to the Emperor all the Honour and Service poſſible.

11. He proceeds afterward to repreſent de Praet, as a very weak and unformed Miniſter, by no Means qualified for the Province to which he was appointed. Yet the King had long bore with his Defects, and ſtudied, as much as might be, to hide them. He is afterwards challenged by the Cardinal to ſhew, by what Means, he could pretend to juſtify any of the ſaid Reports or other Overtures; which, if well grounded, ought not however to have been tranſmitted to the Emperor; being ſuch as the Cardinal, notwithſtanding the Truſt repoſed in him by the King, would not have communicated himſelf, without the King's Privity or Conſent. He hopes, notwithſtanding, the Amity between the two Powers will ſtill continue, and that the Emperor will put more favourable Conſtructions on his Actions, than this Miniſter.

12. The principal Exception of de Praet to this Charge was, againſt the Intercepting his Letters, and the Pretence of intercepting them, for ſo the Cardinal terms it, by a fortuitous Error. He urged in his own Defence, that Ambaſſadors had a Right to communicate ſuch Advice or Intelligence, as appeared to them moſt proper, referring to their Maſters the Judgement to be made of them. Then having declared he had made no evil Report of the King or Cardinal, he proceeds to mention the particular Heads of Complaint, upon which he had been induced to write. The Reſidence here of Joachim, for the Space of eight Months; a certain Difficulty made and condeſcended to; the Truce propoſed at Rome; and the King's Refuſal to contribute any Thing towards the Defence of Italy.

13. To which ſeveral Articles the Cardinal anſwers diſtinctly, and in the Order they are propoſed. As to the Coming of Joachim into England, he obſerves, that the King declared, when Overtures of a Truce were propoſed by the Archbiſhop of Capua, he would not come into any Meaſures tending that Way, but upon theſe three preliminary Conditions, which I ſhall recite, with the Deduction he makes from the Laſt of them, in the Cardinal's own Words.

" One was, That the Emperor ſhould be firſt agreed and con" tented with the Same.
" Secondly, That there might be a Proviſion in Time of Truce,
" for a good Diſpatch, to follow between all the Princes.
" Thirdly,

" Thirdly, Inaſmuch as hazardous and almoſt impoſſible it would " be to make the Pope's Holineſs ſo ripe in the King's particular " Cauſes, as were needful, that one ſhould be ſent hither from the " French King, or at leaſt from the Lady Regent of France, and " that it ſhould be reaſonable to advertiſe the Emperor thereof; to " whom the King's and my Opinion was, another Perſon ſhould be " alſo ſent for making of ſemblable Offers to his Majeſty, on " his Part. So that both Princes pleaſed, Peace might be concluded " at Rome by mutual Conſent; and the Pope's Holineſs have the " Honour as Author and Conductor of the Same. Upon the " Return of the Biſhop of Capua through France, the ſaid John Joa- " chim ſhewing himſelf to be a Merchant, and coming upon his " own Cauſes to Bolein, with Mind to repair unto this Realm, for " Merchandize, deſired a Safe-conduct ſo to do; and alſo I ſuſpe- " cted that it might be but a Colour; or that he were ſome Perſon " ſent by the French King's Conſent; for which Cauſe, the ſaid " Conduct was granted; yet, nevertheleſs, in eight Days after his " coming, he diſcloſed unto me what he was, but covertly de- " ſired that ſome good Way might be taken, between the Princes. " As ſoon as, upon my ſtreight Examination, he diſcovered him- " ſelf, and that he was ſent from the ſaid Lady Regent, I made " Monſieur de Praet privy thereof, and of his ſlender Charge, with " the Anſwer given unto him upon the ſame, praying him to ad- " vertiſe the Emperor, and the ſaid Lady Margaret, as I would al- " ſo do — —. And, from Time to Time, ſince that Seaſon, I have " not failed, to make the ſaid Ambaſſador privy of all that hath " been done, ſpoken, or communicated with the ſaid Joachim; " who was lodged in a Houſe within the Black Fryers, belonging " to Mr. Lark, whom ye know; to the Intent, I would have an " Eye upon him, being ſent from an Enemy; that he ſhould " not, as he cannot, nor doth, ſend, or receive any Letters or " Meſſages, but by my Knowledge. Howbeit againſt the " King's coming to Bridewell, he was removed from that Lodg- " ing."

In confirmation of theſe Particulars, of which Intelligence had been ſent to the Pope, the Cardinal refers to his Letter addreſſed to the Emperor, and the Declarations therein made by the King and himſelf, " That his Majeſty would never conclude any Thing with " the French King, without the Emperor's expreſs Knowledge and " Conſent."

2*d*, As to the Truce propoſed at Rome, the ſecond Article of the Accuſation, preferred by de Praet, The Cardinal thought himſelf obliged, for ſeveral Reaſons, to oppoſe that Truce, as being not only ill-timed, and prejudicial both to the Intereſts of the Emperor and his Maſter, but as the Term, for which his Holineſs propoſed to make it, was of too long Continuance. For theſe Reaſons, the Cardinal thought it his Duty to adviſe the King not to condeſcend to it, conſidering the Situation in which his Affairs were, at that Time; as he proceeds particularly to demonſtrate in the Sequel of his Letter: "So that if he had for the Pleaſure of any Prince "living, given Counſel to the King to accept a Truce equally diſ-"honourable and diſadvantagious to him, while no Satisfaction "was made to his moſt juſt and reaſonable Demands, neither the "leaſt Appearance of any to be made, after ſo vaſt an Expence of "Treaſure for the Emperor's Sake in thoſe Wars; it might be "thought, he had not acquitted himſelf, as became a good Ser-"vant and faithful Counſellor to the King. He judged it highly "reaſonable, that before ſuch Truce ſhould be concluded, a more "equal Ballance of the Advantages which were to ariſe from it, "ought to have been adjuſted between the two Powers. That the "King, notwithſtanding, ſo ſoon as he underſtood the Emperor "had not made all thoſe Diſpoſitions for proſecuting the War with "Vigour and Effect in Italy, which were requiſite; and eſpecially, "that Money was wanting to that End, did, with the Advice of "the Cardinal, and other of his Privy Council, to prevent ſuch ill "Conſequences, as might happen to the Army, in caſe no Truce "was made, conſent, that a Truce ſhould be made for the Space "of one Year."

3*d*, In Anſwer to what was objected by de Praet in the third Place, That the King had not advanced an Army on this Side: The Cardinal ſaid, It was never the King's Intention, nor would he ſend over an Army at that Time of the Year, but upon two previous Conditions, neither of which had been performed by the Emperor. Beſides, the King underſtood, his Imperial Majeſty had not advanced the Contributions on his Part for the Army in Provence, which, by Capitulation, after it had been raiſed and formed, ought wholly to have ſubſiſted at his Charge; but without requiſite Supplies, would be expoſed to imminent Danger, and at the Beſt obliged to return with great Loſs and Diſgrace, beſides the Conſumption of much Treaſure.

4*th*, As to the laſt Head of Accuſation by de Praet, concerning the King's Refuſal to contribute any Thing towards the Defence of Italy, the Cardinal, in Vindication of his Maſter's Honour, anſwereth, That the King was under no Engagement by Contract to that End; or, if he had been under any, there were Reaſons of Suſpicion from private Practices between the French King and the Vice-Roy of Naples, which might juſtly require Caution in performing it. However, that the King had not been wanting to the Emperor's Aſſiſtance in thoſe Parts, as appeared particularly from the Com-

Commiſſion, wherewith John Ruſſell and Gregory Caſſal were charged, and to which he had before referred at large, the Latter having expreſs Command, that if the Imperial Troops ſhould be in Diſtreſs for Want of Money, he ſhould deliver to them Fifty thouſand Crowns by Way of Loan, and rather than any Danger in Default of Payment ſhould enſue, he ſhould do it by Way of free Contribution. And then he takes Occaſion to charge and reproach de Praet, not only with a ſiniſter Interpretation concerning the Conduct of our Court, but with a direct and notorious Falſehood.

14. But as the Reader perhaps may have a Curioſity to know the Particulars wherewith the Archbiſhop of [x] Capua was charged, in Relation to the Truce, he may conſult a Letter from the Cardinal, wherein the Circumſtances and Effect of that Prelate's Commiſſion, with the Reſolutions taken thereupon, are largely recited. To which may be added a Letter to Secretary Pace, then at Venice, from the Cardinal, relating to the Tranſactions at that Time, and the Subject-matter of that Ambaſſador's Charge; which was to engage the State of Venice, inſtead of aſſiſting the French, as they had done againſt the Imperial Army in Italy, to unite with the Emperor and England in the Alliance againſt France, in purſuance of certain Articles lately agreed on by the King and that State, at London. Pace is inſtructed to labour this Point, as being of the greateſt Conſequence to the Peace of Italy, and in order to prevent the Deſigns, which the French King had formed, of reducing Milan and Naples, under his Obedience. This [y] Letter, with the Inſtructions from the King to that Ambaſſador, I have alſo added in the Collections, as ſerving to give ſtill a greater and more diſtinct Light into the Hiſtory of that Time.

15. There are alſo Inſtructions about the ſame Time from the Cardinal to Dr. Knight the King's Ambaſſador with the Lady Margaret, the Particulars of which may be conſulted in the Memoirs referred to above. But there is one Article in them, which by no means ought to be omitted, as it is an Inſtance of a very wiſe, and handſome Addreſs of the Cardinal towards a great Lady, and, in a Caſe, which might be ſuppoſed not a little to affect a Perſon of his Dignity and Temper. The Cardinal had been informed that the Lady Margaret, and a certain Lord of her Court, named Hoghſtrate, had ſpoken Words highly reflecting upon him, which the Lady underſtanding, deſired the very Words, which they were ſaid to have ſpoken, might be repeated. This her Requeſt was by Dr. Knight communicated to the Cardinal, who, out of his courtly and com-

1523. 1524. 1. THE foreign Negotiations of the Cardinal at this Time, were not confined to the Courts of Rome and Venice, of Germany and the Low-Countries, but he attended the Affairs of Scotland, ſo far as the Intereſts of his Maſter appeared to be concerned or complicated with them, with ſuch Aſſiduity, as if his Attention had been wholly taken up with them: When the firſt Acts of Ho-

ſtility were committed on that Side by our Army, under the Conduct of Thomas Earl of Surrey, there were ſeveral Diſpatches from that General to the Cardinal, giving an Account of the Operation and Progreſs of his Arms, and of other Affairs relating, on both Sides, to the State of the War.

2. The Earl writes to him from [a] Berwick, he hath received certain Intelligence of the Duke of Albany's Arrival in Scotland, and that he hath brought Aids from France with an Intention to invade England. Upon which Advice, he ordered the Soldiers to hold themſelves in a Readineſs to march at an Hour's Warning, and to fortify Norham Caſtle, and Werk, the Latter of which Places he had rendered tenable for ten Days; tho' the Enemy might poſſeſs themſelves of the Outworks in two Days, but in that Caſe they would find no great Advantage, the Town being the Strongeſt the Earl had ever ſeen, and ſo well trimmed, (that is his Term) with Ordnance and Artillery, that he wiſheth the Duke of Albany would advance to attack it: Whereas he repreſents Berwick, the Place from which he writes, as very weak, and unable to ſuſtain a Siege. Beſides, it was infected with a peſtilential Diſtemper, and, upon that Account, it would be difficult to form ſuch a Garriſon in it, upon which the Protection and Security of the Place could certainly depend.

3. In another Letter to the Cardinal, the Earl writeth, he is returned [b] from the Siege, and the Burning of Jedworth, with the Loſs only of eight or ten Men, tho' many were wounded; a Town twice as large as Berwick, guarded with ſix Towers, and able to contain a thouſand Horſemen. In this Expedition he mentions an Accident that occaſioned a Conſternation throughout the whole Engliſh Army. The Horſe belonging to the Lord Dacre breaking looſe, and running about the Field, while the Earl and his Lordſhip were at Supper, the Engliſh in the Camp taking them for the Enemy, fired upon them, but they ran on with ſuch Fury, that Fifty of them fell down at once from a rocky Precipice, and above Two hundred and fifty ran into the Town, which was then in Flames; the whole Number of them was Fifteen hundred: Some were recovered, but at leaſt Eight hundred of them loſt. This Misfortune is ſaid to have happened becauſe Lord Dacre would not be perſuaded to lie in the Camp, but would have Quarters aſſigned to him apart. After the Diſorder was over, his Lordſhip, as if there had been ſomething ſupernatural in the Occaſion of it, pretended with the Company with him, that they had ſeen ſtrange Forms of Spirits and Devils. This ſeems to have been the Effect of a diſturbed Imagination, during the Surprize they were in, rather than of any real or certain Apparition: But the Character, which the Earl of Surrey here gives to the Scots, ought not by any Means to be pretermitted. He ſaith, "They were Men of the greateſt Bravery "and Ardour that he had ever ſeen in any Nation." This was a glorious, and there is no doubt, was therefore a deſerved Character from an Enemy. He ſaith the Number of Scots was but Two thouſand, whereas Lord Dacres himſelf brought with him into the Field Four thouſand. The Earl gives the following Character of the Lord Dacre, "That he was a hardy and good Knight, but ſome-"what unwary."

4. In a following Letter of the Earl to the Cardinal from [c] Newcaſtle, he writes, That all the King's Army is aſſembled to oppoſe the Invaſion, which it is ſuſpected the Duke of Albany may attempt. The only Fear of the Engliſh General is, that this Expectation ſhould prove to be ill-grounded, and the Retreat of the Duke occaſion a fruitleſs Conſumption of the King's Money, in the preſent Enterpriſe; which Diſappointment, if it ſhould happen, he deſires may not be imputed to any Neglect or Default on his Part.

5. The ſame Month, [d] Inſtructions are ſent to him from the Cardinal, not to grant any Truce to the Scots, but to declare expreſsly, that ſo long as the Duke of Albany has the Adminiſtration of Affairs there, no Peace is to be expected from England: He intimates Suſpicions of a Deſign in the Duke, to convey the young King into France; and to marry him to a Daughter of France; and when the Term of the Truce is expired, if it might be obtained, to return into Scotland, with auxiliary Forces from that Kingdom: For which Reaſon King Henry would have his Nephew perſonally inveſted with the Government.

6. There is an Abſtract of a Letter from Thomas Lord [e] Dacre, but of an uncertain Date, from which it appears, that General had been charged with Neglect of Duty, and with keeping private Intelligence with the Scots; from which Imputation he endeavoureth to acquit himſelf, by ſaying, there was no Man ſo much hated by the Scots, as himſelf, as being the Perſon who found the Body of their late King ſlain in the Field, and who having advertiſed the Duke of Norfolk concerning it by Letter, was ordered to convey the Body of that King to Berwick, where it was delivered to the Duke. The Scots indeed retained ſo great Veneration for the Memory of their King, and were ſo much concerned at his dying in the Field of Battle, that upon this very Account, they were more averſe towards coming into any Meaſures propoſed on the Part of England. So that when King Henry, during the Troubles in that Kingdom, was forming Schemes, in Order to oblige the Scots, to addreſs to him, that he would there take upon himſelf the Adminiſtration; ſome of the Nobility and other Perſons of Weight among them, openly declared, they would never entruſt the State, and the young King in the Hands of One, who had been the Cauſe that their old Maſter was ſlain. Such was the Zeal, wherewith that ancient and brave Nation was then animated towards their Prince, and the independent Rights and Liberties of their Country; for the Conſervation of which, it was thought more adviſeable, the Duke of Albany ſhould be diſcharged from the Government, and that all foreign Pretenſions to it, being deſtroyed, the young King ſhould take the Adminiſtration upon himſelf: Which he having accordingly done, the Cardinal writes to the Earl of Surrey, it would be proper to reward thoſe who had been aſſiſtant to the King in aſſerting his juſt Right and Authority: To that End, and with that Deſign the King of England had ſent a Sum of Money; a convenient Diſpoſition of which was to be made, by the Queen, the Earl of Arran, and the Earl of Lenox. Upon the ſame Ground, the Cardinal adviſes, that they who had preſumed to oppoſe the Right of the King to be perſonally inveſted with the Government, ſhould be called to Account; among whom he mentions the Chancellor, as a Man of Wit and Experience, who is either to be deprived of his Office, or committed to ſafe Cuſtody. And for the greater Security of the King's Perſon and Dignity, the Cardinal thinks proper that a Guard of Two hundred Men ſhould be eſtabliſhed, which ſhould, for ſome Time, be ſupported at the King's Expence: And now it was the Pleaſure of King Henry, that all Acts of Hoſtility ſhould ceaſe, and a Truce be agreed on for twelve Months; in which Time the Scots might ſend Embaſſadors into England to impetrate and conclude a perpetual Peace: For this was a Point of Honour, upon which the King of England inſiſted, that Peace ſhould be ſought for at his Hands, by the Scots. And the Cardinal writes in a Letter to the Earl of Surrey, "That the Peace of [f] Scotland "hath been always required by Ambaſſadors of that Nation ſent "to the Kings of England, and not been concluded upon the "Borders."

7. Yet the Queen would not, as ſhe declared, conſent that Ambaſſadors ſhould be ſent to England, but on Condition, that the Earl of Angus ſhould not be ſuffered to return to Scotland. King Henry was much irritated at this Incompliance of the Queen his Siſter, but ſtill more inflamed upon Advice, that the Chancellor, James Biſhop of St. Andrews, wholly devoted to the French Intereſt, had been diſcharged from his Confinement.

[f] Auguſt 9, 1524. Id.

8. On Occaſion of theſe, and ſome other Incidents, the Cardinal writes a Letter of Inſtructions to the General, now Duke of Norfolk [g], to the following Effect, That ſeeing there is no Hope, the Earl of Angus will be reſtored to the Queen's Favour, nor of an Accommodation between him and the Earl of Arran, ſo long as by their Menaces, they can cauſe him to remain in England, the King's determinate Intention is, conſidering the uncertain and improbable Meaſures that the Queen, and the ſaid Earl of Angus had taken, to conſerve the Authority and Perſon of the King, and to ſettle the State upon a ſafe, good, and regular Foundation; the Attachment of the ſaid Earl of Arran to the Duke of Albany, and the French Faction, and the little Appearance of their ſending the late Chancellor in Quality of Ambaſſador to conclude a Peace; the Diſpoſition which the ſaid Chancellor diſcovered to favour the Earl of Angus his Party; and the great Number of Perſons in Scotland ready to unite with the ſaid Earl in maintaining the King's Authority, were thought of ſuch Conſequence, that it was the King's Pleaſure, the Duke of Norfolk ſhould permit the Earl of Angus to enter Scotland; that he ſhould diſmiſs him in a gentle and reſpectful Manner, and promiſe him Aid, to the End the young King may be firmly eſtabliſhed in his Government, the Duke of Albany with the French Faction excluded, and the Kingdom diſpoſed to enter into amicable and pacifick Meaſures with England: And becauſe the Queen, when underſtanding that the ſaid Earl was returned, under the Protection, and by Favour of the King of England, might perhaps, as alſo the Earl of Arran, be better adviſed; the Duke is to perſuade the Earl of Angus, upon his firſt Appearance in Scotland, not to act with too much Heat or Precipitation. The Earl's Brother was ſtill to be retained by the Duke, yet not ſtrictly as a Hoſtage, but under ſome other plauſible Colour.

9. It appears from other Articles of theſe Inſtructions, that one Magnus, ſent into Scotland from King Henry about this Affair, had Orders, rather than he ſhould fail of executing his Charge, to diſtribute Money among Perſons of the higheſt Quality, or where it might be expended to the greateſt Advantage.

10. If the Court of England favoured the Return of the Earl of Angus, the Queen and the Earl of Arran projected all the Methods, they could, to prevent and oppoſe it. This Earl repreſents to the King, [b] That his Return would be of dangerous Conſequence, towards ſubverting the preſent Eſtabliſhment, whereby the Adminiſtration had been committed to the young King his Nephew; and alſo tend very much to obſtruct the propoſed Negotiations of Peace. He does not omit to acquaint the King, that himſelf is of [i] royal Extraction, and that he has thereby the Honour of being nearly related to his Majeſty. " I am deſcended, " ſaith he, from your Houſe, and ſtand in tender Degree, and " Proximity of Blood, to your noble Grace."

11. The Queen deſires in another Letter, that the King her Son being now eſcaped out of Danger, where his Life was continually expoſed, the King her Brother would not be any Occaſion of reducing him again under the like dangerous Circumſtances. Which, with other inteſtine Troubles, would be unavoidable, upon the Return of the Earl of Angus; the Conſequences would affect the Kingdom in general, with the Lords thereof, eſpecially the Earl of Arran; for there the Apprehenſions of the Queen appeared to be moſt lively and affecting. But they are moſt ſignificantly expreſſed in her own Words. " Eſpecially the Earl of Arran, that hath " done ſo good Service to the King my Son, and to me, and is " ready to do your Grace Service, truſting firmly that your Grace " will be kind to the ſaid Lord of Arran." Then the Queen proceeds to repreſent, that if the Earl of Angus, her Husband, be ſuffered to come into Scotland, the Treaty of Peace will be obſtructed, and the Embaſſy now preparing for England retarded; there is no Perſon in Scotland ſo capable of doing the King her Brother real Service, as her ſelf; and, ſhe is of Opinion, for this Reaſon, were there no other, that the King in conferring his Favours, ought to put ſome Diſtinction between her and the Earl of Angus.

12. I ſhall, in Relation to the Affairs of Scotland, but mention one Letter more, if not written to the Queen by Direction of the Cardinal, at leaſt conformable to his Sentiments and Advice. The Duke of Norfolk therein exhorts the Queen to be reconciled to the Earl of Angus, and to forget, upon his Submiſſion, all indiſcreet Behaviour, of which probably in his younger Days he might have been guilty towards her, and to follow the Cardinal's Counſel; whoſe Study and Endeavour is to promote the true Intereſts of the young King; otherways, if Matters ſhould fall again into a State of Diſorder, the Blame would be imputed in both Kingdoms to her Conduct. And whereas it was reported, that the Earl of Angus was ſent into Scotland, he denies the Fact, and declares, he never ſhall be ſent, but on Condition, [k] that he be put under ſuch Reſtraints as ſhe may think proper, whether in Reſpect to her Revenues, or the Manner of his converſing with her. He deſires that ſhe, and my Lord Arran would propoſe reaſonable Conditions concerning ſuch Pledges or Security, as the Earl may be required to give, and he will be anſwerable for the Performance of them. And whereas her Grace had written, and, to the ſame Effect, the Earl of Arran, that if the Earl of Angus ſhould come into Scotland, the Ambaſſadors were not to proceed in their Charge: he wiſheth ſhe had been ſilent upon that Head, theſe being Threatnings not proper to be uſed to ſo high and mighty a Prince; and ſeeing the Embaſſy would be more advantagious to Scotland than England, he adviſeth, that the Coming of it ſhould rather be haſtned.

1525. 1526. 1. THE King of France having left Louiſe his Mother Regent of that Kingdom, puſh'd by Ambition, and the Deſire of extending his Conqueſts in Italy, was now ſet down with his Army before Pavia, not thinking it adviſeable to leave ſo ſtrong a Place behind him in the Hands of an Enemy. The Imperialiſts thought themſelves no leſs concerned to defend and preſerve it; and therefore Charles de la Noy Vice-Roy of Naples, who had before put Twelve thouſand Spaniards, and ſix thouſand Lanſquenets into that Town, under the Command of Antonio de Leyva, now advanced, with the Reſt of the Imperial Generals, towards the Relief of it. The Slowneſs of Francis in proſecuting the Siege, had contributed very much to favour this Deſign. For that Prince apprehending himſelf, as being Maſter of the Field, ſecure from any Attempt of the Imperialiſts, had been ſo dilatory, during the Siege, in making his Approaches, and protracted it to ſo great a Length, that they had found Time to form an Army, which they brought into into the Field againſt him ſo near to the Walls of Pavia, that in caſe of a Battle, the Beſieged might iſſue out to aſſiſt them. And now the two Armies expecting, on each ſide, the Advantage, kept within their Entrenchments, unwilling to hazard a general Engagement; the proper Buſineſs indeed of the French was to cover and puſh the Siege; It was the Part of the Imperialiſts to make the Attack, and by that Means to raiſe it. But tho' they had a good Army, yet being in great Diſtreſs both for Want of Money and Proviſions, they began to think of a Retreat; and it appeared adviſeable they ſhould file off towards Naples, for the Defence of that Kingdom. The King of France too was counſelled to withdraw his Troops from the Siege, ſince the Imperial Army, under thoſe Circumſtances, could not poſſibly long ſubſiſt, but muſt neceſſarily ſeparate, or retire; and ſo leave them the Opportunity of an aſſured Victory, without Effuſion of Blood. On the other Hand, the Imperialiſts conſidering, that if they ſhould retire, Pavia muſt neceſſarily fall into the Hands of the Enemy, and, that after ſuch a Diſgrace, they ſhould be leſs able to defend other Places in their Hands, were reſolved to give the French Battle. The Effect of which was, the Captivity of the French King, and a total Defeat of his Army. This Action is celebrated by almoſt all Hiſtorians, who have written concerning the general Affairs of Europe ſince that Time; and to them I ſhall refer for a more particular Account of it. I ſhall only take notice of ſuch Circumſtances relating to it, as may be coincident with my Deſign of writing the Life of Cardinal Wolſey.

2. I have obſerved, in another Place, that Cavendiſh hath, on this Occaſion, advanced ſeveral Things without Grounds, and contrary to the Faith of Hiſtory. He repreſents the Duke of Bourbon, as commanding in the Town of Pavia, and animating his Soldiers by a Speech, which he recites at large, to iſſue out by Night, upon the Enemy; whereas in Truth, the Duke was then in the Imperial Camp without the Town, when the Marqueſs de Guaſto leading the Vanguard, the Marqueſs of Peſcara the Battle, and Charles de la Noy accompanied by Bourbon the Rereward, came in good Order near the French Army on the Eve of St. Matthias; but nothing of Importance was deſigned to be enterprized 'till the Morning of that Feſtival, which was the Birth-day of the Emperor: And then, according to Sleidan, the Marqueſs of Peſcara, and not Bourbon, made the Speech, which is ſuppoſed to have inſpired the Imperial Troops with that Bravery and Reſolution, to which the Victory was principally aſcribed: But to the Force of his Eloquence, he added an Artifice, which probably had an Effect far more powerful: For having advanced to diſcover the Enemy, upon his Return, he told the Spaniards, preſerving a chearful and open Countenance, that he muſt not not conceal from them the cruel Order given by the French King, that no Spaniard ſhould receive Quarter. This Pretence, which was purely of his own contriving, ſo inflamed the Imperialiſts, that with great Ardour they deſired the Signal of Battle, promiſing to ſell their Lives at as dear a Rate, as they could.

3. I mention theſe Circumſtances, to ſhew what little Credit is to be given to what Cavendiſh afterwards reports, "That when the "Duke had won the Field, taken the French King, robbed and "ſpoiled his Tents, and ſearched his Coffers, he found the League "under the great Seal of England, newly made between the King of "England and the French King, whereby he perceived the Impedi-"ment of his Money which ſhould have come to him from the "King, having, upon due Search of this Matter, further Intelligence, "that all this Buſineſs was deviſed by the Cardinal of England."

4. There needs no other Confutation of this unjuſt Charge, than the Letter of [l] Inſtructions which was drawn up by the Cardinal to our Ambaſſadors, and ſent to the Emperor after Francis was taken Priſoner; from which it will appear, the Court of England was very far from treating Francis with that Deference and Regard, which a Friend or new Ally might juſtly have expected. But there are many other Particulars, in theſe Inſtructions, relating to the Maxims and Conduct of our Court at that Time, and to the Intereſts of ſeveral foreign Courts, on Account of which I ſhall here proceed to preſent the Reader with an Abſtract of them.

5. After the [m] Ambaſſadors had preſented their Credentials and Letters from the King, and from the Cardinal, under his own Hand wherewith they were charged to the Court of Madrid, and made their Cangratulation to the Emperor upon his Recovery from a quartan Ague, and for the late Victory obtained by his Troops before Pavia, whereby the Pride and Ambition of Francis, the common Enemy, was humbled; they are to repreſent the advantagious Situation in which the Affairs of the Alliance then were, towards attaining the proper and deſirable Ends of it: And how much the publick Tranquillity of Europe depended upon the Succeſs of their preſent Proceedings. Then they are to ſhew, how zealous the King their Maſter is on his Part to improve the Advantages offered, from the preſent Occaſion, againſt the French King, who, with his Anceſtors, had been the only Cauſe of diſturbing the Peace of Chriſtendom, and of the great Decay of Piety and Religion, to which, ſo long a Continuance of the late Wars had principally contributed: For which Purpoſe the King would have ſent the Legate in Perſon to Madrid, had he not been diverted from that Deſign, in reſpect to his Age, and the Danger and Fatigue of ſo long an Embaſſy: But that he hath now ſent the Biſhop of London and Sir Richard Wingfield to impart to the Emperor the Secrets of his Heart and Mind relating to the common Cauſe, in the moſt open and ample Manner: And therefore deſires the Emperor would communicate his Deſigns and Reſolutions, upon the preſent Conjuncture, with the ſame Freedom and Confidence to his Ambaſſadors, as if himſelf ſhould perſonally confer with his Imperial Majeſty. Having thus opened their Commiſſion in general, they are not, at that Time, to proceed any further, but narrowly to obſerve, how the Emperor is inclined or affected upon theſe general Overtures; and whether of himſelf he ſhould make any Propoſals relating to their Charge, that they may be better prepared to treat with him, or with his Council, concerning the Secrets of it. Yet if the Emperor firſt deſires to know in particular the King's Sentiments, upon the Heads propoſed, and what he intendeth towards proſecuting his Claim to France, they are inſtructed.

Firſt, To aſſert, as the Foundation of all the Counſels and Meaſures, taken by the King of England, his firm and permanent Zeal for the Service of Religion, and the great Concern which he is under for the divided State of Chriſtendom, which had occaſioned much Devaſtation and Miſery in the chriſtian World; whereby the Diſpleaſure of God had not only been highly provoked, but an Opportunity given to the Turk, of extending his Conqueſts in Europe. By reaſon of which, Naples and Sicily, with other Parts of Italy on one Side, and the Kingdoms of Poland and Hungary on the other, lay in a Manner open to his Incuſions. And here they are particularly to repreſent how much theſe inteſtine Diviſions among chriſtian Princes have contributed to the Growth of the Lutheran Hereſy, to the general Defection from the Church of Rome, and the Publication of certain Doctrines tending to deſtroy all Order and Government, as well Eccleſiaſtical as Civil. And as the Arrogancy and boundleſs Ambition of Francis was the principal Occaſion of theſe Diſorders, his Captivity may be appointed by the wiſe and good Providence of God, as a Means of healing them, and of cauſing Religion again to flouriſh: A Senſe of which, I would obſerve by the Way, the Cardinal diſcovers in all his Writings, after ſo unaffected, but withal, ſo lively a Manner, that he ever appears to ſpeak from the Heart. And if he was not really a good Man, it muſt be owned, at leaſt, that few Prelates have exceeded him in the Arts of a refined and well-diſguiſed Hipocriſy. They are farther to repreſent, That if the preſent Occaſion be not improved towards compoſing the Diviſions among chriſtian Princes, they will provoke God Almighty to afflict Chriſtendom ſtill with more numerous and dreadful Calamities; that the Cauſe of ſuch, as they have already ſuffered, ought to be examined and removed, to the End the Effects of them may ceaſe; that the King and his Council have reſolved, the late Wars, with the ill Conſequences attending them, have been principally cauſed by the Pride and Ambition of the Kings of France; to the Deſigns of which, the Situation of that Kingdom renders it more favourable: That the Proofs of this Charge appear, Firſt, By the Excluſion of the King of England from his juſt Claim, who, it is notoriouſly known, hath an indiſputable Title to the Crown of France, not only by Right of Succeſſion, but in Virtue of expreſs Treaties. Secondly, From the unjuſt Detention, by France, of ſeveral Countries belonging to the Empire, as well as of many Towns and Places, diſmembred from the Dominions of other Princes, and, particularly, from their known Attempts upon Milan and Naples, and the Methods taken by them to engage the Venetians and Florentines, with other States of Italy, into their Service: And, as one of their chief and leading Maxims is to weaken the Power, and at any Rate to diminiſh the Rights or Domains of the Empire; That there are no viſible Means therefore of ſecuring to the Emperor a juſt and peaceable Poſſeſſion of his Territories, but by coercing the Power, and humbling the Pride of France, which perhaps, in its preſent Diſtreſs, may more eaſily be brought to Reaſon: Tho' the Cardinal obſerves, and his Obſervation was juſtified by the Event, that whatever Promiſe ſhould be made on the Part of France, in this Time of their King's Captivity, he would not, when at Liberty, fail to reſcind it; at leaſt, he would find one Pretence or other for ſome new Grounds of Quarrel, from which no Convention or Alliance, to be made at preſent, would have Power to reſtrain him. And for this Reaſon, it is further reſolved by the King of England, and by his Council, that the Reſtitution of all ſuch Places, as have been uſurped, or are ſtill unjuſtly detained by the Power of France, ſhall be the only Means of removing the Occaſion of War and Hoſtility in Europe; of reſtoring the Empire to its former Eſtate and Dignity; and of ſatisfying the other Princes for the Wrongs they have ſuffered, and are determined to ſuffer no longer. Here the Ambaſſadors are directed to attend to ſuch Anſwer, as the Emperor and his Council ſhould think fit to make: And then it may be preſumed, one of the following Reſolutions will be taken by them; either totally to deprive the French King of his Crown and Dominions, or to reſtore him, on certain Conditions. As to the latter Point, the Ambaſſadors are to employ all the Arguments they can to diſſuade from it; they had been ſufficiently inſtructed already upon the former Article, and if any Difficulties ſhould be moved relating to one or more of the following Particulars, they are furniſhed with ſo many ſpecifick and diſtinct Replications to them.

III. If, poſſibly, they might mention the Duke of Bourbon? And

IV. If in caſe the King of England ſhould be propoſed, they might not raiſe an Objection from the Union of two ſuch powerful Kingdoms?

1*ſt*, Upon the firſt Head, they are inſtructed to ſay, There can be no Treaty with Francis, or with any of his Subjects; the Nature of the Thing not admitting of Conſent or Compoſition on their Part: And therefore, if Francis be dethroned, it muſt be by Force of Arms, which France, conſidering the preſent Diſtractions of it, was in no Condition to withſtand: That the two Kings ſhould therefore take this Opportunity, as they had projected, of invading it perſonally this Summer; and that the King of England apprehending nothing that may obſtruct the Deſign on either Side, from any Force, or conceivable Projects of France, will not fail, God willing, to meet his Imperial Majeſty at Paris; where the two Powers perſonally appearing, and the King having received the Crown of France, ſhall, in Return of the Emperor's Favour and Aſſiſtance, and to confirm the mutual Amity between them, effectually engage to contribute his beſt Services towards ſupporting the Imperial Throne and Dignity. To induce the Emperor to a perſonal Invaſion of France on his Part, the Ambaſſadors are directed to make an Offer of a large Sum of Money, yet wherein, as they ſee Occaſion, they may gradually riſe. But, if this Expedient do not take, then they are to ſay, but as from themſelves, not by Command, they make no Queſtion but that after the King ſhall be crowned in France, he will be glad to accompany his Imperial Majeſty to Rome. Yet leaſt ſo general an Inſinuation ſhould not be thought ſatisfactory, they are authoriſed to make a more ſpecifick Declaration of the King's Mind upon this Head. They are to ſhew, how great Dignity, Strength, and Honour, would accrue to the Empire, by an Acceſſion of the ſeveral Dominions which they are to enumerate: So that, in a Manner, his Imperial Majeſty would be peaceable Lord and Sovereign of all Chriſtendom; the King thereunto intirely concurring on the ſole Condition of his recovering the Crown of France; to which the Houſe of Auſtria, by the Emperor's Marriage with the Lady Mary, would have an apparent Right of Succeeding, as well as to the other Dominions belonging to the Crown of England. But if the Emperor cannot be perſuaded by any of the Overtures, which they are inſtructed gradually to make, to invade France in Perſon, then they are to propoſe the Duke of Bour- bon, who had already acknowledged their Maſter as King of France, ſhould be ſent on that Expedition; to the Charge of which, if there be no other Remedy, the King is willing to contribute a Hundred thouſand Crowns.

2*d*, As to the ſecond Point, who ſhall ſucceed to the Crown of France? The King's juſt Right and Title thereunto being conſidered, it appears to admit of no Diſpute: And here they are to remind the Emperor of ſeveral Treaties and Alliances ſubſiſting between his Imperial Majeſty and the King; and, particularly (but for that they are to find an Opportunity, if they can, apart) of the Promiſes made by the Emperor, both to the King, and to the Legate, at ſundry Times and Places.

3*d*, As to the Article relating to the Duke of Bourbon; It is upon a Surmiſe merely conjectural, ſupported by no probable Reaſons, and which, if poſſibly it ſhould be moved to the Ambaſſadors, there would yet lie inſuperable Objections againſt it, as no manner of Pretence either in Honour, Reaſon, Law, or Right could be alledged for it; nor indeed any poſſibility of effecting it, without deſtroying the Peace of Europe. And the Emperor in particular, had as much Danger to apprehend from France, if the Crown ſhould devolve upon the Duke of Bourbon, or any other of the French Nation, as he could have under the Adminiſtration of the preſent King. And, indeed, it was ſcarce ſuſpected, that any Perſon of Honour, Wiſdom or Reputation would form or approve ſo unjuſt and impracticable a Plan. But

4*thly*, In caſe the King of England ſhould be propoſed, and thereupon any Objection ariſe from the Union of two ſuch powerful Kingdoms, as thoſe of England and France, they are to repreſent, in the firſt Place, the King's clear and undoubted Title to the Crown of France: Secondly, the expreſs Stipulation between the Emperor and the King for the Recovery of that Crown: And, Thirdly, the Contingency, which the Emperor would have, in the Lady Mary's Right, of poſſeſſing the Realm, and Countries belonging to the King; ſignifying at the ſame time, that it is not the King's Intention to keep ſuch Countries at that Time annexed to the Crown of France, which he had no Claim to by Right of Inheritance, but to make ſuch Partition of them, as might be moſt reaſonable, in reſpect to the Powers concerned; and ſhould tend moſt effectually to obviate and remove the Difficulty propoſed. And, if perhaps, in the Progreſs of this Conſultation, a new Difficulty ſhould ariſe, and the Emperor ſhould inſiſt upon it, as a previous Condition of his complying with the King's Demands, that the Marriage with the Princeſs to his Imperial Majeſty ſhould be aſſured; eſpecially, he having received Advice, that Overtures had been lately made to her both on the Part of the French King, and the King of Scotland: If thereupon

it ſhould be required, that the Princeſs might be delivered into the Emperor's Hands; they are to anſwer, no ſuch Treaty has been lately admitted from either of thoſe two Princes; and, as to the Part of Scotland, which had offered, as an Article of it, that the Scots would abandon the French King, it had been expreſsly refuſed. And the King, ſince his Treaty with the Emperor, had no Thoughts of marrying the Princeſs to any other. But if they ſhould ſtill inſiſt to have the Princeſs delivered, the Ambaſſadors are to deſire them to conſider her tender Years, and to repreſent, with all the Force, and in the beſt Manner they were able, the Inconveniences of ſuch a Journey to one of her tender Age; and the Danger, in Reſpect of her Health from a Change of Air; to which they ſhould add, that all the Preliminaries, relating to the Marriage, were not yet perfectly ſettled. And if the Imperial Court ſhould offer Capitulation to that End, they are to anſwer, none can be ſufficient, in ſo very nice and important an Affair, or be thought equivalent to the actual Delivery of ſo great a Princeſs. Yet on Condition, the Emperor will cauſe the French King to be delivered into the Hands of the King of England 'till the Princeſs be of ſuch Age, that the Marriage may be fully perfected, then, notwithſtanding any Contingency of the King's Death in the mean time, their Maſter will conſent to the actual Delivery of the Princeſs, and oblige himſelf not to make any Convention with the French King, or hearken to any Overtures relating to his Ranſom or Liberty, without the Emperor's expreſs Conſent. However, if the Emperor cannot be induced perſonally to invade France, and to meet the King at Paris, by any of the foregoing Conſiderations, rather than the Deſigns formed by our Court upon thoſe Views, ſhould be diſappointed, the King, upon Aſſurances given for the Performance of thoſe Articles, will ſtill agree to the Delivery of the Lady Mary, in Conſequence of their Enterview, and the King's Coronation at Paris. But if the Emperor make a Difficulty of complying with this Condition, he will in effect declare that he hath really no Intention, either to go to Paris, or to aſſiſt the King towards the Recovery of his Right. And if, after all, the Emperor cannot be perſuaded to concur with the King in his Meaſures for the Recovery of it, and towards the Excluſion of Francis and his Line from the Crown of France; then, after having repreſented to the Emperor the Danger to himſelf, as well as the manifeſt Injury done to the King by ſuch Refuſal, they are to attend to ſuch Motions and Overtures as may be made, on the Part of the Emperor, by Way of Satisfaction to the King's Demands, concerning which, they are particularly inſtructed to proceed Step by Step, inſiſting, ſo long as there is any Appearance of ſucceeding in it, upon the firſt Article; but if the Deſign of that ſhould be found impracticable, they are to advance, yet not without eſſaying every Thing that can be ſaid or done to effect it, towards the ſecond Article, and ſo by ſlow and inſenſibly reluctant Conceſſions to the Third, in the Manner and Form preſcribed to them in the Sequel of their Inſtructions, which the Reader may conſult.

6. There are ſo many Paſſages in theſe Inſtructions, to ſhew there could be no Treaty at that Time executed or ſubſiſting between the Courts of England and France, that I ſhall not inſiſt any more on a Confutation of that Part of the Calumny caſt upon the Cardinal by Cavendiſh. As to the other Branch of it, relating to the Want of Moneys to be advanced on the King's Part, I have ſaid what is ſufficient in another Place to obviate it. But to juſtify the Cardinal upon that Article from all poſſible Exception, I have added [n] two Letters from him, one to Secretary Pace and Sir John Ruſſell, the other to the Secretary only, wherein his Conduct as to that Particular, appears at once juſt, prudent, and honourable. His Eminency obſerves particularly in the Latter, that notwithſtanding the near Approach of the two Armies, there was yet no Appearance of a Battle, the French King being ſo ſtrongly encamped, that he would not advance, and the Imperialiſts not being able to aſſail him and force his Entrenchments, without great Hazard and Diſadvantage. Yet ſometime after, tho' under the like Diſadvantages, they bravely attacked him, and obtained one of the moſt ſignal and compleat Victories that Hiſtory records: So that, notwithſtanding the great Qualities of Francis the Firſt, his Diſgrace before Pavia has not been wholly attributed by Hiſtorians to the Fortune of War, but, in great Meaſure to his own Miſconduct. He ought, it is ſaid, either to have puſhed the Siege of that Place, with more Vigour, or conſidering the Diſtreſs of the Imperial Army, to have retired in Time, as he was adviſed; ſince it frequently happens, that Men are not ſo much animated by the Thoughts of their being entrenched, as intimidated with the Apprehenſions of their being reſolutely attacked. However, both the Italian and Spaniſh Hiſtorians have been very favourable in their Character of this unfortunate Heroe: But whether for the Reaſon which Varillas mentions, the Reader may judge: That Author obſerves, "They have written advantagiouſly of Francis "the Firſt, by a refined Policy, rather than out of any perſonal Re- "gard. They were jealous of the growing Power of France, and "apprehenſive, that Nation might extend its Conqueſts into their "own Country, after a Period ſhould be put to thoſe Civil Wars, "wherein they had been involved for the Space of forty Years. "There was no better Method to prevent any Attempts of that "Kind, nor could they have greater Hopes of ſucceeding againſt "Spain or Germany, than they formerly had, under the Reign and

" Conduct of Francis the First: In the History of which we read,
" that he performed, whatever Man was capable of performing
" against the House of Austria; which yet he was not able to shake:
" That the Faults ascribed to him were not the Faults of the Mo" narch, but of the Monarchy; and that if the greatest Generals " and Politicians that ever were, had commanded the same Armies, " and been under the same Circumstances, they would have been " overcome at the Battle of Pavia, and like Francis the First, com" pelled in consequence of it, to disintangle themselves as well as
" they could, by the shameful Treaties of Madrid and Cambray."
But Varillas is of Opinion, this Error might easily have been confuted, by laying open the naked Truth, and proving by plain and authentick Facts, that Francis the First did not do, what he might have done against Charles the Fifth: That it was several times in his Power to have defeated the Emperor; That the Negligence and preposterous Management of his most Christian Majesty, on some Occasions, cannot be excused; and that the Faults wherewith he has been charged, proceeded from the Monarch and not from the Monarchy: That the ill Success of France against the House of Austria, had been chiefly occasioned by the Misunderstanding, too common in the History of France, between the Sovereigns of former Times and their Ministers; and that some greater Generals, and more vigilant Princes would one Day arise, to correct the Errors of Francis the First.

7. I shall interpose no further in this Dispute, than by observing, that the Superiority of Princes, as well as of inferior Persons, in relation to each other, is not, generally speaking, so much owing to their personal Merit or Qualities, as to a Concurrence of favourable and happy Circumstances; and that Men, whatever Grounds there may be for an intrinsick Distinction between them, yet, like Pictures, appear very different from one another, and in some Measure from themselves, as they are placed in a different Light.

8. Francis the First, with all his Errors and Misfortunes, is certainly to be numbered in the Catalogue of great Princes. " [a] For
" who would not be surprised to see him frowned upon by Fortune,
" ill served by his own Mother, in the Hands of impudent Favou" rites, betrayed by those whom he honoured with his greatest " Confidence, so gloriously to resist the Emperor Charles the Fifth;
" an Enemy whose Dominions were much larger than those of " France, and who had more Money and Forces than Francis; who " was a great Warrior, and an able Politician, faithfully and well-" served by his Generals and Ministers, and who had commonly
" the Assistance of England, and of other potent States against

" France."

" France.". It is a greater Glory for Francis to have preſerved his Kingdom under theſe Circumſtances, than for Charles the Fifth not to have been able to conquer it.

6. Upon the News of this Victory, which the Emperor received at Madrid, he gave a Memorable Inſtance of his Piety and Moderation: He ſhewed no Signs of Tranſport, either in his Words, his Aſpect, or Manner: He declared himſelf pleaſed, that God had given him ſo ſignal a Teſtimony of his Favour, which he had not deſerved, and hoped it would give him an Occaſion of eſtabliſhing the Peace of Europe, and be a Means of enabling him to do good to his Friends, and to pardon his Enemies. When he went to make his Oblations for this Victory in our Lady's Church at Madrid, he would not ſuffer the accuſtomed Expreſſions of publick Joy by Bonfires and ringing of Bells; ſaying, It did not become Chriſtians to rejoice at their Victories over each other, but only for their Victories againſt Infidels. Yet the Uſe, which he afterwards made of this Victory, did not appear altogether ſo agreeable to ſuch generous and heroick Sentiments: For he took the Advantage, from the Circumſtances, in which the King of France his Priſoner was, of forcing him to very hard and unreaſonable Conditions, contrary to the Advice of the Biſhop of Oſna, who thought it would be more honourable to him, freely to diſcharge his Royal Captive, as well as advantagious, by engageing him after ſo noble and generous a Manner, to all poſſible Returns of Friendſhip and Gratitude. But this Advice was oppoſed by the Duke de Alva, who was for improving the Occaſion towards bringing Francis to ſuch ſpecifick Terms, as the Intereſts of Spain, at that Time, might require to be impoſed: And the Emperor inclining to his Advice, Articles in purſuance of it were drawn up, and ſent to Francis to be ſigned, which at firſt he rejected with a noble Diſdain; tho' afterwards, growing more impatient under his Confinement, he accepted certain Conditions, which upon his Releaſe, he did not think himſelf obliged, in Honour or Equity, to obſerve. Theſe Conditions were, That Francis ſhould deliver up Burgundy into the Emperor's Hands, which had been Fifty Years in Poſſeſſion of France. That he ſhould diſclaim all Title to Naples, Milain, Aſta, Genua and Flanders; that he ſhould not aſſiſt the Emperor's Enemies; that he ſhould reſtore the Duke of Bourbon and all his Adherents, and pay the Penſion due from France to the King of England. Francis, upon his taking an Oath to obſerve theſe Conditions, was ſet at Liberty. And the Emperor appeared more deſirous to haſten the Execution of the Treaty, on Account of the ill State of Health, to which the Confinement of the French King had reduced him: Though he was entertained after a Manner ſuitable to his Quality, and had the Liberty of Hunting, or of any other reaſonable Exerciſe; yet it contributed much to that Anxiety of Mind, Mind, which was ſuppoſed to occaſion his Illneſs, that the Emperor did not vouchſafe to make him a Viſit. He did not think, that by Reaſon of his Misfortunes he ought to have incurred the Loſs of his Dignity; or, that being a Priſoner of War, he had forfeited the Reſpect due to a crowned Head. The Emperor, upon advice of his Indiſpoſition, and Reſentments, was determined to make him a Viſit, tho' contrary to the Opinion of his Chancellor, who told him he could not go with Honour, unleſs with a Deſign of granting to the captive King his Freedom without impoſing any Conditions on him. Otherwiſe his Viſit would not be interpreted as an Act of royal Kindneſs, but as proceeding from ſome ſiniſter Conſiderations: So that the World would ſuppoſe him rather moved by private Intereſt, than any true Principles of Humanity, leaſt by the Death of the French King, he might loſe the Occaſion of bringing him to his own Terms, and of improving the late Victory to the beſt Advantage. Theſe were noble and juſt Sentiments, becoming a wiſe and faithful Counſellor: Yet the Emperor was reſolved to make his royal Priſoner a Viſit, without Regard to the Reaſonableneſs of them; for upon his making it, after the Ceremonial on each Side was over, his Imperial Majeſty wiſhing the King to have a Care of his Health, which he much deſired, only told him in general, that his Buſineſs would ſucceed well; thereby giving him an Expectation, which it is difficult to reconcile with the ſevere Conditions, to which he afterwards conſtrained him.

10. All the Inſtances which the Ducheſs of Alençon, Siſter to the French King, could make in his Favour, who had taken a Journey to Madrid to ſee her Brother, and to intercede for his Deliverance, proved ineffectual: Tho' there was probably another Motive beſides that of Affection for her Brother, upon which ſhe was induced to viſit the Court of Spain. For having deſired the Emperor to give his Siſter Leonora in Marriage to the King, notwithſtanding the Pretenſions of the Duke of Bourbon to that Princeſs, ſhe told his Imperial Majeſty, the King her Brother would take care to provide an equal Match for the Duke, which was underſtood, as an Intimation that herſelf was the Perſon, the Duke of Alençon her Husband being lately dead. At length, being unable to procure her Brother's Enlargement, ſhe determined to return to France, and upon her taking Leave of him, he gave an Inſtance of his Magnanimity, which ſhewed, that his Misfortunes had not defaced in his Soul thoſe Idea's of Honour, and Glory, and Piety towards his Country, which became a great and excellent Prince; for he charged her, without any Regard to his Perſon, whether his Deliverance might be effected or not, and, as if he were not living, that ſhe ſhould have ſtrict Regard to the Intereſts and Dignity of the Crown of France.

11. Af-

11. After ſeveral Conventions to that End, the Emperor at laſt condeſcended to the Releaſe of Francis, but not without the ſpecial Interpoſition of our Court; as Francis, after he had obtained his Liberty, acknowledgeth by Letters to the King, aſcribing it expreſsly to his generous Offices. Yet, when demanded by the Emperor, upon his Return into France, to ratify the Articles agreed to, as the Conditions of his Releaſe, he refuſed to do it, alledging,, "[n] That "he was not Charles his Priſoner, neither had given his Faith, but "had only made a Promiſe by Force, when deprived of his Liber- "ty; but, now being free in his Kingdom, he knew no one could "oblige him to keep that Promiſe; neither was he bound to obſerve "that, which Conſtraint and Impriſonment had forced him to "promiſe." Theſe are nice Diſtinctions, upon the Examination of which I ſhall not preſume to enter, tho' they were afterwards in ſome Meaſure favoured, and ſupported by the Court of England: If Conſtraint be a Reaſon ſufficient, why ſuch Compacts as are made under it, ſhould not be ſuppoſed Obligatory, this Reaſon (were we to purſue it in all its Conſequences) will tend to diſſolve whatever diſadvantagious Treaty one Prince may make with another: For it cannot be preſumed, that any Prince would agree to Conditions prejudicial to his own Intereſts, but on one Motive or other of Conſtraint; and whatever the Manner of the Conſtraint may be, whether from the Preſſure of ſome preſent Diſtreſs, or the Apprehenſion of ſome future Evil, the Nature and Reaſon of the Thing, whereby our Judgement, in the Caſe, ought to be regulated, is ſtill the ſame. It had the Appearance of a more equitable Pretence, towards abſolving Francis from the Treaty of Madrid, that he could not make thoſe Alienations from the Crown of France, to which he had conſented, in it, without the Concurrence of the States of his Kingdom. For no one, under any Circumſtances, can have a Power of tranſferring the Right of other Perſons. Either therefore, Francis the Firſt did not know the Conſtitution of his own Kingdom, and by what Tenure he held thoſe Places, which he obliged himſelf by Oath to give up by that Treaty, which cannot eaſily be ſuppoſed; or elſe it will be hard to acquit him from a manifeſt Colluſion, in making that a Condition of his Liberty, which he never intended to execute, or which he previouſly knew was in the Nature of the Thing diſhoneſt and impracticable. All that he could do in this Caſe, which yet he does not appear to have done, was to influence the States in the moſt preſſing and effectual Manner, to confirm what he had tranſacted without their Conſent, but upon a Preſumption, that in Regard to the Circumſtances, which himſelf and the Kingdom was then in, they might, when the Treaty

ſhould come to lie before them, be afterwards induced to give their Conſent.

12. In the mean Time our Court mediated for better Conditions in behalf of the French King, having before entered into a Treaty with Louiſe the Regent, which plainly diſcovered the Diſpoſition our King and his Miniſters were in, towards cultivating a better Underſtanding with France, and bringing the Emperor to more reaſonable Terms. And here again, it was thought, that Reſentment had a great Share towards influencing the Counſels and new Meaſures of the Cardinal, in relation to France. But where his Conduct may be accounted for upon ſeveral wiſe and good Reaſons of State, it is not only ungenerous, but a high Act of Injuſtice, to ſearch for Cauſes to his Diſadvantage which do not appear, and whereof there is no Manner of Occaſion. The Power of Charles the Fifth was now become formidable to all the Chriſtian Princes in Europe; and had he known how to improve the Advantages, of which he was poſſeſſed, their Liberties might have been in much greater Danger of an intire Subverſion, towards eſtabliſhing that univerſal Monarchy, to which that Prince was ſuſpected to aſpire. The Scene being thus changed, and the Ballance of Power in great Meaſure altered, which before had been more equally preſerved between France and the Houſe of Auſtria, it became neceſſary, that there ſhould be a Change in the Counſels, and Projects of England, in reſpect to thoſe two Powers. Yet I have before given in to the common Opinion, that the Emperor's Breach of Promiſe to the Cardinal, in not aſſiſting him, when he aſpired to the Papacy, did occaſion ſome Diſguſt to him, and more Coldneſs towards the Emperor. And I find no Reaſon for receding from this Opinion, by what Biſhop Burnet has advanced in his third Volume, where he ſeems to doubt from a Letter of the Cardinal communicated by Sir William Cook of Norfolk, whether the Emperor really promiſed the Cardinal his Aſſiſtance to that End. There is ſomething ſurprizing in the Propoſal of this Doubt by the Biſhop, and there cannot be a clearer Confutation of it, than from the very Letter upon which it is grounded by his Lordſhip; for the Cardinal ſaith expreſsly in it, "That before the Vacancy "of the Popedom, the Emperor and the King had great Confe- "rences for his Advancement; That the Regent of the Nether- "lands, who knew the Emperor's Mind, had expreſſed a hearty "Concurrence." And in his Letter to the Biſhop of Bath, he ſaith, "I believe all the Imperialiſts will be with me, if there is "Faith in the Emperor." The negative Arguments alledged by the Biſhop for his Doubt, only prove, either that the Cardinal did not reſent the Emperor's Neglect of him on ſo important an Occaſion, or that he was moved, by certain political Reaſons, to diſſemble his Reſentments; which is the more probable Opinion, conſidering that Adrian had not only been advanced by the Emperor's Intereſt to the papal Chair, but Clement the Seventh is charged with Ingratitude by his Imperial Majeſty, as having ſucceeded that Pope, by his Means, and yet favoured the French Intereſt; and he had been forced indeed at laſt, by the Neceſſity of his Affairs, to conclude the League called the Clementine-League, againſt him, tho' it was not without Difficulty and great Reluctance that he was induced to make it. For tho' this Pope had a prompt Wit and large Capacity, with a deep Inſight into all the Affairs of the World, yet when he came to reſolve or execute, he was not correſpondent to himſelf, which proceeded not only from a Temper more unequal, and a Diſpoſition apt to be intimidated, but from a Perplexity and Diffidence of Mind natural to him. So that he was frequently in Doubt about Things, which had already been well and maturely conſidered. For any new Incident or unforeſeen Obſtacle would put him in the like Suſpenſe or Confuſion, that he was in, before he determined; being apt to ſuſpect, that the beſt Council had been rejected, and remembring the Reaſons that had been over-ruled, he yielded more to them upon the Review, than to thoſe which had been preferred and approved. But what has been thought chiefly to have determined the Pope to perfect this League, and to make the contracting Powers more earneſt in their Inſtances to his Holineſs for it, was the [o] Death of the Marqueſs of Peſcara; who, tho' only in the thirty-ſixth Year of his Age, was old in Experience, ingenious, reſolved, circumſpect, and adviſed; much eſteemed by the Spaniſh Infantry, which he had for a conſiderable Time commanded; And, to whom the Honour of the late Victory, and of other memorable Actions performed by that Army, were principally to be aſcribed. He was a great Captain and brave, but knew how to colour ſuch Deſigns as were to be diſſembled, with a becoming Grace; being proud, deceitful, and ill-natured. His Death put the Spaniſh Army in confuſion, and gave Hopes to the Alliance, which was forming againſt the Emperor, more eaſily to defeat that Army, when deprived of a Captain of ſo great Authority and Valour.

13. I ſhall only add to what I have here obſerved out of Guicciardine relating to this Victory, an Obſervation, which that Author makes concerning the Duke of Bourbon, when he went to wait on the Emperor at Madrid, after an Action which was thought ſo very glorious to him. The Emperor received him with all the Demonſtrations of Honour, that could be ſhewed: But the Court of Spain, who did not judge of his perſonal Qualities, by the Fortune that attended him, but from intrinſick Reaſons, abhorred him as a Traitor; and would not allow, that his Conqueſt, how advantagious ſoever to the Affairs of Spain, ought to cover his Diſloyalty. The following Anſwer was made by one of them, whoſe Palace the King demanded for the Duke, that "He ought not to "deny any Thing to his Prince, but ſo ſoon as Bourbon was gone "out of the Palace, he would burn it as a Place infected, and "unworthy to be inhabited by a Man of Honour." There was ſomething of a Spaniſh Arrogance in this Reflection, which, beſides, was not very complaiſant to the King his Maſter; tho' the Sentiments of this Lord were, after all, in the main Foundation of them, laudable and generous: Succeſs can never deſtroy the moral Reaſon of Things, or however glorious in the Eye of the World, alter the Nature of any Action, baſe and ignoble in itſelf.

1. Affairs relating to the State of Religion in Germany, and concerning Muncer and Phifer. 2. 1. FROM this ſummary View of Affairs abroad, wherein the Cardinal was eſpecially intereſted, I ſhall make a Tranſition to thoſe in Germany, relating to the eccleſiaſtical State. The general [p] Entertainment of Luther's Doctrine in thoſe Parts, had produced a League among the People of Suabia, and in other neighbouring Parts, for the Defence of it; and particularly againſt certain Prelates of the Church. Upon which, the Magiſtrates thought fit to interpoſe, and offered to hear, and redreſs their Grievances. But they ſtill continued to aſſemble in a riotous Manner, tho' they had not as yet openly taken the Field in a hoſtile Way; 1524. 1525.

but only met, or pretended to meet, occaſionally, to ſolemnize Marriages, and publick Feaſts; at which Times, they made, and publiſhed twelve Demands, which being publiſhed, produced the like Tumults and Diſorders in other Places; towards ſuppreſſing which, Eighteen thouſand of them, were, in the Sequel, deſtroyed in different Parts. The moſt popular and formidable of theſe Enthuſiaſts was Muncer; who thought Luther ſet about the Work of the Reformation negligently; and that his Doctrine, in ſeveral Reſpects, wanted itſelf to be reformed. His Rule, for all Heads of Sects affect to be known by certain peculiar Marks of Diſtinction, conſiſted in theſe three Articles; To look gravely; To ſpeak little; And to wear long Beards: But there being no great Hopes that Muncer ſhould convert the World, upon this Plan, he aſſociated to himſelf one Phifer, an impudent Pretender to extraordinary Revelations. This Impoſtor, having once dreamed, that he ſaw a prodigious Number of Mice in a Barn, which he chaſed away, interpreted the Viſion as a ſpecial Command of God to him, that he ſhould take Arms, and extirpate the Nobility out of Germany. Muncer made uſe of the like Pretence to a ſpecial Commiſſion, and therefore, when he was attacked by the Princes of Germany, he endeavoured to juſtify himſelf, and to animate his Followers, as being immediately commanded by God upon that Service. But this Illuſion was of as little Significancy to him, as the Appearance of a Rainbow, which he would have perſuaded his ignorant Followers, was a certain Preſage to them of Victory. Tho' herein he imitated indeed the Conduct of great Generals, who have ſometimes artfully improved ſuch Incidents, as Superſtition has ſupplied, to invigorate their Men, and make them more reſolute; the Muncerians, notwithſtanding, were overcome, their Captain-General, and his Lieutenant Phifer taken, and afterwards put to Death.

2. It cannot be denied, that Luther expreſſed a juſt Abhorrence of theſe tumultuary and ſeditious Proceedings. He wrote in particular againſt Muncer, and adviſed, that he ſhould be asked, "who "gave him Commiſſion and Power to preach, and from whence "he had his Call? If he named God for his Author, then they "ſhould bid him ſhew ſome evident Sign of his Call. But if he "would not produce any ſuch Credential, he ought to be re-"jected; it being God's uſual Method, when he would alter the "accuſtomed and received Way, to declare his Will by ſome Sign." Luther could not think himſelf affected by this Manner of Arguing, becauſe his profeſſed Deſign, was not to introduce a new Religion, but to reſtore Religion to its primitive State and Purity.

3. I have

3. I have before taken Notice of the ſubmiſſive Letter, which this Reformer wrote to the King, by Way of Acknowledgement for his former Inſolencies, and wherein he reflected with great Indecency on the Cardinal of York: I ſhall here add more fully, what the King was pleaſed to anſwer to that Article, as being very honorary to the Cardinal's Memory. "It is not ſtrange, ſaith his "Majeſty, that Luther ſhould revile the Archbiſhop of York, who "has not been afraid to reproach Saints and Angels. He adds, "The Cardinal's Services have been very uſeful both to himſelf, "and to the whole Kingdom: And that as he had loved him very "much before, he would now give him, ſince he had been calum-"niated after ſuch a Manner, more ſignal Proofs of his Favour "and Affection." And among other Services which the King acknowledgeth of the Cardinal, his Zeal in preventing the Growth of Hereſy, is particularly applauded. Luther finding that the King, after the great Indignities which had been offered to him, was not ſo eaſy, as to be mollified by a Submiſſion, which tho', in certain Reſpects, it carried in it a Shew of Repentance; yet, on two Accounts, was highly provoking to his Majeſty; as affronting him in the Perſon of his firſt Miniſter, and charging him in Effect with the Publication of a Book under his own Name, whereof he was not the Author. Upon this ill Succeſs of his Letter, Luther repents of his penitential Way of Writing, and declares he wrote it to gratify his Friends; that in particular, he had been adviſed to it by Chriſtiern King of Denmark, the Duke of Saxony, and Eraſmus, who thought his Stile too harſh and ſevere, and wiſhed him to ſoften it; but he had now ſeen his Error, and would therefore for the future take another Courſe; for it was a fooliſh Thing, to look for Religion among Courtiers, or to expect that we ſhould find in royal Palaces the Spirit of John the Baptiſt.

4. It will, I believe, be acknowledged by all Perſons, that Luther ought to have been more temperate and reſerved in his Writings; tho' the Exceſſes, to which his Paſſion or Reſentments ſometimes carried him, with thoſe who would regulate their Judgements by the natural Reaſon of Things, cannot in the leaſt affect the Credit of the Reformation; in Defence of which, Monſieur Claud appears to have ſaid in a Paſſage before cited, all that can be ſaid, in ſo few Words, by Way of Apology, for the Spirit of Martyn Luther.

5. It may be doubted after all, whether the intemperate Zeal of Luther did not do ſome Diſſervice in England, to his Deſigns of a Reformation? Why the King afterwards came to reject the Pope's Authority, and to take Meaſures which tended to introduce a Reformation of Religion into his own Dominions, is a Queſtion, which will be reſolved into other Reaſons, than thoſe upon which

Luther proceeded in his Plan of it. Tho' it is probable, the King, who originally, with great Zeal, oppoſed the Doctrine of Luther, and the ſeveral Innovations which he endeavoured to introduce in Germany, was ſtill more irritated againſt him, and his Deſign; when he obſerved, how great Tumults and Diſtractions, what wild and enthuſiaſtick Sects had ſprung up in Germany, by Occaſion of his Doctrine. His Majeſty, and the Cardinal might, in certain Reſpects, concur with him in the ſame Sentiments, and did perhaps obſerve ſeveral Things in the eccleſiaſtical State, that required Reformation, which yet they thought ſhould rather be tolerated, than the Breach of publick Peace and Order, or a Method of Reforming, which might open a Way, as it had done in the Bowels of the Empire, to Anarchy, Confuſion, and every evil Work. The King and this Miniſter plainly ſaw, that what the Reformed abroad principally ſtruck at, was the epiſcopal Order: An Order founded at leaſt in apoſtolical Conſtitution, and an uninterrupted Succeſſion whereof had been continued from the apoſtolical Age. They judged, it was better, ſilently to lament the Abuſes, which had been introduced into the Church, 'till the Providence of God might open a legal Way of correcting them, than to give the leaſt Encouragement to a riotous or tumultuous Method of proceeding in an Affair, which ought to have been the Work of Authority; and which, had it been in the leaſt countenanced, before the Government was prepared to enter regularly upon it, might have occaſioned the ſame ſeditious and popular Inſurrections, which had created ſo much Diſturbance in foreign Parts. But this was more eſpecially to be apprehended, if the People, having received any Tincture from the Prejudices generally entertained againſt Epiſcopacy abroad, ſhould concur with the foreign Reformers, in endeavouring to aboliſh and extirpate the epiſcopal Order. A Society, tho' very irregular, and requiring, on many Accounts, a Reformation, yet while the fundamental Conſtitution of it is retained, will be thought by all ſober Perſons, much preferable to any Reformation, that has a direct Tendency intirely to deſtroy or diſſolve it. As the worſt Sort of Government, under a cruel and tyrannical Prince, is ſtill more eligible, than an utter Subverſion of all Government, wherein Men are reduced to a mere State of Nature, and every Man is privileged to do that, which ſeems right in his own Eyes.

6. I cannot but take Notice here of a Scandal caſt upon the Reformation highly derogatory to the Credit of it. It has been pretended, That the noble Claim of Right, which Chriſtians have to judge for themſelves, was the Foundation of it: And that the Church therefore, has no Authority to direct the Judgement or Conſciences of Men: If this Argument proves any Thing, it proves too much. The Deſign of it is to ſhew, That where Men have a Right to make uſe of their private Judgement, and to be determined by it, they can be under no Obligation to ſubmit to Authority. Let us transfer this Argument, for in the Reaſon of it, it is the Same, from religious to civil Affairs. Every Man has as much a Right to judge for the Direction of his Conſcience in the one Caſe, as in the Other. Let us ſuppoſe now, that a Man, a Man of Sincerity, upon certain Scruples of Conſcience, refuſeth to pay Obedience to the civil Magiſtrate, whom God has ſet over him: Will his Sincerity or miſtaken Judgement cancel the Obligation which he is under to Obedience, or deprive the civil Magiſtrate of the Right which he hath to puniſh or coerce him, which yet the civil Magiſtrate ought not to claim or exerciſe, if he that refuſes Obedience hath a Right, that is, an independent and arbitrary Right of Judging for himſelf? For then the civil Magiſtrate would be evidently empowered to exerciſe a Right contrary to Right. Thus in the ſpiritual Society, every Man has undoubtedly a Right of Judging for himſelf; even when God declares his Will by expreſs or immediate Revelation, this Privilege of private Judgement is not excluded; for before I can fully aſſent to any revealed Doctrine, I am previouſly, in the natural Order of my Idea's, to judge, whether it be really revealed, and in what Senſe: So that abſolutely ſpeaking, there is not any Principle more certain, than the Right, which every Man has of Judging for himſelf, as well in Reſpect of Things to which his Aſſent is required by a divine, as by a human Authority. But then we ſay, this Right of Judging does not, in the Nature or Reaſon of it, exclude our Obligation of ſubmitting to Authority in either Caſe, but is perfectly conſiſtent with it. In exerciſing my private Judgement, I am to conſider all the Arguments which are proper to enlighten, to direct, or determine it. Now, tho' an infallible Authority admits of no Diſpute, when I am once aſſured that it ſpeaks to me; yet this does not hinder, but that Men, eſpecially my Superiors, may alſo afford me ſuch Light and Evidence for my Direction, as I may be obliged to follow. Nay, 'tis more probable, upon a general Conſideration, that a Number of Men met together in a regular Way, to deliberate concerning any Truth, ſhould form a true Judgement of it, than a Perſon, who ſhould ſeparately conſider it. Private Judgement therefore is ſo far from excluding ſuch foreign Helps and Aſſiſtances, as may be proper to inform it, that it always preſuppoſes the Uſe of them. If by this Maxim, private Judgement is the Standard of the Reformation, be meant, as by oppoſing it to all human Authority we are directed to underſtand it, that every Man, who will reſolve to follow the Light of his own Mind, without Regard to any human Authority whatever, has a Right to become come a Reformer, nothing could bring a greater Reproach upon the Reformation. Upon this Maxim, it will follow, by neceſſary and clear Conſequence, that different Perſons may have a Right to propagate different, and even contradictory Principles: Such a Right might poſſibly be claimed by Muncer and Phyſer, with other German Enthuſiaſts, that adhered to them. But thoſe, who proceeded regularly, and with Sobriety, in carrying on the Work of the Engliſh Reformation, never pretended to ſet up private Judgement, in Oppoſition to the holy Scriptures, as interpreted by the Counſels and primitive Fathers, and to all eccleſiaſtical Authority. In rejecting Epiſcopacy indeed, the foreign Reformers acted without any good Grounds; but this was not becauſe private Judgement gave them a Right to oppoſe that Inſtitution, but through an Error in Opinion; becauſe it did not, as they pretended, appear to them, to be a divine or binding Inſtitution. However, their Error concerning the Epiſcopate, could not alter the Nature of it, nor the Right which the Church had of aſſerting the epiſcopal Powers, and the Obedience due to them. To ſay otherways, upon a mere Pretence of private Judgement, would be to juſtify not only all the Extravagancies, and viſionary Notions of the German Anabaptiſts at that Time, but all the abſurd Doctrines and Schemes of Religion, which have been ſince advanced in any Part of the chriſtian World. For the Right of private Judgement, ſimply conſidered, is the ſame in all Men; and conſequently all Men, for whatever impious or abſurd Doctrines they contend, are equally to be applauded for acting in Purſuance of it.

7. But upon what Principle ſoever, thoſe Perſons who were concerned in promoting the Reformation abroad, might proceed; there is no Appearance that the Groundwork of the Reformation here in England was laid in private Judgement, in Oppoſition to publick Authority. And when thoſe of our Communion ſpeak concerning the Principles in general, upon which the Reformation proceeded, they ſhould, one would think, rather direct us to ſeek for them, in what was done by our own Reformers after a [q] regular and ſynodical Manner, than to ſuch Proceedings among the Req A Tranſcript from the Collections with which my learned Friend Mr. Harbyn hath been pleaſed to favour me, cannot but be here very acceptable to the Reader. " I muſt do the Clergy of this " Reign, ſaith he, the Juſtice to own, That in all the Steps and Advances that were made " towards a Reformation, they always appeared foremoſt, and made Way for the Acts of " Parliament by their previous Decrees and Determinations in their Synods. And I think, " it does deſerve to be taken Notice of, for the Credit of the Reformation and the Honour " of Henry the Eighth, that, notwithſtanding he was generally ſo impetuous and arbitrary, " yet he did not think fit to make any Alterations in Religion, but by the moſt regular and " unexceptionable Methods; ſuch as conſulting and adviſing firſt with the Clergy, muſt be " allowed to be. And this ſhews, how groundleſs the Calumny is, which attributes all " the Variations from Popery in this Reign, to the Luſts and Paſſions of Henry the Eighth. " From hence too, I think, I have a juſt Occaſion of blaming our Hiſtorian (Biſhop Burnet p. 82,) for an injurious Reflection upon the Clergy of that Reign, when he ſays, They oppoſed all Motions for a Reformation.

formers abroad, the Irregularities whereof themſelves only pretended to excuſe from the Neceſſity of their Affairs. The Methods, which were taken here to introduce the Reformation, were all in a publick and authoritative Way; nothing was done, but by the whole Power of the Church of England, in a legal Repreſentation of her Clergy: And whoever, upon a Pretence of private Judgement, did then, or at any Time ſince, oppoſe the Deciſions of the Clergy ſo aſſembled, has, according to the Nature of the Offence, been ſtigmatized with the Mark of Hereſy, or of Schiſm, and eſteemed, if incorrigible by Admonition, as one deſerving to be ſeparated from the Communion of the Faithful: And yet we are told, that to aſſume ſuch an Authority, deſtroys the very Baſe and Groundwork of the Reformation. It is unaccountable, how that ſhould deſtroy the very Baſe and Groundwork of the Reformation, upon which the Church of England, acknowledged to be a noble Part of the Catholick Church, proceeded in her Reformation; upon which ſhe has ever ſince ſuperſtructed, and does at this very Time ſubſiſt. The civil Powers indeed concurred, as they ought to have done, in aſſiſting the Church in this great Work, and in corroborating her Decrees; but a corroborating Circumſtance of any Right, does by no Means ſuppoſe either a Ceſſion or Diminution of that Right. But to ſay, what the Principle which I thought it incumbent on me to obviate ſuppoſeth, if it doth ſuppoſe any Thing, that a Man's private Judgement may give him a Right to oppoſe publick Authority; that, for Inſtance, whoever they are, that believe the three Orders of the Church, are not either of divine or always of uſeful Inſtitution, may, for that Reaſon, lawfully oppoſe, and endeavour to abrogate them, in Oppoſition to the eccleſiaſtical Eſtabliſhment; if this be the Privilege of private Judgement, we may ſafely aver, nothing could be ſaid more contradictory to the Senſe or Practice of the Church of England, either in the Beginning of the Reformation, or the Times ſucceeding it. And the Church, in aſſuming an Authority to impoſe her Senſe concerning this Article upon her Children, hath acted not only agreeably to her own Principles, but to the Principles of the Church of God in all Ages. How far the Ignorance or Errors, or certain political Conſiderations might excuſe the Reformers abroad, in rejecting Epiſcopacy, it does not directly concern us to enquire: They muſt anſwer to that Charge, if they can, for themſelves. Neither are we to be terrified, with the Conſequences of this Doctrine, to which the Church of England adhered in her Reformation, becauſe we are told, we ſhall thereby unchurch our reformed Brethren abroad: This Way of Arguing from Conſequences, will never ſatisfy the Minds of Men who deſire to regulate their Judgements by the pure Light of Truth, and the natural Evidence of Things. If the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation be falſe, then all the Members of the Church of Rome, among whom there are certainly many pious, learned, and good Men, are confeſſedly guilty of Idolatry; will any Man, to prevent this hard, and, as it is thought, uncharitable Conſequence? Will any Man therefore ſay, the Doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation is certainly true? The Argument relating to foreign Congregations, ſo far as it proceeds only upon conſequential Inconveniences, is equally applicable. Could it be proved, in particular, that Epiſcopacy is not of divine Inſtitution, or an Ordinance perpetually obligatory; or that any Authority upon Earth might lawfully abrogate it, and ſuperinduce ſome other Form of Church-Government; this would be an Argument that ought to have its due Weight: But Men will never be convinced of the Truth of any Thing, by Inferences of what Nature ſoever, which have no neceſſary or viſible Connection with the Arguments, that ought to prove it. No Man, to illuſtrate what I ſay by another Inſtance, who has not been baptiſed by epiſcopal Hands, will for this Reaſon alone, and he will never be able to produce any other, conclude his Baptiſm valid, becauſe otherways the Baptiſm of a great Number of Perſons, who never had any Scruple concerning it, will be invalid alſo; ſuch a Way of Reaſoning may be agreeable to thoſe, who are under the Conduct of a Guide, whoſe Deciſions they are not to diſpute, and who follow him with an implicit Faith; but with Proteſtants, and in an Age of ſo much Light, where a Reaſon is required and expected for every Thing, it only ſheweth, that when Men have Recourſe to ſuch poor and foreign Subterfuges, they are in very great Diſtreſs for Want of Argument.

8. I have inſiſted longer upon this Article, as it tends ſo much, and ſo peculiarly, to the Honour of the Engliſh Reformation, and to confirm my Conjecture, that the King and his great Miniſter, did not ſo readily come into the Meaſures taken towards a Reformation abroad, becauſe they ſaw the early Tendency of ſome Doctrines to deſtroy the very Being of the chriſtian Church, and to introduce an Adminiſtration into it, without any Authority either from God or Man; they reſolved poſſibly (if they had any ſuch Deſign) when they ſhould ſee a proper Time of Reforming the Church, to do it in ſuch a Manner, that the Reformation of it might appear to all the World, not to be the Effect of popular Clamour, or any tumultuary Proceedings, but of mature Advice and regular Conſultation; That the Diſorders under which the eccleſiaſtical State languiſhed, ought to be healed without applying ſuch Remedies, as would conſume its very Vitals; and that it was better, 'till Matters might be more ripe for ſuch a Reformation, that certain Diſorders ſhould be tolerated, than a Way be opened to any illegal

Preten-

Pretenſions to rectify what was amiſs; thereby to deſtroy the Hierarchy, and leave the Church without any Paſtors, according to the Inſtitution of God, and conſequently without any authentick or valid Adminiſtrations.

9. To return to the State of civil Affairs, wherein our Court was, at this Time, principally intereſted. The ſtrict and intimate Correſpondence between the King and his Imperial Majeſty began now, by ſenſible Degrees, to be diſcontinued. And there followed a certain Coldneſs in the Negotiations between them, which diſcovered a Tendency to that open Rupture, which afterwards happened. Tho' the King, out of a decent Regard to his Ally and Confederate the Emperor, had, upon News of the Victory obtained by his Troops before Pavia, cauſed publick Demonſtration of Joy to be made in London, and a Maſs, with extraordinary Solemnity, to be ſung for the Celebration of it: Yet it was thought, he did not inwardly rejoice on the Occaſion, conſidering, the Emperor, by the Succeſs of that Action, was riſen to a Height of Power, which did not ſeem to conſiſt with thoſe Reaſons of Safety or Intereſt, by which it concerned the Princes his Neighbours to regulate their Conduct. The King was more confirmed in this Sentiment, from the cold Reception which his Ambaſſadors found in their Demands at the Court of Madrid. He was therefore reſolved to aſſert the Dignity and Prerogative of the Crown of England, in claiming to hold the Ballance of Power among the Princes his Neighbours, and in making himſelf Arbiter of their Proceedings, when they ſhould preſume to diſturb the publick Tranquillity. Upon this Ground, and from the growing Danger wherewith Chriſtendom was threatned by the Turk, he was determined, for the Time, to wave his Pretenſions to the Crown of France, and to apply the proper Methods of procuring an univerſal Peace. To this End, for which he was alſo ſollicitous out of a generous Compaſſion towards the French King, he gave Orders to his Embaſſadors in Spain, to interceed for the Enlargement of that Prince; which yet was not effected without ſuch Conditions, as neither the Court of England or France could by any Means approve; tho' the King had himſelf wrote to the Emperor in Behalf of Francis, in Terms very proper to affect a generous Mind; for he declared, the greateſt Comfort that King found in his diſtreſſed Condition, was, " That he had fallen into the Hands of ſo magnanimous a " Prince, who would not oblige him to any Thing, that might " not, in Juſtice, be required, or which he was not capable of " executing: That he hoped, therefore, ſufficient Security would " be accepted for his Freedom, eſpecially, ſince it would be " more advantagious to his Imperial Majeſty that he ſhould " have a faithful and potent Friend, than that he ſhould ſuffer a " captive Monarch to live, or die, under ſuch unhappy Circum-

10. But it is not improbable the King was more reſolute in proſecuting his Deſigns againſt the Emperor, as he apprehended himſelf injured by his Imperial Majeſty in a very nice Point of Honour. Notwithſtanding the Contract between the Emperor and the Princeſs Mary, a Match had been propoſed on his Part, with Iſabella, Princeſs of Portugal, which was thought by the King to reflect ſome Diſgrace on his Daughter; whom the Emperor had obliged himſelf, upon Oath, to marry, ſo ſoon as ſhe ſhould come to Age of Maturity; but to excuſe himſelf in Breach of this Engagement, his Imperial Majeſty alledged that, at the Petition of his " STATES aſſembled at Toledo, he was obliged to comply with " the Deſires of his Subjects, and hoped his Compliance herein " would not be interpreted as any Breach of Friendſhip with the " King." An Apology of more Uſe could not have been made towards abſolving Francis from the Crime of Infidelity, wherewith the Emperor afterwards charged him. For how doth it appear, that the States, or People of Spain had more Power, at their Requeſt, than thoſe of France, to diſcharge their Prince from any previous ſolemn Contract? Upon a general View of the Caſe, it appears much more reaſonable, that a Sovereign Prince ſhould have a Power independent on his Subjects, of diſpoſing himſelf in Marriage, than that he ſhould have a Power of diſmembering any Part of his Dominions, wherein his Subjects are intereſted, or even a Power of delivering his Perſon, without their Conſent, into the Hands of a foreign Potentate. All we can infer, from this Repreſentation of Charles the Fifth, in his own Defence, is, that Princes like other Men ſometimes form and vary their Judgements both concerning Perſons and Things, only as private Paſſion, or certain political Conſiderations, byaſs the Underſtanding, without any Regard to their real or intrinſick Merit. However, the King of England, conſidering the tender Age of the Princeſs his Daughter, and having probably a ſecret Intention of coming to an open Rupture with the Emperor, appeared willing, by mutual Agreement, to diſſolve the Contract between them; and therefore ſhewed no publick Reſentment, however he might diſreliſh it, of the ſeeming Indignity offered to his Daughter. After this, the two Powers, which had been formerly united in the moſt ſtrict Alliance, and mutual Ties of Friendſhip, began to treat each other with much Indifference; and by Degrees, with ſo ſenſible a Neglect, that the Embaſſadors were on both Sides recalled; and the Emperor, who before uſed, at the Concluſion of his Letters to the King, to write your Son and Kinſman; from that Time, without any additional Title, only ſubſcribed Charles.

1. DURING theſe foreign Tranſactions, the King found his Treaſury much exhauſted, and was apprehenſive, that a new War, the Projects of which he now began to form, would require freſh and very large Supplies. But as the Cardinal had undertaken, ſo long as he ſhould have the Direction of Affairs, to provide all the neceſſary Funds for the publick Service, the Court was very willing that Province ſhould be left to his own Management, and did not much deſire to interpoſe in an Affair, which ſeldom renders thoſe who are concerned in adviſing it, acceptable to the People. This appeared from the great and general Diſguſt, which at this Time was entertained againſt the Cardinal, becauſe Commiſſions, it was pretended, by his Advice, had been given out, whereby a ſixth Part of the Goods of Laymen, and a Fourth of the Clergy, was to be levied throughout the Kingdom. Of this Impoſt, the People complained heavily, not only on Account of their Poverty, but becauſe the Commiſſions for it were contrary to Law. Upon which, the King reſolved to diſavow the whole Proceeding, and to declare by his publick Letters, that he expected nothing from his People, but by Way of free Benevolence; under which Colour, notwithſtanding, great Sums of Money were required, and particularly from the Citizens of London; in Behalf of whom one of their Council pleaded, ſuch Benevolences were expreſsly prohibited by a Statute, in the firſt Year of Richard the Third: To this it was anſwered, that Laws enacted by Uſurpers, are not preſumed to bind legitimate Princes; that Richard the Third was not only a Tyrant, but had cauſed his own Nephews to be aſſaſſinated, and was therefore 1525. 1526.

fore more fit to ſuffer by the Law, than to make Law: So that his Intention was only to court the Favour of the People by the moſt popular Methods, he having no other Proſpect of ſupporting his unjuſt Power: But that King Henry having a juſt and uncontеſted Title to the Crown, could be bound no further by any Statute of Richard the Third, than himſelf ſhould think fit to approve; It being abſurd to think, that an Act of a factious Aſſembly, confirmed no otherwiſe than by an Uſurper, and a Criminal in the higheſt Degree, ſhould bind a Sovereign and rightful Prince. Theſe are the Reaſons alledged by Lord Herbert, as ſpoken in Defence of the Court, but he cites no Authority for them; ſo that it is uncertain whether they were really offered, or whether his Lordſhip has not taken the ſame Liberty, as he hath done in other Places, a Liberty, not ſo common to modern, as to more ancient Hiſtorians, of arguing in a borrowed Perſon, from the probable Reaſon, and Circumſtances of Things.

2. The Cardinal, that he might better learn how the Citizens were diſpoſed towards the Benevolence, began to enquire of the Lord Mayor, what Sum he intended to contribute. But his Lordſhip deſired he might not be obliged to declare himſelf particularly, upon the Matter propoſed, 'till he ſhould have Time to confer with the Common-Council of the City: Upon which, the Cardinal moved that He, with the Aldermen his Brethren, would come privately to him, and contribute what they ſhould think proper.

3. In the Country the Benevolence was ſtill more oppoſed, and ſome Perſons were ſo highly enraged at it, that they openly took up Arms; but ſubmitting themſelves, at the Perſuaſion of the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, they were brought to London, and there ſecured. The King underſtanding that the common Sort of People excuſed their Incompliance with what was expected, not from Want of Affection, but Ability, was determined not to puniſh any of them on this Occaſion, but to bring the Matter before his Council; where the Cardinal, in Vindication of himſelf, ſaid, that he had done nothing herein, without the [9] previous Advice of the Judges; who had poſitively affirmed, that the King might lawfully demand any Sum by Commiſſion, and that the Council of State had approved this Method. But the King ſaying, he had been aſſured, that his Subjects were richer, than they appeared to be from the Effect of this Commiſſion, the whole Blame was caſt upon thoſe who had made ſuch falſe Information; and a general Pardon given to ſuch, as had denied to contribute towards the Benevolence. The Delinquents were afterwards brought to the Star-Chamber, where they received a ſevere Animadverſion from the King's Council learned in the

Laws,

Laws, and then were told by the Cardinal, that, "Notwithſtanding "their grievous Offences, the King, in Conſideration of their Po- "verty, had granted them his moſt gracious Pardon, upon Con- "dition, they would give in Sureties for their future good Behavi- "our." And when it was replied they had none to give; the Cardinal firſt, and after him the Duke of Norfolk, ſaid they would engage for them; whereupon there was an Order for their Diſcharge.

4. The Cardinal, ſupported both by the papal and regal Authority, ſtill continued to ſuppreſs the leſſer Monaſteries, and to convert them to better Uſes. Among theſe, while Methods were taking to ſuppreſs the Monaſtery of Begham in Suſſex, certain People in a ſtrange and frightful Diſguiſe, carrying the Canons along with them, made a Shew of reinſtating them, and ſo departed, promiſing the Canons, to come at any Time to their Relief, upon the Signal of their ringing the Abbey-Bell. But theſe had not long an Opportunity of carrying on the Impoſture, for the King's Council receiving Intelligence of the Matter, ſo ſtrictly examined the Canons, that at laſt they confeſſed the Authors of the Cheat, who being ſent for, received a due and ſevere Puniſhment.

5. The Revenues of the Cardinal from the Privileges of his viſitatorial Power, of making Abbots, of proving Wills, granting Faculties, Licenſes, and Diſpenſations; from his Penſions, and Preferments, and other viſible Advantages, were thought, by this Time, to be equal to the Revenues of the Crown. But in the Methods of enriching him, under the firſt Article, no one contributed ſo much, as his Chaplain John Allen Doctor of Laws; who accompanied with a great Train, and riding in a Kind of perpetual Progreſs from one religious Houſe to another, is ſaid to have drawn very large Sums for his Maſter's Service from them. This being at laſt complained of as a publick Grievance, the King took Notice of it in ſo ſharp a Manner, that the Cardinal was enforced, not only to excuſe himſelf with much Submiſſion, but to promiſe not to offend in the like Kind any more; proteſting, withal, that he had made a laſt Will and Teſtament, wherein he had left a great Part of his Eſtate to his Highneſs: Upon which Submiſſion it is ſuppoſed, the King ſent him a Letter written throughout with his own Hand, relating to the Abbey of Winton.

6. I do not think my ſelf concerned to make the leaſt Apology for any real Irregularities, wherewith either the Cardinal himſelf, or Perſons employed by him, were juſtly chargeable, and which are founded on any good or reaſonable Evidence. But as to what ſome Hiſtorians have ſaid, to the Diſhonour of the Cardinal, that he did not only ſooth the King in his criminal Pleaſures, but was a Sharer of them, with a vile Inſinuation, as if he were privy and inſtrumental mental to the Commerce which the King had with Miſtreſs Blount, the Effect of which was the Birth of a natural Son to the King, afterwards Duke of Richmond; I cannot but obſerve by the Way, this is a Charge of ſo high and very offenſive a Nature, as ought to have been well proved, and from the beſt Authorities, by thoſe, who have reported it.

7. The Cardinal having built the noble Palace of Hampton Court, deſigned now to make a Preſent of it to the King: But as the beſt Deſigns are capable of being reſolved into bad Motives, ſome Hiſtorians have ſuppoſed the Cardinal was induced to make this Preſent, upon a Conſideration, that ſo fine and magnificent a Structure would only add unto that Envy, by which he had already ſuffered ſo much: Whereas it might, with more Candour, be preſumed, that as he owed every Thing to the King, he choſe to expreſs his Gratitude, by an Acknowledgement worthy of his royal Acceptance.

8. Amidſt all the arduous Affairs of State and other great Deſigns of the Cardinal for the Glory of his Maſter, the Good of the Kingdom, and the common Intereſts of Chriſtendom; Oxford in particular, had ſtill a conſiderable Share in them: I ſhall here interpoſe no farther in the Controverſy, between our learned Hiſtorian, and the Author of the Antiquities of Cambridge, than by obſerving, they both diſcover too great Partiality to the different Places of their Education. The Latter pretends, that a Colony of Cantabrigians was ſent, at the Cardinal's Inſtance, to Oxford, to inſtruct the Members of that Univerſity in the liberal Arts, who, before this Miſſion, were altogether Strangers to them. The Other, having aſſerted, and appealed to the Authority of Fox, for what he ſaid, That the Cantabrigians, at that Time, were ſo very ignorant, that it could ſcarce be ſaid they were [r] as yet initiated in the Knowledge of Letters, hath obſerved, that thoſe, who came from Cambridge, to the Cardinal's College, were only admitted in mere Quality of Scholars or Students; but that not One of them was diſtinguiſhed with the Title of Lecturer or Canon, or with any other ſuperior Character. From whence he infers, that the Deſign of tranſplanting them to Oxford, was not, that they ſhould teach the Sciences, but be inſtructed in them. He adds, That it appears from Letters of the Cardinal, which yet he does not cite, that the Perſons whom he had entertained in his College from Cambridge, behaved themſelves in ſuch a Manner, that he heartily repented of his having adopted them into it. This might poſſibly be true, and yet nothing to the Purpoſe, for which our learned Hiſtorian cites

it,

it. For the Queſtion between the two Antiquaries is not concerning the Morals of the Members from Cambridge, but their Learning; and, even in this Reſpect, the Reaſon of the Cardinal's Diſguſt taken at them, might proceed not from their Ignorance, but becauſe they employed what Learning and Knowledge they had with a diſtinguiſhed Zeal, towards exploding certain Doctrines then received and eſtabliſhed, but which in general, no one eſpouſed with greater Ardour, than the Cardinal. His Deſign at preſent being ſo far from taking any Meaſures tending to introduce a Reformation, and eſpecially to ſeparate from the Communion of the Church of Rome, that in ſolliciting the neceſſary Powers towards ſuppreſſing religious Houſes, in order to found a College, he proceeded expreſsly upon this Suggeſtion, that the Society which he deſired to erect, would be a Means of promoting good Learning, and thereby of extirpating the many Hereſies and Schiſms, which had ſpread themſelves over the chriſtian World. And yet it happened, by the Providence of God, who frequently over-rules the Deſigns of Men, to effect ſuch Ends, as were not only beſide their Intention, but directly oppoſite to it, that none were more active and inſtrumental in opening a Way to the Reformation in England, than the very Members of that Society, which the Cardinal founded, with an Intention of doing eminent Service thereby to the papal Cauſe.

9. Yet our Antiquary acknowledgeth, that among thoſe, who came at this Time from the other Univerſity to viſit Oxford, there was a Doctor of Divinity Robert Sherton, who preferred a Supplication, that he might be admitted here to the ſame Degree. But it doth not appear, that he either took upon him to inſtruct any Perſons in the Univerſity, or that he had here any Office of Diſtinction conferred on him. And our Hiſtorian extends the like Obſervation to all the Reſt of the Members from Cambridge; ſeveral of whom, whoſe Names he deſcendeth to enumerate, being Batchelors of Arts, were admitted to the ſame Degree, as were others reſpectively, who were Maſters of Arts. But there were Students who came very Young from the other Univerſity and before they were Graduates, who after they had been incorporated and reſident among us ſome Time, made extraordinary Progreſs and Advancement, in ſeveral Parts of Learning.

10. The Foreigners incorporated in the Cardinal's College were John de Coloribus a Dominican, Nicholas de Burgo Batchelor of Divinity, and Peter Garcia de Lalo, of the Univerſity of Paris; the Firſt of theſe took his Degree of Doctor in Divinity, and wrote a Book againſt Luther, by the Cardinal's ſpecial Nomination, among others, whom he alſo appointed to that End. But as he proceeded in Divinity in the Year Fifteen hundred and ſeventeen; it is uncertain, whether he came originally to reſide in Oxford at the Cardinal's Invitation. Yet his Learning and Merit afterwards gave him a great Share in his Eminency's Favour, and recommended him to be a Member of his new-erected College, tho' it is uncertain in what Capacity. The Second reſided in Oxford for the Space of eight Years; he was an Italian born, tho' tranſplanted from Paris. He ſucceeded Thomas Brynknell in the Theological Lecture, founded by the Cardinal; which he read in Magdalen College: And when the Queſtion concerning the Divorce came to be agitated, ſhewing himſelf a zealous Advocate for it; he ſo provoked the Women in Oxford, who apprehended the Rights of the Sex intereſted in the Diſpute, that they openly inſulted him, and even threw Stones at him, as he walked the Streets. Upon which, preferring a Complaint againſt them, no leſs than Thirty of thoſe Women were impriſoned and kept under confinement three Days and as many Nights. To theſe our Antiquary, making no further Mention of Garcia, addeth Nicholas Cratzer a Bavarian, the famous Mathematician; Matthew Culphurinus a Græcian, both of them Lecturers in the Cardinal's New College: Where, with ſome other learned Men, they were the happy Inſtruments of promoting uſeful and ſolid Learning; 'till a peſtilential Diſtemper, beginning to rage, cauſed them to retire and diſperſe. And on the ſame Account ſeveral of the Cantabrigians leaving the Univerſity, returned no more to proſecute their Studies in it.

11. Theſe were the initial Steps in the Cardinal's College, from which the Univerſity of Oxford had conceived the greateſt Hopes, towards the general Advancement of Learning. The Structure of which, if that ſhould be conſidered, was not inferior to the moſt magnificent royal Palaces; tho' nothing can be ſaid ſo much, or ſo well, in Honour of the Cardinal, with Regard to his whole Deſign in this noble Foundation, as in the Terms wherein the Encouragement, he thereby gave to Learning, is celebrated, in ſeveral Letters of the Univerſity to him. From ſ one of them our Hiſtorian has drawn a large Extract, Part of which is to the following Effect. " That if ever a Way was opened to true and ſolid Lear" ning, this is the Time wherein the Diſpoſitions of Providence to " that End, appear more remarkable: Since no Age ever diſcovered
" a more forward Inclination in Men to Letters, or afforded grea" ter Advantages for learned Improvements; For what can more
" excite the Ardor of Men in purſuit of them, than to underſtand,
" that their Endeavours do not only recommend them to the Ap-
" probation of their Superiors, but to the ſenſible, to the moſt
" generous, Effects, of their Favour and Encouragement. What

" indeed can contribute more to animate Men in their Search after " Knowledge, than when they conſider they are purſuing thoſe ve- " ry Methods, by which your Eminency hath gradually raiſed your " ſelf to ſo tranſcendent a Pitch of Glory. When we reflect, that " the higheſt Authority is adorned in the Perſon of your Lord- " ſhip, with the moſt extenſive Goodneſs, and that your Lord- " ſhip's Erudition is equal to your great Dignities, and how " great Addreſs, and more than human Wiſdom you ſhew, in ma- " naging the moſt important and intricate Affairs of State, we " cannot, but in the moſt humble and devout Manner, render " our Thanks to Almighty God, for his Grace in conferring ſuch " ſpecial and extraordinary Gifts upon Men; and upon one, who, " in his early Age, being incorporated in this Univerſity, and ha- " ving conformed to the Rules and Diſcipline of it, is now become " a Patron and Protector and common Father to us. The Bene- " fits of whoſe paternal Care over us, have not only exceeded our " Expectations, but all that we could reaſonably propoſe, or de- " ſire; for who has raiſed in any Seat of Learning whatever, or " in any Age, ſo noble a Monument of Piety and Goodneſs, as " what at preſent is erected upon the Foundation of your New Col- " lege. It had been indeed a noble Deſign, and worthy of a " great Mind, had it only been formed upon the Plan ſometime " ſince communicated to us, in the Name of your Eminency, by " the Biſhop of Lincoln, who told us, the Deſign of your Grace " was to found a College, wherein all convenient Proviſion ſhould " be made for the Support of about Two hundred Students. This " Report filled us with thoſe Sentiments of Joy and Gratitude, " which were proper on the Occaſion — But — now above what " that Prelate reported to us, we are informed by the Letters of " your Grace, you deſign a large Augmentation to the ſeveral Sa- " laries of the Members; and that beſides ſome more private Le- " ctures, you deſign to found ſeven for the publick Service and Be- " nefit of the Univerſity: And that for the Lectures relating to " Theology and the common Law, your Lordſhip will make per- " petual Eſtabliſhment; that the moſt learned Profeſſors ſhall in " convenient Time be invited from foreign Nations; that moſt " ample Stipends are already provided for the reſpective Readers; " and that all the Schools ſhall be erected at your ſole Expence: " When we recollect what is already done, and upon what we are " aſſured remains to be done in this great Deſign, we no longer " conſider your new Society as an additional College to other Col- " leges, but as a Univerſity ſuper-added to a Univerſity; and, as " if Oxford, by ſuch an extraordinary Acceſſion to it, were really " founded anew; eſpecially, ſeeing your ſole Donation far exceeds " the Benefits collectively taken, of the ſeveral Founders in all

" preceeding Ages: And, ſeeing the Rules and Diſcipline upon " which the Members of your Society ought to form themſelves, are " moſt admirably calculated, for the Advancement of ſolid and aca- " demical Learning."

12. Theſe were the Sentiments, at that Time, of the Univerſity of Oxford, concerning the Cardinal, and his great Deſigns in founding his College. It may poſſibly be thought, there are ſome Expreſſions in this, and other Letters from that learned Body, which appear forced and hyperbolical, and as ſetting his Eminency off in too glaring a Light. I would only recommend it to be conſidered, that the Univerſity were the beſt Judges concerning the Reaſons of their paying ſo much Honour to the Cardinal; that his continual and great Benefactions to them were in themſelves highly commendable and praiſe-worthy; that the great Qualities which they extol in him were ſuch, as were acknowledged to him by the whole World; and that notwithſtanding they ſpeak of him, in very high Strains of Eloquence and Admiration, yet they confined themſelves to ſuch of his Talents or Actions, as the Circumſtances, they were in, and the Relation they had to him, rendered it proper for them to celebrate. But had they thought fit to deſcend to ſuch Parts of his Character or Conduct, wherein they were leſs concerned, certainly their Teſtimony ought, upon many Accounts, to have had more Weight, than of all the other Hiſtorians, who have tranſmitted any Memoirs of this great Man to us; eſpecially ſuch of them, whether more ancient or modern, as appear to have written either with a Byaſs in general, or from ſome particular Motives of Prejudice, againſt the Cardinal.

13. The College to be founded by the Cardinal, which by the firſt Bulls from the Pope, and Letters Patents from the King, authoriſing him to ſuppreſs the leſſer Monaſteries, was called The College of Secular Prieſts, was now by other Powers from the King concerning the Foundation of it, to aſſume another Name, That of Cardinal College; and for the future, the Secular Clergy in it, were to be called by the Name of the Dean and Canons Secular of the Cardinal of York, and under that Denomination to be incorporated into one Body, to ſubſiſt by a perpetual Succeſſion. Theſe Powers containing ſeveral Things relating to the Privileges granted by the King to that Society, to the Qualifications of thoſe who ſhould be admitted into it, and to certain Regulations, whereby the Dean and Canons were to proceed and govern themſelves, I have thought fit to tranſcribe Copies of them at large in the [t] Collections.

14. I ſhall conclude this Period with a ſummary Account of a Letter from [u] Andrew Gritt Duke of Venice to the Cardinal, who writes to his Eminency, That Secretary Pace, who had reſided there for ſome Time in Quality of the King's Orator, and had been eſpecially recommended by Letters from the Cardinal, was preparing to return to England; that nothing could have been more agreeable to him, than a Licenſe to that End from his Majeſty, he having been for ſome time in a very ill State of Health; and the Phyſicians who had attended him, all concurring in Opinion, nothing would contribute ſo much to reſtore him, as a Change of Air, eſpecially for that of his native Country. The Letter contains little more than a Character of this reverend Perſon, his excellent Qualities, and the earneſt Deſire and Sollicitude, which the Duke expreſſed, on that Account, for his Recovery, with an handſome Teſtimony, both concerning his Diligence and Fidelity in executing his Commiſſion; tho' ſoon after his Return from Italy, and by ſome Error, or ſuppoſed Error in his Conduct there, he was ſo unhappy as to fall under the Cardinal's great Diſpleaſure.

1. IN the Beginning of this Year the Treaty of [x] Madrid was concluded between the Emperor and French King: Upon which, tho' he was reſtored to his Liberty, upon hard, and very diſadvantagious Conditions; yet it is ſuppoſed, he had not obtained it, at leaſt ſo ſoon, but by the earneſt Interceſſion of the King of England. Among other Conditions of that Treaty, it was agreed, "That the ſame Day Francis was ſet at Liberty, his two Sons, the "Dauphin, and the Duke of Orleans, ſhould be delivered as Ho-"ſtages into the Emperor's Hands: After which, Francis was to "deliver up the Dukedom of Burgundy to the Emperor, and re- 1525. 1526.

" ſtore the Duke of Bourbon and all his Friends; to marry the " Emperor's Siſter, Leonora, and to indemnify his Imperial Ma- " jeſty againſt all Demands on the Part of the King of England." Theſe Articles being ratified in Form, and both Sides having taken an Oath to obſerve them, the French King, on the Eighteenth of March, was exchanged on the Borders of France, for his two Sons with much ceremonious Solemnity, and the niceſt Precautions on both Sides. Being at Liberty, it is ſaid, he immediately mounted a ſwift Horſe, and putting Spurs to him, rode with a Precipitation, and expreſſed himſelf after a Manner, rather diſcovering an exceſſive Tranſport of Joy, than becoming the Sedateneſs and Majeſty of ſo great a Prince: For he made Exclamation upon full Speed, I am a King, I am a King, deſigning hereby to declare, that he had now recovered the Freedom and Dignity belonging to a crowned Head; or, as others have inferred from the Event, That being now at Liberty, he ſhould not think himſelf bound by the Conditions of a Treaty, to which he only ſubmitted through Conſtraint.

2. So ſoon as the French King was returned into his Dominions, the King of England ſent [1] Sir Thomas Cheney to congratulate him on the Occaſion; but his principal Buſineſs was to diſſuade the Execution of the Treaty of Madrid, as being too advantagious to the Emperor, and, on the Part of France, againſt all Conſcience, Honour, Law, and Reaſon. But Cheney is directed to make this Repreſentation as of himſelf, not by command, and to add, that he maketh no Doubt, but the King of England will interpoſe his good Offices towards obtaining more honourable Conditions for the French King, with a Compoſition, for Delivery of the Hoſtages in the Emperor's Hands, on Payment of a reaſonable Sum of Money. And in the next Place, the Ambaſſadors are to move Francis to confirm and ratify the Treaty lately concluded between Louiſe the Regent his Mother, and the King their Maſter.

3. Francis, on his Part, did not omit the neceſſary Forms of Reſpect to be paid, upon his Deliverance, to the King of England; but having recovered his Liberty, ſent a ſpecial Embaſſy to notify it to our Court, and to acquaint the King with the ſeveral Articles of the Treaty, upon which it was obtained, acknowledgeing by a Letter, under his own Hand, to Cardinal Wolſey, that the King and his Eminency had been the chief Inſtruments of procuring his Enlargement, and at the firſt Audience which Cheney and Taylor had of his Majeſty, he made a verbal Acknowledgement to the ſame Effect.

4. The

4. The Complaiſance expreſſed on all Accounts by our Ambaſſadors, was not leſs amicable and obliging: The Cardinal on this Occaſion, diſcovered the uſual Addreſs, and Fineneſs of his Policy. But upon what Motives our Court proceeded in this Ambaſſy to France, and by what Meaſures our Ambaſſadors were to regulate themſelves, will beſt appear from the Cardinal's Inſtructions to Sir Thomas Cheney, wherein Dr. Taylor his Collegue was concluded. Sir Thomas is directed, firſt to mention the amicable Enterview that had been between the two Kings in the Year Fifteen hundred and twenty; to acquaint his Majeſty, that the intimate Friendſhip contracted then between them, had made ſo deep and laſting an Impreſſion upon the King of England, that no Accidents which have ſince intervened, could deſtroy or efface it: That the King often reflected, with much Pleaſure, on thoſe friendly Offices, which had at that Time paſſed between them, and could not be ſatisfied after he had received Advice of his Return into his Dominions, until he had ſent to ſee him; that the Confinement he had been under, had rendered a Viſit to him leſs practicable, than before. But that as he had for a long Time born a ſenſible Part in his Misfortunes, he now rejoiced with him on Occaſion of his Delivery; that it had been given in Charge to his Ambaſſadors, they ſhould make an Offer of any Service, in his Name, to the King of France, which might either be for his Advantage, his Pleaſure, or Honour. Sir Thomas is further directed not to declare himſelf to this Effect, as in a formal or elaborate Speech, but in the Way of a friendly and familiar Meſſage. After he had conformed to theſe general Inſtructions, he was to deſcend to the main Article of his Charge; and with all requiſite Caution and Prudence, to make Overtures towards a Breach of the late Treaty with the Emperor. And here, in the firſt Place, they were to uſe all proper Means of certain Information, concerning the preſent State of Affairs in France, and what were the true and ſpecifick Articles of the Peace; whether they were the very ſame, which had been commonly reported; and how they found the Court and People of France affected by them; what Difficulties had ariſen in reſpect to the Performance of them; and if any Expedients had been propoſed either in order to qualify, or infringe them? or, laſtly, whether they were really inclined and determined to execute, what had been ſtipulated? Then they were charged to inquire, what Appearances there were of faithful and ſincere Dealing between the two Powers; and whether they preſerved a Correſpondency free from mutual Jealouſies and Suſpicions? After they had well informed themſelves concerning theſe Particulars, they might eaſily, by way of free Conference, diſcover, how they ought to regulate themſelves, and proceed in the ſecond Article of their Charge: and that, herein, they ſhould deliver their Sentiments, rather as if they were occaſion-

ed by what the King might incidentally ſay, than if they had proceeded from a formed Intention; and might therefore better ſerve as introductory to the Matter before them: That as they found proper Opportunities, and the King might be in a favourable Diſpoſition, they ſhould, but with all the Secrecy and Reſervedneſs the Nature of the Thing would admit, touch upon ſuch Articles as related to an Alienation of the Rights, Honours, or Territories belonging to the Crown of France; the Renunciation of the King's Claim and Title to Naples; or to any Thing elſe, at which they might ſuppoſe Umbrage would not be taken. And here, with an Air of Concern and Surpriſe, as at ſomething, that was perfectly new to them, they are to obſerve, that theſe are very large and high Conditions, ſuch as had not been known before, and which in the Opinion of wiſe Men, either were not really agreed to, or not with an Intention of being executed. By expreſſing themſelves after this Manner, the French King and his Council would be inclined to open themſelves with more Freedom, and probably offer Reaſons, if that ſhould be deſigned, to juſtify the Breach of the Treaty. From whence the Embaſſadors might eaſily infer, whether they ought, at that Time to make any further Advances in the Matter, or to wait a more convenient Seaſon of proſecuting it.

They are to repreſent at large, what an Acceſſion of Honour, and exorbitant Power would accrue to the Emperor, if the Treaty ſhould in all the Parts of it be performed: That this would be the ready Means of rendering him the ſole Monarch of Chriſtendom, at leaſt of putting the greateſt Part of it into his Poſſeſſion: Still they are to expreſs themſelves, as if what they ſaid were rather occaſionally ſpoken, than with premeditated Deſign, 'till they diſcover an Inclination in the French King or his Council, either to evade, or divert their Propoſals. But if they find Reaſon to proceed, then they are to deſcend to a diſtinct Enumeration of the Dominions which the Emperor had, before the Treaty, in Europe, or of thoſe Additions which would ſtill be made to them, in Virtue of it; namely, the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, the Duchy of Milan, the Seigniory of Jeames, the County of Aſt, with other Poſſeſſions in Italy; which being united to the Empire, he might ſoon be enabled to eſtabliſh his Sovereignty throughout all Italy. And, as to Germany, thoſe Parts of it which were not already in his Poſſeſſion, might eaſily be reduced, he having on the lower Part, Artois, Flanders, Zealand, Holland, Brabant, Hainault, and other Provinces; from which lieth a direct Paſſage to the Duchy and Country of Burgoign, bordering upon Bourbonois, and ſo to Averne, which by Means of the Duke of Bourbon would ſoon be at the Emperor's Devotion. On the other Side, are the Realms of Caſtile, Arragon, Granat, Gallicia, Aſturia, and other Parts of Spain. So that the Kingdom of France would be bounded by his Imperial Majeſty in three Parts, and ſituate, in a Manner, in the very Center of his Dominions. In Caſe therefore he ſhould make War upon France, the French King would be obliged to defend his Dominions in three Parts, having the Sea on the Fourth. Upon which, they were to repreſent, that a Realm in ſuch a Situation, did not appear ſo much veſted with Sovereignty, as in a State of pepetual Servitude; whoſe King was only a Priſoner more at large, always in Danger of being oppreſſed; theſe Things were to be inſinuated after a Manner, not which might ſeem in the leaſt to derogate from the Rights or Honour of his Imperial Majeſty, but only which ſhould tend to inflame the French Court. But if after all, the French King ſhould be ſcrupulous, and not diſcover a determinate Reſolution to obſerve the Articles of the Treaty; or if his Council, appeared to remain in Suſpenſe about the Matter, then they are directly, and without any Diſguiſe, to demand, whether he is determined to perform all the Conditions of it; or whether in Conſcience, Honour, Law, or Reaſon, he thinketh himſelf thereunto bound? Upon their Anſwer to that Demand, Cheney is directed to ask Doctor Taylor's Opinion in the Caſe, according to ſuch Knowledge and Learning as he had in the Laws: To which Taylor ſhould make Anſwer, That a Promiſe or Contract made in Captivity was of little Effect. Upon this Propoſition, he was to explain himſelf at large, to the End thoſe who were preſent, might be induced to declare their Sentiments in the Caſe, with more Freedom.

There is no Doubt, but theſe Inſtructions were drawn up, by the Cardinal; tho', in the [o] Author, from whom I borrow them, they do not bear his Name; his Manner, and his Stile (but as to that, I have taken the Liberty of varying from my Copy, which is but it ſelf an Extract) plainly appear in them. His adviſing the French King, to violate a Treaty, which he had made in Captivity, but ſolemnly ſworn to obſerve, is what I will by no Means undertake to defend. But if the Cardinal herein conſulted the Maxims of humane Policy, more than of moral Equity, his Conduct, tho' indefenſible, is ſupported by too many Precedents; and yet the Embaſſadors being ſuppoſed to ſpeak the Senſe of the Engliſh Court in general, it will ſeem hard to caſt the whole Imputation upon the Miniſter, whoſe Province it was to draw up their Inſtructions.

5. However, there wanted not ſome ſpecious and colourable Reaſons, upon which Francis pretended a Diſcharge from the Obligation of his Oath. In a Memorial, which he cauſed to be publiſhed, and ſent to all chriſtian Princes; the Effect of it was, "That he had indeed unfortunately, in a juſt War, been taken Pri-

o Mr. Strype.

" ſoner; yet he proteſted, during his Confinement, that if the " Emperor required unjuſt and impoſſible Conditions, he would " not think himſelf obliged to perform them; but rather take the " Opportunity, when he ſhould be free, of revenging himſelf for " the Conſtraint put upon him. Yet, as he apprehended, by " Reaſon of his Abſence, new Troubles might ariſe in France, he " had endeavoured to procure his Liberty the beſt Way he could;
" and if any Thing were to be diſapproved, in the Methods he had " taken to that End, they ought rather to be charged upon the " Emperor, who had impoſed unreaſonable Conditions on him;
" than upon himſelf, who had found no other Means of Eſcaping;
" notwithſtanding he had, for the Satisfaction of his Honour, up-
" on his Return, demanded of his chief Nobility and Counſellors, " how he ſhould acquit himſelf of his Engagement, both according " to the Rules of Equity, and thoſe, whereby he was to govern him-
" ſelf in Regard to his royal Dignity; who, upon mature Delibe" ration anſwered, That a Contract which is unreaſonable, and " highly detrimental to the Contractor, when impoſed on him by " any Perſon, or Perſons, in whoſe Power he may be, ought to " be held as violent and involuntary, and conſequently as in itſelf
" of no Force to oblige: Beſides, when he was conſecrated at " Rheims, he took an Oath not to alienate any Eſtate of the Crown.
" From which Oath, as being previous to the Other, and withal
" more free and obligatory, he could not, by any Means, or ſubſe-
" quent Act, depart; eſpecially, ſeeing the Inhabitants of Burgundy,
" the Country demanded by the Emperor, would not conſent to " be transferred. Therefore if he was urged by the Emperor to do " any Thing contrary to theſe prior Obligations, he muſt conſi-
" der it ſtill as a more ſpecial Effect of divine Providence, that he " had recovered his Liberty: For the Emperor could not be igno" rant, that he was under the greateſt Reſtraints of Religion, not " to violate the Rights of his Crown. Neither could the Emperor
" believe, that the States of his Kingdom would ſuffer him to do
" it, contrary to the Obligation of their Oaths. However, that " none could think him falſe or perjured, ſo long as the Hoſta-
" ges, as an Equivalent for all that was ſtipulated, had been deli" vered into the Emperor's Hands. Neither was it ſufficient to
" ſay, that the Emperor, in demanding Burgundy, only inſiſted
" upon his own Right; ſince that Duchy was long ſince annexed
" to Normandy, and incorporated into the Dominions of France
" by King John, and conſequently governed by the ſame Laws, " among which the ſalick Law being principal, the Pretenſions of " the Emperor, as claiming from a Daughter, were excluded. More" over, this Affair had been communicated to ſome able Perſons
" out of the Kingdom, who underſtood well the Nature of ſuch

" Caſes,

" Caſes, and that he had received much Satisfaction from them.
" In Concluſion, as there remained nothing more in his Power to " be done, he had offered a condign Ranſome in Money, and " other good Conditions, which might both ſerve to redeem his " Children, and to teſtify the ſincere Deſire he had for recovering " his late married Wife, who was alſo detained from him. Which
" ſeveral Premiſſes being duly conſidered, he appealed to all chri-" ſtian Princes and States, as his Judges and Protectors, whether
" he deſerved Blame, or the Emperor who had impoſed on him
" ſuch unjuſt, and impracticable Demands."

6. Theſe were the Reaſons, whereby Francis endeavoured to elude the Tenor of his Oath, ſo far as it regarded the Performance of certain Conditions ſtipulated in the Treaty of Madrid: But as to the Promiſe he made upon Oath, of returning into the Hands of the Emperor, in Caſe they ſhould not be performed, he ſaith nothing, in his own Vindication. How far the Conſent of his States was requiſite to enable him to perform that Oath, depended upon the Conſtitution of his Kingdom, which no perſonal Act of his could give him any Right to alter or infringe. All Caſuiſts, I believe, will agree, that he could have no independent Power of ratifying a Contract, which he could not independently make, or conſiſtently with the [z] Oath he had taken upon his Acceſſion to the Crown. So that his Fault ſeemed rather to have conſiſted, in making a colluſive and inſidious Agreement, if he really thought he had no Power to make that Agreement, than in his ſubſequent Refuſal to execute it. The moſt ſtrong, ſacred, and inviolable Teſt, that can be impoſed upon the Conſciences of Men, is that of an Oath; but then no Oath can be preſumed to oblige to an unlawful Act, or contrary to an antecedent Obligation. 'Tis the Height of Impiety to ſuppoſe, that any Man, or any Number of Men, ſhould have a Power of binding themſelves in the Name of God, contrary to the Will of God, or which is the ſame Thing, to the Rules of moral Equity. It is a divine Maxim, but inconteſtably founded in the natural Reaſon of the Thing, that an Oath is for Confirmation, that is, either of ſuch Things, wherein we have an arbitrary Power of determining our Choice, and may either act or ſuſpend Action; or elſe concerning ſuch Things, to which we were under a prior Obligation, whether we had taken an Oath to obſerve them or not. Of this Nature are all poſitive Teſts of Obedience to the civil Magiſtrate under a legal Eſtabliſhment; they do not ſo much create a New, as confirm an antecedent Obligation; to which we had been bound from the Nature and Ends of civil z It was upon this Conſideration the Pope abſolved him from part of his Coronation Oath. A Copy of this Abſolution may be ſeen in the Collections N° 75. Book II.

Government, and the poſitive Laws of it, whether we had taken any ſolemn Teſt to that End or not. But to ſuppoſe any Oath could be formed in ſuch a Manner, as to oblige contrary either to the Law of God, or Man; is to ſuppoſe the greateſt Soleciſm in Morality imaginable, that Men may be obliged, whether by their own Act, or the Command of others, to an Impoſſibility. For in moral Life, every Thing is preſumed impoſſible to be done, that cannot lawfully be done. In Caſes indeed, where we are at Liberty to act as we pleaſe, without Injury to others, or any Breach of our Duty towards God, or Man; there, an Oath may be ſaid both to create, and, from the ſtronger Sanction it gives to any Promiſe, to confirm an Obligation. And ſo far as Francis the Firſt had an arbitrary, and independent Right of performing his Stipulations, he was without doubt, bound by all the Laws of Honour and Conſcience, and unleſs he would incur the Guilt of Perjury, to perform them. And of this, he was ſo ſenſible, that he entirely founded the Reaſons of his not performing them, but how juſtly I do not determine, either upon a Natural, or upon a moral Incapacity.

1. Inſtructions to Dr. Taylor by the Cardinal, concerning a League with France. 2. More concerning the Treaty of Madrid. 3. Two Projects of Peace drawn up by the Cardinal. 4. Propoſals for the Recovery of Francis his Sons, Hoſtages in the Emperor's Hands. 5. Concerning the Treaty of Marriage between the French King, and the Princeſs Mary.

1526. 1527. 1. WHILE our Embaſſadors were ſtill in France, other Inſtructions were drawn up by the Cardinal and ſent to Dr. Taylor, concerning a League to be made between England and France. He was directed to acquaint the French King, that the Kindneſs which he had been pleaſed to expreſs as well for the Cardinal, as for the King his Maſter, ſhould not fail of a juſt and ſuitable Return. That no Prince had his Honour or Intereſt more at Heart, than the King; who would pretermit nothing, that might be for the Advancement of them: And as a ſincere and ſtedfaſt Friend, united in the ſtricteſt Bonds of Amity, would concur with him in every Thing; and that the Cardinal, on his Part, would apply himſelf, with all Aſſiduity, to cultivate the Amity and good Correſpondence between them. Then he proceeds to acquaint the Embaſſadors with the Overtures, which himſelf had made at our Court,

Court, in Preſence of the French Embaſſadors, concerning a reciprocal Obligation to be entered into by the two Powers; and that what he propoſed, had been well received, as well by the Embaſſadors, as by the Commiſſioners appointed, on the Occaſion, by the King of England, on his own Part.

2. What he adds concerning the Treaty of Madrid, diſcovers more particularly the Grounds and Reaſons of that Advice, which he gave in the former Letter of Inſtructions to Cheney. He writes, "It is very hard, that Treaty ſhould be interpreted to oblige, contrary to the Tenour of former Treaties, and that it ſhould bind the French King, and yet leave the Emperor at large. That when the Emperor had Francis under Reſtraint, he would certainly make the beſt Conditions, that could be impoſed, for himſelf: That a Form of Articles had been drawn up, and was now lying before the French Embaſſadors, and the King of England's Commiſſioners, wherein there might appear ſome Things liable to Exception at the French Court; That Article, for Inſtance, whereby the King of France ſhould oblige himſelf, not to treat, or conclude any Thing with the Emperor, without the Knowledge and Conſent of King Henry: To obviate which Difficulty, the Cardinal acquaints Taylor he had contrived to make the Conditions of the Treaty in this Reſpect reciprocal, and that a ſpecial Article ſhould be inſerted to that End; in Virtue of which, the King of England ſhould bind himſelf by Promiſe, not to take any Advantage on that Account: That both the Chancellor of France and himſelf, had thought the Addition of this Clauſe, a proper and good Expedient. But it having been communicated to the French Court, that their Approbation or Diſlike of it might be known, no direct or ſpecifick Anſwer had been returned, but only Letters of Inſtruction and Commiſſion, authoriſing the French Ambaſſadors, to conclude a reciprocal Obligation according to the Tenour of them; but which was of an Import and Nature very different from what the Cardinal had propoſed. However, that upon Advice of their Charge as to this Article, he had laid the Matter of it before the King and Council, and effectually moved the King to concur in it. For to remove all Grounds of Scruple or Doubt, and to ſhew, how much his Majeſty honoured, and how deſirous he was to oblige the French King, he had agreed to the mutual Obligation, according to the very Inſtructions ſent to the French Ambaſſadors; and had receded from the Cardinal's Plan of it; which yet contained as large, and ample Terms, and equally beneficial to the French King, tho' expreſſed in other Words: That the King of England had articled to make War upon the Emperor, for the Recovery of the Hoſtages, his two Sons, in the Emperor's Hands:

"That

" That they ſhould be ranſomed for a reaſonable Sum of Money;
" and, that the Imperial Army in Italy ſhould be oppoſed by a " formidable Power."

3. With theſe Inſtructions the Cardinal ſent to Dr. Taylor two Projects, drawn up by himſelf, of a Peace, which he had communicated to the French Ambaſſador Seigneur de Vaulx; who deſired, he might have the Liberty of tranſmitting them to France, promiſing within eight Days to return an Anſwer concerning them to the Engliſh Commiſſioners: Although, in his own Judgement, which he would not diſſemble, theſe Forms were drawn up in as full and effectual a Manner, and as much for the Service and Intereſts of the French King, as that, which had been ſent from him to the French Ambaſſadors. Yet the Cardinal would conclude nothing 'till the French King was firſt advertiſed, and his Pleaſure ſhould be ſignified concerning the Matter; affirming expreſsly, that the Delays wherewith he might be charged, did not proceed from a Deſire of protracting the Time, or any ſiniſter Intention, but only from Fear of tranſgreſſing the Bounds of his Commiſſion. And that our Ambaſſadors might be more fully inſtructed in the Specialties of the Treaty, he had alſo ſent Copies of it to them; that Dr. Taylor ſhould affirm, what the French King and his Council would certainly find true, that the Forms (which ſoever of them they might approve) would be equally beneficial: That he ſhould make earneſt Inſtances for a ſpeedy Reſolution in the Caſe, and with all Haſte and Diligence notify them to our Court.

4. Concerning the Redemption of the young Princes, the Sons of France, our Ambaſſador is to ſhew, " That it was the King's " Intention to have ſent honourable Ambaſſies to the Emperor,
" with a Deſign of making Propoſals for the Requiſition of them,
" upon a pecuniary Ranſom, excluſive of Lands or Territories;
" as well as of demanding Satisfaction for the Moneys owing by
" the Emperor to the Crown of England: That to facilitate the " Delivery of the young Princes, it had been thought requiſite to " ſend Letters of Inſtruction to our Ambaſſador reſiding at the " Imperial Court, which one Osborn Ichingham, a Gentleman be" longing to the Ambaſſador, who had Knowledge of the Roads " and Language of the Country, had been appointed to carry,
" and was ordered in his Way, to call on Dr. Taylor at the Court " of France; and that the French King might be certainly infor" med, after what Manner, and with what Zeal, the King of " England had moved the Emperor to comply with his Deſires, he " had ſent by the ſame Hand, a Copy of his Letter to the Em" peror, wherein he ſometimes uſed ſoft and gentle Inſinuations,
" and leaſt thoſe ſhould not take Effect, he afterward expreſſed
" himſelf with more Warmth, and even after a menacing Manner:

" That

" That the Ambaſſador, in declaring this Part of his Charge, ſhould " on no Account vary or digreſs from the King's Meaning, and " that he ſhould ſubſtantially (a Word much uſed by the Cardinal) " conſider and digeſt the Contents of the King's Letter, hoping " the Emperor would be cautious how he ſhould make a Difficulty " of granting the King's Requeſts. Several Expreſſions in his " Letter, being well attended to, carrying in them a plain Inter- " mination, in Caſe of the Emperor's Refuſal, of the King's De- " ſign to enter into the Italick League: That he ſhould produce " this Letter before the King and Council, but not permit a Copy " of it to be taken: That if a Copy of it ſhould be deſired, he " ſhould excuſe his not granting it, from the Preſumption and " Inconveniency of the Thing, without the King's Licenſe; but " that they might, if they ſhould ſo deſire, read it, in his Pre- " ſence; which would be ſufficient to inform them how, and with " what Sincerity and Vigour the King was reſolved to proceed, in " this Affair. If they ſhould demand whether the King had writ- " ten concerning any other Matters, beſides thoſe ſpecified in the " Letter, he ſhould ſay his Majeſty had given other ſecret Charge " to his Ambaſſador with the Emperor, how to conduct himſelf " in every Reſpect, ſo as the End propoſed might be more effectu- " ally attained. The Particulars of which Charge were ſuch, that " neceſſary Reaſons of Prudence required, they ſhould not be di- " vulged abroad: That the King had Hopes of bringing the Em- " peror to Reaſon by gentle and amicable Overtures; but if thoſe " failed, he would have Recourſe to more ſevere and violent Me- " thods: That after he had made theſe Declarations, and found " the French King fully determined to accept one of the two Forms " of the League, he ſhould haſten Ichingham on his Way to the " Emperor. But if the French King ſhould ſay he would ſhortly " ſend Orders to his Ambaſſadors at our Court, to conclude the " [a] League, then he ſhould improve and forward that Motion, as " much as he could do conveniently; directing Ichingham to pro- " ceed on his Journey by ſlow Advances, until ſuch Time as it " might be preſumed the Meſſenger, with the French King's In- " ſtructions, had reached the Court of England. For it would not " be convenient, that he ſhould arrive in Spain, with the Letters " which he had in Charge from the King, 'till the reciprocal En- " gagement had been previouſly concluded. That he ſhould there- " fore uſe ſuch Precautions concerning Ichingham's Movements on " his Journey, that he might well think the Treaty confirmed ſome " Time before his Arrival in Spain: That my Lord of Bath, ha- " ving had his Audience of Leave from the King of Spain, and

" holding himſelf, on all Accounts, in Readineſs to depart, would " ſet forward, in two Days, towards the French Court." And becauſe ſome Circumſtances in the Treaty were apprehended prejudicial to the King, and other Things omitted which might concern him, in Caſe he ſhould hereafter enter into the League of Italy, it was therefore thought requiſite, Commiſſioners ſhould be ſent from the French King, the Pope, and the Venetians, to their reſpective Miniſters reſident in England; and the Cardinal had projected the Form of a Commiſſion, a Draught whereof he had ſent unto him, to be laid before the French King and his Council; ſo that if they ſhould demand of the King to enter into the League, the Conditions of it might be qualified in ſuch Reſpects as ſhould appear neceſſary. He was further to ſignify, the like Forms had been ſent to the Pope and Venetians, and that the whole Matter had been fully opened to the French Ambaſſadors here reſident: That a Copy of them had alſo been tranſmitted to the Biſhop of Bath, and if they ſtill inſiſted that the King ſhould come into the League, the Commiſſions, to the Effect beforementioned, ſhould be [c] expedited with all Speed. This Letter is ſubſcribed by the Cardinal, and dated from his Palace at Weſtminſter.

5. The Import of the League propoſed by him, was to oblige the Emperor to reſtore the Children of Francis on reaſonable Conditions; and the King rather choſe to enter into this League, than to join in the common Confederacy, many Articles whereof did not concern him. The King of France gladly embracing theſe Demands, requeſted, with the Picture of the Princeſs Mary, that the Treaty of Marriage with her, which had been propoſed, ſhould be forwarded; deſiring farther, that upon his Marriage, ſhe ſhould be immediately given into his Hands; but to this proviſional Requeſt the King of England did not think fit to agree, in Regard to the immature Age of his Daughter, who was now only in the eleventh Year of her Age. Three Treaties were at this Time concluded between the King's Commiſſioners; and the Biſhop of Tarbe, the Viſcount of Turenne, and Anthony Veſey Preſident of Paris, on the Part of France.

We have ſeen Cardinal Wolſey gradually advanced, from a Man, though not in an indigent Condition, 'till he arrived at Length, to the higheſt Poſts of Truſt, of Honour, and Advantage, in the publick Adminiſtration. We have ſeen what Influence he had in ſeveral foreign Courts, greater perhaps, than ever happened, or ever will happen, to any Miniſter, in any Court: And which is ſtill more ſurpriſing, we have ſeen him, for the Space of twelve Years, (not to carry the Obſervation beyond the Time when he was made Archbiſhop of York) preſiding at the Helm of Government, regulating Treaties of Peace and Commerce, the Operations of War, and all publick Affairs relating both to the civil and the eccleſiaſtical State, after a Manner, which renders it difficult to determine, whether he was really ſuperior in the Character of Wiſdom, of Addreſs, or Sedulity. All this Time he was ſo happy, as to continue in the good Graces of a Prince, not the moſt celebrated in Hiſtory, for a ſteddy and conſtant Affection towards thoſe, whom he had ſometime diſtinguiſhed as the peculiar Objects of his Favour. But the Sequel of this Work will ſhew, that Cardinal Wolſey, with all his great Talents, was not wholly exempt from the adverſe Caſualties common to Men in very high and invidious Stations: Not that we are to enter directly upon the Hiſtory of his Fall, from this Period; for the chief Direction of Affairs was ſtill committed to him; and he even received freſh Augmentations both of Power and Preferment: But becauſe an Incident happened, about this Time, which gave the firſt Occaſion of his declining, tho' not immediately, in Favour at Court, I ſhall open my third and laſt Book, wherewith his Action and Life conclude, with ſome Account concerning it.

Memoirs concerning Him, from the firſt Occaſion of his declining in Favour at Court, to the Time of his Death.

CHAP. I.

1. Scruples raiſed concerning the King's Marriage by the Biſhop of Tarbe. 2. The Original of the Cardinal's Fall. 3. The Spaniards alſo object againſt the Legitimacy of the King's Marriage. 4. Whether both Courts, were not more influenced by political than ſtrictly by religious Conſiderations? 5. The papal Power at that Time, in Reſpect to matrimonial Diſpenſations. 6, 7, 8, 9. Several Inſtances of it. 10. The Pope's diſpenſing Power, in ſuch Caſes, then generally acknowledged. 11. Amplification of the Cardinal's Powers towards the Suppreſſion of Monaſteries, with a Grant to the Dean and Chapter of his College. 12, 13, 14, 15. Several other Grants in Favour to it.

1. IN the Progreſs of the Treaty between the King's Commiſſioners and thoſe of France, concerning the Eſpouſals of the Princeſs Mary to the [a] French King, or the Duke of Orleans, for the Alternative was not yet determined; the Biſhop of Tarbe raiſed ſeveral Scruples, in Reſpect to her Legitimacy; which firſt opened the Way to a moſt ſurpriſing Change 1527.

in the King's Conduct and Councils, and, in particular, to the Cardinal's Diſgrace.

2. From this Incident, therefore, I ſhall calculate the Time of his tending towards a Declenſion in Favour at Court: For if what Cavendiſh reports be true, That the King's Affection for Mrs. Ann Bolein, which had been long concealed, began now to break-out, and that the Cardinal endeavoured to divert it with repeated Perſuaſions upon his Knees; it is not improbable, this very Inſtance of his Zeal, as a faithful Servant, might yet render him leſs acceptable to his Maſter. Men, eſpecially, thoſe of more violent Tempers, are not commonly apt to take in good Part, from any Perſon, ſuch Advice, however reaſonable and well-intended, which oppoſeth their prevailing Inclination. There may be alſo juſt Grounds of Surpriſe from this Lady's ſubſequent [b] Behaviour to the Cardinal, at Graſton in Northamptonſhire, that the Proſpect of her ſharing in the Glories of a Throne with one of the greateſt Monarchs in the World, would not render her much diſpoſed to favour a Perſon, who, as ſhe might be informed, had declared himſelf an Enemy to her Exaltation. Neither would the Cardinal's ſecret Enemies at Court neglect the Opportunity of engaging a Lady, who was now known to be the Object of the King's Love, in their Deſigns againſt him, ſo ſoon as they ſhould once underſtand, ſhe was offended with him, and upon what Occaſion. Biſhop Burnet himſelf inſinuates, as if there was Cauſe to ſuſpect, the Demur of the Biſhop of Tarbe, might be previouſly concerted between the French and the Engliſh Court, that the King might have better Colour, from ſo open and ſo publick an Exception againſt his Marriage, to ſollicit a Divorce: And if he was already, according to Cavendiſh, paſſionately in Love with Ann Bolein, as there was no Reaſon to queſtion upon whom his Choice would fall, it might be eaſily known, where the greateſt Danger was to be apprehended from any Oppoſition, that ſhould be made to it.

3. Yet the Legitimacy of the Princeſs Mary was not only queſtioned by the Miniſters of France, probably by expreſs Direction of that Court out of Regard to the Nicety and Importance of the Affair in general, as well as for the Reaſon above ſpecified; but the like Exceptions were alſo made to her legitimate Birth by the Emperor and the Council of Spain; upon which they grounded the Reaſons for diſſolving the Contract of Marriage between Her and his Imperial Majeſty, alledging the unlawful Marriage of King Henry to the Relict of his Brother Arthur, of whom this Princeſs his Daughter was born. Upon this it was queſtioned, not only whether her own Birth, but whether That of the Children which might deſcend from her, would be legitimate? Concerning which Scruples, neceſſary Reaſons of Prudence required all Occaſions of Diſpute ſhould be prevented.

4. Though it is highly probable, the Exceptions which were made by each Court, conſidering the Principles of them both, and their Attachment to the papal See and Authority, at that Time, did not proceed ſo much from any religious Conflicts of Mind about the Matter, as from Conſiderations purely political; in the Spaniard, That the Emperor might be at Liberty to marry a Daughter of Portugal, where his Intereſt, and perhaps [c] his Affection might then more incline him; and in the French Miniſter, That the King of England, in Regard to this Difficulty, might condeſcend to more favourable Conditions in Behalf of his Maſter.

5. Nothing is more evident, than that Diſpenſations for Marriages, within the prohibited Degrees, were frequently granted by the Popes: And that this was one of the Means which contributed much to repleniſh the papal Exchequer. The very Bull which Henry the Eighth ſollicited from Clement the Seventh, in Order to diſſolve his Marriage with Queen Catherine, doth ſuppoſe ſuch a diſpenſing Power in the Pope. For it allows the "King to [d] contract Mar-"riage with any other Woman, though nearly allied unto him, "either in a ſecond or more remote Degree of Conſanguinity, or "in the firſt Degree of Affinity, or joined to him by lawful or "unlawful Commerce, provided ſhe be not the Relict of his Bro-"ther." The Exception even as to her, is not made on Account of any moral abſolute Incapacity of their marrying together, but upon a Suggeſtion, that a Licenſe to that End had not been canonically obtained or confirmed with full and ſufficient Powers.

6. The Emperor himſelf afterwards procured a Marriage between Philip his Son and Mary then Queen of England, by Virtue of a Diſpenſation from Pope Julius the Third, becauſe they were allied in the third Degree, and Charles himſelf had contracted to marry her, when he was under Age. After [e] her Death, King Philip deſirous to preſerve his Intereſt in England, ſeriouſly treated concerning a Marriage with Queen Elizabeth, Siſter to his late Wife, with Promiſe that he would obtain a ſpecial Diſpenſation from the Pope, which the French King ſecretly oppoſed; but as the Queen gave [f] Philip a Repulſe, Francis might have ſaved himſelf that Trouble.

Queen

7. By Virtue of theſe Diſpenſations it is, that the Houſe of [g] Auſtria, for certain Reaſons of State, marry among themſelves, and ſo incorporate into one Family, as Members of the ſame Body; ſo that Philip the Second of Spain, might have called the Archduke Albert, both Brother, Couſin, Nephew, and Son. For either by Blood, or Affinity, he ſtood in one or other of theſe Relations to him; being Uncle to himſelf, Couſin-german to his Father, Husband to his Siſter, and Father to his Wife. And it ſo happened, that by Reaſon of the canonical Reſtraints and Limitations which were made by ſeveral Popes, few of the Princes, or of their Family in Europe, could then intermarry without firſt obtaining a Diſpenſation from one or more Canons; which gave an Opportunity to thoſe Popes, who would traffick with the Powers committed to them, to make their own Terms with the Parties concerned.

8. A certain Archbiſhop of Germany, Legate there from the See of Rome, was once mightily perplexed about a Diſpenſation of this Kind: He ſent to his Holineſs Pope Zachary, to deſire he might be directed by his Judgement and Deciſion in the following Caſe. [b] A German had produced and pleaded a Diſpenſation from Pope Gregory his Predeceſſor, to marry a Woman, that had been firſt married to his Uncle, and afterwards to his Couſin, from whom ſhe had been divorced; ſhe was moreover his Kinſwoman in the third Degree, and had been a Nun. But it doth not appear what Anſwer the Roman Oracle returned to a Caſe, wherein there was ſuch a Complication of canonical Impediments.

9. To theſe Inſtances of the Pope's diſpenſing Power in matrimonial Affairs, I ſhall add one referred to before, concerning Charles the Eighth King of France, who had married the Daughter of Maximilian King of the Romans; but afterwards that he might obtain the Duchy of Britain, ſollicited to marry Ann the Heir thereof, tho' ſhe was already contracted, nay had been openly married to Maximilian, by his Proctor in the Church. By this Diſpenſation, a f Notwithſtanding this Repulſe, if Credit may be given to certain Hiſtorians, King Philip was the Occaſion, as herſelf acknowledged, of preſerving the Life of this Queen. For when it was propoſed, under the Reign of her Siſter, and during her Confinement in the Tower, that ſhe ſhould be put to Death, from a Suſpicion, which the Event proved not to be ill-grounded, that upon her ſucceeding to the Crown, ſhe would extirpate the Romiſh Religion, King Philip oppoſed the Execution of ſo cruel and unjuſt a Deſign; but upon what Motive it is not eaſy to reſolve with Certainty. Some have thought what he had principally in View, was to prevent the Acceſſion of Mary Stuart Queen of Scotland, then married to Francis the Second, to the Crown of England, becauſe the Union of ſo many Kingdoms under one Power, would render them an Over-balance for the Houſe of Auſtria, and quite fruſtrate the vaſt Deſign, it was then forming, of univerſal Empire. And indeed from the Time of Henry the Eighth, nothing has more contributed to preſerve and ſupport the proteſtant Religion, than the mutual and ſucceſſive Jealouſies between the two popiſh Powers of the Empire and France.

double Injury and Diſgrace was done to Maximilian; his Wife, for ſo he reputed her, both in Honour and Equity, was not only taken from him; but he had the Mortification to ſee his Daughter, who had been ſeveral Years acknowledged Queen of France, diveſted of her Dignity, and ſent home again to be ſupported at his Expence. Philip de Comines, who mentions the Proceedings relating to this Affair, more at large, adds, there were great Diſputes and Arguments, at that Time, on both Sides, whether ſuch Diſpenſations were agreeable to the Laws of Holy Church or not? And obſerves, many Calamities proceeded from the Marriage of thoſe Ladies; and that the Perſons deſcended from them both, were very unhappy.

10. But however the Pope's Power in ſuch Caſes was controverted by Men of Letters, or Speculation; and who, perhaps, might on ſome Account, directly or indirectly be intereſted in them; yet that thoſe who profeſſed Obedience to his Holineſs, did in general acknowledge ſuch a Power in him, and ſubmit to it, when exerciſed by him, can bear no Diſpute. And there was ſtill leſs Reaſon to ſuppoſe the King of England ſhould diſpute it, who above all the Princes in the World had profeſſed the moſt profound Regard for the papal Authority, and had been indeed the moſt ſtrenuous Aſſertor of it. It is probable therefore, that other Reaſons might occaſion the Scruples, which the King made concerning his Marriage, beſides thoſe which directly affected his Conſcience; and that it was not the Biſhop of Tarbe, but a young and ſhining Beauty in the Queen's Service, which had ſtruck his Majeſty with a Light, to which his Eyes had not been before opened. But the Grounds of this Conjecture will be more fully conſidered in another Place. I ſhall proceed at preſent to obſerve what further Advances were made at this Time towards perfecting the Cardinal's great Deſign, in the Structure of his College.

11. And here I find a large Amplification of his [i] Powers to that End, by a Grant from the King in this Year, bearing Date the firſt Day of May, wherein are recited ſeveral former Patents, by which he was authorized to convert the religious Houſes ſpecified therein, with all their Rights and Revenues, to the Uſe of his College. And on the fifth Day of the ſame Month following, there is a large [k] Patent granted concerning the Conſtitution, the ſpecial Powers and Privileges of that Society, and, eſpecially, thoſe appropriated to the Dean and Canons, concerning which, thoſe who would be more particularly informed may conſult the Collections. To this Grant the Cardinal himſelf, with the Archbiſhop

12. On the Tenth of the ſame Month, there is a Grant to the Dean and Canons of the [l] Cardinal's College of the Rectories or Churches of Guige, Mountney, Blakamore, Staneſgate, Steple, Tiptree, Tolſhunte, Horkeſley, Wormingford or Wythermonford, Wyck, Alnethley, Rhynam, and Elmonden in the County of Eſſex; Marybone in the County of Middleſex; Hormed in Herefordſhire; and of Chettiſham, Swillon, Falkenham, Snape, Freſton, Bedyngefelde, and Demarſton in the County of Suffolk; ſo that he or they might appropriate, conſolidate, annex, or unite them, with all their Rights and Emoluments perpetually to their own Uſes; provided, that ſeverally in ſuch Churches or Rectories, there ſhould be a perpetual Endowment for one or more Vicars; and that a competent Sum of Money, according to a Proviſion made by Statute in that Behalf, ſhould be annually diſtributed among the poor Pariſhoners by their reſpective Ordinaries.

13. By another [m] Patent under the Privy-Seal of the ſame Date, and after the ſame pompous Enumeration of the Cardinal's Titles, as in the Former, is granted to him, his Heirs and Aſſigns, the Rectories or Churches of Newington, Morden, Tewdeley, Brencheſley, Leigh, Yalding, Depingbury, and Weſt Greenwich or Deptford in the County of Kent; and one Moiety of the Church of Godſtone in the County of Surrey, with Begham, Hayleſham, and Helingle in Suſſex, that they may in like Manner and under the ſame Conditions appropriate, conſolidate, annex, or unite them, for the Uſe and Benefit of the ſaid Society.

14. In another ſeparate [n] Patent of the ſame Date, are granted the Churches of Hedyngton, Marſton, Sydeley, Churchehill, Fritzwell, Ellesfelde, and Saunforde in Oxfordſhire; Worneall, Ocle, Bryll, and Borſtall in the County of Bucks.

15. By [o] another Great Preſton and Little Preſton, Welton, Weſt Haddon, Start Norton, Colde, Aſhebye, Daventre, and Thorpe Mourwel in Northamptonſhire; Foxton, Scalforde, Denton, Baſſet, and Rakedale in the County of Leiceſter; Bysbrok in Rutlandſhire; Ravenſton, Chicheley, Newport Pagnel, Bradwell, Aſtwood, Willney and Ellesberg in Buckinghamſhire; Aſton Bromwich in Warwickſhire; Weſt Bromwich in the County of Stafford; and Chaddelworth and Kingstown in Berkſhire.

1. THE Impropriations mentioned in the preceeding Chapter, tho' affording very conſiderable Returns to the Cardinal's College, were yet, comparatively, inſignificant, when we conſider the Revenues ariſing to them from the ſuppreſſed Monaſteries; the Names of which I might have recited out of the ſeveral Patents authoriſing the Suppreſſion of them: But moſt of them are ſpecified in a Copy, to which I refer the Reader, out of the Cardinal's Bundles in the [p] Rolls, from an Inquiſition of Cromwell, afterwards Earl of Eſſex, tho' not made 'till the Year following, wherein their ſeveral Orders are mentioned, and ſuch of them, as were of royal Foundation, diſtinctly marked, with the reſpective Counties wherein they were ſituated.

2. But it is obſervable, that ſeveral Abbeys, which were ſaid to be of royal Foundation, were not yet really founded by the Kings or Queens of England, but only were complimented with that honourable Title, on Account of the Confirmation, which the Kings of England from Time to Time, had formerly granted of their ſeveral Charters. There is a remarkable Inſtance of this in a Patent of King Henry the Seventh, wherein Taviſtock is ſaid to be founded by the King's Progenitors: Whereas [q] Ordulph Earl of Devonſhire, was known to be the Founder of it before the Conqueſt.

3. There is a Letter from the King to the Legate, concerning an Election of the Prioreſs of Wilton, that may very properly be inſerted here, as relating both to the preſent Subject, and expreſſing a Tenderneſs of Conſcience in the King, on Account of the religious Houſes ſuppreſſed for building the Cardinal's College. His Majeſty, on that Occaſion, is pleaſed to take upon him the Office of a Monitor; and giveth ſuch wholſome Advice as might have become a truly religious Prince; but to which he afterwards ſhewed very little Regard himſelf, when he deſtroyed, beſides many other Foundations, according to [r] Mr. Cambden, Six hundred forty five Monaſteries; appropriating the Revenues of them not to other pious or publick Uſes; not to the Advancement either of Religion or Learning, except, comparatively ſpeaking, in a few inconſiderable Inſtances; but for the Benefit of private Perſons. The Prioreſs of Wilton was in Right of that Title, a Baroneſs; there were but three more Abbeys in the Kingdom, of that Conſtitution, [ſ] Shaftsbury, Barkin, and St. Mary's in Wincheſter. It ſeems, the Cardinal had elected [t] a Perſon to that Dignity, concerning whom the King had ſome way previouſly expreſſed his Diſlike; tho' the Cardinal was ignorant, or pretended Ignorance of his Majeſty's Sentiments, on the Occaſion.

4. In Anſwer to the King's Admonitions in the Letter referred to, of which the ſofteſt Thing that can be ſaid is, they are expreſſed with a friendly Severity, the Cardinal excuſed himſelf to his Majeſty, in ſo humble, ſubmiſſive, and inſinuating a Manner, that his Majeſty was thereby induced to write him another Letter on the Occaſion with his own Hand, which I ſhall here recite from [u] Lord Herbert.

" As touching the Matter of Wilton — Seeing it is in no other " Strain than you write of, and you being alſo ſuddenly (with the " falling ſick of your Servants) afraid and troubled, I marvail " not that it overſlipped you, as it did. But it is no great Mat- " ter, ſtanding the Caſe as it doth. For it is yet in my Hand, as " I perceive by your Letter. And your Default was not ſo great, " ſeeing the Election was but conditional. Wherefore, my Lord, " ſeeing the Humbleneſs of your Submiſſion, and though the Caſe " were much more heinous, I can be content for to remit it; be- " ing right glad that according to mine Intent, my Monitions " and Warnings have been benignly and lovingly accepted on your " Behalf, promiſing you, that the very Affection I bear you, cau- " ſed me thus to do. As touching the Help of religious Houſes " to the Building of your College; I would it were more, ſo it " were lawfully; for my Intent is none but that it ſhould appear " ſo to all the World, and the Occaſion of all their mumbling " might be ſecluded and put away. For ſurely there is great Mur- " muring of it, throughout all the Realm, both good and bad.

5. The King, in this Letter, doth again intimate his Scruples, concerning the Lawfulneſs of applying the Revenues of religious Houſes towards building the Cardinal's College. It is difficult to account, how he came, in the Sequel of his Reign, to act after ſuch a Manner; as if the Alienation of Things, ſolemnly devoted to pious and publick Uſes, might lawfully be diverted out of their proper Channel, and turned to the Uſe of mere private Perſons; or Sacrilege were only a nominal Appellation, and there were not really any Grounds for it in the Nature or Reaſon of the Thing. There is one Way indeed of accounting for this remarkable Change in the King's Sentiments, tho' I do not preſume to ſay there were no other Motives to it; and that is from the different Light, wherein we ſee Things, when our Paſſions are moved, or we are immediately intereſted in them, from the Light, wherein they appear to us, when we conſider them as pure naked Objects of Speculation, whereby we do not apprehend our ſelves perſonally affected. There are few Men, who will examine themſelves according to this Obſervation, but may find, that there are other Rules of Judging, from which they have formed, or perhaps frequently changed their Principles, than thoſe, which ariſe from the proper Grounds of Certainty, the Perſpicuity, and Evidence of the Things themſelves that have been the Subject of their Enquiry.

6. But not to add any Thing here by Way of Queſtion, on either Side, how far the Demolition of Monaſteries was lawful on a religious Account? it may ſtill be diſputed, whethey they ought to have been demoliſhed, in Regard to certain Conſiderations merely Political.

7. It is ſaid, in the firſt Place, That the Crown was frequently ſupplied with Gifts, Penſions, and other conſiderable Services from them: That they contributed very much to the Relief of the Poor, and thereby to eaſe the People in general of that heavy Load, under which they have ſince ſuffered, by the neceſſary Proviſions made for their Support, tho' the Rates to that End were never ſo exceſſive, or more the Subject of Complaint, than at preſent[x].

8. Neither was the Benefit of theſe pious Foundations inconſiderable, with Reſpect to Perſons of Quality, or, on other Accounts, of ſuperior Condition. The Fathers and Brothers to young Ladies of high Birth, were ſometimes, to preſerve the Honour and Dignity of the Family, or for a convenient Augmentation to the Fortune of other Children, to diſpoſe of them in this Way. Nevil Earl of Warwick, famous for a numerous and happy Iſſue, had three Daughters who entered into the moſtaſtick Order; two of which, Elizabeth and Jane, were only Nuns, but the other Siſter Margery, was Abbeſs of Barkin. Perſons of ſmall Eſtates and large Families ſtill found, in greater Number, the Advantage of providing for their Daughters in the ſame Method. And to ſuch, whoſe Quality, or other Circumſtances of Life, may render it leſs proper or eaſy, to put their Daughters in a common Way of Trade, the ſame Opportunity in a well-regulated Society, would, no doubt, appear very deſirable. And perhaps, I beg Leave to repeat it again, no publick Foundations could now be laid upon a more pious and truly charitable Plan. The Benefit, which the People had of inſtructing their Children in general, in theſe little Seminaries of Learning, was by no means to be contemned, there being few, if any Convents, where ſome of the Members were not employed in teaching the Children about thoſe Parts, without any Charge to their Parents.

9. Before the two famous Univerſities of this Kingdom, or other Univerſities in any Kingdom of Europe were founded, or ſupplied with any Number of Colleges, Libraries, Schools, Statutes, or Orders for Education of learned Men, in that Manner as they have been inſtituted for ſome Hundred Years paſt, it was the Piety and x By the Diſſolution of religious Houſes, the Crown hath already loſt a Hundred thouſand Pounds Yearly, in Tenths, Firſt-Fruits, and Penſions, or rather much more, the Statute being made before the Diſſolution, whereby the King was to have a conſiderable annual Return out of their Eſtate: Their temporal Lands being ſo great, that the Abbey of St. Alban's might have yielded every Year Ten thouſand Pounds, Glaſtenbury, St. Edmundsbury, St. Auguſtin's, Rumſey, and the Reſt of the great Monaſteries, each of them ſeveral thouſand Pounds. But if we were to proportion the Loſs of the Crown according to the Value of the improved Rents, it might modeſtly be computed a Million. Mr. Stephens his Manuſcripts.

Practice

Practice of our Forefathers to build Colleges, Houſes of Religion, and Hoſpitals, and ſuch like Seminaries, in ſeveral Parts of the Kingdom; for that they did it with a ſincere Intention to advance Religion, Learning, Hoſpitality, and Charity, we cannot without being highly uncharitable our ſelves, make the leaſt Diſpute. What is here obſerved, has been acknowledged by ſome of the moſt inveterate Adverſaries to Popery, who write, "[x] That they were Houſes and "Societies of better Uſe and Purpoſe than they are commonly taken "to be: That they were Schools of Learning, Colleges of Learners and Teachers, when there were no Univerſities, or ſuch as "were very meanly furniſhed, that they were the principal Places "for learned Men and Divines; and not only for Prayers, and private Devotion: That when firſt founded, they were Convents "of honeſt and ſtudious Men, and Schools of a more learned Education, where elder Perſons inſtructed Youth in the Knowledge "of moral and divine Subjects, where, before the Art of Printing "was diſcovered, they wrote Books, exerciſed Diſputations, and "in ſuch a Manner inſtilled the Principles of Religion and Learning into their Inferiors, that fit and able Men, Biſhops and ſubordinate Paſtors might be choſen out of them for the Government "and common Edification of the Church."

10. In purſuance of ſo good and excellent a Deſign, our Forefathers had appropriated to them a fine College at Rome, well endowed with Lands in Italy, and ſupplyed annually with a liberal Penſion from England. This College was intended as a Place of Education for Scholars of ſuperior Diſtinction, and who by the Progreſs they ſhould make in the more uſeful and polite Parts of Learning, might, upon their Return to England, be duly qualified for any Service, whether in Church or State. It was originally founded by King Ina, and enlarged by ſucceeding Princes, and for Maintenance of it, the [y] Peter Pence was annually granted to be paid by every Family in the Kingdom. This Contribution called Romeſcot, as Tributary-Money for that Uſe to Rome, was conſtantly paid upon the Anniverſary of the Feaſt of St. Peter. Malmsbury reports, That Ina King of the Weſt-Saxons, when he had firſt formed a Deſign of inſtituting this Subſidy towards the Support of the College, laying aſide his royal Dignity, travelled in a common and promiſcuous Company of poor Pilgrims to Rome, that he might acquaint the Pope with it. But ſome, ſaith Sir Henry Spelman, aſcribe the Original of Romeſcot with more probability to [z] Offa King of the Mer-

z Matthew of Weſtminſter agrees with Malmsbury, in aſcribing the Original of Romeſcot to Ina: And adds, That the Engliſh School at Rome, was founded for the Uſe of the Royal Family and Clergy of that Nation; that being there inſtructed in the Catholick Faith and Doctrine, no heterodox Opinions might be introduced, among the People, contrary to the Principles of Catholick Unity. In Ann. 727. p. 137.

cians. The principal Reaſon of this Conjecture is, That the Abbey of St. Alban's, founded by Offa, upon his diſcovering where the Body of the Engliſh Proto-Martyr St. Alban had been interred (not, as the Hiſtories of thoſe Times report, without a ſupernatural Direction) was exempted with all the County of Hertfordſhire, from the Payment of this Duty, at the [a] Inſtance of Offa, when he went in Perſon to ſollicit from Pope Adrian the Canonization of that Martyr, and to acquaint him with his Intention of erecting a Monaſtery in Honour to his Memory.

11. But there appears to be no Difficulty in accounting for the ſeeming Difference among our other Hiſtorians, nor of reconciling Mathew of Weſtminſter to himſelf, as to this Enquiry. Ina might originally found the College, and as King of the Weſt-Saxons, endow it with the Revenue called Peter-Pence or Romeſcot within his own Dominions; and Offa might afterwards, ſubject to the ſame Payment, thoſe Parts of the Nation which belonged to himſelf as King of the Mercians; and in that Reſpect, ſo far as his Right or Authority extended, be the original Founder of ſuch Payment. For it is plain, from the later Account which this Author gives at large, of King Offa's Pilgrimage, and his principal Deſign in it, that there was [b] before that Time an Engliſh School, and in ſome good Eſteem and Condition, at Rome.

12. So that Peter-Pence was not, as Polydore and Baronius, and the Generality of our own Hiſtorians, as well as of Papiſts in general, have affirmed, a Duty paid to the Pope, as Succeſſor of St. Peter; neither was it a Rent or Tribute, whereby the papal Supremacy was, on any Account, acknowledged; but a Revenue, originally appropriated by the two Kings beforementioned, and afterward confirmed by their Succeſſors, towards the Support of the Engliſh School or College at that Time in Rome, which at this Day ſubſiſts, tho' in a much meaner Condition, not only by the Subſtraction of Peter-Pence, but through the Depredation made upon it by Pope Sixtus the Fifth, who took away one Half of the Lands belonging to it, upon a Pretence of making a Bridge over to England from the Continent, when the Spaniſh Invaſion was attempted in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth. A Time, wherein thoſe who would write the Hiſtory of Sacrilege, may eaſily be ſupplied with numerous and ſufficient Materials.

13. When the Univerſities came to be enlarged, better endowed, and regulated for the publick Advancement of Learning, there was leſs Occaſion for theſe more private Seminaries of Education.

a Mat. Weſt. In Ann. 794. p. 147, 148, 149.

b Tandem, divina Regem inſpirante Gratia, in Scholam Anglorum, quæ tunc Rome floruit, ingreſſus, dedit ibi ad ſuſtentationem Gentis, Regni ſui illuc venientis, ſingulos Argenteos de Familiis ſingulis, omnibus in poſterum Diebus, &c. 148.

But

But 'till that Time moſt of the Learning in this and other Nations, was derived to them through theſe Channels. And even after the Univerſities were in a more flouriſhing Condition, they might have been ſubſervient, as Schools of Education preparatory to them, or been otherwiſe employed to ſeveral Ends more beneficial to the State, than by a Diſſolution of them in the Manner taken to that End, by Henry the Eighth.

14. It is not eaſy therefore to apprehend what induced our learned Author of the Hiſtory of the Reformation, to inveigh with ſo much Acrimony againſt the Monks in former Times, as if they were not only the moſt idle and illiterate Part of Mankind, but profeſſed Enemies to Learning. But the Force of theſe ſatyrical Reflections, which he has made on the Occaſion, will appear to better Advantage, in his own Words. "The Monks, ſaith he, being ſettled, "gave themſelves up to Idleneſs and Pleaſure, having in their Hands "the chief Encouragements of Learning, and yet doing nothing "towards it, but on the contrary decrying it and diſparageing it "all they could."

15. It might have been expected, that the ſevere Treatment which the ſeveral monaſtick Orders met with in the Reign of Henry the Eighth, would, inſtead of drawing ſo heavy a Cenſure upon them, for which, as it is generally expreſſed, there were no juſt Grounds, rather have moved ſome Degree of Compaſſion in the Breaſt of an Author, ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed for Temper, Moderation, and an extenſive Charity towards Perſons of a different Perſuaſion. If Concluſions may be drawn to the Diſadvantage of any Society of Men upon Earth, without Diſtinction of Perſons, from the Defects or Irregularities of certain Members, the World muſt neceſſarily be led into very falſe and uncharitable Judgements concerning them. That there were idle and ignorant Monks, is a Truth which cannot be diſputed: But it is contrary to Truth to ſay, that the whole Body of Monks were idle and ignorant; or even to ſay of them in general, that inſtead of doing any Thing towards the Advancement of Learning, they decried and diſparaged it, all they could. It will be difficult to find many of them in Hiſtory, if any ſuch can be found, upon whom this Imputation, in the Terms it is expreſſed, can be juſtly charged.

16. I do not ſpeak this out of any Favour to the Order of Monks, now extinct in England, and to which I have no Manner of Relation, except that wherein I ſtand bound by the common Ties of Humanity, to injured and abuſed Perſons, in Prejudice of Truth and Juſtice, whatever their particular Opinions or Forms of Worſhip may be. But there was ſomething in the Uſage, which the poor Monks met with, upon the Suppreſſion of the Monaſteries in England, which renders their Caſe really deplorable, tho' at this this Diſtance of Time, to all compaſſionate Minds; they were turned out of their Habitations, where they had all the Opportunities of a holy and devout Life; of exerciſing a Conſcience void of Offence towards God and towards Man, of doing much Good, and avoiding many dangerous Temptations; in ſhort, where, in all Reſpects, they had a very comfortable Livelihood, and many of them lived in great Splendor. Out of all theſe happy Circumſtances, wherein Providence had placed them, they were turned to ſeek their Bread and Support, in a Way, for which their Manner of Life devoted to the Service of God, had rendered them altogether diſqualified; to ſay nothing of the Infirmities of Age, or natural Incapacities which many of them might be under for Labour or the ordinary Affairs of ſecular Life.

17. But the Cenſure beforementioned, cannot be better refuted, than in the Words of the learned Author, under the borrowed Name of Anthony Harmer, which I ſhall take the Liberty of reciting.

" This is a very hard Cenſure to paſs upon a whole Order of " Men, who were once very honourable, but always ſerviceable in " the Church. On the contrary, after they were thus ſettled, name- " ly, by Dunſtan Ethelwald and Oſwald, in the Reign of Edgar, they " ſet themſelves with great Induſtry to reſtore Learning, and root " out that univerſal Ignorance which had then prevailed in England, " and effectually performed it. Inſomuch, that whereas before " that Time, ſcarce any ſecular Prieſt in England, could read or " write a Latin Epiſtle, within few Years, as Elfrick a learned Diſci- " ple of Ethelwald boaſteth, the Face of Things was ſo changed by " the Endeavours of Dunſtan, and his Maſter Ethelwald, that Lear- " ning was generally reſtored and began to flouriſh. At that Time, " and long after, the Monaſteries were the Schools and Nurſeries " of almoſt the whole Clergy, as well Secular as Regular. For " the Univerſities, if there were any, were then very mean Socie- " ties, and the whole Learning of the Nation was then in a Man- " ner confined to their Cloyſters. As the Univerſities encreaſed, " they gradually decreaſed. Yet ſtill retained and cultivated Lear- " ning, 'till about the Middle of the thirteenth Age, when the " mendicant Orders aroſe, who by their Hypocriſy, juggling Tricks, " and extraordinary Induſtry, ran down both them and the ſecular " Clergy. Within Two hundred Years the Mendicants became " contemptible, and then both the Monks and Seculars began to " recover their antient Credit; and, long before the Reformation, " had made great Progeſs in the Reſtoration of Learning. They " had all along brought up their Novices in Learning; every " great Monaſtery having for that Purpoſe, a peculiar College in " one of the Univerſities, and even to the Time of their Diſſolu-

" tion,

" tion, they continued to bring up great Numbers of Children at " School, at their own Charge, for the Service of the Church; " and immediately before the Reformation, many of the great Mo- " naſteries were ſo many Nurſeries of Learning, and the Superiors " of them very learned themſelves, and Promoters of Learning in " others. Such were Kidderminſter Abbot of Winchelcomb, Goldwell " Prior of Canterbury, Voch Abbot of Saint Auſtin's, Wells Prior of " Ely, Holbeuch Prior of Worceſter, Iſlip Abbot of Weſtminſter, Webb " Prior of Coventry, and many others. I do not hereby apologize " for the Lazineſs of Monks in the middle Ages, but maintain, " that both in the Time of King Edgar, and ſome Time after, and " immediately before the Reformation, they deſerved a contrary " Character to what the Hiſtorian giveth of them, and that even " in the worſt Times, they were far from being Enemies and Op- " poſers of Learning, as he would have it believed."

18. Fuller obſerves, the Monks were formerly our ſole Hiſtorians; and it is certain, many valuable Remains of Engliſh Antiquities, would have periſhed, had they not been tranſmitted down to us by their Hands. Neither is his Obſervation to be wholly contemned, " That ſomething in this Kind too, was " owing to the Art and Induſtry of the Nuns, who preſerved " and embelliſhed many curious and hiſtorical Paſſages with " Needles."

19. As to what was pretended for the Suppreſſion of Monaſteries, becauſe the reſpective Members of them were become in general very diſſolute and corrupt; The Grounds of this Charge may probably be very true; but if it had been univerſally true, or in every particular Inſtance, it would only prove, Monaſteries ought to have been reformed, or converted to more pious, at leaſt to ſome good and publick Uſes. But do then the Sins and Impieties of Men, juſtly expoſe them to a Forfeiture of their legal and ſtated Rights, except in Caſes, where the Law has antecedently directed ſuch Forfeiture, and ſpecified the Crimes for which it ought to be incurred? Or will any Perſon who is now in Poſſeſſion of ſome Part of the Eſtates formerly belonging to the ſuppreſſed Monaſteries, ſubmit to have their Title to them tried by this Rule, and to have them alienated from themſelves or their Family for ever, in Caſe they have been guilty, or may be found guilty of any criminal or even ſcandalous Diſorders? I am of Opinion, in this Caſe, there is not one ſuch Proprietor who would think it reaſonable that perſonal Frailties ſhould ſubject him to the Loſs of thoſe legal Rights, wherein both himſelf, and his Poſterity, are intereſted.

20. I am ſenſible, the Legiſlature acting in a full and regular Capacity, has a Power over the Eſtate of every Subject, which ought not to be reſiſted; and that the Acts of it flowing from ſuch a Plenitude of Power, may, in Fact, diſſeize Men of their moſt undoubted Rights. But though the ſupreme Powers muſt be ſubmitted to, and not oppoſed; tho' there is no Law to which they are accountable for their Adminiſtration, they ought not, however, to enact any Laws contrary to the Rules of moral Juſtice and Equity. Now the Rules of moral Juſtice and Equity, if I miſtake not, will be found to require, That no Man ought to be diſpoſſeſſed of what he peaceable enjoys, in Caſe he is guilty of no legal Offence, upon which he was antecedently incapable of having ſuch Right continued any longer to him. So that the Queſtion is not, whether we are to conſider Lands or other Things ſolemnly appropriated to religious Uſes, as held by a divine Right, and upon that Account inalienable; but, if there are not certain human Rights, whether by Gift, Deſcent, Purchaſe, or Cuſtom, which Men may lawfully hold and retain, and of which they cannot in Juſtice be diſpoſſeſſed, however the ſupreme Legiſlature acting according to the Extent of its Power, may actually transfer their Right or Property in them. Now the Monaſteries, it is ſaid, were held by as firm, regular, and legal a Tenure, as any Men, or Corporation of Men, now hold, or can hold the Eſtates or Privileges, wherewith they are inveſted.

21. If we conſider the Suppreſſion of Monaſteries, in Reſpect to the Charge of Sacrilege, ſeveral Arguments have been employed to ſhew, that the Alienation of Lands and Revenues appropriated to them, to other Uſes, than thoſe for which they were originally granted, eſpecially to profane Uſes, was certainly ſacrilegious. And here they do not fail, among other Inſtances of the like Profanation in Scripture, to urge the Examples of Achan, of Ananias and Sapphira, and of Belſhazzar, whoſe ſeveral Crimes, for which they were viſibly puniſhed by a ſevere Judgement of God, were known to conſiſt in their applying ſuch Things to common Uſes, which had been conſecrated or deſigned for the ſpecial Service of Religion.

22. To theſe Examples of Scripture, which are ſo many ſtanding Menaces of God's Wrath againſt ſacrilegious Perſons, and repreſent him continually, as having a Rod of Vengeance in his Hand ready for the Execution of it; they add, the Opinion of ſeveral learned Men, concerning the great Impiety and Danger of Sacrilege; of Men, who cannot be ſuſpected of being influenced in their Judgement upon the Caſe, by any partial Conſiderations, reſpecting the Intereſts of the Romiſh Church.

23. Among theſe they particularly inſtance in John Calvin, who hearing of the Violences that were uſed in England in ſuppreſſing religious Houſes, and other Alienations of Things ſacred, could not forbear to paſs a Cenſure upon them, Part of which the Reſpect owing owing to a Crowned-head, will not permit me to mention. Perhaps I may incur Cenſure my ſelf, for adding from him the Part following. That "King Henry was worſe, than all the Miniſters "of the Roman Antichriſt; for thoſe, who live under the ſervile "Obedience paid to him, at leaſt retain ſome exterior Form of "Piety. But he is a Perſon, whom no Rules of common De-"cency have been able to reſtrain; and it is viſible to the whole "World, that he hath had no Fear of God before his Eyes.

24. The Words of Luther againſt him, upon the ſame Article, are no leſs virulent, but too unbecoming the Dignity of his Perſon to be recited.

25. Cambden of a Temper and Judgement much more ſedate than either of theſe Reformers, hath made the following pious Obſervation. "When the Churches and Colleges were pulled down, "their Revenues were ſold and made away, and thoſe Goods and "Riches, which the chriſtian Piety of the Engliſh Nation had con-"ſecrated unto God, ſince they firſt profeſſed Chriſtianity, were "in a Moment, as it were, diſperſed, and, to the Diſpleaſure of "no Man be it ſpoken, profaned." But it is unneceſſary to multiply either Authorities, or Citations upon this Head.

CHAP. III.

1. Reaſons for alienating Things, under certain Reſtrictions, that have been formerly appropriated to pious Uſes. 2. The Legality of ſuch Alienations on a civil Account. 3. In a qualified Senſe. 4, 5. Anſwer to the ſcriptural Examples of Sacrilege. 6. Alienations even of Church-Lands, in certain Caſes, agreeable to the Canons. 7, 8. The Aſſurance of Abbey-Lands farther cited. 9, 10, 11. Certain occaſional Remarks on that Treatiſe. 12. With a tranſient Character of the Author. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18. Whether he hath not been ill uſed by Biſhop Burnet, and concerning the State of the Queſtion between that learned Prelate and Him. 19, 20, 21, 22. Concerning the Progreſs of Lutheraniſm in Oxford; John Clerk, Delabar, Nicholas Udale, and ſeveral others.

1. HAVING obſerved ſome of the moſt popular Arguments, that have been urged againſt the Lawfulneſs of alienating Things appropriated to pious Uſes, the Laws whereby I propoſed to regulate my ſelf, as an Hiſtorian of Opinions, do now oblige me to produce ſuch Arguments, as have been commonly offered on the other Side, to ſhew, that Things, which have been appropriated to ſuch Uſes, may yet, on certain Conſiderations, be lawfully alienated; and that ſuch Conſiderations actually took Place, when the Monaſteries, for to thoſe I principally confine my ſelf at preſent, were ſuppreſſed and alienated by King Henry the Eighth.

2. Firſt, for the Legality of ſuch Alienations in a civil Senſe, it is ſaid, That the Legiſlature, in Reſpect to the Rights of particular Perſons, may have, and ought to have a diſcretionary Power, where ſuch Rights, tho' legally granted and confirmed, are yet found highly prejudicial to the Safety or Intereſts of the State in general: For theſe being the proper and eſſential Ends of Government, the Rights of private Perſons are, in the plain Reaſon of the Thing, to be ſubmitted to them. For otherwiſe, what in Honour to the divine Wiſdom and Goodneſs ought not to be ſuppoſed, God hath inſtituted civil Government for an End, which would be really impracticable. It is upon this Principle, that the ſupreme Power in any Nation, for neceſſary Ends of Government, may reſtrain, coerce, or aſſeſs particular Perſons, in ſuch Manner, as is moſt proper for attaining ſuch Ends; That even innocent Perſons, the Heirs of Eſtates, which otherwiſe ought to deſcend to them by Right of Inheritance, are yet legally and juſtly deprived of them, by Occaſion of certain capital Offences in their Parents. Becauſe it has been thought neceſſary to the common Good, which is to be preferred before all private Conſiderations whatever, that ſuch exemplary Acts of Severity ſhould be inflicted on them, for the greater Terrour of thoſe who may hereafter be inclined or excited to offend in the ſame Kind. Now after a Reformation had been introduced in England, it was thought not ſo much convenient, as abſolutely neceſſary for the Good of the State, that a Sett of Men, who profeſſed Obedience to a foreign Power, and were the chief and avowed Inſtruments of promoting his Deſigns, ſhould be deprived of the Means, by which they were capacitated to promote them.

3. I have given this Argument all the Force, which it appears to me capable of receiving: But however juſt it may appear, not only towards ſhewing the Lawfulneſs, but the Neceſſity of ſuppreſſing the monaſtick Orders, and diſſeizing Perſons of their legal Rights who had acknowledged a foreign Authority, or are ſuppoſed to have acknowledged a foreign Authority even in Things of a civil Nature; yet the Queſtion is ſtill left undetermined, whether ſuch of them, as would afterwards diſclaim that Authority, might not have been put under ſome good Regulation in the ſame Way of Life? Or, if that had not been practicable, whether the Revenues ariſing from the Diſſolution of their reſpective Societies, ought not to have been applied to ſome other pious and publick Uſes.

4. As to the Examples beforementioned from the holy Scriptures, they ſeverally anſwer, to the following Effect.

1*ſt*, That

1*ſt*, That as to the Sin of Achan, who ſurreptitiouſly took the Silver and Gold conſecrated to the Service of God, we are to diſtinguiſh between ſuch Things, as God has appointed for his Service, by a particular Deſignation, and to a particular End, and ſuch Things, which have only in general ſome pious and more diſtant Relation to it. That, in this Way of Arguing, as we ought to do every Thing to the Glory of God, there would ſcarce be any Thing, upon which a Kind of divine and indelible Character might not appear to be impreſſed, which would occaſion endleſs Trouble and Diſquiet to Men of ſcrupulous or tender Conſciences: The Notion, therefore, of Sacrilege, is to be circumſcribed within certain ſtated and reaſonable Bounds; and the moſt, which can be inferred from this Inſtance of Achan is, that Things immediately conſecrated to the Service of God, as the Utenſils for Inſtance, to be employed in his ſolemn Worſhip, are not, without ſome Degree of Profanation, to be put to ordinary or ſeparate Uſes: That this is a Principle, concerning which, the common Rules of Piety have directed Mankind in all Ages: That Nebuchadonozor himſelf was ſenſibly ſtruck with the Light and Power of it, when having taken the ſacred Veſſels of the Temple at Jeruſalem, he did not put them into his Treaſury, or convert them to any private Uſes, but placed them at Babylon, in the Houſe of his Gods: That, as to the Caſe of Belſhazzar, who to celebrate a publick Feaſt which he had made with much Pomp, drank Wine in them, his Action was confeſſedly of the ſame profane and ſacrilegious Kind, and is not pretended by any, either to be innocent or excuſeable.

5. They grant the Sacrilege of Ananias and Sapphira conſiſted in detaining Part of a certain Poſſeſſion, they had ſold, for their proper Uſe, which ought to have been put in the common Treaſury of the Church; "That Diſtribution might be made unto every "Man, according as he had need." So that this was a complicated Act, not only of Impiety, but of Injuſtice, and a notorious Breach of Charity; and in this latter Reſpect, had an immediate Reference to Things or Poſſeſſions more directly appropriated to charitable Uſes. But then, they ſay, this only proves the Crime of Sacrilege, in alienating ſuch Things as have a particular and ſolemn Deſignation to ſome common Ends of Charity; but does not limit the ſupreme Authority, in whoſe Hands ſoever it is lodged, from directing them, tho' in another Way, to Ends really more beneficial.

6. Nothing is more evident from eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory, than that Alienations of Church-Lands have not only been practiſed, but allowed by the Canons. "In the ſixth Canon of the eighth Coun-"cil, in the Time of Pope Adrian the [b] Second, it is declared, That

" the holy Veſſels may be alienated for the Redemption of Cap-
" tives. The like Saint Gregory declares to Demetrius and Valerianus
" Clerks of the Church of Firman, concerning ten Pounds, given " by Fabius the Biſhop, of Money belonging to the Church, for " the Redemption of them, and their Father Paſſivus the Biſhop;
" of which they were afraid Repayment might be demanded; but
" St. Gregory acquitted them of it." And, as it may be pretended theſe Inſtances are only concerning Charities, the Author of the Aſſurance of Abbey Lands proceeds to ſhew, that according to the Canon-Law, Alienations in all Caſes appear to be valid, where the Conſent of the Clerks of the Church and the Grant of the Biſhop is previouſly obtained: Otherwiſe, as he argueth, Pope Urban had not decreed, that Alienations of all Perſons, by Intruſion, or even of thoſe canonically elected by the Name of Biſhop or Abbot, who ought to have been conſecrated according to the Uſe of his Church, ſhould be void, if made without the common Conſent of the Clerks of the Church. For there would have been no Need of that Exception, if ſuch Alienation had not been good and valid with the Conſent of the ſaid Clerks.

7. This, continueth he, is ſtill more clear in the third Council of Orleans, where the Canon expreſſeth, that " it ſhall not be law" ful to Abbots, Presbyters, or other Miniſters, to alienate eccle-
" ſiaſtical Goods or Things in holy Miniſtry, or to pawn them
" without the Permiſſion or Subſcription of the Biſhop." By which it is implied, that the Biſhop, or Abbot, in Concurrence with thoſe over whom they preſided, might, in the Senſe of this Council, alienate ſacred Veſſels or other Goods belonging to the Church.

8. In the Council of Carthage it is decreed, that " the Presby-
" ters ſhall ſell nothing belonging to the Church, the Biſhop not " being privy to it: Nor the Biſhops, not conſulting their Canons,
" without Neceſſity." From whence it is inferred, that in the Judgement of this Council, Neceſſity may even legitimate an unjuſt or uncanonical Alienation: And then this Author proceeds to obſerve, what he had principally in his Intention, when he wrote that Book, That no greater Neceſſity could happen, at any Time, than that which occaſioned Pope Julius the Third, to grant the Powers to Cardinal Pool for Aſſuring the Abbey Lands to the Poſſeſſors, how unjuſtly ſoever they had obtained them.

9. I would farther obſerve, That in the Treatiſe and Chapter to which I refer, the Author has taken care to obviate two popular Objections againſt what he has here advanced. The Firſt is from a Decree of Pope Symmachus, which he ſaith, the Author of a Letter to Dr. Burnet principally inſiſteth upon: A Letter, which was written to ſhew the Danger, which Perſons poſſeſſed of Abbey-Lands, might be under of having them reſumed, in Caſe Popery ſhould come to be re-eſtabliſhed in England. " A Sy-

" A Synod was held at Rome, under that Pope, called Palmaris, " becauſe celebrated in the Porch of the Church of St. Peter called " Palmaria. In this Synod, at the Requeſt of the Council, Sym- " machus cauſed to be read by Hormiſda the Deacon, the Conſtitu- " tion of Odoacer, King of the Heruli, wherein, under Pain of " Excommunication, he had forbid any to alienate the Rights of " the Church. This was exploded by the Synod, becauſe it was " the Law of a Lay-perſon concerning Church-affairs, eſpecially " becauſe no Lay-men could appoint the Penalty of Excommuni- " cation. So Symmachus produceth his own Conſtitution, as it is " in the Decretal, only the laſt Clauſe is very different in Binnius " from what it is in the Decretal." For in the Council it is thus We Will the Law of this Conſtitution only to be obſerved in the apoſtolick See, in all the Churches of the Provinces, according to the Conſideration of Souls, the Uſe and Cuſtom being obſerved, which the Rectors ſhould ſee to be agreeable in all the Churches throughout their reſpective Provinces. But in the Decretal it is thus, This Canon is not only to be obſerved in the apoſtolick Church, but is ſaid to be convenient to be obſerved in all the Churches throughout the reſpective Provinces. " From " which it appears, that this was the Pope's peculiar Conſtitution " made before, and approved by the Synod, and extended only to " the Suburbian Dioceſs of Rome, and was not univerſally obli- " ging; which, as well as other Reaſons, might induce a late lear- " ned [c] Author to aſſert, that there was a Time when the Pope " entered not into the Cognizance of the Goods of the Churches, " which depended not on his Dioceſs.

10. The other Difficulty propoſed, is from a Reſolution of Pope Zozimus, that the Authority of the Roman See cannot change the Statutes of the Fathers, or eſtabliſh any Thing contrary to them; to which this Author replieth from Thomas of Aquin, in Anſwer to the Queſtion, Whether the Pope may change the Statutes of holy Fathers in general Councils, or diſpenſe with them? That thoſe Things which the Statutes of the Fathers have decreed to be of Divine Right, cannot be changed. But thoſe Things which the holy Fathers have determined of poſitive Right, are left under the Diſpoſition of the Pope, that he may change them or diſpenſe with them, according to the Opportunities of Times or Countries; and that the Words of the Decrees may be altered, and yet the Intention of the Decrees be obſerved, which is the Benefit of the Church; as it happens in all poſitive Laws, where ſubſequent Statutes derogate from the former.

11. The Author having laid down this general Groundwork, proceedeth to an Induction of Particulars; and ſheweth, from Variety of Inſtances, that Revenues have from Time, to Time, been alienated both from Churches, and religious Houſes, on which they were conferred by their firſt Dedication. But the Reader may conſult the Facts at large in the Treatiſe, and judge for himſelf concerning the Conſequences drawn from them.

12. I ſhall only take the Liberty to obſerve, That the Learning and ingenuous Manner of Writing in this Author, ſeemed to require, that he ſhould have been treated with more Reſpect, than is ſhewed to him, in the Preface to the third Volume of our learned Hiſtorian. Among other Inſtances of a ſeeming Neglect to him, he is there called in direct Terms, a mercenary Writer. This Character, which affects him in ſo tender a Point, as that of his Reputation, ought to have been well proved: And yet there is no Proof, not ſo much as any Conjecture or Appearance of Proof, brought to ſupport it. Did his Writings recommend him to any Poſt in the State, or the firſt Dignities in the Church? To which, I preſume, it will not be diſputed, had he qualified himſelf in other Reſpects, he had, at leaſt, a competent Share of Learning and good Senſe. Such a Method as this, of confuting an Adverſary, is very ſhort and eaſy; but perſonal Reflections, eſpecially when nothing is ſaid to juſtify them, are not the moſt proper to enlighten a Reader, who deſires only to know on which Side the Force of the Argument lieth. Or doth our learned Hiſtorian ſuppoſe, that it is the Right only of the dignified Clergy, to give themſelves magiſterial Airs, and that Laymen or Clergymen of inferior Degree, either are not qualified to write, or if they do write, ought to be treated with Contempt and Reproach?

13. But the Reaſon of this Uſage, which the Author of the Aſſurance of Abbey-Lands has received from a learned Prelate, may perhaps more eaſily be accounted for, when we enquire, whether his Lordſhip had really the Advantage of him in Point of ſtrict Argument; of which, becauſe it relates to a Caſe that the Nature of my Work has obliged me more particularly to conſider, I ſhall, with all poſſible Brevity, endeavour to give a true State.

14. Doctor Burnet, afterwards Biſhop of Salisbury, in his Hiſtory of the Reformation, had endeavoured to prove, that no Subject of England, Proteſtant or Papiſt, had any perfect or firm Security, that the Abbey-Lands in his Poſſeſſion, would not, or rather ought not, upon the Principles of the Church of Rome, to be reſumed, in Caſe Popery ſhould again become the eſtabliſhed Religion of theſe Nations. Dr. Nathaniel Johnſton apprehending it might be of ſome Service to remove the Suſpicions of certain Perſons on this Head, and ſuch Terrors from the Apprehenſions of Popery, as he thought really groundleſs, in the Reign of King James the Second, endeavoured to maintain againſt Dr. Burnet, and the Author of a Letter to him, that Papiſts, or others poſſeſſed of Abbey-Land, had not only as firm and good Security for them as the Laws of the Land could require, but ſuch, as was agreeable to the Laws of the Church; and had as full and ample Confirmation given to them, as the papal Authority could give. And whereas the Biſhop had inſinuated, that the Confirmation of the Poſſeſſors, by Virtue of Cardinal Pole's Legatine Powers, was deluſory and ſuſpicious, Doctor Johnſton endeavours to prove the contrary, by appealing to thoſe Powers, and to the Uſe and Application, which, in Conſequence was made of them: And ſheweth, after all, that a full, ſatisfactory, and effectual Confirmation was given to them by Authority of Pope Paul the Fourth.

15. To this the Biſhop anſwers, That Dr. Johnſton was a mercenary Writer. Yet, to do his Lordſhip Juſtice, he has endeavoured to ſhew, that what this Author has written, is of no Conſequence to eſtabliſh the Security of Abbey-Lands here in England, to the preſent Poſſeſſors.

16. His Lordſhip's principal, and indeed only Argument which carrieth in it the Appearance of Probability, is taken from a Bull of Pope Pius of the Twelfth of July 1555. In this Bull, which bears Date two Years after that which conſtituted Pole Legate in England, the Pope condemns all Alienations of Church-Lands, and even all Leaſes for one or more Lives, or for a longer Term than three Years. This he extends to all Cathedrals, Monaſteries, and Hoſpitals, and annuls all Leaſes reſpecting Caſtles, Towns, and Cities, even though made by Popes themſelves, or their Authority and Order; and by the Preſidents, Prelates, or Rectors of Churches, Monaſteries, or Hoſpitals, of what Rank or Degree ſoever, Cardinals by Name being expreſſed; from whence his Lordſhip draws a Concluſion, as if it would not admit any Diſpute, that whatever Pope Pius the Fifth did, or upon his own Principles could do, towards aſſuring the Abbey-Lands to the preſent Poſſeſſors, was all Colluſion, without any Manner of Force or Significancy.

17. And indeed, had this learned Prelate only recited that Part of the Bull, the Reader might have been apt to make the ſame Inference, that his Lordſhip has done; but the Limitation in the Words of the Bull immediately following, in his Lordſhip's Extract, plainly ſuppoſeth, that Pope neither did, nor could hereby intend, to reſtrain himſelf or the Church from the Exerciſe of that extraordinary Power, by which Alienations of Abbey or Church-Lands had been formerly made. The Limitation is, that nothing ſhould be done [d] to the Prejudice of the Church, the Solemnity by Law required not being obſerved; or where Alienations had been already made by an incompetent Authority; evidently implying, that what the Pope did, or directed by his Legate to be done, according to the Solemnity of Law, ſhould notwithſtanding, to all Intents and Purpoſes, have the Force of Law; and that Alienations might ſtill be made by a competent Authority; in Reſpect to which, no one will preſume that Pius the Fifth had a Deſign to limit, or exclude his own Authority.

18. How Biſhop Burnet came to cite this Bull, for the Invalidity of the Grant by Pius the Fifth, in Order to aſſure Abbey-Lands to the Poſſeſſors of them at that Time, which in the natural Conſtruction of the Words, doth ſuppoſe the Pope had, and claimed a Power to that End, is a Queſtion for which I readily profeſs my ſelf altogether incapable of accounting.

19. I ſhall conclude my hiſtorical Obſervations, relating to this Year, with an Account of the Progreſs, which now appeared to be made more openly towards a Change of Religion in England; eſpecially in the Univerſity of Oxford, where the Lutheran Doctrines began to be propagated by ſome Perſons with much Zeal; but no where more than in the Cardinal's College, and particularly by the Members, who had been received into it from Cambridge. Among theſe Members, John Clark had a Right of claiming the Precedence. He was one of the younger Canons of that Society, at whoſe private Lectures, and publick Diſputations, ſeveral Perſons, and ſome of conſiderable ſtanding in the Univerſity, were frequently obſerved to attend; and who was ſo much and generally eſteemed for his great Piety and uncommon Erudition, that they uſed ordinarily to conſult him in doubtful Caſes, and to that End frequently either repaired to him in Perſon, or if that could not be conviently done, communicated their Doubts to him in Writing.

20. In the Reſolution of which Doubts, as in his other Endeavours towards a Reformation, one Dr. Delabar, a Member of Alban-hall was very aſſiſtant. This Clark had been incorporated Maſter of Arts in the Univerſity, but was ſoon after expelled from the ſaid College for profeſſing and teaching the Lutheran Doctrines. To which, thoſe, who adhered, began about this Time to have private Conferences; wherein, after they had firſt recommended themſelves and their Deſigns to God, by Prayer, they conſulted about the moſt proper Methods of promoting theſe Doctrines, taking an Occaſion, at proper Intervals, of explicating one or other of them, out of Luthor's own Books.

21. Among theſe aſſociated one Nicholas Udale and John Dyott, with others of Corpus Chriſti College, of which, when the Founder received Advice, he was ſenſibly grieved, leaſt he ſhould be thought to have erected a Seminary of heretical Opinions: For that great Prelate, who had applied himſelf more to the Advancement of Piety and Learning in general, than to particular Controverſies in Religion; who had embraced, from a general Principle of Obedience, the common and received Doctrines; and, who was now at an Age, wherein Men are not only leſs ſubject to change their Opinions, but more timorous in Caſe of any extraordinary Innovations, did, it muſt be acknowledged, conſtantly, and with a ſteddy Reſolution to the laſt, adhere to the Religion then eſtabliſhed both by the eccleſiaſtical, and civil Authority.

22. With the Followers of Luther beforementioned, ſeveral Perſons, from other Societies, concurred in promoting the ſame Deſign; ſome of which were afterwards brought to recant, but others choſe rather to be expelled from the Society, and even to be impriſoned for Life, and at laſt to be committed, with their Books, to the Flames, there to diſclaim the Doctrines which they had profeſſed. But all the violent Methods, which were taken to ſuppreſs them, proved ineffectual, as well as the publick Sermons or Diſputations, whereby the moſt learned of thoſe, who ſtill profeſſed Obedience to the papal See, endeavoured to convert and reſtore them.

CHAP. IV.

1. A Tendency on our Part towards a Breach with the Emperor. 2. One Reaſon of it from the Captivity and ill Uſage of the Pope. 3. And from a political Conſideration. 4. Abſtract of a Letter from the Pope to the King. 5. The King adviſed to ſend the Cardinal to France, and upon what Motives, according to Cavendiſh. 6. His magnificent Appearance, and the Manner of his Entertainment in France. 7. The chief Articles of his Charge. 8. His Aſſiduity and Devotion. 9. An Honour done to him by the Lady Regent. 10. His Negotiations highly approved by the King. 11. Yet the Time of the Nuptials which had been treated and agreed upon, not ſpecified. 12. A Letter of the Biſhop of Bath to the Cardinal, concerning an Expedient propoſed by the Queen Regent. 13, 14. Articles of the ſecond and third Treaty. 15. On what Account the Cardinal charged. 16. An Acceſſion of ſtill greater Power to him. 17. What Uſe he made of it.

1. THERE being no Proſpect of a ſpeedy Accommodation between the Emperor and King of France, by Means of the Expedients, which were offered on the Part of our Court; King Henry was reſolved, in Caſe his Imperial Majeſty ſhould ſtill perſiſt in rejecting his juſt and reaſonable Demands, to have Recourſe to the laſt Argument of ſovereign Princes; and effectually to act ac- 1527.

cording to his late Engagements, after ſuch a Manner againſt the Emperor, in Concert with France, that he ſhould be compelled by Force of Arms to more equitable Conditions of Peace.

2. The King of England was more inſtigated to this Reſolution, both from a Motive of Zeal for the papal See, and by the Cardinal's Perſuaſions, on Account of the ill, and as it was then thought, moſt impious Uſage, which his Holineſs the Pope had received from the Outrage and Inſults of the Imperial Forces in Italy. Charles Duke of Bourbon having demanded Paſſage for his Troops into the Kingdom of Naples, through the Pope's Territories, with Proviſion for them, yet for which they ſhould be obliged to make Payment, his Holineſs refuſed to comply. Upon which, that General marched directly to the Walls of Rome, and laid Siege to it, with an Army of Thirty thouſand Men, but attempting to ſcale the Walls, was himſelf killed with a Muſquet-ſhot. The Soldiers inſtead of being intimidated by the Death of their General, became more enraged; tho' it is not improbable, the Proſpect of Plunder might contribute much to that impetuous Fury, wherewith they aſſaulted and took the Town by Storm: After which, for ſix or ſeven Days, wherein they committed all Manner of Rapine and Cruelty, killing about Five thouſand Perſons, there was none to oppoſe or reſtrain them. The Pope, with thirteen of the Cardinals, when they firſt entered the Town, had retired to the Caſtle of St. Angelo, to which they immediately laid ſuch cloſe Siege, that his Holineſs with thoſe Cardinals, were forced to a Capitulation, whereby, in two Months Time, they were obliged to pay to the Army Four hundred thouſand Ducats; and for Security of Payment, or 'till Part of the Money at leaſt ſhould be advanced, and Hoſtages exchanged, they were all of them ſtill to remain as Priſoners in the Caſtle; even after the Capitulation ſhould be effectually performed, the Pope was to continue under Confinement, and to be removed to [e] Gaeta, or ſome other Place in the Kingdom of Naples, 'till the Emperor's Pleaſure might be further known concerning him.

3. This Violence offered to the common Father of the Church, and Vicar of Jeſus Chriſt, as he was then acknowledged by chriſtian Princes, made a great Noiſe in the World, and moved ſeveral of them not only to commiſerate his Condition, but to think of proper Expedients for his Relief. Among theſe, none was more forward, or appeared animated with more Zeal for the Honour and Dignity of his Holineſs, than the King of England: The Cardinal not omitting, at ſo critical a Conjuncture, to give Proofs of that devout Attachment to the papal See, which he had ever profeſſed, and to excite or ſecond any good Motions in the King to ſo pious,

and, as he apprehended it too at that Time in Reſpect to certain political Conſiderations, ſo neceſſary a Work. For it now evidently appearing, that the Ballance of Europe inclined towards the Empire, and that there was not a ſufficient Weight according to the preſent State of Affairs, to counterpoiſe it, there ſeemed no Method left for eſtabliſhing the common Tranquillity upon a good Foot, but by uniting vigorouſly with France, for the Support of his Holineſs, and the Italian League, againſt the Imperial Arms.

4. The Pope having Notice of the King's pious and filial Diſpoſition towards him and his Intereſts, wrote a Letter by Way of Acknowledgement, in Anſwer to One which he had received from the King, declaring, " how deſirous he was to gratify his Majeſty in " the Requeſts preferred by his Secretary, eſpecially in ſuch of them, " as might be moſt acceptable to him. And that the King's great " Goodneſs, towards himſelf, was ſo well known to the World, " it needed no Recital. He concludes with intreating the King " as an affectionate Son, to proceed in the pious Work, which he " had begun; to aſſiſt him in his Diſtreſs, and to purſue the com- " mon Ends reſpectively propoſed by them, towards attaining the " univerſal Good of Chriſtendom; and which might eſpecially " contribute to reſtore the Dignity of the Holy See."

5. In Purſuance of theſe Ends, it was thought adviſeable by the Council, that the Cardinal ſhould go in Perſon upon an Embaſſy to the Court of France; that by his Wiſdom and Weight, the Matters to be propoſed on the Part of England, might be effected with greater Facility, and to more Advantage. Tho' Cavendiſh, who did not want Opportunities of informing himſelf concerning the more ſecret Springs of Motion in our Court, imputes the Advice of the Council, concerning the perſonal Deſignation of the Cardinal for this Embaſſy, to another Motive. He ſaith, " Ann of Bolein lay " in continual Wait for a convenient Occaſion of enſnaring him; " and that the Intent of the Lords was no other, but to remove " him from the King, that by the Aſſiſtance of their chief Miſtreſs " they might render him obnoxious to his Majeſty, and ſo in his " Abſence bring him into Diſgrace, or at leaſt into a leſs Degree " of Authority and Eſteem at Court."

6. the Honours which were there done to him, and their Removal from that Place to Campeign, with an Adventure which Cavendiſh relates concerning himſelf, relating to a French Gentleman and his Lady, by whom he was received with great Freedom and Civility, eſpecially by the Lady, who made him ſenſible ſhe was no Stranger to the Engliſh Cuſtom, a Cuſtom ſomewhere much celebrated by Eraſmus, of promiſcuous Salutations, without Offence, of both Sexes when they meet. Theſe and other circumſtantial Paſſages of this famous Embaſſy, I leave to the Deſcription, wherein they are moſt of them very particular, of our Hiſtorians, who wrote about that Time.

7. It will be of more Importance to acquaint the Reader, what Inſtructions the Cardinal had relating to the [g] Matters concerning which he was empowered to treat.

1*ſt*, He was charged to require the Reſolution of Francis upon the Treaty of Marriage formerly mentioned.

2*d*, To concert proper Meaſures towards making a Peace with the Emperor, in which the Means of enlarging the Children of France, now Hoſtages in Spain, were to be particularly provided for.

3*d*, To agree upon proper Meaſures for procuring the Pope's Liberty.

To the firſt Article the French King anſwered, that the Age of his Son the Duke of Orleans, rendring him a more agreeable Match to the Princeſs Mary, the Treaty of Marriage ſhould proceed between them two.

To the Second it was anſwered, That Francis, in Order to recover his Children, would be content, with other Conceſſions, to diſclaim his Title to Milan.

To the Third it was ſaid, the Pope ſhould be enlarged either by Treaty or Force with all Expedition.

8. But theſe Conventions were made, before the Cardinal was conducted to Campeign: From which Place, he gave the King an Account of his Negotiations. In preparing his Diſpatches for our Court, Cavendiſh, who was then with him, writes, That from Four in the Morning to Four in the Afternoon, he wrote Letters without Intermiſſion, not allowing himſelf Time to eat; That when he had finiſhed and delivered them to an Expreſs for England, he went after his accuſtomed Manner to his Devotions; and afterward having walked for the Space of an Hour, or more, in the Garden, and ſaid Evening Song, he took a ſhort Repaſt, and then compoſed himſelf for Reſt.

What I here aſſert is upon the Credit of Mr.* Maſter, who writes, That upon the Cardinal's going into France, the Biſhop of Bath returned into England, to relate to his Majeſty, firſt the Proceedings of the Cardinal with the French King in the Treaties; and ſecondly, to ſhew unto him certain Devices concerning his own and ſecret Matter. Maſt. 116.

9. I omit to mention particularly the Feaſts and other mutual Entertainments made between the French King and the Cardinal; one of which, on the King's Part, to which his Eminency was invited, was the Hunting of a wild Boar; when the Cardinal, among a Croud of Ladies of the firſt Quality, had the Honour to ſit in the Lady-Regent's Chariot, who was alſo herſelf a Spectator of the Diverſion.

10. The King of England receiving much Satisfaction from the Report which the Cardinal made of his Negotiation, wrote a Letter to him with his own Hand, acknowledging, on many Accounts the great Services, his Eminency had done to himſelf, and to the Kingdom in general, and, particularly, in the three Treaties lately concluded.

11. The firſt Treaty was concerning the Marriage of the Princeſs Mary to the Duke of Orleans, but the Time of celebrating the Nuptials was not expreſsly ſpecified; neither the Circumſtances relating to her Dowry, or her Tranſportation, and the Eſtabliſhment of her Family: It was however provided, that in Caſe this Treaty, by Reaſon of any unforeſeen Accident, ſhould not take Effect, the other Treaties ſhould, notwithſtanding, ſubſiſt in their full Force.

12. Young as the Princeſs then was, being only in the eleventh Year [b] of her Age, I find a Letter from the Biſhop of Bath to the Cardinal ſignifying, the French King expreſſed a great Deſire, ſo ſoon as Preliminaries concerning the Marriage might be adjuſted, to have her delivered into his Hands: The Queen-Regent was alſo very earneſt for having the Marriage ſolemnized, [i] alledging there would be no [k] Danger to the Princeſs, herſelf having married at the ſame Age. She moves, that the King her Son may meet the Lady Mary at Calais, with a ſmall Retinue, and without much Expence; and then after the Eſpouſals ſhould be celebrated, ſhe offers an Expedient for aſſuring the Marriage in ſuch a Manner, without any Injury to the Princeſs, her Son being a Man of Prudence and Honour, that neither Party could afterwards violate the Contract; and then the Princeſs might return to her Father in England, 'till ſhe ſhould be of a more mature Age. This Expedient, tho' propoſed with all the Decency, the Nature of the Thing would admit, appeared ſo ſtrange to our Ambaſſadors, that it is uncertain, whether they, ſo much, as wrote to our Court for any particular Inſtructions on that Occaſion.

13. By the ſecond Treaty it was agreed, That whenever a Peace ſhould be concluded between the Emperor and King of France, the King of England ſhould not be charged with the Protection and Aſſurance of it; except the ſaid Peace could not otherwiſe be made; and, in that Caſe, it was provided, King Henry ſhould take upon him to protect and warrant it; but ſtill with this Reſtriction, that nothing, by Virtue thereof, ſhould be attempted, either againſt the Kingdom or Subjects of Francis. Among other Articles, there is one particularly that reſpected the Benefit of our Trade and Engliſh Merchants: It is ſtipulated, That if Charles having refuſed the Conditions offered to him by the two Powers, they ſhould for that Reaſon make War upon him; then, ſo long as the War ſhould laſt, the Engliſh Merchants ſhould have the ſeveral Privileges, Immunities, and Exemptions in all Places, ſubject to the Crown of France, which they enjoyed for the Year laſt paſt in Flanders, Brabant, Holland, and Zealand.

14. By the third Treaty, it was concluded, That no general Council ſummoned by the Pope, while he was under Conſtraint, or by the Emperor, ſhould be acknowledged, as having any Authority; and that the Clergy on both Sides, ſhould be obliged ſolemnly to diſclaim and enter their Proteſt againſt ſuch a Council; but eſpecially, it was provided, that all Acts and Inſtruments tending to the Diminution or Prejudice of the Cardinal's Legatine Character, ſhould be declared of no Effect, and all Perſons be puniſhed, who ſhould circulate or report them. That whatever Decrees or Regulations were made by the Cardinal of York, and the Engliſh Prelates relating to the Church of England, during the Pope's Captivity, ſhould be obligatory, and received as ſuch; but provided, that the Prelates ſhould be called together by the King's Authority, and have his previous Conſent to their Decrees. It was likewiſe agreed, That for the ſame Period, or ſo long as the Pope ſhould continue in Captivity, the Powers of the French King and the Gallican Church ſhould be of the ſame Nature and Extent.

15. And here it has been obſerved, the King of England felt the firſt Impulſe towards affecting that eccleſiaſtical Supremacy, for which he afterward endeavoured to procure a legal Eſtabliſhment. So that the Cardinal has been charged by Papiſts with being the Author of this Innovation, as they call it, as well as of the general Diſſolution of Monaſteries, in Conſequence of the Powers granted to him for ſuppreſſing certain Monaſteries of leſs Value towards building his College. For his Eminency having reſolved, in Conference with certain other Cardinals at Compeign, that the Regulation of Church-Government, according to the Form here preſcribed, was at the Time neceſſary; He took upon him, in Purſuance of that Plan, the Adminiſtration of eccleſiaſtical Affairs in England; yet, that he might not appear to act altogether independently of the Pope, during his Confinement, he procured a Bull from his Holineſs, whereby he was authorized to act in Quality of his Vicar-General, in all Parts of the King's Dominions.

16. By this Character, he received an Acceſſion of Power and Authority, beyond what he could exerciſe in his Capacity of the Pope's Legate; for now, while the Pope was under Reſtraint, he was empowered to do, whatever his Holineſs could have done in Perſon: And all the eccleſiaſtical Conſtitutions he ſhould make, aſſiſted by the Engliſh Prelates, and by Conſent of the King, were held as ſacred and binding, as if the Pope had been preſent, and immediately given his expreſs Sanction to them.

17. In Virtue of this extenſive Power, the Cardinal drew within the Verge of it, all Matters cognizable in other eccleſiaſtical Courts, whether belonging to the Archbiſhops of the two Provinces, or their Suffragans: So that even the Biſhops were his Commiſſaries in their own Dioceſſes. An Inſtance whereof we have this Year in one Forſter of the Dioceſe of London, who was cited before the Cardinal's Commiſſioners at Weſtminſter-Abbey, among whom [l] Tonſtall Biſhop of London was one, to anſwer to the Charge of heretical Pravity. [m] The Copy and Manner of his Abjuration, diſcover what Precautions were uſed to ſuppreſs all Doctrines contrary to ſuch as were received and eſtabliſhed; and that there might not be, in any Kind or Degree, the leaſt Deviation from them.

the Emperor; with our Demands. 14. The Acknowledgement of the Pope, upon his Liberty, to the King and Cardinal: A ſolemn Proceſſion and Maſs on that Occaſion.

1527. 1. THE Cardinal had not only a Court of Inquiſition concerning Hereſy at Weſtminſter, but another at Whitehall, for Matters Teſtamentary, which was looked upon as a new Infringement upon the Rights of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury: In whoſe Courts it had been the conſtant Uſage to prove Wills and Teſtaments. While the Cardinal exerciſed this new Juriſdiction, one Jane Roper, Executrix to her late Husband John Roper, was ordered to appear before the Commiſſaries of the Prerogative Court: And ſoon after the Cardinal's Commiſſaries cited her before them, in the Chappel of York Place, either to prove the Will there, or ſuffer it to be declared of no Effect, and conſequently to be herſelf incapacitated, as an Executrix. Of this, by Advice of her Council, ſhe preferred a Complaint to Archbiſhop Warham; and it was alſo repreſented to his Grace, by other Hands, ſuch Proceedings would terminate at laſt in the utter Extinction of his Authority in Teſtamentary Caſes, and that they would wholly and abſolutely depend on the Cardinal's Will and Pleaſure: This occaſioned a great Clamour againſt the Cardinal, in the Places more immediately depending on the Archbiſhop. The Officers of his Courts apprehending their Rights invaded, and ſeeing their Perquiſites drawn into another Current, made repeated Inſtances to him for Redreſs; and he was more vigilant and active in concerting proper Meaſures to that End, as being ſenſible that ſuch an exorbitant Power, if no Stop could be put to it, might tend to the Prejudice or Diminution of his Authority, in other Reſpects.

2. Here it may be proper to obſerve, That the Archbiſhop had ſometime before come to a Compoſition with the Cardinal, mutually confirmed by their Hands and Seals, to the End their reſpective Courts ſhould not interfere; and that ſuch Perſons, as ſhould have any Cauſes depending in them, might have them expedited with more Eaſe. By Virtue of this Compoſition, the Prerogative Court was to remain entire to the Archbiſhop, only the Cardinal's Commiſſaries were to ſit, and aſſiſt in it, with thoſe of his Grace. This, by ſome Friends of the Archbiſhop, was thought a Condeſcention which they did not well know, how to reconcile with that ſtrict Regard, which his Grace owed to the Rights and Privileges of his See.

3. The Archbiſhop, notwithſtanding, finding himſelf, on other Accounts, aggrieved, wrote two Letters by Way of Remonſtrance to the Cardinal, concerning the Injuries done to him; in [n] one of which he reminds him of this Compoſition, and repreſents in the Other [o], if the Cardinal ſhould thus proceed to inhibit his Court, "his Officers would have nothing to do; and that himſelf ſhould "be only as a Shadow or Image of an Archbiſhop." But finding no ſufficient Redreſs by this or any other Method of Complaint to the Cardinal, he at laſt thought himſelf obliged to lay the State of the Caſe before the King, who directed him, in his Name, to go to the Cardinal, and if he had done any Thing amiſs to admoniſh him of it. It is ſaid, his Admonition only tended to irritate the Cardinal againſt him; and had, in other Reſpects, ſo little Effect, that the King himſelf afterwards took an Opportunity of talking with his chief Miniſter upon that Subject, after a Manner, that made a better and more laſting Impreſſion upon him.

4. This Power, which the Cardinal aſſumed, by Commiſſion from the Pope, was afterwards exerciſed by Cromwell in Virtue of his Commiſſion to be the King's Vicar-general; according to the Tenour of which, all Eſtates to the Value of Two hundred Pounds or more, were not to be proved in the Courts depending on the Biſhops, but in the Court of the Vicar-general; to which Innovation, it is moſt probable, the Cardinal's Precedent chiefly tended to lead the Way.

5. During this Conteſt between the Cardinal and the Archbiſhop, the Trouble and Expence of proving Wills was ſo great, that it became a Subject-matter of common Complaint; and afterwards as one of the ſix Grievances, wherein the Laity had been oppreſſed by the Clergy, was exhibited in Parliament; where Sir Henry Gilford ſolemnly proteſted, that before he, and other Perſons concerned, could obtain a Probate of Sir William Compton's Will, they were obliged to pay a thouſand Marks.

6. Guicciardine writes, that the Cardinal had yet larger Views of extending his eccleſiaſtical Authority. That he ſollicited a Bull from the Pope, by Virtue whereof he might be made Legate in England, France, and Germany; upon which, the Imperialiſts reported, that he deſigned to make a Schiſm from the Church of Rome, and erect a ſeparate Papacy in the Churches ſubject to his Authority. But this Story of Guicciardine ſeems to confute it ſelf, it would have been very ſtrange, that the Cardinal ſhould ſollicit a Power from the Pope, whereby he might be enabled to ſet up a Power independent of the Pope, and excluſive of his Juriſdiction. This can only be accounted for by thoſe who contend, there is no Inconſiſtency in ſuppoſing, the Subjects of a temporal Prince, may in certain Caſes be empowered to take Arms againſt him, and even to depoſe him, by his own Commiſſion.

7. The Cardinal, upon the Return of Gurner, whom he had ſent Expreſs with Letters to England, having finiſhed his Negotiations at the Court of France, made, with all Speed, the neceſſary Preparations for his Departure. But the very Morning before he took his Journey, being at Maſs in his Cloſet, he conſecrated the Chancellor of France a Cardinal, with all the neceſſary Solemnities: Tho' he had ſometime before entertained a ſecret Quarrel againſt the Chancellor, which in the Sequel broke out with ſome Violence; for the Cardinal openly laid to his Charge, that he had endeavoured to oppoſe the League agreed to by the two Powers, before his coming over. At this the Cardinal was ſo much provoked, or rather affected the Air of one in Paſſion, that he animadverted upon the Chancellor with great Freedom, and Severity, and told him, in plain Terms, "It was not He that ſhould infringe the amiable "Friendſhip between the two King's; and if the King of France, "being there preſent, ſhould follow the Chancellor's Council, He "would not fail ſhortly to feel the Effects of maintaining War "againſt the King of England, of which he might aſſuredly de-"pend." Having made this angry Speech, which he delivered after a bold and confident Manner, he departed abruptly, and in much ſeeming Heat, out of the Council.

8. The Cardinal underſtood the Meaſures, whereby it became a Perſon of his Character and Station to regulate himſelf, ſo well, and was ſo great a Maſter of his Paſſions, ſo far eſpecially as related to his political Conduct; that it cannot be ſuppoſed this Tranſport, wherewith he now appeared to be carried away, was ſo much the Effect of an unguarded Temper, as of a ſecret and refined Artifice. He was willing, for the Glory of his Maſter, and the Service of his Country, to ſtrain a Point of Decency, and to be charged with an Action, which may be thought difficultly reconcileable to thoſe Maxims of polite Behaviour, that are ſuppoſed to obtain in the Courts, and, eſpecially, in the Council of ſovereign Princes.

9. He had obſerved, by the Progreſs of his former Negotiations with the French Miniſters, that they were in a Diſpoſition, or rather neceſſitated, almoſt at any Rate, to make a firm and amicable Peace with England; upon this he carried his Reſentments higher, and expreſſed them with a more aſſuming Air, than perhaps either Reaſons of Prudence or good Policy, would otherways have allowed. But he found that was a proper Time to bring the French Court over at once by Menaces, to the Conditions propoſed on the Part of England, which could not be obtained without much Trouble, and many unneceſſary Delays, by a more gentle Way of Proceeding, or in a Courſe of free and prolix Conferences.

10. The Event ſhewed, that he was not miſtaken. The Meſſages, the Entreaties and Interceſſions, which were made to him, before before he would be perſuaded to return to the Council, plainly diſcovered (what he knew very well before) that he was on no Account to be diſobliged. At laſt, he was only prevailed with to return at the Inſtance of the Lady-Regent, who went to him in Perſon, and whoſe Commands could not be diſputed. After this, he acquired ſuch an Aſcendant over the French Miniſters, that whatever he propoſed, was effected with the greateſt Facility.

11. Upon his taking Leave of the [p] French Court, he received rich Preſents from the King, who afterwards conducted him about a Mile on his Way, accompanied with the King of [q] Navarre, the Pope's Legate, and the prime Nobility of France. In his [r] Return, coming to Calais, he eſtabliſhed a Mart there, for the Benefit of Trade to all Nations: But upon what Foot ſoever that Project was formed, it doth not appear to have been attended with any laſting or conſiderable Effects. Towards the End of September his Eminency arrived at Court; where the King honoured him with many ſignal Proofs of his Eſteem and Affection: After he had ſtaid two or three Days at Court, he retired to his Houſe at Weſtminſter: And in the Beginning of Michaelmas Term, aſſembling in the Star-chamber all the Noblemen, Judges, and Juſtices of the Peace of every Shire throughout England, he made a long Oration to them, concerning the Reaſons and the Effects of his Embaſſage; and repreſented, that the honourable and advantagious Conditions, which he had obtained for the King and his Country in the Treaty made with France, were ſuch, for which all true Engliſhmen ought to rejoice and be thankful.

12. The French King, that he might correſpond with our Court in the Magnificence of his Embaſſy, ſent eight Perſons of the firſt Quality and Merit in France, attended with Six hundred Horſe, to ratify the Peace at our Court, which was then at Greenwich; where they were received by the King with the higheſt Marks of Honour, and entertained after a more ſumptuous Manner, than, as Bellay Biſhop of Bayon, and one of the Ambaſſadors confeſſeth, he had ever ſeen. They had a Commiſſion to preſent our King with the Order of St. Michael, which was conferred on him with the uſual Ceremonies, and in Return of this Order, his Majeſty ſent [ſ] Garter King

13. The Emperor having received Advice concerning the Treaties between the two Kings, thought it incumbent on him to uſe all the proper Means towards preventing the Ratification of them. And upon that View, expreſſed an Inclination to comply with every Thing, that could in Reaſon or Juſtice be expected from him: Therefore on the Fifteenth of September, he offered the following Compoſition to the French and Engliſh Ambaſſadors reſiding at his Court, "That the Article as to the Reſtitution of Burgundy in the "Treaty of Madrid ſhould be expunged: That the King of France "ſhould pay the two Millions of Crowns, which had been offer-"ed for the Ranſom of his Sons, out of which ſo much ſhould "be deducted as would ſatisfy the Demands, which the King of "England had upon the Emperor." Theſe and ſome other Articles being on all Sides approved, the Ambaſſadors of France alledged, that they had not ſufficient Authority from their King to ſign them; but they would write for an Amplification of their Powers: The Emperor was not much diſſatisfied that the Concluſion of the Peace was delayed upon this Pretence; during the Interval, he had Recourſe to his uſual Arts, in order to divide the two Kings; and with that View ſent privately to the Cardinal an Offer of a large Sum to be advanced above his ordinary Penſion, which amounted annually to twenty four thouſand Crowns. But the Cardinal, where the Honour and Intereſts of his Maſter were apprehended to be ſo nearly concerned, generouſly rejected the Bribe, which was deſigned to enſnare and corrupt him. [u] They, who have followed the common Prejudices againſt the Cardinal, have reſolved ſo juſt an Inſtance of his Vertue and Fidelity, into a Motive of Revenge; both as he had been diſappointed by the Emperor in his Expectations of the Papacy, and the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo. Therefore on the Twelfth of December, the Engliſh Ambaſſadors made the following expreſs Demands to the Emperor at [x] Bruges, "That he would immediately refund the Moneys, which "their Maſter had lent to him in the Time of his Exigency; and "pay a Penalty of Five hundred thouſand Ducats, for not per-"forming his Contract of Marriage with the Princeſs Mary; that "he ſhould make good, the Indemnity to which he had obliged

"himſelf,

" himſelf, on Condition the King ſhould declare War againſt " France; and that he ſhould not only deliver the Pope, but make " full Satisfaction for the Damages, which his Holineſs had ſuſtained." To all which Articles, the Emperor gave evaſive Anſwers, except to that concerning the Pope, for whoſe Diſcharge Orders had been already given, and ſhould be effectually executed: For the Emperor being ſenſible how great Offence he had given to the Princes of Chriſtendom, by the Hardſhips put upon the Pope, was now more inclined, of his own Accord, to give them Satisfaction in that Particular. Though before his Orders could be executed, and the very Night before they were deſigned to be ſo, the Pope made his Eſcape in the Habit of a Merchant; but his Hoſtages ſtill remained under Confinement, 'till the Sum agreed on for his Ranſome ſhould be paid. In order to advance which, the Pope made a Creation of ſeveral Cardinals, and granted Licenſes, in the Kingdom of Naples and other Places, for an Alienation of excclesiaſtical Goods and Poſſeſſions; opening a Way, ſome have thought, to thoſe ſacrilegious Invaſions on the Rights of the Church, which certain Princes even of the reformed Perſuaſion, ſeem to have practiſed, without the leaſt Scruple or Remorſe.

14. The Pope had no ſooner obtained his Liberty, but he acknowledged, by a publick Notification of it to the King and Cardinal, that they had been the great Inſtruments of procuring it, deſiring the King to continue his Favours and Protection to the papal See. Upon which Occaſion, and the Ratification of the Peace, the Cardinal repaired with much Pomp and Ceremony, to celebrate a Thankſgiving in the Cathedral Church of [z] St. Paul's: And the Town, on the ſame Occaſion, gave other publick Demonſtrations of Joy; the Cardinal himſelf ſang [a] Maſs, aſſiſted with twenty four Mitres of Biſhops and Abbots, who paid all the Addreſs to him, that was then thought due to his legatine Character. The Cardinal divided the Sacrament between them, as a perfect Teſt or Bond of Security for Performance of the Treaty, by which a perpetual Peace was eſtabliſhed between them. Maſs being ended, which was ſolemnly ſung, both by the Quire of that Cathedral and of the King's Chapel, the Cardinal openly read the Articles of Peace, and there, in Sight of all the People, took hold of the gold Seal, and ſubſcribed them with his own Hand; as did the Great Maſter of France after him, in the ſame Manner; upon which they de-

They, who would be acquainted, not only with the Magnificence of the Cardinal's Entertainments, but with his free, pleaſant, and ingenious Manner in them, may conſult Cavendiſh and other Hiſtorians, who delight in Particularities of that Kind. I ſhall only obſerve further, concerning the French Ambaſſy, that when they came to take Leave of the Cardinal at Weſtminſter, in Order to return to France, he diſtributed among them, by the King's Order, ſeveral Preſents, all which amounted to a very conſiderable Sum. Some had to the Value of two or three hundred Pounds, and ſome of four hundred Pounds in Plate: And thoſe of the loweſt Degree, had at leaſt to the Value of twenty Crowns. Beſides the Gowns of Velvet, and rich Furrs, Chains of Gold, fine Horſes, and ſeveral other Gifts, which they had before received of his Majeſty. And from hence we at once form an Eſtimate of the Splendour and Wealth of the Court of England at that Time, and of the King's high Approbation of the Cardinal's Conduct, in negotiating ſo very acceptable a Peace.

1527. 1528. 1. THO' the Affair relating to the Divorce, was then called the King's Secret Matter, by thoſe, who had received any Inſtructions from his Majeſty concerning it; yet, it began now to be talked of more openly; and the Cardinal had ſo conſiderable a Share in it; and ſo much of the Change which afterwards happened in the eccleſiaſtical State, depended upon it; that the Reader will particularly expect I ſhould ſet this Matter, ſo far as I am able, in a good Light, both in Reſpect to the Origin, and the Progreſs of it.

2. I have already obſerved, that while the reſpective Treaties of Marriage with the Princeſs Mary were depending in the Courts of France and Spain, Scruples concerning her Legitimacy were moved by the Miniſters of both Courts. This was a nice and tender Point;

Point; concerning which it imported the King, for many weighty and political Reaſons, as well as for the Peace of his own Mind, to procure all the Satisfaction that might be had. The Princeſs was Heir-apparent to all his Dominions, and a Diſpute about her Legitimacy, might prove the Occaſion of involving them in all thoſe fatal Conſequences, which uſually attend a controverted Title to a Crown. But the Arguments of Conſcience, were thoſe which the King alledged to have the greateſt Weight with him, and upon which he began not only to be diſſatisfied in his own Mind, but to move Scruples to other Perſons concerning the Validity of his Marriage. Though ſome will have it, he only took that Occaſion, of publiſhing thoſe Scruples, which, as himſelf declared, had ſome Years before much diſturbed him. It is ſaid to have contributed not a little to his Diſquiet, that being converſant in the Writings of Thomas of Aquin, he had found that great Schoolman looked upon the Levitical-Laws prohibiting Perſons to marry within certain Degrees of Blood or Affinity, to be of moral Obligation; with which therefore the Pope could have no Power of diſpenſing; or if he ſhould claim or aſſume the Exerciſe of ſuch a Power, his Diſpenſation could not be attended with any legal or valid Effects. Theſe Scruples of the King, cauſed him to reflect upon his Want of Male-Iſſue, and the Death of ſuch Children, as had been already born to him, which he conſidered as a judicial Effect of God's Diſpleaſure againſt him, for having contracted an unlawful Marriage, and lived ſo many Years impenitently in a continued State of Sin.

3. Theſe were the Reaſons, both political and moral, which might have induced the King to queſtion the Legality of his Marriage, and conſequently to ſeek a Divorce, tho' no Perſon about him, had really moved the Scruples wherewith he was poſſeſſed. There can be no Neceſſity of Suppoſing, as ſome Writers have done, that thoſe Scruples were firſt moved by the Cardinal. Or if they had been indeed really moved by him, he ought not to have ſuffered any Imputation for acting according to the Dictates of his Conſcience, and as became a good Prelate and faithful Miniſter. Whether his Conſcience was well or ill informed, I do not take upon me to inquire; it will appear there were very great Difficulties on both Sides of the Queſtion; and, for that Reaſon, it would be very unjuſt to condemn Perſons on either Side, as not Acting upon an honeſt and conſcientious Principle.

4. Now nothing is more evident, than that the Cardinal was, originally, when the King began to open his Diſcontents, much inclined to queſtion the Lawfulneſs of his Marriage; and afterwards in the Proceſs towards a Divorce, he ſollicited it with a Zeal and Application, that left no Room to doubt, but he acted in this [b] Affair, not only from a Light, but a Force of Conſcience, that could not eaſily be reſiſted.

He importunes and beſeeches the Pope, "as he eſteemed him a "Chriſtian and good Cardinal; as worthy of the Sacred College, "and no uſeleſs and unprofitable Member of the Apoſtolick See; "as he believed him to be a Lover of Right and Juſtice, his faith- "ful Creature, and, in a Word, one that deſired eternal Salva- "tion; that he would, at this Time, have Reſpect to his Coun- "ſel, and favourably grant the King his moſt godly Requeſts; "inſtead of promoting which, had he not known them to be "right, holy, and juſt, he would rather have undergone all Sorts "of Puniſhment; nay, he would pawn his very Life and Soul for "them." He could not have employed ſtronger Terms to denote either the Conviction of his Mind, or the Deſire of his Heart.

5. If he afterwards changed his Principles relating to this difficult Point, or became more cold in proſecuting the Divorce, he might perhaps find, or apprehend that he had found, ſufficient Reaſon for ſuch a Change, from ſome new and clearer Light. Why ſhould Cardinal Wolſey be excluded a Privilege, which ſo many great Names have claimed after him; if there are not ſome, who may ſtill think proper to inſiſt upon the Benefit of it.

6. Cavendiſh, indeed, who, by his Office, being continually near to the Perſon of the Cardinal, had many Opportunities of obſerving what paſſed at Court, and upon what Hinges the more ſecret Affairs of it moved, has aſcribed the Origin of the King's Diſcontents, in Relation to the Queen, to another Cauſe. But there is no Impropriety in ſuppoſing, that two Cauſes might accidentally concur towards producing the ſame Effect. The King's Conſcience might be awakened with ſome new Admonitions concerning his Marriage, which put him upon ſolliciting a Divorce; and, at the ſame Time, his Deſire of a Divorce might be inflamed by a ſtrong Paſſion for ſome new Object. But I ſhall recite, what Cavendiſh hath obſerved, relating to this Affair, in his own Words.

"After this (the Cardinal's Return from France) began new Mat- "ters, which troubled the Heads and Imaginations of all the Court; "wherewith all their Stomachs were full; but there was little Dige- "ſtion; namely, the long concealed Affection of the King to "Mrs. Anne Bolein, which his Majeſty diſcloſed to the Cardinal "whoſe often Perſuaſions on his Knees, took no Effect."

7. In the Conferences between the King and the Cardinal on this Occaſion, his [c] Majeſty required him to declare his Opinion concerning the Divorce. But whatever the Cardinal's private Sentiments were at that Time, in Relation to it, he wiſely excuſed himſelf from coming to any Reſolution in the Caſe propoſed; upon a reaſonable Allegation, that it did not become him to give a precipitate Judgement in ſo weighty a Matter; and therefore he deſired Leave of his Majeſty to conſult ſuch Perſons, as were eſteemed the moſt learned, and experienced, both in the divine, and civil Laws.

8. Leave to this End being obtained, the Cardinal, by Virtue of his [d] legatine Commiſſion, iſſued out an Order for aſſembling the Biſhops at Weſtminſter, and with them the moſt learned Men in both Univerſities, and from ſeveral Cathedral Churches throughout the Kingdom, who were thought the beſt qualified to reſolve ſo doubtful a Queſtion. Here the King's Caſe, and the ſeveral Difficulties relating to it, were from Day to Day debated; but the Fathers and other Members, who compoſed the Aſſembly, parted at laſt without coming to any determinate Reſolution. Cavendiſh reports, that "he heard ſome of the moſt famous and learned among "them ſay, the King's Caſe was too obſcure for any Man; and "that the Points therein were ſo doubtful, they could not come to "a Reſolution upon them; ſo that, with a general Conſent, they "departed, without determining any Thing concerning it."

9. However, that this Convention might appear to do ſomething, tho' the main Article upon which they had been called, was left undecided; for the King's further Satisfaction, they propoſed the following Expedient: That "his Majeſty ſhould ſend Com-"miſſioners to all the Univerſities in Chriſtendom, as well here in "England as in foreign Parts, where the King's Caſe ſhould be "fully debated; and that they ſhould bring with them to England, "under the reſpective Seals of the Univerſities, their definitive "Sentences upon it."

10. Purſuant to this Advice, Commiſſioners were appointed to be ſent to Cambridge and Oxford, and other foreign Univerſities; and certain Powers and Inſtructions were given to them, which do not appear perfectly to quadrate with thoſe Meaſures, which ought to be obſerved, with the ſtricteſt Regard, by ſuch Perſons, who are to make a Judgement of any Caſe propoſed to them, conſidered purely as a Caſe of Conſcience. Theſe Commiſſioners, ſaith Cavendiſh, were all delegated, "at the proper Coſts and Charges of the "King, which in the Whole amounted to a great Sum of Money; "and beſides the Charge of the Embaſſage to the famous and

" notable Perſons of all the Univerſities, eſpecially to ſuch as bare " the Rule, or had the Cuſtody of the Univerſity-Seals, they were " fed by the Commiſſioners, with ſuch great Sums of Money, " that they did eaſily condeſcend to their Requeſts, and grant their " Deſires.

" By Reaſon whereof, all the Commiſſioners returned with " their Purpoſe furniſhed, according to their Commiſſions, under " the Seal of every ſeveral Univerſity; whereat there was no ſmall " Joy conceived of the principal Parties; inſomuch, that ever af- " ter the Commiſſioners were had in great Eſtimation, and highly " advanced, and liberally rewarded, far beyond their worthy De- " ſerts; notwithſtanding they proſpered, and the Matter went " ſtill forward, having now, as they thought, a ſure Staff to lean " upon."

11. This Report of Cavendiſh, concerning the King's Commiſſion to the Univerſities, puts me in Mind of a Reflection made by Biſhop Taylor, relating to the Affair before us, which I ſhall leave with the Reader, as I find it in that learned Prelate, without pretending to add any Cenſure upon it.

" This Queſtion, ſaith [e] he, was ſtrangely agitated on Occaſion " of Henry the Eighth's Divorce from Queen Catherine, the Relict " of his Brother Prince Arthur; and accordingly, as the Intereſt " of Princes uſeth to do, it very much employed and divided the " Pens of learned Men; who; upon that Occaſion, gave too " great Teſtimony, with how great Weakneſs, Men that have a " Byaſs to determine Queſtions, and with how great a Force, a " King that is rich and powerful, can make his own Determina- " tions. For though Chriſtendom was then much divided, yet " before that Time there was almoſt a general Conſent upon this " Propoſition, that the Levitical Degrees, do not, by any Law of " God, bind Chriſtians to their Obſervation."

12. As to the Decrees of the Univerſities however procured, they may with the general Reaſons, upon which they were made, be ſeen in ſeveral Hiſtorians: But I ſhall confine my ſelf to thoſe of our two Univerſities, as Places to which I have the Honour of bearing a nearer Relation; and whoſe Determinations, where they have a regular Sanction, ought to be conſidered as having the greateſt Weight and Authority.

1. BEFORE I proceed to the Oxford Decree upon the preſent Caſe, it may be proper to conſider, what previous Steps were taken towards introducing the Queſtion, upon which that Decree was to be framed. 1528. 1529.

After the foreign Univerſities had made a Report agreeable to the King's Deſire and Sentiments, upon the Caſe propounded to them, the Oxonians, notwithſtanding their great Patron Wolſey had ſtill great Weight at Court, and they had received certain Interminations from thence, in Caſe of their Incompliance, yet ſtill reſolved to act, as their Conſciences directed them, and not to ſacrifice either the Honour of the Univerſity, or the Peace of their own Minds, to any ſiniſter Influences whatever. Which Reſolution, pious and laudable as it was, might have been attended, conſidering the Temper of Henry the Eighth, with Conſequences fatal to the Univerſity, and involved all the Colleges in the ſame Ruin, with the religious Houſes; had it not been for that divine Providence, which then preſided, and will, it is hoped, ever preſide, by a ſpecial Direction, over that moſt antient, and famous Seat of Learning. The Univerſity being, at that Time, in ſuch a Diſpoſition; the Chancellor, Warham, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, when the King had determined to lay the Queſtion, relating to his Divorce, before them, opened his Majeſty's Caſe, at large, in a Letter to them, tranſmitting at the ſame Time, the following State of the Queſtion.

Whether

Whether it be prohibited by any divine or natural Law, that a Brother may marry the Relict of his Brother deceaſed?

2. Three Weeks after the Letters from the Archbiſhop were delivered, the Biſhop of [c] Lincoln came to Oxford, by ſpecial and expreſs Order, with Letters from the King himſelf; by which his Majeſty ſignified a Deſire, that the Members of it would concur in the ſame Sentiments with the foreign Univerſities; and that they would not too pertinaciouſly adhere to any Prejudices againſt their Opinion; or propagate any vain or ſiniſter Reports upon the Caſe.

3. This Direction, ſhall I call it, or rather Admonition to the Univerſity, was too plain to need any Comment. They eaſily apprehended what the Court expected from them, and what themſelves were ſeverally to expect from the Court, according as they proved more obſequious or reluctant in their Deciſions: And therefore, as particular Members were differently moved by different Conſiderations, it is natural to ſuppoſe, they would unite, or divide upon the Queſtion. The Heads, and Men of longer Standing in the Univerſity, who had nearer Proſpects from Court; upon whom the Engines of it played more directly; or who, by Reaſon of an advanced Age, were grown more timorous, came ſooner into the Meaſures, I do not ſay directly preſcribed to them, but with which they were plainly enough invited to comply. The younger Members, whoſe Hopes and Fears were leſs influenced by any worldly, eſpecially any diſtant Motives, could not ſo readily be brought to concur with the [d] Court; ſo that the Convocation broke up without coming to any publick Deciſion: Upon Advice of which, the King immediately wrote to the Commiſſary, to the Doctors and Batchelors of Divinity in the Univerſity; for to them only his Letters were inſcribed, and not to the Regents. It appeared from the Stile and Manner of theſe Letters, which diſcovered a Temper full of Impatience and Reſentment, that they were written by the King himſelf: He acquaints them, how highly he had been offended at the [e] Inſolency of the Regents, and other Maſters; who as yet, he ſaith, had not arrived at thoſe Years of Diſcretion, which qualified them to make a Judgement in ſo very weighty a Caſe; and that they might, therefore, be perſuaded to more ſober Counſels, and conform to the ſage Example of the Doctors, he declares, if they ſhould perſiſt in their Obſtinacy, and ſtill pretend magiſterially to oppoſe their own Authority to that of the ſovereign Power, they ſhould ſoon be made ſenſible, what it was to provoke it.

4. His

4. His Majeſty, about this Time, ſent Doctor Bell to Oxford; who was ſhortly after followed by the Biſhop of Lincoln, a Perſon very much in the King's Secrets and ſpecial Confidence in the Affair of the Divorce. Their Charge was to ſtate the Caſe of it to the younger Members of the Univerſity, in a more full and open Light, and to adviſe them ro correct their former Errors. But ſeeing all the Efforts they could make to this End, proved fruitleſs, the Chancellor thought proper to adviſe, that they ſhould, with all convenient Speed, draw up the Opinion of the Univerſity, and tranſmit it to the King; eſpecially, ſeeing his Majeſty had already received an Anſwer to his Letters, from the Univerſities of Paris and Cambridge: But if that Advice was found leſs practicable, on Account of any reigning Factions or Animoſities among the Members; then they ſhould chuſe, by the common Suffrage of a Convocation, Thirty, out of the whole academick Body, to determine the Matter. But, notwithſtanding theſe Propoſals by the Chancellor, the younger Members ſtill proved incompliant; and were ſo ſlow in their Proceedings, that they ſhortly after received a very ſevere Reprimand from the King for their Neglect and Diſobedience ſhewed to him; whereas the Univerſity had ſome Time before, in anſwer to the Queſtion propoſed, remitted their affirmative Sentence in the Words following.

It is prohibited by the Law of God, and of Nature, that a Brother ſhould marry the Relict of his Brother, who died, without Children.

5. The King added, however, that he had determined to moderate his juſt Reſentments, 'till he ſhould have a more perfect and diſtinct Account of the Matter communicated to him: For which Cauſe, and to the End, the good and prudent Reſolutions of the Heads and other Perſons of greater Authority, might not be defeated by the raſh or intemperate Zeal of the Maſters; or leaſt the Weight and Merits of the Cauſe ſhould be overborn by Numbers, he had ſent Edward Fox his Commiſſioner to Oxford; that by this Means all further Trouble and Inconvenience to that Univerſity, by Occaſion of his Diſpleaſure, might be prevented. But the grave Appearance and Manner of Fox were to as little Effect towards reclaiming the Regents, and other Maſters, as the Eloquence of Bell had been before: For they oppoſed the Divorce, and all the Meaſures, which were taken to procure a Sentence in Favour of it, with ſo much Heat, that Matters appeared almoſt ripe for an open Inſurrection. At which Time there came Letters from the Chancellor, but by what competent Authority, I am unable to reſolve, excluding the Maſters from Convocation, as Perſons unworthy to be conſulted, or to give their Opinion in the King's Cauſe. The Chancellor indeed, appeared to aſſume this Authority, in direct Oppoſition to the Statutes then in Force, which expreſsly provided, that that all Acts of Convocation, without Conſent of the Maſters, ſhould be reputed null and void. So that this extraordinary Proceeding, to ſerve a Turn in the preſent Exigency, was not only thought to be without either Rule or Precedent, but contrary to thoſe Rights and Privileges of the Univerſity which Archbiſhop Warham, as Chancellor, was more immediately obliged to maintain: But who further ſent his Injunctions to the Doctors and Batchelors in Divinity, or to a ſelect Number of them, that in the Name of the Univerſity, they ſhould expedite, and finally determine this Affair. After a few Days, taking an Occaſion of convening, they came to the following Deciſion, to which they put the Univerſity Seal, "That in the Judgement of the whole [f] Univerſity, and for "a full Concluſion, ſupported by the moſt ſtrong and convincing "Reaſons, upon the Queſtion propoſed, they reſolve, It is prohi-"bited, both by the divine and natural Law, that a Brother ſhould "marry the Relict of his Brother deceaſed, without Children by "her, and whoſe Marriage with her had been carnally conſum-"mated."

6. This was the enacting Part, after the proper Forms introductory to it, of the Oxford Decree, concerning this famous Caſe. But againſt the authentick Sanction whereof, though the Court thought they had gained a conſiderable Point, there appear to lie ſome Exceptions not eaſily to be removed.

1*ſt*, It is ſaid, in the firſt Place, that this Decree was not obtained by the free Suffrages of the Univerſity; but their Aſſent, upon the Caſe, was required to a Form already prepared, or rather now preſcribed to them: Whereas it was already held, as a Thing ſacred by the Members of that Univerſity, that they ſhould not ſuffer themſelves, in delivering their Opinion, to be over-awed by any Interminations, or other ſiniſter Influences whatever.

2*d*, That nothing could be done as an Act of the whole Univerſity, excluſive of the Maſters a conſtituent Part of their Legiſlature, but what was in the Nature of it abſolutely void.

3*d*, There were Suſpicions, that however zealous the Commiſſary, and Heads of the Univerſity might appear, both in complying, and in obliging others to comply with the Directions of the Court; yet, ſecretly, they animated the Maſters in their Prejudices againſt the Divorce; apprehending, that the papal Authority began now ſenſibly to decline, and that the Divorce would ſtill contribute to impair, if it might not finally tend to extirpate it; Conſequences, which they were deſirous to obviate and prevent. At the ſame Time, in Regard to the Preferments, which they either poſſeſſed or expected; or perhaps from a Fear of incurring the

[f] See the Confirmation of this Decree, Coll. N° 86. Book III.

King's

King's Anger, they would not ſeem to diſpute, or oppoſe his Deſires.

4*th*, Wood further inſinuates, that a Convocation of the Engliſh Clergy now ſitting, certain indirect Methods were uſed, even by Way of Reward, a ſofter Term for Bribery, to gratify Perſons, who were inſtrumental in promoting the King's Affair.

5*th*, Several Perſons eminent for their Learning and Piety in the Univerſity, openly from the Pulpit oppugned and condemned the Divorce, repreſenting, that the Honour and Dignity of the Univerſity were expoſed by the clandeſtine Convention, which had been held, in order to procure and effect it.

6*th*, Although the Commiſſary, with ſeveral Heads of Colleges, declared for the Divorce; yet ſeveral Doctors and others of diſtinguiſhed Merit, not only ſpake their Opinion, but wrote publickly againſt it.

7*th*, Laſtly, All the Menaces of the King had proved wholly fruitleſs and ineffectual, if the Secret Committee had not taken the Opportunity of a tempeſtuous Night, and, as it were, by Stealth, to hold the Convention, which ſigned the Decree; and for a more private Conveyance of the Seal of the Univerſity; wherein they were notwithſtanding detected, and reſolutely oppoſed by ſome Members.

7. Theſe are the Reflections of our learned Hiſtorian Wood, concerning the Oxford Decree, as it was called, relating to the Divorce; an Hiſtorian, who had a juſt Contempt of thoſe little, vile, inſinuating Arts, which other Hiſtorians have ſometimes found neceſſary to open a Way to Favour and Preferment. Great, and collected in a mean Fortune, he made a Judgement of Things, according to the intrinſick Nature and Reaſons of them, without Regard to any foreign Conſiderations; however he might have found his private Intereſt or Account in them. If he ſeem to have had any Byaſs upon him, it was in an Inſtance of all others the moſt pardonable, that which proceeded from a filial Piety towards the Univerſity; to which his Education and Learning were owing: And even here, when he apprehended, there was a juſt Occaſion, he is not afraid to reflect upon the Sons of his Mother, with a becoming Freedom and Severity. He would not ſuffer them to act upon any Account, not even to gratify the Court, in her Name, without her Commiſſion. He foreſaw, well enough, the Conſequences, which ſome Perſons would be ready to draw, in Prejudice to Queen Elizabeth's Title to the Crown, in caſe the Authority of ſo famous a Decree as that of Oxford, concerning the Legitimacy of her Father's former Marriage, ſhould be called in Queſtion. But he had too great a Mind; he was too much a Free-thinker, in the good and ſober Senſe of the Word, to make a Judgement concerning the moral State of any Queſtion, from Conſequences, which, in that Reſpect, had no Manner of Relation to it. His Maxim was, and all reaſonable Perſons in the World will agree in it, that Conſequences ought to be examined by Truth, and not Truth by Conſequences.

8. To theſe Reflections upon Mr. Wood, I ſhall add one more, concerning this Inſtrument. Allowing the Regularity of it, in all Reſpects, both as to its Sanction, and the Methods previouſly taken to obtain it; yet it is only a Reſolution upon the Queſtion propoſed, in caſe Prince Arthur, while he lived, had really and effectually conſummated his Marriage with the Lady, afterwards married to his Brother: If he did not conſummate, and ſtrong Preſumptions are not wanting, that he did not; it cannot be inferred from this Decree, that the Univerſity of Oxford thought the Diſſolution of King Henry's Marriage to his Relict, allowable, on any other Account.

9. It appears from Biſhop Burnet, that in the Proceeding of the other Univerſity, relating to this Affair, there was alſo conſiderable Oppoſition, if not ſo violent, as from the diſſenting Members in Oxford. I ſhall beg Leave to recite, that learned Hiſtorian's Account of the Matter in his own Words,

" What paſſed at Cambridge, I ſhall ſet down more fully, from " an original Letter, written by Gardiner and Fox to the King in " February, but the Day is not marked; when they came to Cam- " bridge, they ſpake to the Vice-chancellor, whom they found ve- " ry ready to ſerve the King; ſo was alſo Bonner, whom they called, " and Dr. Edmonds, with ſeveral others: But there was a contrary " Party, that met together, and reſolved to oppoſe them. A Meeting " of the Doctors, Batchelors of Divinity, and Maſters of Arts, " in all about Two hundred, was held; there the King's Let- " ters were read, and the Vice-chancellor calling upon ſeveral of " them to deliver their Opinions about it, they anſwered as " their Affections led them, and were in ſome Diſorder; but it " being propoſed, that the Anſwering the King's Letter, and " the Queſtions in it, ſhould be referred to ſome indifferent Men, " great Exceptions were made to Dr. Salcot, Dr. Reps and Crome, " and all others, who had approved Dr. Cranmer's Book, as ha- " ving already declared themſelves partial. But as to that, it was " anſwered, That after a Thing was ſo much diſcourſed of, as " the King's Matter had been, it could not be imagined, that any " Number of Men would be found, who had not declared their " Judgement about it one way or other. Much Time was ſpent " in the Debate; but when it grew late, the Vice-chancellor " commanded every Man to take his Place, and to give his

" Voice,

" Voice, whether they would agree to the Motion of referring " it to a ſelect Body of Men? But that Night they would not " agree to it.

" The Congregation being adjourned to the next Day, the " Vice-chancellor offered a Grace or Order, to refer the Matter to " Twenty-nine Perſons; Himſelf, ten Doctors, ſixteen Maſters, " and the two Proctors; that the Queſtions being publickly diſpu- " ted, what two Parts in three agreed to, ſhould be read in a Con- " gregation, and without any further Debate the common Seal of " the Univerſity ſhould be ſet to it. Yet it was at firſt denied; " then being put to the Vote, it was carried equally on both Sides: " but being a third Time propoſed, it was carried for the Di- " vorce, of which an Account was preſently ſent to the King, with " a Schedule of their Names to whom it was committed, and what " was to be expected from them: So it was at length determined, " tho' not without Oppoſition, That the King's Marriage was " againſt the Law of God."

10. Tho' the Exception, according to this Account, was over-ruled, againſt the Choice of Perſons to act in the Name of the Univerſity, who had already declared themſelves; yet it doth not evidently appear, that the Reaſons, upon which this Exception was over-ruled, were of ſufficient Force to compel the Aſſent of the oppoſite Party, or to ſatisfy the Scruples of other inquiſitive Perſons. For tho' it will not follow, that a Thing which has been much the Subject of Diſcourſe, ought not, for that Reaſon, to be debated, in popular Aſſemblies, where Men have a Right to vote; yet, where a ſelect Number is to be choſen, out of ſuch Aſſemblies, to ſpeak the Senſe of other People, the Caſe is much altered; and the moſt indifferent Perſons, or who, at leaſt, are not known to be previouſly determined in their Judgement, are certainly moſt proper to be choſen, as being beſt qualified to examine and debate the Matter in Queſtion, after a more calm, free, and impartial Manner. Beſides, it plainly enough appears, from the Letter of Gardiner and [g] Fox to the King, that there were certain Influences uſed, which in the modern Dialect would be called Management, more proper to divert Men from acting according to the Perſuaſions of their own Mind, than to open their Eyes to the clear Light of Truth.

11. The Reaſon aſſigned by Biſhop Burnet, why the King met with ſo much greater Difficulty in this Affair, at home, than abroad, was from the Oppoſition of the Univerſities to Luther's Doctrine, and to all thoſe who favoured it. So that Cranmer, Crome, Shaxton, and Latymer, appearing to eſpouſe the King's Cauſe, the Prejudices againſt it on the other Side, were, for that Reaſon, more violent. But it is a more natural and generous Way of accounting for this Difficulty, to ſay, There were a great Number of Men in both Univerſities, who, without Regard to any foreign or temporal Conſiderations, were determined to judge, according to the Light and Evidence of Things, as, upon a due and diſintereſted Inquiry, appeared to them moſt juſt and reaſonable.

12. As to the Methods taken in foreign Univerſities, to procure a Judgement in the Caſe, no leſs Aſſiduity and Sollicitation was uſed, tho' generally with more Succeſs. Biſhop Burnet endeavours to prove, from the ſlender Allowance to Crook the King's Agent, in negotiating this Affair abroad, to confute an unjuſt Scandal, that all the Subſcriptions procured by [h] Crook, had been bought. In another Place, that Prelate aſſerts, "No Money, nor Bribes, were "given for Subſcriptions."

It is not of any great Importance, to the Validity or Invalidity of the King's Marriage, whether the foreign Univerſities were bribed to give their Opinion for the Divorce, or not? The national Church, and the two Univerſities of England, as they had certainly an equal Authority at leaſt to judge in the Caſe, ſo will be allowed to have been as competent Judges in it, as any Society of Men whatever in other Parts. Tho' perhaps it was ſuppoſed, the more Hands were obtained to atteſt the Unlawfulneſs of the King's Marriage, the Reaſons for diſſolving it might be thought ſo much the ſtronger: Numbers, with more weak and ignorant People, ſometimes ſupplying the Want of proper Evidence. The Truth therefore, of the main Queſtion, not being at all affected, whether this Cenſure in relation to Crook, be well or ill-grounded, I ſhall conſider, with that Indifference, which becomes a faithful Hiſtorian, whether in Fact, it harh really any good Foundation?

[i] Crook, ſo far as the Teſtimony of one, in his own Caſe, is to be conſidered, proteſted, that "He never gave nor promiſed any "Divine any Thing, 'till he had firſt freely written his Mind; and "that what he then gave, was rather an honourable Preſent, than "a Reward." In another Letter to the King he writes, "Upon "Pain of my Head, if the Contrary be proved, I never gave any "Man one Half-penny, before I had his Concluſion to your "Highneſs, without former Prayer or Promiſe of Reward for the "ſame." From whence it appears, ſaith Biſhop Burnet, that he not only had no Orders from the King, to corrupt Divines, but that his Orders were expreſs to the Contrary. This Concluſion, with all Deference to ſo great an Authority, is not inferred with that Force or Evidence which might have been expected. It only appears from the Premiſſes, that Crook, according to his own Declarations, did not, in Fact, give any Thing, directly or indirectly, to obtain Votes. But there is not the leaſt Appearance in them, of any Orders expreſſed or implied, that were given him to the contrary. His ſaying, upon Pain of my Head if the contrary be proved; doth not ſuppoſe, that the King had antecedently threatned him with capital Puniſhment, in caſe he ſhould expend Money with a direct View of procuring Votes, but only if any Thing in this reſpect injurious to the King's Honour, could be proved upon him, he was ready, as a Puniſhment of his Crime, to incur the Forfeiture of his Life.

It appears however, from the Bill of his Accounts exhibited by Biſhop Burnet, that he actually did expend ſeveral Sums of Money to ſuch Perſons, as had ſubſcribed for the Divorce. I am willing to allow the Diſtinction between an honourable Preſent, and a Reward, all the Force whereof it is capable; but I do not conceive, it will follow, that becauſe a Contribution was of no great Value, it could not therefore be deſigned or accepted for a Bribe. The Circumſtances of Time, Place, and Perſons, cauſe a ſenſible Difference in the Eſtimate of the ſame Things: And a few Crowns diſtributed two hundred Years ſince, among a Sett of poor Italian Monks, might have had more Force towards gaining their Votes, than ten times the Value would now have, could we ſuppoſe any one capable of forming ſuch a Deſign, towards corrupting the meaneſt Perſon that has a Vote in any Engliſh Corporation.

But to this Declaration of Crook, others have oppoſed what himſelf writes in a Letter to the King from Venice, concerning the Opinions of Men, in thoſe Parts, upon the Caſe. He doubts not, but all chriſtian Univerſities, if they ſhould be well handled, would earneſtly conclude with the King: He declares, that if he had been in Time ſufficiently furniſhed with Money, though beſides the Seals, which he then ſent, he had procured a hundred and ten Subſcriptions; yet it had been nothing in compariſon of what he eaſily might, and would have done; adding, that he had ſpent about the Getting that Seal an hundred Crowns, which he was obliged to borrow.

Here are Expreſſions, which ſeem to admit a ſuſpicious Conſtruction; and yet they may be interpreted to import no more, than that Crook expended the Moneys ſpecified, in the neceſſary Offices towards paſſing the Seal, or by way of reaſonable Gratuity to ſuch Perſons, who had taken Pains or been at any accidental Charge in aſſiſting him, and not ſtrictly on Account of their Votes. And as to what he inſinuates, that if it had not been for Want of Money, he could have done much greater Service, in the Matter of his Charge; all we can neceſſarily conclude from hence, is, that the

Want

Want of Money for his proper Expences in negotiating this Affair, even in a juſt and honourable Way, hindered him from making thoſe Inſtances, or maintaining that Correſpondence in other Parts, which the Nature of it required.

So that there may ſtill, perhaps, be thought Room, in a candid Way of Judging, to conclude, from the Evidence already produced, that the Subſcriptions obtained by this Agent, were not mercenary, but agreeable to the Rules of Prudence and Equity.

13. It will be far more difficult to account for a Teſtimony of Cavendiſh, who ſaith expreſsly, "That the Univerſities abroad were "fed with ſuch great Sums of Money by the Commiſſioners, that "they eaſily condeſcended to their Requeſts." To which I ſhall only add the Cenſure of Cornelius Agrippa upon ſuch Divines as ſuffered themſelves to be influenced in the Caſe by indirect Applications. "[k] Who, ſaith he, would have believed, that Divines, in Matters of "Faith and Conſcience, are not only perverted by Love, Hatred, or "Envy, but alſo ſometimes bribed by Banquets, or drawn from the "Truth by Gifts, unleſs themſelves had given evident Proofs of "their Vileneſs, in condemning the Marriage of the King of En-"gland?"

14. This Teſtimony of [l] Cornelius Agrippa is more conſiderable, not only as he was "a Man, according to Biſhop Burnet, very famous "for great and curious Learning, and ſo ſatisfied in the King's Cauſe, "that he gave it out the Thing was clear and indiſputable; but be-"cauſe, on that Account, he was hardly uſed by the Emperor, and "died in Priſon." So that if he was under any Prepoſſeſſion in the Caſe, it will be preſumed to have been on the King's Side.

2. Among the Prelates, Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter, with much Warmth, oppoſed the Divorce. In a [m] Letter to the Cardinal, he tells him, he had conſulted all the ancient Authors, to whom he could have recourſe upon the Caſe, and that they were greatly divided in their Opinion: According to ſome, the King's Marriage was prohibited by the Law of God; but with others, there was nothing repugnant to God's Law in it. Upon the Whole, having impartially examined the Reaſons, and Arguments on both Sides, he concluded; That thoſe, which might be alledged for the Validity of the King's Marriage, were much more forcible and convincing, than thoſe, which could be brought to invalidate his Marriage. And yet, ſuppoſing their Arguments of ſuch equal Force, that it had been difficult to know, which of them did really preponderate; in this Caſe, a Diſpenſation of the Pope, acting in the Plenitude of his Power, was ſufficient to put an End to all Diſputes upon the Queſtion: But this he only ſpeaks, by Way of Conceſſion, and to ſhew his Regard to the papal Authority, in determining Matters of Doubt; which, without a Power to that End, he ſuppoſeth had been given to the Sovereign Paſtor of the Church, in vain. He is himſelf at the ſame Time clearly of Opinion, that the King's Marriage was not condemned, on Account of any moral, or divine Prohibition.

[m] Coll. N° 88. Book III.

3. So

3. So that when an Inſtrument was ordered to be drawn up, which ſhould contain the Opinions of the Engliſh [n] Prelates upon their firſt Aſſembly, relating to the Divorce, the Biſhop of Rocheſter refuſed to ſign it with the Reſt of his Brethren: Tho' it has been diſputed, whether the Inſtrument then ſigned by the Biſhops, was a Declaration concerning the Unlawfulneſs of the Marriage, or only imported their Conſent, that the Queſtion, as to the Legality of it, might be debated.

4. But that this Inſtrument, notwithſtanding what has been ſuggeſted by a learned [o] Hiſtorian, did directly declare the Marriage unlawful, may, I think, be very reaſonably argued, from the Appeal which the King afterwards made in open Court to it. For of what great Service could it have been to the King to produce, and that with ſome Appearance of Oſtentation, an Inſtrument under the Hands and Seals of the Biſhops, which only licenſed them to enter upon the Queſtion, Whether his Marriage was unlawful, or not? I confeſs, according to Cavendiſh his Account of the Matter, we are not obliged to conclude, that the Inſtrument imported any Thing more than ſuch a Licenſe. But that it really did import more, beſides the Reaſon already mentioned, may, I think, with the greateſt Probability, be inferred from hence, that ſo pious and good a Man, as Fiſher, tho' he could not be brought by any Means to approve what he ſecretly condemned, yet would not have oppoſed the King in ſo reaſonable a Method towards his Satisfaction, as that of debating in an Aſſembly of the Fathers, whether his Marriage with Queen Catherine was really lawful, or not?

5. For there happened on this Occaſion, a Diſpute between Archbiſhop Warham, and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, concerning a Matter of Fact that remains to this Day undecided, and the Truth of which probably the laſt Day only may perfectly determine. When the King produced the Inſtrument, declaring, all the Prelates had granted their Seals to it, and the Archbiſhop of Canterbury confirmed what his Majeſty ſaid, the Biſhop of Rocheſter denied that he had given either his Hand or Seal: Upon which, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury particularly affirmed, that he had given them both. And when the Archbiſhop replied, that he uſed ſuch Words, and gave him Licenſe [p] to put his Hand and Seal to the Inſtrument. He ſtill perſiſted in his Denial, and told his Grace, under Correction, that what he ſaid was untrue.

6. The Queſtion between them was, concerning ſo late and conſiderable a Fact, that it cannot be well preſumed, either of them could, as yet, forget what had been ſaid, or done, in Relation to the main Circumſtances of it: And yet it ſeems hard to charge either of theſe truly venerable Prelates with ſuch a Prevarication, from a Suſpicion whereof, the common Probity of Men, ought to exempt them. Other Inſtances of this Kind, have occurred in Hiſtory. The moſt ſafe and equitable Way where Perſons are of eminent and eſtabliſhed Characters, is in ſuch Caſes to ſuſpend our Judgement: But if Curioſity ſhould carry any one ſo far, as to put him upon making a Judgement concerning them; there are certain Qualities, reſpecting natural Temper, the Hopes or Fears, or other Paſſions common to Men, whereby he may be, in ſome Meaſure, better enabled to form it.

7. Yet both theſe Prelates were ſo eminent for a Sanctity of Life and Manners, which might have become the Fathers of the apoſtolical Age; of ſo ſweet, happy, and generous Diſpoſitions, that their different Teſtimonies on this Occaſion, cannot be imputed either to an Inequality of Temper, or any indirect Views on either Side. If, on one Hand, it ought not to be ſuppoſed, that a Perſon veſted with the Archiepiſcopal Character, could be capable of prevaricating, or depoſing for Truth, what he knew to be falſe; it may be ſaid, on the other Side, that the World had not, for ſome Ages, ſeen, if, ſince the apoſtolical Age, it ever had ſeen a brighter Example of all thoſe Vertues which were proper to adorn, either the private Life of a Chriſtian, or the Character of a Prelate, than in the Perſon of Fiſher Biſhop of Rocheſter. In one Inſtance indeed, the Zeal of this holy Father for Religion, betrayed him into a Weakneſs, that cannot be juſtified or excuſed: His Belief concerning the pretended Inſpirations of Elizabeth Barton, diſcovered, that his great Senſe of Piety, did not exempt him from all the Arts of Deluſion, which may be practiſed; but this Error in Judgement, ought not to affect him in Point of a ſtrict and pure Morality, improved, and animated by an uncommon Meaſure of celeſtial Grace. If it be ſaid, that, after all, he ſuffered a capital Puniſhment for his Crimes againſt the State; even this Imputation, without entring at preſent into the Merits of the Cauſe, will, I conceive, be urged by very few Perſons, as a Reaſon why his Teſtimony, as to a plain Matter of Fact, ought to be leſs credited. A Teſtimony, not whereby he could propoſe to ſerve himſelf, or to gratify his Prince; but wherein he plainly oppoſed his own Intereſts. A Perſon of Sobriety and good Underſtanding, who will lay down his Life for the Truth, or for what he apprehends to be the Truth, gives the higheſt Evidence, that can be given, of his Integrity and Vertue. It may poſſibly be alledged, on the other Hand, that tho'

Warham was a very pious, learned, and excellent Prelate; yet his complying with the King, in obtaining a Decree from the Univerſity of Oxford, when Chancellor of it, after the Manner before ſpecified, may be urged to ſhew, that he was not, at all Times, perfectly free from the Impreſſions of Hope or Fear; but ſubject, in certain Inſtances, to the Power of like Paſſions with other Men.

8. Another Argument which may be urged, to ſhew, that the Subſcription of the Biſhops, did not proceed to declare the Marriage null, may be taken from the Share which the Cardinal had in the Conduct of this Matter. For if he had already declared himſelf on one [q] Side, he ought not, and probably would not have been join'd in Commiſſion with Campejus for a Judge in the Caſe; becauſe on that Suppoſition, all the World might except againſt him, as an unequal Judge. But all that can be inferred from this Argument is, that admitting the Biſhops in general, had really ſigned a Declaration, concerning the Illegality of the King's Marriage, yet the Cardinal, where no poſitive Evidence of his Signing it can be produced, ought to be excepted out of that Number. What appears to be the ſtrongeſt of all Arguments that the Biſhops were not ſo unanimous in declaring the Marriage unlawful, in Caſe they really did declare it ſo, is founded upon a Letter of the Cardinal to Sir Gregory [r] Caſſely at Rome, wherein he writes to this Effect, "That "the King had applied to the moſt learned Prelates, Divines, and "Canon-Lawyers, both in his Kingdom and elſewhere, about the "Force of the Pope's Diſpenſation, in Reference to the Marriage, "and that in Concluſion of the Debate, many of thoſe Doctors "affirmed, that the Pope could not diſpenſe in the firſt Degree of "Affinity, ſuch a Relaxation being morally evil, and prohibited "by the Law of God; yet provided the Pope could relax or give "any Relief in this Caſe, they unanimouſly agreed, ſuch a Liberty "was not to be indulged, but upon the greateſt and moſt urgent "Motives, which could not be pleaded in the King's Behalf.

Now they ſay, but I leave the Reader to judge concerning the Force of this negative Argument, that it is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, if the King had been ſupported with ſo unanimous a Reſolution of the Engliſh [ſ] Prelates, as hath been pretended, the Cardinal nal would have omitted to mention ſo important an Article in his Inſtructions to Caſſely, in a diſtinct Manner, and to make all the Advantage, he could, of it.

9. But neither the Judgement of private Doctors, nor of the Univerſities at home or abroad, nor of the Engliſh Clergy convening in a ſynodical Way, were, at this Time, thought of ſo great Importance to the King's Cauſe, as the ſingle Deciſion, if that could be obtained, of the Oracle, to whom all Appeals were then made, at Rome. To him, therefore, the Queen, had the Cauſe been tried here, would, in all Probability, have appealed; neither, as the Cardinal further repreſented to the King, could the Cauſe be tried in England, unleſs the Pope would furniſh him with a diſcretionary Commiſſion, and give him abſolute Authority in all Caſes, towards facilitating his Majeſty's Deſigns: He alſo adviſed, that the Queen ſhould be perſuaded to withdraw from the World, into ſome Convent, and take upon her a religious Habit; and if neither of theſe two Expedients ſhould be found effectual, then they ſhould proceed to conſider, what might be done towards ſatisfying the King's Conſcience in a more private Way.

10. Upon the Whole, a Reſolution was taken, that Ambaſſadors ſhould be ſent from our Court to Rome, who were to acquaint his Holineſs with the King's Scruples, concerning his Marriage, with the Pains himſelf had taken in ſtudying the Caſe, upon which he found himſelf in a State contrary to the Law of God. To theſe Arguments of a moral Nature, they were to add certain political Conſiderations from the dangerous Conſequences to the King himſelf, to his Iſſue, and to the Kingdom; and therefore they were to require a Bull from the Pope, which ſhould contain the following Particulars,

1*ſt*, A Commiſſion to two Cardinals, one of which ſhould be Cardinal Wolſey, to hear and determine the Cauſe in England.

2*d*, A decretal Sentence, by which the Pope ſhould pronounce the King's Marriage with Queen Catherine, void.

3*d*, A Diſpenſation for the King to contract a ſecond Marriage, and to legitimate his Children by both Marriages, if the Commiſſioners ſhould ſee Cauſe.

4*th*, A Pollicitation, that the Pope would not revoke any of theſe his Acts.

The Heads of this Inſtrument, ſuppoſed to be drawn up by the Cardinal, direct the ſtrongeſt Clauſes to be made, that it was poſſible to imagine.

The First and Third of these Demands, at the earnest Instances of the Ambassadors in the King's Name, and of the Letters from the Cardinal, were agreed to, and signed by the Pope himself, but not exactly according to the Minutes and Forms drawn up at our Court: But the Messenger by whom they were sent from his Holiness, told the King, upon Delivery of them, that if in any Respect they were thought insufficient, or if, in the Opinion of learned Men, it might be proper to make any Additions to them, his Holiness would be ready to supply all Defects, and withal to expedite such Briefs, Bulls, and Rescripts, as might most effectually conduce to a final Determination of the Matter. It gave some Disgust to the King and Cardinal, that the Pope, in drawing up the Commission and Dispensation, did not conform to the Minutes, which they had sent; and that, concerning the other two Instruments, which they demanded, his Holiness had returned no Answer at all; but their Resentments were much mitigated by the free Offer which he had made, to give all such additional Enforcement to his Bull, as might be judged convenient.

11. Knight was one of these Ambassadors, the other Sir Gregory Cassely: In the [t] Letter before referred to, which the Cardinal wrote to Sir Gregory, we discover the Reasons upon which his Eminency proceeded in Relation to this Affair of the Divorce.

The Arguments, which he employed, to induce the Pope to dissolve the King's Marriage, were grounded, first upon the Opinion of several Prelates and Divines, who had pronounced his Marriage unlawful: Secondly, a political Reason was urged, respecting the Peace and Safety of the Kingdom, the Divorce being considered as the only effectual Means of securing them. For unless the Legitimacy of the King's Issue should be ascertained, Contests about the Succession to the Crown, would unavoidably arise. The Nation had been formerly much embroiled, and sometimes brought to the Brink of Ruin, by Competitions for the Sovereign Power where the Title was less perplexed, than it might appear, upon the King's Demise, at present: That Instances of the like Misfortunes from the Disputes between the Houses of York and Lancaster, were yet fresh in the Memory of Men.

Another Argument to dispose his Holiness to approve the Divorce, was taken from the divided State of Christendom, at that Time. Several Princes had usurped upon the Jurisdiction of the Church, and some of them had withdrawn their Obedience from the Holy See: To prevent a further Defection, it was necessary to apply the safest Remedy. The King of England's Protection and Assistance, if his Holiness should think fit to gratify him in this Matter, might aſſuredly be depended on: And to ſhew, that his Requeſt, was not without Precedent, his Holineſs is reminded, that the Emperor had lately been diſpenſed with in a like Caſe. For he had obliged himſelf upon Oath to marry the Princeſs Mary; and yet notwithſtanding this ſacred and ſolemn Engagement, the Pope, for certain political Reaſons, had diſcharged him from it, and even with the King's Conſent.

Matter,

12. But that the King's Requeſt might be more favourably received at the Court of Rome, it was thought proper to move it after a Manner, that might give the leaſt Occaſion of Umbrage or Offence to his Holineſs. To have queſtioned the Power of Pope Julius to grant the Diſpenſation for the King's Marriage, and, upon that Account, to have inſiſted upon the Illegality of it, would not have been at all agreeable to the Temper of a Court, jealous of every Thing, that might tend to a Diminution, in any Reſpect, of the Authority claimed and aſſerted by it. Had the Pope admitted ſuch an Allegation, he would, in Effect, have ſuffered his acknowledged Juriſdiction, at that Time, to be impleaded in his own Court. This was, by no Means, a probable Way of gaining him, to limit the Exerciſe of his Power; eſpecially, when the papal Authority had not only been, in ſeveral Places, diſputed, but openly rejected: And therefore the Cardinal propoſes an Expedient towards invalidating rhe Bull of Pope Julius, without offering the leaſt Injury, at the ſame Time, to the papal Authority in general.

13. He alledgeth, That the Diſpenſation for the King's Marriage by Julius, was obtained and granted, upon a falſe Suggeſtion. That the Pretence, upon which it is ſaid the King deſired this Marriage, was, to the End a good Correſpondence between Henry the Seventh and Ferdinand and Iſabella of Spain might be continued: Whereas there was neither any Miſunderſtanding, nor the leaſt Appearance of a Rupture between theſe Princes, at that Time; beſides, the King was then ſo young, as not to be capable of ſuch a Conſideration: That he neither conſented to the Subject-matter of this Bull, nor was acquainted with the Deſign, or Methods of procuring it; and that 'till the Bull was granted, he neither deſired the Marriage, nor knew any Thing concerning it. Upon which Grounds, all the Doctors and Prelates, to whom the Cardinal had before referred, declared that Julius his Diſpenſation was not of ſufficient Force to juſtify the Marriage. And laſtly, That the King himſelf had expreſsly, and by a [u] Deed under his own Hand, diſclaimed the Marriage.

14. Among

14. Among other Inſtructions in this Letter from the Cardinal to Sir Gregory, he was directed to apply immediately to the Pope, and to make Inſtances to his Holineſs, that he would privately ſign a Commiſſion, to the End, the King's Cauſe might be heard in England; and that in this Commiſſion, for which a Form was ſent, the Cardinal ſhould be empowered to name ſuch Aſſiſtants to act with him, as he might think proper: A formal Inſtrument for the Diſpenſation was alſo prepared; and if the Pope ſhould be induced to comply with what was propoſed, in theſe two Reſpects, he might be aſſured, as the King had already remitted large Sums for the Payment of the French Army in Italy, he would ſpare no Pains or Expence, to oblige the Court of Rome: but employ the whole Force of his Kingdom againſt the Emperor in Flanders, 'till he ſhould conſtrain him to enlarge the Pope, and reſtore the Church to its former Power and Dignity. But in Caſe the Pope had already, in Purſuance of any Agreement with the Emperor, obtained his Liberty, Sir Gregory was to repreſent to his Holineſs, how little Reaſon he had to truſt to the Honour or Engagements of that Prince; who had ſhewn, on ſeveral Occaſions, ſo little Regard to publick Faith, and made it his Buſineſs to invade the Rights and depreſs the Authority of the Church. And if his Holineſs ſhould object, that the Cardinal, as being the King's Subject and prime Miniſter, might not be preſumed an equal or indifferent Judge in the Caſe, and could not therefore in Reaſon or Equity, have a Commiſſion granted to that End; Sir Gregory was to uſe all his Art and Addreſs, in order to obviate this Difficulty, and to give his Holineſs the ſtrongeſt Aſſurances, that the Cardinal would proceed in the Cauſe with all the Juſtice and Integrity imaginable. But if, after all, this Difficulty could not be removed, Sir Gregory was next to propoſe, that the Commiſſion ſhould be granted to Staphilius Dean of the Rota, who was then in England, but not to conſent to the Pope's Nomination of any other Foreigner. He was further charged to acquaint the Pope, that the King would conſider all Delays in this important Affair, as, in Effect, a tacit Denial of his Requeſt. If his Holineſs expreſſed an Inclination to conſult any of his Cardinals upon the Point, he muſt endeavour, as much as poſſible, to divert it. If that cannot be done, Sir Gregory is to addreſs himſelf to ſuch Cardinal's, whoſe Advice his Holineſs may think fit to demand; to ſtate the Juſtice of the King's Caſe to them; and to engage them, by the Aſſurance of ſome proper Acknowledgement, to the King's Intereſts. With this Diſpatch, Letters were ſent to other Cardinals to be made uſe of, as Occaſion might require; with particular Inſtructions to engage the Cardinal Datary: And becauſe Money is always acceptable to Perſons under Reſtraint, or otherwiſe in Diſtreſs, Sir Gregory had a Remittance of Ten Thouſand Ducats to Venice, Venice, with a diſcretionary Liberty of diſtributing them, as he ſhould judge moſt convenient for the King's Service.

15. The Inſtructions to Secretary Knight, were much of the ſame Import with thoſe to Sir Gregory. They were ordered to act in Concert, and each of them to labour the Point, wherewith he was charged, to his utmoſt Power. The Pope had now eſcaped out of the Caſtle of Saint Angelo, and was arrived at [x] Orvieto, where, about the End of December, the Secretary and the Ambaſſador Caſſely, waited on his Holineſs, and congratulated him in the Name of the King, and of the Cardinal, upon the Recovery of his Liberty. When they opened their Commiſſion to his Holineſs, he ſeemed inclined to give the King Satisfaction, and did not refuſe the Expedient propoſed by them, for trying the Cauſe in England; but told them, at the ſame Time, that not being verſed in drawing up Forms of Commiſſion, he would conſult the Cardinal Saint Quater, and ſoon take an Opportunity of acquainting them with his Reſolution. The Ambaſſadors obſerving how great Deference the Pope paid to the Judgement and Advice of that Cardinal, went immediately and delivered the King's Letters to him, requeſting his Favour, and giving him Expectations of being gratified. When, after this preparatory Diſcourſe, they had produced their Commiſſion to his Holineſs, he objected to ſeveral Clauſes in the Inſtrument of it; and ſaid, that according to the Form wherein it was drawn up, it could not be paſſed, without derogating at once from the Honour of the King, of the Pope, and the Cardinal of York. Upon this, at their Inſtance, himſelf drew up the Minutes of a new Form. That Inſtrument being engroſſed, his Holineſs, before he delivered it executed to them, to enhance the Obligation of his Compliance herein, repreſented, how many Difficulties he had ſurmounted, and to what great Dangers he was willing to expoſe himſelf for the King's Service. He told them, that when a Priſoner in the Caſtle of St. Angelo, he was required, in the Emperor's Name, by the General of the Obſervants in Spain, not to paſs any Act preparative to a Divorce between the King and Queen, or which might have any Manner of Relation to that Affair; particularly, that he ſhould not grant any Powers for the Trial of the King's Cauſe by any Judge in the King's Dominions: His Holineſs added, Tho' he was now more at Liberty, than he had been formerly, yet he did not look upon himſelf as perfectly free from all Reſtraint, ſo long as the Almains and Spaniards were ſo powerful in Italy; and he was abſolutely of Opinion, that by granting this Commiſſion, he ſhould come to an open Breach with the Emperor, without any Hopes of an Accommodation. However, he would rather incur the Danger, which apparently threatned him, than give the leaſt Occaſion to the King, or the Cardinal of York, to ſuſpect him capable of Ingratitude: And, upon this, he put the Commiſſion and the Diſpenſation ſigned, into the Hands of Secretary Knight; deſiring both the Ambaſſadors, at the ſame Time, that they would move the King to have a little Patience in the Matter, and not to precipitate him beyond all Hopes of Recovery; for his Ruin would be inevitable, if his Majeſty, when he ſhould receive the Inſtruments, ſhould immediately ſuffer them to be divulged or executed.

16. Secretary Knight, by [y] Letter, certified to his Majeſty, that a Diſpenſation had been obtained under Lead, in as [z] ample a Manner, as the Minutes ſent from England did require; and that ſufficient Powers alſo, for trying the Cauſe, were granted to the Cardinal, according to a Form drawn up by the Cardinal Saint Quater, though not exactly according to the Minutes tranſmitted for that Purpoſe from England. The Secretary adds, as by Direction from the Pope, that if Monſieur de Lautrech were arrived, with the Army under his Command, his Holineſs is of Opinion, he might with good Colour, alledge to the Emperor, that he was required by the Engliſh Embaſſadors, and over-awed by that General to proceed, as he had done, in the Buſineſs. By this Means, Appearances might be ſaved; and if he ſhould be ſo unhappy as to offend the Emperor, his Offence would not be interpreted to proceed from Inclination or Deſign, but from Conſtraint. He promiſed, at the ſame Time, to diſpatch a Commiſſion to the King of England, which ſhould bear Date, after the Time he had been over-awed by Lautrech's Army. This Fineſs of the Pope, made the Secretary unwilling to truſt too much to his Schemes, the Iſſue whereof might be uncertain; ſo he haſtned his Return for England, bringing the Commiſſion and Diſpenſation along with him.

17. With what Caution, the Pope proceeded in this Affair, appears farther from a Diſpatch of Sir Gregory Caſſely to the Engliſh Court; where, on the Part of the Pope, and, in his Name, he ſaith, If the King, who is the beſt Judge in that Caſe, can ſatisfy his own Conſcience, the beſt Method would be, with all convenient Speed, to determine the Matter, by marrying another Wife, and to move the Conclave to ſend a Legate who ſhould confirm the Sentence of Divorce. But this Advice he deſired might be conſidered, as proceeding not from himſelf, but from the Cardinal Saint Quater and Simonetta; which Expedient, indeed, if purſued, had proved much ſafer and eaſier both to the King and to his Ho-

lineſs, than the Commiſſion afterwards granted to the two Legates; which, as it took up more Time, ſo on each Part, was attended with far greater Difficulties. Yet the King, either from Tenderneſs of Conſcience, or in Regard to the Hazard he might run, if the Pope ſhould not give his ſubſequent Confirmation to ſuch a Procedure, did not think fit to approve it; but choſe rather to demand larger Powers, towards proſecuting the Matter, than thoſe which Secretary Knight had been able to obtain: Who, upon his Return, being in an ill State of Health, and not in a Condition to travel, had forwarded the Protonotary Gambara, with the Diſpenſation and Commiſſion to the Engliſh Court, following him by eaſy Journeys. The Perſons empowered to try the Cauſe in England, were the two Cardinals Campejus and Wolſey; both of them ſtiled Legates a Latere; and having full Power to hear and determine the Cauſe in a ſummary Way, without being obliged to obſerve all the Forms or Ceremonials of the Law. And they are commiſſioned to execute theſe Powers, notwithſtanding any Authority of general Councils, apoſtolical Conſtitution, or Decrees whatever, to the contrary. And to give farther Strength to this Grant, his Holineſs, about a Month after, ſigned a Pollicitation, whereby he obliged himſelf to confirm the Sentence of the Legates; provided, they ſhould purſue the Tenor of their Commiſſion, proteſting, at the ſame Time, he would never retract what they ſhould determine, upon any Colour or Motive, or by Occaſion of any Force whatever.

18. The Pope, in the Commiſſion, delegates the ſame Authority to them, as if he ſhould [b] perſonally have heard or determined the Cauſe. From whence it has been inferred, that he ought to have been abſolutely concluded by the Deciſion of the two Legates. Yet it appears, from a Letter of John Caſſely, to Cardinal Wolſey, notwithſtanding the ſeeming Plenitude of theſe Powers in the Commiſſion; that it was not the Pope's Intent to refer the Deciſion of the Cauſe finally, and without Reſerve, to the Legates. For his Holineſs, in Diſcourſe with that Agent, told him, [c] That if the King and Cardinal were inclined to diſmiſs Campejus, upon a Pretence, that they deſigned to proceed no further in hearing the Cauſe, they might afterwards bring it to what Iſſue they pleaſed; provided, they ſhould not make uſe of the Powers committed to them to do any Thing unjuſt; declaring himſelf ready at the ſame Time to confirm the Legate's Sentence, in Caſe the Allegations had been firſt proved in Court. But, indeed, this very Limitation in the Bull itſelf, provided the Legates ſhould purſue the Tenor of it, ſheweth, that the Pope had not put the final Deciſion of the Matter ſo abſolutely in the Power of the Legates, but he could ſtill review and correct ſuch Sentence, as they might paſs upon it. For who could be ſo proper a Judge, as himſelf, whether in Fact, they had truly, and in all Reſpects, acted conformably to the Tenor of his own Commiſſion? But if what Saunders reporteth, be true, that Campejus had it expreſsly in his Inſtructions, not to give any definitive Sentence for the Divorce, without expreſs Commandment from the Pope, and that this was one of the [d] chief and ſtricteſt Articles of his Charge; then there is no Room to doubt, but that the Pope's real Deſign was (if he ſhould afterwards think fit) to reſume the Hearing of the Cauſe to himſelf, whatever Determination the Legates might make in it. Beſides this Order, which was ſent after Campejus, Saunders obſerves, he received three other Meſſages upon his Way to England, directing firſt, that he ſhould make ſlow and eaſy Journeys: Secondly, That when he came to England, he ſhould uſe his beſt Efforts towards a Reconciliation between the King and Queen: And thirdly, if that could not be effected, he was to perſuade the Queen to retire from the World, and take upon her a religious Habit.

19. It concerned the Pope, under his diſtreſſed Circumſtances at that Time, to act with all the Caution and Reſerve imaginable: And therefore, tho' there wanted neither Perſuaſions nor Menaces on the Part of our Court, to induce his Compliance with the King's Deſires; and tho' he even appeared of himſelf, inclined to gratify the King; yet, the viſible and immediate Danger he was in from the Imperial Forces, required, that he ſhould give as little Umbrage or Offence, as poſſible, to the Emperor. And therefore, to the End his Proceedings might be more unexceptionable, by the Advice of the Cardinals Saint Quater and Simonetta, he propoſed the Expedient beforementioned, that if the King, who beſt knew the State of his own Conſcience, was ſatisfied in the Matter, the Cardinal of York ſhould proceed to Sentence; the King might marry another Wife; and then apply to the Conclave to diſpatch a Legate for Confirmation of the Matter. But that, in the mean While, the ſafeſt Method would be, to keep the Powers tranſmitted from Rome to England, ſecret: That the Cardinal might juſtify his Proceedings, either upon the Foot of his Commiſſion ſent by Secretary Knight, or in Virtue of his legatine Powers: But if there ſhould be a formal Proceſs in the Cauſe, and the Queen be ſummoned into Court, ſhe would proteſt againſt the partial Influences of the Place, and the Judges; upon which his Holineſs would be preſſed by the Emperor for an Inhibition to ſtop the Cauſe; and, by that Means, the King be diſabled from contracting another Marriage; or in Caſe his Majeſty ſhould have no Regard to the Inhibition, his Iſſue, at leaſt 'till Judgement could be given in his Favour, would be accounted illegitimate: And beſides, the Imperialiſts would inſiſt upon a Commiſſion for trying the Cauſe at Rome. Now if the Pope ſhould be preſſed upon theſe Points, by the Imperialiſts, how could his Holineſs well refuſe to grant either of them. But, if the King ſhould immediately proceed to marry, the Reaſons of demanding them, would reſpectively ceaſe; or if, after all, the Emperor objecting againſt the Legates, as unequal Judges, ſhould move for an Avocation of the Cauſe to Rome; then if there ſhould be no Method found of diverting this Motion, the Pope will uſe all Expedition in hearing the Cauſe; determine it to the King's Satisfaction; and proceed in ſuch a Manner, that neither Spaniard nor German ſhall have any juſt Pretence to except againſt the Proceſs.

1. THE King, towards the Cloſe of the former Year, ſent [e] Sir Francis Brian, and Peter Vannes, an Italian, his Secretary for the Latin Tongue, to Rome. Their Inſtructions were written with the King's own Hand, and contained, in general, That 1528. 1529.

they ſhould endeavour to diſſuade the Pope from entring into any League with the Emperor; whoſe Deſign, as the King repreſented it, was to diveſt him of his Authority, and the Patrimony of the Church, and forcibly to ſubſtitute one Angelo, a Cordelier, in his Stead; who ſhould be obliged not to aſſume, or exerciſe any ſecular Juriſdiction, of which the Emperor would take the Adminiſtration upon himſelf. To prevent ſuch a ſacrilegious Attempt, the King adviſed his Holineſs to keep a good Guard, offering, on his own Part, to aſſiſt him with Two thouſand Men. They were farther commanded, to ſearch privately at Rome for a certain Brief, pretended to be a Supplement to the Bull of Julius the Second, authoriſing the King's Marriage, but which was not to be found among the King's Records.

2. The Suſpicions concerning this Brief, may be ſeen at large in Lord Herbert, and his Lordſhip has propoſed them with all the Force whereof they ſeem capable. But I ſhall only recite from him the ſummary Account which he gives of this Matter: Upon his producing a Copy of the Brief, he repreſents it as having been objected, that "it appeared to contain many Falſehoods and Suſpi-"cions; and particularly, that the Stile, Inditing, as alſo many "Clauſes and Circumſtances differ from the Bull; ſo that it may "be thought forged ſince the Time of Queſtions moved concer-"ning the King's Marriage; as by comparing them together, may "be manifeſtly gathered."

To confirm this general Charge, the following Reaſons were alledged.

1*ſt*, That in the Regiſter of the Briefs at Rome, no ſuch Brief is found, nor any Argument, that ſuch a Brief was made.

2*d*, That no ſuch Brief is extant among the King's Records, nor was any Mention made of it, in the private Treaties of the Marriage.

3*d*, That in the Date of the ſaid Brief, as it is exemplified, the Year of our Lord is diſcrepant from the vulgar Account: For whereas the Stile of the Court of Rome begins always from the Nativity of our Lord, this ſeems to be a Year before Julius was made Pope.

3. But notwithſtanding ſeveral Preſumptions, ſome of which appeared very ſtrong againſt the Truth of the Brief, the Atteſtations of thoſe, who ſubſcribed to it; and who were Perſons of the firſt Rank and Dignity, render it difficult, and, in the higheſt Degree, derogatory to the Emperor's Honour, to ſuppoſe there was any direct or deſigned Forgery in the Caſe.

The moſt probable Account of the Matter is, that ſuch a Brief had really been obtained; yet not in a fair, regular, or open Way, by Conſent both of the Engliſh and Spaniſh Courts; but, clandeſtinely, by

by the Court of Spain, to obviate ſuch Difficulties, as it was apprehended, might, one Time or other, conſequentially ariſe; and wherein it was therefore provided, that the diſpenſing Powers ſhould be more full, expreſs, and ample, than thoſe, which were contained in the Bull.

4. The Ambaſſadors were further required, to diſcover, under borrowed Names, whether if the Queen ſhould take on her a religious Habit, the King might not have a Diſpenſation from his Holineſs to marry again, and what Precedents could be alledged for ſuch a Diſpenſation? Or if the King ſhould withdraw into a Monaſtery, and bind himſelf by Vow to the Rules of it, whether the Pope might not afterwards abſolve his Majeſty from his Vow; and leave the Queen under the Reſtraint of her Vow? Or if this could not be done; whether the King might not have a Diſpenſation for Bigamy, (for which great Reaſons and Precedents in the Old Teſtament were pretended,) whereby the Children of both Wives ſhould be legitimated? Theſe Articles were to be propoſed in Confidence, with the greateſt Caution and Secrecy; and ſo, as the Caſe might not, directly, appear to be the King's, but that of any other Perſon.

5. Concerning a Diſpenſation to the King, for marrying two Wives: The Pope, by Advice of the Cardinals Saint Quater and Simonetta, propoſed to Caſſali the following Expedient, "[f] That the "King ſhould commit his Cauſe to the Court; and if, upon Exa- "mination, he might find his Conſcience disburthened before God, "and he could well juſtify the Thing, (of which he was as able a "Judge as any Doctor in the World,) he ſhould marry another "Wife, and follow his Suit of Divorce." From which it appears, that the Pope's Adviſing the King to take another Wife, if by that Means he could ſatisfy his Conſcience, was not with a Deſign of giving him a Diſpenſation to have two Wives at the ſame Time, but in order to facilitate a Sentence of Divorce from his former Wife: For it is plain, the Proceſs was to go on, and thereupon Judgement to enſue. In ſhort, it appears from the Letter of [g] Caſſali, from which I have above tranſcribed, that the Pope thought it for the King's Intereſt to marry again; and the Reaſon was, becauſe the Pope would be under a Neceſſity of determining ſpeedily, which of the Marriages ought to be reputed good: And ſo he might, without any Obſtruction from the Emperor, which would otherwiſe be unavoidable, declare the Nullity of the King's former Marriage. The Pope, therefore, did not, as Biſhop Burnet would inſinuate from this Letter of Caſſali, offer the King, according to his Requeſt, to have two Wives; but would only have put him in a more ready and regular Way of having one lawful Wife. But what this learned Hiſtorian affirms, That none of the German Divines went ſo far as the Pope did, who did plainly offer to grant the King Licenſe to have two Wives, is ſtill more ſurpriſing. That the Exceſs of his Zeal againſt Popery, ſhould ſometimes tranſport him beyond his uſual Temper and Moderation, may more eaſily be accounted for; but that he ſhould ſo far forget, or rather appear to forget himſelf, as to ſhew no Regard to known Facts; to Facts, referred to by himſelf, and, whereof he could not therefore be ignorant; diſcovers a Negligence, to ſay no worſe, by no Means reconcileable with the Character of an exact Hiſtorian. Now tho' this learned Prelate has obſerved, that none of the German Divines went ſo far in this Matter, as the Pope did; yet he had, not many Lines before, ſaid, that, in the Opinion of Grineus, who was a German Divine, tho' the King's Marriage was ill made, it ought not to be diſſolved; and that, he was inclined rather to adviſe, the King ſhould take another Wife, keeping the Queen ſtill. This is ſo flagrant an Inconſiſtency, that I forbear to make any farther Remarks upon it. Preſently after, the Hiſtorian adds, that "Melancthon and Others, "had no Mind to enter much into the Diſpute about the King's "Divorce, both for fear of the Emperor, and becauſe they judged "the King was led into it by diſhoneſt Affections." So that the Reaſon, why Melancthon himſelf, would not approve of the ſecond Marriage, might be becauſe he was afraid of the Emperor, or thought the King was led into it by diſhoneſt Affections, and not becauſe he thought Polygamy unlawful. For after all, he actually concurred with other German Divines, in an Aſſembly at Wittemberg, in allowing the Landgrave of Heſſe to marry a ſecond [b] Wife, while the Firſt was living, and not divorced.

7. I ſhall make but one Obſervation more, relating to this Head, on our learned Hiſtorian. "It cannot, ſaith he, be denied, that "the Proteſtants did expreſs great Sincerity in this Matter; ſuch, "as became Men of Conſcience, who were acted by true Princi-"ples, and not by Maxims of Policy; for if theſe had governed "them, they had ſtruck in more compliantly with a great Prince, "who was then alienated from the Pope, and in very ill Terms "with the Emperor."

8. This Aſſertion, tho' it might be really juſt in its ſelf, yet ſeems to ſtand in a very inconvenient Place after the preceeding Paragraph; wherein the Hiſtorian affirms, that the Proteſtants were over-awed in delivering their Opinion of the King's Divorce, by

[b] See B. 2. p. 150.

Fear

Fear of the Emperor. How is it then true, that they were not acted by Maxims of Policy? The Conduct of the German Divines, eſpecially in the Caſe of the Landgrave of Heſſe, appears to require a more able, at leaſt a more artful Advocate.

9. The Inſtructions written by the King's own [i] Hand, by which Sir Francis Bryan and Peter Vannes were to conduct their Negotiations at Rome, will give the Reader the beſt Light into this Matter. He ſhall have thoſe Inſtructions in the Words of Harpsfield, who extracted them from original Letters of the King and Cardinal.

" Theſe Agents were required perfectly and ſubſtantially to in-" ſtruct themſelves againſt the Coming of Secretary Knight, of " certain Queſtions, by the Learning, Experience, and Knowledge " of the beſt Advocates they could get in the Court of Rome, to be " retained of the King's Council, and to be of his Grace's Part " made ſure, by ſecret Rewards, Pact, or Convention; that af" terwards they ſhould not be allured or drawn to the adverſe Part.
" The Queſtions were propoſed in Form following, whereof I ſhall
" ſhift no Part of the King's own Words, viz.

Whether if the Queen, for the great and manifold Effects that may enſue thereof, can be moved, and induced to take Vow of Chaſtity, and enter into Religion, the Pope's Holineſs may, ex Plenitudine Poteſtatis, diſpenſe with the King's Highneſs to proceed thereupon ad duas Nuptias, and the Children to be procreate in the Same to be legitimate. And if it be a Thing that the Pope per Caſe may not do (ſtanding ſuch Laws as be already written, both divine and humane, and uſing his ordinary Power) yet whether his Holineſs may do it of his mere and abſolute Power, as a Thing that the ſame may diſpenſe in above the Law, muſt ſecretly and perfectly be underſtood and known; and what Precedent has been ſeen of like Matter; or how the Court of Rome ſhall define and determine; or what it doth uſe, or may do herein: So that it may perfectly and aſſuredly appear, that no Exception, no Scruple, Queſtion, or Doubt, can or may be found, or alledged hereafter in any Thing, that may or ſhall be affirmed to be the Pope's Power, touching that Matter. Semblably foraſmuch that 'tis like, that the Queen ſhall make marvellous Difficulty to enter into Religion, or make Vow of Chaſtity; but that to induce her thereunto, there muſt be Ways and Means of high Policy uſed, and all Things poſſible deviſed to encourage her to the ſame; wherein per Caſe ſhe ſhall reſolve that in no ways ſhe will condeſcend ſo to do, unleſs the King's Highneſs do the like for his Part. The King's ſaid Orators ſhall therefore, in like ways, inſtruct themſelves by their ſecret learned Council in the Court of Rome, if for ſo great a Benefit to enſue to the King's Succeſſion, Realm, and Subjects, with the Quiet of his Conſcience, his Grace ſhould promiſe to enter Religion, or make Vow of Chaſtity for his Part, only thereby to induce the Queen thereto, whether in that Caſe, the Pope's Holineſs may diſpenſe with the King's Highneſs's Promiſe or Vow, diſcharging his Grace clearly of the ſame, and thereupon to proceed ad ſecunda vota cum legitimatione prolis, as is aforeſaid. Furthermore, to provide ſurely for all Events, as well propter conceptum odium, as for the Danger that may enſue to the King's Perſon, by Continuance of his Grace in the Queen's Company (from whoſe Bed he is utterly reſolved to abſtain) if it ſhall be found and appear aſſuredly, that the Pope may no ways diſpenſe with the King to proceed ad ſecunda vota, the Queen being alive in Religion, but that ſhe being in Religion, or without, ſhall ſtill be reputed his Wife; then ſhall the King's ſaid Orators perfectly enquire, and enſearch, whether the Pope's Holineſs may diſpenſe with his Grace upon the great Conſiderations that reſt herein, to have duas Uxores; and that the Children of the ſaid ſecond Matrimony, ſhall be as well legitimate as thoſe of the Firſt; wherein ſome great Reaſons and Precedents, eſpecially of the Old Teſtament, appear.

10. The Conclave expreſſed ſuch a Diſpoſition to comply with theſe Propoſals, that his Majeſty, on that Occaſion, wrote to them a [k] Letter of Thanks. Tho' the Cardinal was ſtill ſo anxious about the Event of the Matter, that in two Letters, one to the King's Agents, the other to the Pope, he employs all the [l] Topicks of Perſuaſion to ſollicit the Divorce, which were proper to make an Impreſſion, and to diſcover, ſo far as Words could poſſibly diſcover that he ſpake from the Heart.

11. Towards the latter [m] End of this Year, Cardinal Campejus arrived in London; but being troubled with the Gout, declined the Ceremony of a publick Entry; tho' the [n] King was very deſirous he ſhould be received in the City, in the moſt ſplendid and honorary Manner. After a Repoſe of a few Days, he had Audience of the King, who received him moſt favourably; and to whom he made a Speech in Latin, by his Secretary; the Import of which may be ſeen in Godwyn; as of the Anſwer, which was then made to it by Fox Biſhop of Hereford. Godwyn, on this Occaſion, repreſents Campejus as a [o] Perſon of great Simplicity, who ſpake concerning the Matter of his Charge to the King, according to his true and real Sentiments.

12. The Effect of the Proceedings by the Legates was, that the King and Queen were cited to appear, and did actually appear before them as Judges in the Cauſe, at Bridewell in Black Fryers; where, according to Cavendiſh, they commanded the Cryer to proclaim Silence, while the Commiſſion was both read to the Court and to

13. When ſhe had ſpoken, making to the King a low Courteſy, ſhe went out of Court; upon which, the Cryer was ordered to call her in again; but ſhe refuſed to Return or make Anſwer: The King, after her Departure, ſaid ſeveral Things in her Commendation, but mentioned nothing concerning the ſolemn Appeal ſhe had made before the Court to his Conſcience, Whether he did not receive her a Virgin to his Bed? which affords a very ſtrong Preſumption, that her Appeal was indeed well founded; for otherwiſe, it can neither be reaſonably ſuppoſed ſhe would have made it; nor that the King would have been ſilent, where he had ſo fair an Opportunity of removing one great Obſtacle to the Divorce, and which it ſo highly concerned him to remove, in order to effect it.

14. But it is not my Deſign, neither is it practicable, within the Bounds I have preſcribed to my ſelf, to write a particular Hiſtory of the Divorce; they who would acquaint themſelves with the Proceſs towards it more at large, may conſult Lord Herbert, Biſhop Burnet, Mr. Collier, and Mr. Strype: I ſhall principally confine my ſelf to ſuch Memoirs relating to it, as I have been ſupplied with from Cavendiſh, and the Manuſcripts of Doctor James in the Bodleian Library; which none of theſe Hiſtorians, nor any other I have met with upon the Subject, appear to have conſulted; tho' certain Inſtruments indeed, from which Doctor James made his Extracts, have been cited by ſeveral of them.

15. Among theſe Extracts, Knight going to Rome with Bennet, writes from [q] Paris, that the Pope diſcovers great Remorſe for his having granted the [r] Decretal Bull, ſaying, If the Emperor ſhould come to the Knowledge of it, his Ruin would be inevitable; and that Salviati, who governed his Holineſs, was of Opinion, if Sentence ſhould be given according to the Tenour of the Bull, it would not only be null in it ſelf, but alſo endanger the Pope's Depoſition; that it was not only neceſſary therefore his Holineſs ſhould be freed from all Apprehenſions of Fear from the Imperialiſts; but that ſuch Meaſures ought to be taken, as might render the Power of the King and his Confederates formidable to them: And indeed, how juſt Cauſe of Fear the Pope had from the Imperial Troops, ſufficiently appears from a former Letter of [ſ] Sir Gregory Caſſaly, to which I ſhall refer the Reader in the Margin.

16. In Anſwer to the Letter from Knight and Bennet, the Cardinal writes, that the [t] Pope had effectually confirmed their Intelligence, by ſending Campana, a Gentleman of his Bedchamber, to the Engliſh Court, the Import of whoſe Charge was, That he ſhould give the King the ſtrongeſt Aſſurances of his Zeal for his Majeſty's Service; notwithſtanding any Difficulties or Dangers, to which either his Perſon or Dignity might be expoſed. To which End, his Holineſs would not only do, whatever in Juſtice, or Equity might be done; but whatever the Plenitude of his Power, towards promoting the King's Affair, could be employed to effect.

17. But how much ſoever the Pope was diſpoſed to ſerve the King, the Situation wherein he then was, obliged him to act with all poſſible Caution. His own Miniſters did not only repreſent the Danger he was in from the Imperialiſts, but [u] Knight himſelf, in a Letter to the King, informs his Majeſty, "tho' every "Thing was paſſed to his Highneſs his Pleaſure, yet he cannot ſee, "but in caſe the ſame be put in Execution at that Time, the Pope "would be utterly undone; the Imperial Troops daily ſpoiling "Caſtles and Towns about Rome." But the Grounds of the Pope's Fear, on Account of their ſuperior Force, and their Depredations, are more fully and particularly ſtated in another [x] Diſpatch from the ſame Hand; which the Reader may conſult in the Collections, and wherein ſome other memorable Facts are incidentally mentioned.

18. Towards removing the Apprehenſions, wherewith the Pope was over-awed by the Imperialiſts, the Cardinal propoſes to his [y] Ho-lineſs, in the Name of the King his Maſter and of the French King, that he ſhall, at their equal Expence, be furniſhed with a Guard, to conſiſt of One thouſand, fifteen hundred, or two thouſand Men. And which, might not only ſerve for the Protection and Security of his Perſon, but give greater Authority to all his Deſigns and Undertakings.

19. I ſhall not diſſemble, that according to two Extracts from the learned Collector cited by me, it was thought proper certain Influences ſhould be made uſe of at the Court of Rome, towards expediting the King's Affair; which, if thoſe Extracts were to be explained in the ſtricteſt Senſe, do not appear eaſily reconcileable, with the equitable Procedure, that ought to be obſerved in all Courts of Judicature. I ſhall, without any Comment, leave the Reader to make the moſt candid Judgement of them, that he apprehends the Words [z] will reaſonably bear.

20. I ſhall here take Occaſion, from the Time when it appears Campejus came into England, as one of the Judges in the King's Cauſe, to refute a Story which has been generally believed upon the Credit of Fox; that it was through Cranmer's Advice, the King firſt propoſed to conſult the foreign Univerſities and Divines about the Legality of his Marriage, by which Means Cranmer firſt opened his Way to Court.

21. Fox is the firſt known Author of this Story; from whom it is ſuppoſed, Archbiſhop Parker, and all our other Hiſtorians, in whom it is found, have tranſcribed it. But from what Authority Fox had it, or upon what Motives he reported it, is very uncertain. This however is evident, That the Time aſſigned by him for the Conference at [a] Waltham with Gardiner and Biſhop Fox, was in Auguſt, about the Time of Campejus his Departure out of [b] England. The Inference from hence is clear; Cranmer, according to Fox his Account, could not be the Author of the Advice, that the King ſhould conſult the foreign Univerſities and Divines about the Legality of his Marriage: Not only becauſe the Cenſure of the Univerſity of Orleans bears date [c] above a Quarter of a Year before this ſuppoſed Conference at Waltham, but the King, in his Speech at the Palace of Bridewell, in the preceeding [d] Year, ſaid, before the Legates, that he had asked Counſel of the greateſt Clerks in Chriſtendom about his Marriage.

22. The Reaſons appear, of themſelves, ſufficient to overthrow the Credit of that Story. But it may farther be added from Cavendiſh, for a final Confutation of it, that, "by the King's Leave, the "Cardinal called the Biſhops and Clergy together, to debate about "the King's Marriage; and that in this Aſſembly, it was thought "very expedient the King ſhould ſend out his Commiſſioners into "all the Univerſities in Chriſtendom, as well here in England, as "in foreign Regions, there to have the Caſe argued ſubſtantially; "and to bring with them from thence, every Definition of their "Opinions under the Seals of every Univerſity." And Dr. Ackworth, a learned Civilian, who [d] wrote againſt Saunders, ſays the ſame. And it is obſervable, that in the Latin Edition of Fox his Acts and Monuments, printed at [e] Baſil, he ſaith, Cranmer in the Univerſity of Cambridge, ſo well acquitted himſelf in the Defence of the King's Cauſe, and made ſo many Converts, that [f] Gardiner thought fit to acquaint the King with it, which was the Occaſion of ſending for him.

23. As to the Queſtion of Right, concerning the King's Marriage, I ſhall here, as I propoſed, without delivering my private Opinion, endeavour to ſtate the Arguments, on both Sides, impartially, and to give them all the Force, wherewith they appear to have been reſpectively urged. They who argued for the Invalidity of the Marriage, grounded their Reaſons upon the Nullities, which they pretended to find in the Diſpenſation of Pope Julius the Second; where it is ſaid, that Henry and Catherine deſired that Marriage for the Sake of Peace: Whereas it was ſuppoſed, neither of them, at that Time, on Account of their Age, was capable of ſuch a political Thought. The Diſpute, as hath been obſerved before, was not whether the Pope had Power to grant ſuch a Diſpenſation, but whether it was not fraudulently obtained, and upon wrong Suggeſtions? But when the Lawfulneſs of the Diſpenſation itſelf came to be controverted; then the Queſtion was, Whether the Law in Leviticus, which forbids the Marriage of a Brother's Wife, were of a moral Nature, or only of poſitive Obligation? If of a moral Nature, it was ſaid, the Pope could not diſpenſe with it; and conſequently, the Marriage of the King was of no Effect or Validity. The Advocates for this Opinion alledged, That the Levitical Laws concerning Marriage, were not, in the Reaſon of them, peculiar to the Jews; but were obligatory at all Times, and to all Nations; as being founded upon natural Order and Decency. That Offences againſt the Levitical Law, reſpecting Marriage, are termed Abominations wherewith the Heathens defiled themſelves, and ſuch, who ſhould be guilty of them, were threatned with the moſt terrible Puniſhments: That theſe were the very Crimes for which the Canaanites were extirpated out of the Land: That neither our Saviour, nor his Apoſtles, gave any intimation, that theſe Laws were no longer obligatory; but St. John Baptiſt on the contrary, ſeverely reproved Herod for marrying his Brother's Wife. And the Apoſtle Saint Paul had ſhewed, how deteſtable ſuch Eſpouſals are, by condemning the inceſtuous Corinthian, who married his Father's Wife, as being guilty of an Action contrary to the Laws of Nature, acknowledged and practiſed by the Heathen World. To ſupport this Opinion, concerning the Unlawfulneſs of marrying a Brother's Wife, they alledged the Authority of ſeveral of the Fathers, and of the Council of Neo Cæſarea, which excommunicated every Man that ſhould marry two Siſters, and all the Women, that ſhould marry two Brothers: And the ſame Canon was enforced by a Council held under Gregory the Second. And that all Councils, wherein mention hath been made concerning the prohibited Degrees of Marriage, have particularly condemned the Marriage of a Brother's Wife, or a Siſter's Husband, as unlawful. That the Pope, Saint Gregory (I here cite the Arguments, and for the moſt Part the very Words of [g] Du Pin) being conſulted by Auguſtin the Monk, whom he ſent into England, whether it was lawful for a Man to marry his Brother's Widow, anſwered, That theſe Sort of Marriages were forbidden, and if any Perſons, who were lately converted, had contracted any ſuch before their Converſion, they ſhould be adviſed not to accompany with their Wives: That there never was a more favourable Occaſion to diſpenſe with ſuch Marriages, than at that Time, if the Church had been really veſted with any Power to that End; That other Popes, as Calixtus, Zacharias, and Innocent the Third, had poſitively declared againſt ſuch Sort of Marriages, founding their Judgement upon the Prohibition in Leviticus, as upon a perpetual Law. In concluſion, they quoted a great Number of Schoolmen and Canoniſts, who had taught, that Contracts of Marriage within the prohibited Degrees in Leviticus, were void; and added, that one of the Errors condemned in Wickliff, was, That the Law of God did not forbid theſe Sort of Marriages.

But becauſe there might be a Diſtinction between a Marriage conſummated, and that which was not; and it was aſſerted, the Marriage between Catherine and Arthur was not conſummated, or at leaſt ſuppoſing it uncertain, whether it had been conſummated or not,

there might be Reaſon to doubt, if in ſuch Caſe, the Marriage of a Brother's Widow ſhould be equally forbidden; it was added, that the Validity and Accompliſhment of a Marriage, did not neceſſarily depend on the Conſummation; but upon the mutual Conſent of the Parties. For which Reaſon it was, that Adonijah would not marry Abiſhag, becauſe ſhe had been his Father David's Wife, tho' he never knew her: And upon this Account it is alſo, that by the Law of Moſes, if a Damoſel betrothed to a Man, abandoned herſelf to another, ſhe was to be ſtoned to Death as an Adultereſs. And on this Ground it was held, there was a true Marriage, between Joſeph and the bleſſed Virgin. That the Councils, Fathers, and Divines, make the Eſſence of Marriage to conſiſt in the Contract, and in the Sacrament; that the moſt Judicious of the Canoniſts are of the ſame Opinion; and in ſhort, that the Conſummation of the Marriage of Catherine with Arthur, was as certainly proved, as a Fact of that Sort could poſſibly be.

The Queen's [b] Advocates anſwered to the Reaſons brought againſt the Diſpenſation by Julius the Second, That there was no Nullity in the Bull; that the Allegations in it were true; and, that the Marriage was neceſſary to the Continuance of the Peace between Spain and England, though it could not be proved Henry and Catherine had expreſsly that Intention: that it was not neceſſary they ſhould have made this Demand of the Pope themſelves; it was enough if it was done in their Names, and they did not diſown it: that Henry's Proteſtations drew no Conſequences after it, and was invalidated by the ſolemn Marriage which he afterwards proceeded to celebrate, and by his cohabiting with the Queen for ſeveral Years: that the Pope's Diſpenſation extended ſo far, as to provide for the Validity of the Marriage, in caſe the former Marriage had been really conſummated with Arthur, though That was uncertain, and preſumed only upon weak Conjectures; for the Queen had in open Court declared to the King, and ſolemnly appealed to his Conſcience for the Truth of what ſhe ſaid, that he had found her a Virgin, and he did not deny it: Yet, laſtly, that the Brief, which was granted at the ſame Time with the Diſpenſation, made no Mention as if the Marriage had not been conſummated, but rather ſuppoſed the Conſumtion of it.

But when the [i] Queſtion, about the Right of the Thing, the Legality of the Marriage itſelf, and the Power of the Pope to grant a Diſpenſation for it, came to be conſidered; they who defended the Queen's Cauſe, affirmed, the Prohibition in Leviticus, to marry a Brother's Wife, was not a Law of Nature, but only of poſitive Inſtitution. This Moſes had ſufficiently ſhewed, by commanding in

Deuteronomy, a Brother to marry the Widow of his Brother who ſhould die without Children; an Exception, which plainly demonſtrated, that the Law might be diſpenſed with; and conſequently, however it was preſcribed as a general Law of Convenience, yet was not abſolutely, or in the ſtrict Senſe, a Law of Nature. That, before the Moſaick Diſpenſation, this Law was of no Force: That Jacob married two Siſters, Rachel and Leah; and that Judah, after he had married two of his Sons to Thamar, promiſed to her a Third: That it was not ſaid the Canaanites were puniſhed particularly, becauſe they did not obſerve this Prohibition, but for the Abominations, which they had in general committed: That our Lord in the New Teſtament, by his Anſwer to the Sadduces, who had propounded a Queſtion, concerning the Law of marrying the Widow of a Brother deceaſed without Iſſue, had ſufficiently expreſſed his Approbation of it: That John the Baptiſt reproved Herod for marrying his Brother's Wife, not ſimply on Account of that Relation, but becauſe his Brother was either yet living, or if dead, had left Children by her: That the Caſe of the inceſtuous Corinthian who did not marry his Brother's, but his Father's Wife, was very different: That notwithſtanding the Marriage of a Siſter-in-law is prohibited by the Eccleſiaſtical Conſtitution, it does not therefore follow it is contrary to the Law of Nature, or that the Supreme Authority in the Eccleſiaſtical State might not diſpenſe with it: That the Fathers always looked upon the Law in Deuteronomy, as an Exception to that in Leviticus: That in the ancient apoſtolical Canons, he who married two Siſters ſucceſſively, was only put out of the Clergy; and in the Council of Elvira, had only three Years Penance impoſed upon him: That the Eccleſiaſtical and Civil Laws which forbid theſe Marriages, prohibit alſo Marriages within the Degrees of Conſanguinity; and that there is not certainly any Prohibition of ſuch Marriages by the Law of Nature: That the Popes, who condemned theſe Marriages, did not deprive themſelves of a Power to diſpenſe with them, in certain Caſes; though ſuch a Power was ſeldom to be exerted: That there had been, and were at that Time, many Examples of Marriages within the Levitical Prohibitions, which yet were acknowledged as lawful Marriages: That the Divines and Canoniſts did well, by teaching in general, that Marriages, within the Degrees prohibited by Leviticus, were null; but they never thought that all thoſe Degrees were prohibited by the Law of Nature; particularly, That which reſpects the Marriage of a Perſon to the Relict of his Brother, who died without Iſſue: That Turrecremata, one of thoſe, who had ſpoken moſt fully againſt ſuch Marriages, owns, in that Caſe, the Marriage of the Siſter-in-law with the Brother, is not forbidden, and that the Pope may allow it: That many have made a great Diſtinction between a Marriage conſummaſummated, and not conſummated; in the firſt Caſe there are two Impediments; One, publick Decency; the Other, carnal Affinity; whereas in the Latter, there is nothing but publick Decency.

This very learned Doctor of the Sorbonne, having propoſed the Argument on both Sides of ſo famous a Caſe, proceeds to give his own Opinion of it in the following Words, with his uſual Candour and Judgement.

" To me it ſeems certain, that the Law is not a mere Ceremo" nial or political Law, which concerned the People of the Jews " only. It is more probable it is a general Law for all Men; but " it is not neceſſary, it ſhould, for that Reaſon, be of natural
" Right, as to all the Degrees therein forbidden: The Jews alledge
" two Reaſons for the Prohibitions of marrying within the Degrees
" of Conſanguinity in Leviticus; the One is natural Modeſty,
" which will not allow Fathers to marry their Children in their ſe-
" veral Deſcents, nor Brothers their Siſters: The Other is a Fear, " that Familiarity between ſuch Perſons, who, upon Account of " their near Relation, are obliged to dwell together, ſhould give " frequent Occaſion to criminal Liberties. The firſt Reaſon is " grounded upon the Law of Nature, and concerns all thoſe who " are a-kin in the direct Line, aſcending or deſcending, and alſo
" Brothers and Siſters, but has not the ſame Obligation upon Kinſ-
" men in a collateral Line, and particularly as to ſuch Perſons with " whom there is only a bare Affinity; and ſo the Prohibition of " contracting Marriage with ſuch, is grounded upon the ſecond
" Reaſon only; which does not eſtabliſh a natural and indiſpen-
" ſable Law; although that Prohibition was not intended purely " for the Jews, but in general for the Benefit of all Mankind. The " Exception mentioned in Deuteronomy, concerns the Jews only,
" as being made only for upholding the Diſtinction of Families " and Tribes of the Children of Iſrael. The new Law has quite " abrogated that Exception; but ſtill continues the Law in Levi-
" ticus, which the Chriſtians have ever valued and obſerved; and " it has rarely been diſpenſed with: But ſince it is not a Law of " Nature, it may be diſpenſed with upon very important Reaſons.
" It belongs not to us to judge, whether Julius the Second had " any ſufficient Reaſon to diſpenſe with Henry and Catherine; but " we may ſay, that Henry having married Catherine, by Virtue of " that Diſpenſation, and lived near [k] Twenty five Years with her,
" as his Wife, could not lawfully, or in Conſcience, be parted from " her, that he might marry another. And indeed, it is very pro-

24. The Reader may now determine for himſelf, as the Arguments on either Side appear more cogent, concerning the Merits of the Cauſe. My proper Buſineſs is to give a general Account of the Proceſs and Facts relating to it. It is certain, whether Cardinal Wolſey's Opinion in the Caſe were well or ill-grounded, he promoted the Divorce, with all the Ardor and Aſſiduity of one, who was fully perſuaded in his own Mind, concerning the Reaſonableneſs and Legality of it. Yet, with all the Intereſt and Artifice, which he made uſe of at the Court of Rome, he was not able to prevent a Revocation of the Suit thither, which the Emperor ſollicited. The Pope had already proceeded as far, in the Meaſures taken by him to gratify the King, as, conſiſtently with his Character of an equal and indifferent Judge, could reaſonably have been expected from him; and farther perhaps, conſidering the Poſture of his Affairs, at that Time, than might well be thought to comport with the nice political Maxims, whereby the Court of Rome has been generally obſerved to govern itſelf. For our Ambaſſadors with the Emperor in Spain, having ſome Time before, opened to him the Affair of the Divorce, his Imperial Majeſty expreſſed a ſenſible Concern that the King had an Intention of Parting from the Queen, conjuring him by the Sacrament of Marriage, not to proceed any further in the Cauſe: But inſiſted, if the King was reſolved to proceed, the Cauſe might not be tried in England, but ſhould either be brought before the Pope, or a general Council; adding, he was fully convinced the Right was on the Queen's Side, and that he was reſolved to aſſert it.

25. In Purſuance of this Reſolution, the Emperor, by his Ambaſſadors at Rome, ſollicited the Pope, to declare the Proceedings by the Legates in England null; to admoniſh the King to ſtop the Courſe of them, and to conſent that the Cauſe ſhould be tried at Rome. To theſe Propoſals the Imperial Ambaſſadors added Interminations, that the Powers who intereſted themſelves in Behalf of the Queen, would, in Caſe of Incompliance by his Holineſs, have Recourſe to other Meaſures.

What hindered the Pope from Complying at firſt with theſe Overtures, was not ſo much any Objection againſt the Reaſonableneſs or Equity of them, as the Engagements he had brought himſelf under, by Virtue of his Pollicitation and the Decretal Bull. But at laſt, the Power of the Emperor ſo far prevailed upon the intimidated Pope, that thoſe Engagements were over-ruled, and he choſe to run the Hazard of breaking with the King. The Avocation was thereupon ſigned, and all other Proceedings upon the Cauſe in England prohibited, under ſevere Penalties.

26. Yet

26. Yet the Pope did not want as good political Reaſons to excuſe his Compliance, and conſequently, his Breach with our Court, as have been frequently made uſe of by ſecular Princes, to juſtify the moſt bloody and deſtructive Wars. England and France had not, according to Promiſe, prevailed by their Mediation with the Venetians, to reſtore to his Holineſs Cervia and Ravenna. He concluded, if theſe two Powers had really interpoſed in Earneſt, the Venetians would not have been reluctant to their Propoſals, but theſe Towns had been reſtored according to the Expectation given to him, upon the Arrival of his Legate Campejus in England. And it has been farther aſſigned, as a Reaſon on this Occaſion, why the Pope gave ſuch expreſs Command, from which he could never be prevailed upon to recede, that the Decretal Bull ſent by that Legate, ſhould not be ſhewed to any of the King's Council. For the earneſt Requeſt which was made by our Court to that End, could not proceed from mere Curioſity, or from a Deſire of informing the Council, ſince whatever was material in the Bull, which it concerned them to know, might have been communicated by the Legates; the Pope's Refuſal therefore to have it laid before them, or any of them, proceeded from a Jealouſy, that our Court was not really ſo cordial in his Intereſts, as had been pretended. It concerned him therefore to conceal, ſo far as it was poſſible, the Grant of an Inſtrument, which, if known to be granted, would, above all Things, provoke the Indignation of an Enemy, in whoſe Power he was, and render all Methods towards an Accommodation with him impracticable.

27. It appears from a [l] Letter to the Cardinal by Bennet, Caſſali, and Vannes at Rome, that to the Arguments uſed by the Imperialiſts, whereof an ample Account is there given, to oblige the Pope to recall the Cauſe, they added Menaces; which, with the melancholly Circumſtances the Pope was under, and the Conſideration of which he then ſaid to them, might, to a magnanimous Prince, if he had not been ſo far prepoſſeſſed already with a foreign Paſſion, have rendered the Conduct of his Holineſs, at leaſt more excuſeable.

28. But the Pope apprehending how much his Compliance in this Article with the Emperor would be reſented by King Henry, thought fit, in a Letter to the Cardinal, to make an Apology for himſelf, the Import of which was, "The Neceſſity of his Affairs, "to his great Regret, and much contrary to his Inclination, had "compelled him to revoke the Cauſe to Rome: But that this did "not leſſen his Senſe of the King's Merits, and of the great Obli-"gations his Majeſty had laid upon him. He deſires the Cardinal

" to acquaint his Majeſty, with the great Affliction which this " Procedure had occaſioned to him; to uſe his Intereſt, that the " King's former Zeal and Affection for the apoſtolick See may not " be diſcontinued; and to aſſure his Majeſty, he ſhould have the " ſame Regard for him, that he had ever hitherto entertained.

29. But before the Avocation was ſigned at Rome, Campejus had received Inſtructions, to which he artfully enough conformed, that he ſhould, by all convenient Methods, retard the Courſe of the Tryal. He ſaid it would not be for his Majeſty's Honour, were the Legates to act with Precipitation; and they, who favoured the Queen's Cauſe, would certainly take Advantage of ſuch a Procedure: They ſought therefore to protract the Suit by ſucceſſive Delays, adjourning the Court from Day to Day, and handling Matters ſo ſlowly, that they kept off the Expectation of Judgement to the Twenty third of July; upon which Day, there was a great Appearance in Court, and it was generally thought Sentence would have been given. But to the great Surpriſe of the Audience, the Court, inſtead of coming to a Deciſion, was adjourned by Campejus to the Firſt of October following; notwithſtanding the Motion that was made at the Bar, for Judgement, by the King's Council. The Reaſons which Campejus gave for this Adjournment, are recited by Cavendiſh in the following Speech, which he reports was made by that Legate. " I will not give Judgement, until I have related " the whole Proceedings to the Pope, whoſe Counſel and Com- " mandment I will in this Caſe obſerve: The Matter is too high " for us to give haſty Judgement, conſidering the Perſons, and the " doubtful Occaſions alledged, and alſo whoſe Commiſſioners we " are by whoſe Authority we ſit.

" There is good Reaſon, therefore, that we make our chief Lord " of Counſel in the ſame, before we proceed to Judgement defi- " nitive: I am not to pleaſe, for any Favour, Reward, or Fear " of any Perſon alive; be he King or otherwiſe; I have no ſuch " Reſpect to the Perſon, that I ſhould offend my Conſcience; and " the Party Defendant will make no Anſwer here, but rather doth " appeal from us. I am an old Man, both weak and ſickly, and " look every Day for Death; what ſhall it avail me, to put my " Soul in Danger to my utter Damnation, for the Favour of any " Prince in this World; My being here, is only to ſee Juſtice ad- " miniſtred according to my Conſcience.

" The Defendant ſuppoſeth, that we be not indifferent Judges, " conſidering the King's high Dignity and Authority within this " Realm; and we being both his Subjects, ſhe thinks we will not " do her Juſtice: And therefore, to avoid all theſe Ambiguities, I " adjourn the Court for the Time, according to the Court of Rome, " from whence our Juriſdiction is derived: For if we ſhould go

" further than our Commiſſion doth warrant us, it were but " a Folly and blame-worthy. Becauſe then we ſhall be Breakers " of the Orders, from which we have (as I ſaid) our Authority " derived."

30. Whatever the perſonal Qualifications of Cardinal Campejus might have been, his Sentiments in this Speech, were juſt, pious, and ſublime; his Reaſonings inſinuating, but forcible, and his Manner in every Reſpect becoming the Character of a Judge. It will be difficult perhaps to find any where an Inſtance, ancient or modern, in the Oratory of the Bar, where more is expreſſed with greater Strength and Simplicity in ſo few Words; except the following Paſſage may ſeem to require an Explication, I adjourn the Court for the Time, according to the Court of Rome. By which, this Legate intended, that he ſat there with his Collegue, as Part of the Conſiſtory at Rome, and ought therefore to be governed by the Rules of that Court. Now he declared, according to Biſhop [m] Burnet, tho' Cavendiſh has omitted this Circumſtance, that there was a Vacation from that Time to October, during which Interval, no Cauſes were heard.

31. Upon the Adjournment, the Duke of Suffolk ſtood up, Cavendiſh ſaith by Commandment of the King, and with a haughty Countenance declared, It was never ſo in England, until we had Cardinals among us. Theſe Words were ſpoken with an Emotion, and accompanied with opprobrious Terms, that ſurpriſed the Audience.

Cardinal Wolſey obſerving the Vehemency wherewith the Duke was agitated, and thinking himſelf perſonally affected, made a ſober Reply in the following Words. " Sir, of all Men in this " Realm, you have leaſt Cauſe to diſpraiſe Cardinals; for if I poor " Cardinal had not been, you would not at this preſent have had " a Head on your Shoulders, wherewith to make ſuch a Brag in " Diſrepute of us, who meant you no Harm; neither have given " you ſuch Cauſe to be offended with us. I would have you think, " my Lord, I and my Brother wiſh the King as much Happineſs, " and the Realm as much Honour, Wealth, and Peace, as you, " or any other Subject, of what Degree ſoever he be, within this " Realm, and would as gladly accompliſh his lawful Deſires.

" And now, my Lord, I pray you, ſhew me, what you would " do in ſuch a Caſe as this, if you were one of the King's Com- " miſſioners in a foreign Region, about ſome weighty Matter, the " Conſultation whereof were very doubtful to be decided; would " you not advertiſe the King's Majeſty 'ere you went through with " the ſame? I doubt not but you would; and therefore abate your

" Malice

" Malice and Spight, and conſider we are Commiſſioners for a " Time, and cannot by Virtue of our Commiſſion proceed to " Judgement, without the Knowledge and Conſent of the Head " of the Authority and Licenſe obtained from him, who is the " Pope.

" Therefore do we neither more nor leſs, than our Commiſſion " alloweth; and if any Man will be offended with us, he is an un- " wiſe Man: Therefore pacify your ſelf, my Lord, and ſpeak like " a Man of Honour and Wiſdom (or hold your Peace:) Speak " not reproachfully of your Friends; you beſt know what Friend- " ſhip I have ſhewn you which I never did reveal to any Perſon " 'till now, either to mine own Praiſe, or your Diſhonour." Whereupon, ſaith Cavendiſh, the Duke went his Way, and ſaid no more, being much diſcontented.

32. If we may judge concerning the Temper of the Cardinal from this Speech, he did not want Spirit: He vindicates the Honour of his Character, and the Juſtice of his Proceedings, with a generous and becoming Freedom. It is another Queſtion, Whether the Provocation offered to him, was ſufficient to juſtify his reproaching the Duke of Suffolk, by ſo open an Inſinuation, with one of the greateſt and moſt diſhonourable Crimes, That of Ingratitude. But that the Charge itſelf had ſome good Foundation, tho' the Fact, upon which it was founded, is ſtill unknown, may very reaſonably be inferred from the Duke's withdrawing out of Court, without making any Anſwer to it. We ought not to ſuppoſe, that a Nobleman of the firſt Rank, who had ſuſtained the firſt military Poſt in the Army, and was of a martial, warm, and active Diſpoſition, would, if unjuſtly charged, have been ſo very paſſive, under ſo high and publick an Imputation. When he commanded our Army in France, he had the Misfortune, upon a Suſpicion of Miſconduct, to fall under the King's Diſpleaſure: But as it hath not appeared, that he did any Thing in that Command, which could affect his Life, no Conjecture ought to be formed, that the Cardinal here refers to any Interpoſition, which he made in the Duke's Favour at Court, on that Account. Whatever the particular Occaſion might be, of which the Cardinal here reminds the Duke, that Prince had yet a higher Obligation to his Eminency, if any Obligation could be higher, than that of ſaving his Life: The greateſt Glory and Happineſs of it, was owing to the Cardinal's good Offices. It was principally through his Mediation, the Duke had married the Queen-Dowager of France, Siſter to King Henry, one of the fineſt Ladies, and the moſt celebrated Beauty in either Court. But what are all the Profeſſions and Ties of Friendſhip, which is not founded in Principles of ſtrict Honour and Vertue? Here we have an Inſtance of a great Prince, reflecting in opprobrious probrious Terms, upon a Perſon, to whom he owed his Life, and more than Life; not provoked by any great, or ſlight Affront, for even that is ſometimes ſufficient to break the whole Contexture of a Court-friendſhip; but for a Reaſon, which ought to have recommended him ſtill more to the Duke's Eſteem and Affection. He had given no other Offence, but becauſe he was now reſolved to act, as became an upright Judge, and agreeably to the Truſt repoſed in him, and as Conſcience and Equity directed him. If he was on any Account culpable in the Conduct of this Affair, his Crime ſeems to have conſiſted in hitherto eſpouſing the King's Cauſe, with too partial and violent a Zeal: But becauſe he would not go all the Lengths the Court expected; becauſe he felt a juſt Regret in his Mind at the Apprehenſion of exceeding his Orders, and of pronouncing a raſh or unjuſt Sentence, and was at laſt determined to hearken unto God, and the ſecret Admonitions of his own Heart, rather than unto Men, he is reproached, in open Court, by the very Perſon, who ought, above all Men living, to have protected him from all Manner of Inſults.

If theſe are the Conditions of a Commerce at Court, or there is no Dependance on any Friendſhip there, but what is founded in ſome common Intereſt, and continues ſo long only as that Intereſt ſubſiſts; a Man of Honour would chuſe rather to retire with St. Jerome into a remote Wilderneſs; or with Simeon Stilites, to chain himſelf upon the Summit of ſome high Mountain, expoſed to the Inclemency of the Seaſons, yet where he could breathe the open Air with a good Conſcience, rather than enjoy all the pompous and ſoft Delights in royal Palaces, on the wretched Terms of a blind ſervile Obedience, in Breach of the ſacred Ties of Juſtice, of Honour, and of Friendſhip.

33. Yet the Cardinal very well underſtood, how far an obſequious and flexible Temper was neceſſary to any one, who would maintain himſelf at Court in ſome competent Degree of Favour or Reſpect; particularly he was not wanting, on ſuch Occaſions, wherein he might give thoſe real Proofs of Zeal for his Maſter's Service, which an honeſt Man, faithfully devoted to his Intereſt's, could give. But he very well knew, at the ſame Time, how to diſtinguiſh between the mechanical Rules of a courtly Behaviour, and ſuch, as are founded on a real and internal Principle of Vertue. In reducing the former Rules to Practice, very wicked and corrupt Men are frequently obſerved to excel: But there is not perhaps an equal Number of Perſons, who ſtrictly inquire into the true Reaſons of moral Vertue, and propoſe to regulate their Behaviour by thoſe Reaſons, and by them only.

1529. 1. AFTER the Court for trying the King's Cauſe was adjourned, or rather diſſolved, the Cardinal began ſenſibly to decline in the King's Favour; tho' he had done every Thing that could be expected from him, except he had reſolved to ſtick at nothing. But during the Courſe of the Trial, and while he appeared ſo zealous in promoting the King's Cauſe, Ann Bolein her ſelf either was entirely reconciled to him, notwithſtanding the Offence which had been given on Occaſion of his breaking the Contract between her and the Lord Piercy; or elſe ſhe ſo artfully diſſembled her Reſentments, that in three [n] Letters ſhe wrote to him, there are all the Appearances of a ſincere Friendſhip and tender Concern for him; and it is probable his Aſſiduity, and Earneſtneſs in ſoliciting the Divorce, had not only, for ſome Time, while the Cauſe was depending, obliterated the Senſe of all former Injuries in the Mind of this Lady; but given him as great an Intereſt in the King, as ever he had before; inſomuch, that the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter falling now vacant by the Death of Fox, the Cardinal was tranſlated from Durham to it. According to the exact Order of Hiſtory, I ſhould have mentioned that high Dignity conferred on him upon his Removal from the Biſhoprick of Bath, where his Regiſter ends March 3, 1521; and of which he had been made perpetual [o] Commendatory; Richard Wolman being appointed his Vicar-general, but upon the Death of Biſhop Ruthal, he left Wells and took Durham. There is a memorable Fact, which is ſaid to have haſtened the Death of that Prelate, wherein the Cardinal was concerned: He was commanded by the King to write a Book concerning the State of the Kingdom, and to deliver it, when finiſhed, to the Cardinal: But he had written another Book concerning the State of his own Affairs, covered and ſtitched ſo exactly after the ſame Manner, that one of them could not, upon Sight, be diſtinguiſhed from the other. Having ordered his Servant to bring him a Book covered with white Parchment, he brought that relating to the Biſhop's private Affairs, which, without looking in it, he delivered to the Cardinal; who afterward diſcovering the Miſtake, was much pleaſed; telling the King, if his Majeſty had occaſion for Money, he might now know where to be ſupplied; for it appeared by that Prelate's own Account, that he was worth a 100,000 l. an immenſe Sum at that Time: So ſoon as the Biſhop perceived his Error, he was ſeized with ſuch a [p] Grief, that it is ſaid to have haſtened his Death.

2. There is a Letter from Doctor Francklin at Durham to the Cardinal, which I have added in the Collections, relating to certain Rights of that Biſhoprick (which poſſibly may be ſtill of ſome Uſe) and to the Cardinal's Mint there for Coinage of Money; as he had a Preſs by Commiſſion from the King to the ſame End at York, as well as a Patent for the Office of Royal-Exchange: For I find in the [q] Cotton Library, in anſwer to the Queſtion, "Why and when "the Office of Royal-Exchange ceaſed?" It is anſwered, "The "Execution thereof ceaſed in the Time of King Henry the Eighth, "when Cardinal Wolſey had a Patent thereof, but did not long "continue the Execution thereof, by Reaſon of the Abundance "and Confuſion of falſe Money, whereby no certain Exchange "could be made."

3. I have added Prints of ſome few of thoſe Coins that have come to my Hand, which the Reader may peruſe, at the End of the Introduction. Upon the Death of Biſhop Fox, the Cardinal quitted Durham for Wincheſter; the Bulls for which, Peter Vannes writes from Rome, could not be expedited at leſs Expence, than Thirteen thouſand Ducats; and that the Pope could not by any Entreaties, be induced to recede from that [r] Demand. In another Letter, it appears the Ambaſſadors endeavoured to mitigate that Sum, upon a Suggeſtion, that the Cardinal by that Means would be ſooner induced to reſign Durham; on which Occaſion there would be more than an Equivalent for what ſhould be remitted on Account of [f] Wincheſter; the Firſt Fruits of Durham amounting to Nine thouſand Florins. Theſe Firſt Fruits were called Annates, becauſe they were as One in Ten to the Proportion of yearly Profits ariſing from eccleſiaſtical Benefices; as the Tenths were in a like Proportion to the Firſt Fruits anciently paid to the Pope for the Support of his Dignity, not only in England, but through all the Weſtern Patriarchate. His Holineſs, as Paſtor of all other Paſtors, claiming the Tenth Part of the Tenths appropriated to the ſupreme Paſtoral Charge; and his Title to them was founded on Pretence of a divine Claim, after the Example of the High Prieſt of the Jews, who by God's ſpecial Appointment had Tenths of the Levites. Now, tho' it is a good Rule, where we have no poſitive Command to regulate the exact Meaſures of any Duty, that we ſhould follow the beſt Precedents, and eſpecially, if that can be found, a divine Precedent; yet the Circumſtances of Times, Places, and the principal Deſign in any former Appointment, ſhould alſo be very carefully conſidered.

4. If we examine the Reaſons upon which God appointed Tythes under the Moſaick Law, it was to ſupport the Levitical Order, not only after a Manner, which might preſerve the Miniſters of it from Contempt and ſervile Dependencies, but enable them to diſcharge their Function, without involving themſelves in ſecular or foreign Affairs. The Reaſon for ſuch a Support is certainly the ſame, if not greater, under the chriſtian Diſpenſation. As the Adminiſtrations proper to a Religion, the Worſhip whereof conſiſts in Spirit and in Truth, whoſe Doctrines are more ſublime, and whoſe Morality is more extenſive and refined, require a greater Abſtraction of Mind, than ſeemed on all Accounts abſolutely neceſſary under a Diſpenſation, which conſiſted ſo much in outward Obſervances, and in Obedience to a carnal Commandment. So that admitting the Jewiſh Law did not oblige Chriſtians, by Virtue of a divine Authority, in reſpect to Tythes; yet ſo far I will preſume to ſay, every Perſon regularly ordained in the chriſtian Church to miniſter in Things pertaining to God, has a divine Right to ſuch a Maintenance as is neceſſary to preſerve his Character, in ſuch a Manner, as may enable him to attain thoſe Ends of his Miniſtry, which God deſigned he ſhould attain, when he received his miniſterial Commiſſion. Such Endowments therefore, which have been granted by chriſtian Princes or States to the Church, are not to be conſidered as mere arbitrary Donations reſumable, from the Church, at Pleaſure; but as Grants, in Conſequence of that Obedience, which Princes owe to the Order and Appointment of God. For wherever God Wills any End, and his Will is by any Means, either from the Reaſon of the Thing, or the Deſign of any former poſitive Law, notified to us;

ſuch a Notification is to be conſidered by us, as having, in Effect, the Force of an expreſs and divine Law. Accordingly the Apoſtle in the [t] New Teſtament, founds the Right of a competent Maintenance for the Miniſtry, both in the Reaſon of the Thing and the Moſaick Inſtitution. The State may not only prohibit the Payment of Tythes, but of every Thing neceſſary to the Support of the Miniſtry; and ſo they may prohibit Parents to contribute any Thing towards the Education or Maintenance of their Children; but it would be a very falſe Conſequence to infer, that the Right therefore which Children have to be educated by their Parents, proceeds from an Act of mere Favour in the State, which they may cancel or revoke at Pleaſure: The Argument will equally, and unanſwerably hold, as well in one Caſe, as in the other: And therefore, let no Perſon, out of any falſe or ſervile Obſequiouſneſs, ſay; much leſs let it be ſaid by any of the Children of Levi, that the Clergy eat the King's Bread, except in the ſame Senſe that Children eat the Bread of their Parents. Bread, which the Parents indeed provide, but which, according to the Order of Nature, and the Reaſon of the Thing, they are obliged to provide. As to ſuch Donations which the Piety of good Princes hath, at any Time, induced them to make to the Church; which are deſigned to add greater Honour and Luſtre to it; and which they were not ſtrictly bound to grant, towards the neceſſary Support of particular Eccleſiaſticks; tho' they ought to be highly applauded for ſuch additional Marks of their Favour and Eſteem for the Order; yet I will not preſume to ſay, ſuch Donations are abſolutely inalienable, in Caſe the State be reduced to any imminent Danger of being ſubverted. I only contend for a Divine Right to ſuch a Maintenance at leaſt to the Clergy, and to every Clergyman in particular, as is neceſſary to qualify him for the Diſcharge of that Office, which is conferred on him by a divine Appointment, in the Station, wherein he is placed; otherways, which cannot without Blaſphemy be admitted, it might be at any Time, in the Power, juſtly in the Power of Man, to oppoſe and fruſtrate the Deſign of God.

5. I have longer inſiſted upon this Article, to ſhew, whatever juſt Grounds of Complaint there were againſt the Court of Rome, in the Reign of Henry the Eighth, on Account of thoſe Exactions, that were made by it, in Reſpect to Firſt Fruits or Tenths, whereby the Treaſure of the Nation was continually exhauſted; and whatever juſt Grounds the ſupreme Authority of this Nation had to withdraw thoſe Payments for the Future; yet there appeared no Manner of Neceſſity for annexing to the temporal State, the Revenues ariſing from eccleſiaſtical Preferments, tho' they had been formerly diverted into a wrong Channel; eſpecially, when we conſider, how great a Number of Clergy there was at that Time in England, unprovided of any competent Support. Had thoſe Subſtractions, that were made from the Court of Rome, been applied to augment the poor Vicarages and other Cures throughout the Nation; many of which do not afford an Income, as they have been purloined, equal to that of the meaneſt Mechanick; this had been an Act of Piety indeed, which would have added a Luſtre to the Reformation, that, in the Opinion of many good and religious Perſons, it has been thought very much to want.

6. It ought not to be diſſembled, that ſome Advances have been lately made, towards obviating future Scandal to the Reformation, on this Account. And the Progreſs of ſo good a Work, gives Ground to hope, that what has been defective in any former Appointments towards the Support of the Clergy, will, by the Bleſſing of God, be, one Time or other, ſupplied in ſuch a Manner, that the Incompetency of the Proviſion made for them, may no where expoſe them to the Reproach of Poverty; the greateſt Crime, that can be laid to their Charge, and which will render, and always hath rendered their Miniſtry more deſpiſed, than all other Crimes whatever.

7. But to return to the Demands of the Court of Rome before the Reformation: By Reaſon of the Sums exported on the forementioned and other Accounts, the Kingdom was ſo much exhauſted, that notwithſtanding the Claim of divine Right, ſeveral of our Kings prohibited the Payment of them; particularly [u] King Edward the Third forbad the Pope's Nuncio to collect the Firſt Fruits; And it appears from ſeveral Collections by [x] Coke, that the Pope's Collectors were under ſevere Prohibitions: And he obſerves, that in one Statute, to remedy that Grievance, it was termed a horrible [y] Miſchief and damnable Cuſtom; and by another [z] Parliament, a very Novelty.

8. The Popes obſerving that ſome of our Kings were more reluctant to theſe Payments, than other; that they might not totally endanger the Loſs of ſo conſiderable a Revenue, as ſome have thought, but as others, out of Regard to the Exigency of their Affairs, and any ill State to which the Government was accidentally reduced, would make a Ceſſion of the Firſt Fruits, for a leſs or longer Time, as the Occaſion might require. An Inſtance we have of this Remiſſion in Pope Urban, who aſſigned them to [a] Richard the Second, towards ſupporting him in his Wars againſt the French King. This was a well-deſigned Expedient, both to facilitate a cuſtomary Payment from the People, and to engage the Kings to approve it: Seeing at any Time, in Caſe of Neceſſity, they might propoſe to make their own Advantage by it. But the Parliament, in the Reign of Henry the Eighth, would no longer truſt to the Pope's Benevolence, or depend on him for a Subſidy, as a Favour, which in their legiſlative Capacity, it was apprehended they might reſume and transfer to the Crown. Afterwards a [b] Court was erected for regulating the Payment of Firſt Fruits, but which was diſſolved in the firſt Year of Queen Mary; who yet did not give them again to the Pope, but diſcharged the Clergy from Payment of them, by Authority of Parliament.

Afterward, in the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, they were reſtored to the Crown; tho' the Court was never reſtored; but the Court of Exchequer had the Direction of them, and a new Office, with an Officer called a Remembrancer of the Firſt Fruits and Tenths of the Clergy, was created, with whom Compoſitions for them are made, and who iſſues out Proceſs againſt ſuch as neglect Payment.

9. The Cardinal was inſtalled, as appears from the authentick [c] Inſtrument referred to in the Margin, at Wincheſter, on the eleventh Day of April, in the Year 1529; but whether Perſonally, or by Proxy, the Record doth not mention: Mr. Fullman's manuſcript Papers ſay, he was inſtalled by Proxy. The Number of Perſons collated by him, in Right of his being Biſhop of Wincheſter, was not conſiderable; I have added, however, a [d] Copy of thoſe who were collated to any eccleſiaſtical Benefices by him. Not but that ſeveral other Collations were made there, during the Time he continued Biſhop; yet, not in Virtue of his own, but of the King's or the Court's Nomination: For I find in the Cotton Library, that the King, after the Cardinal fell into Diſgrace, ſent a [e] Commiſſion to him to ſign, whereby he is reſtrained from making any more Preſentations in the Dioceſe of Wincheſter; which ſhould not be made, otherways, than by the King's Commandment; but by what good Authority ſuch a Prohibition was or could be made, I have not been able to learn.

10. Some Time before Things were in ſo bad a Situation with Reſpect to the Cardinal, he had Intelligence from our Ambaſſadors at Rome, that the Pope was ſick, and in great Danger, with the private Means they had of obſerving what paſſed in Relation to the State of his Diſtemper and Affairs: Upon which, he wrote a [f] Letter to Gardiner, under the Title of Doctor Stephens then at Rome, ſolliciting the Divorce; the Arguments which he uſed to recommend himſelf to the Popedom, and the Methods he directs ſhould be taken towards the Succeſs of this laſt Effort for the Papal Chair, which are not to be ſcrupulouſly examined, may be ſeen in the [g] Letter: But the Recovery of Pope Clement, rendered all the Meaſures taken to this End ineffectual.

11. The King, by our Ambaſſadors now at Rome, requeſts, that the Pope would by Bull, ſuppreſs ſeveral of the larger and beſt endowed Monaſteries in great Towns, towards erecting them into Epiſcopal Seats. In a Letter to the two Legates, his Holineſs expreſſeth his Deſire to oblige the King in his Requeſt; and to enquire how the Scheme may be rendered practicable; and afterwards ſent a [h] Commiſſion to erect as many Biſhopricks upon that Scheme, as might be judged convenient.

But I ſhall not enter upon any further Inquiry, concerning the Legality of ſuch Alienations, if they ought not rather to be termed, where they are really better applied, Tranſlations from Uſes pious and beneficent, to Uſes more pious and beneficent. And as I do not deſign to reſume this Subject again, in the Sequel of my Work; I ſhall only take Occaſion to add two Obſervations concerning the Hiſtory of Sacrilege in general, from the Preface of Clement Spelman to Sir Henry Spelman's [k] Book upon that Subject; the Firſt of which has relation to the Cardinal, the Second to Pope Clement the Seventh, ſo often mentioned in this Hiſtory. "The "Cardinal, in diſſolving his forty Monaſteries, had uſed the Help "of five Men (beſides Cromwell) whereof two afterwards fought "a Duel, in which one was ſlain, and the Survivor hanged for "Murder; ſo each died guilty of his own and the others Blood.

14. But I return to the Hiſtory of the Divorce, concerning which, Godwyn reports, Campejus kept Matters relating to it, for ſome Time, in Suſpenſe; that, in Caſe of the Pope's Death, he might, poſſibly, obtain an Enlargement of his Powers; and by that Means be rendered more capable of doing acceptable Service to the King; having, upon his being preferred to the Biſhoprick of Salisbury, aſſured his Majeſty, that all Things ſhould ſucceed to his Deſires; and fearing, if the Event ſhould prove otherways, he ſhould at once incur the Imputation of being falſe and ungrateful. But ſo ſoon as he received Advice of the Pope's Recovery, not daring to diſpute, he obeyed his Commands, and caſt the Decretal Bull into the Fire. While the King, inflamed more and more with a Deſire of poſſeſſing the Object of his Love, and impatient of the leaſt Delay that obſtructed it, obſerving, the Face of Things, in Reſpect to his Cauſe, was ſenſibly changed, reſolved to ſearch out and diſcover the whole Secret of the Matter: And then it was, the Cardinal felt the ſevereſt Effects of the King's Diſpleaſure; who having hitherto, during the Courſe of his Reign, been attended with almoſt an uninterrupted Flow of Succeſs, by Means of his Advice and Conduct, he principally attributed it to him, if not to him only, that this great Affair, the Affair, above all others, of his Inclination, had not terminated more happily.

15. The Reflections which the learned Prelate beforementioned makes, on this Occaſion, appear ſo juſt and reaſonable, that I ſhall endeavour, for the Entertainment of the Reader, who may not underſtand the Original, to render them in Engliſh; tho' I am ſenſible they will, by the Verſion, loſe much of that Force and Beauty, wherein this Author excelled, when he wrote in the Latin Tongue.

" The Cardinal had now, for the Space of twenty Years, ſer-
" ved the King, with the greateſt Zeal and Aſſiduity; having ſo
" happily diſcharged his Truſt, that he both acquired to himſelf great

" great Power and Wealth, and to his Maſter, the Character of a " moſt excellent Sovereign. When I reflect, with how much " Glory Henry the Eighth had hitherto reigned, and then caſt my " Eye forward upon the ſubſequent Diſorders of his Reign, I rea" dily approve the Judgement of thoſe, who aſcribe it to the Coun-
" ſels of Cardinal Wolſey, that his former Adminiſtration had ren" dered him ſo much revered by all the crowned Heads in Europe;
" if I might not rather obſerve, ſo formidable to them. I ſhall
" not pretend to aſſign the ſpecifick Reaſons, why, after the Diſ-
" grace of this Miniſter, the King put two of his Wives to Death;
" divorced two other; and condemned many Perſons, merely on " Account of their religious Principles, to capital Puniſhment;
" among whom ſeveral were eminent for their great Merit; the " Papiſts being ſentenced to the Gallows, and Hereticks, for that " was the Diſtinction of thoſe Times, to the Flames; and laſtly,
" that he had made ſuch terrible Devaſtation of the Patrimony of " the Church, or, if ſome will rather chuſe to call it ſo, of the " State. This I will adventure to ſay, that if Cardinal Wolſey had " ſtill been at the Helm, he would never have ſuffered the State to " be driven like a Ship without a Pilot, by contrary Winds and " Courſes, upon ſo many dangerous Rocks. But the Cardinal's
" Greatneſs having been ſuch, that himſelf was ſcarce able to ſu-
" ſtain the Weight of it, even tho' it had not been rendered ſtill
" leſs ſupportable, on Account of the Envy, which his great Power
" and Riches had drawn upon him; he no ſooner began to decline in " the King's Favour, and to feel the Effects of his Diſpleaſure, but " being equally ſurpriſed and terrified, as if he had unexpectedly
" met a Lyon in the Way, he was ſo much depreſſed, that tho' he " made certain Efforts towards riſing again, he was never afterwards
" able to ſtand erect. Neither, after the King was thus once alie" nated, had the Cardinal ever a Permiſſion to come into his Pre-" ſence. Of ſo great Force was Calumny in his Enemies, if I might " not ſay, conſidering his vaſt Riches, of Avarice, where it ought " not to be named, than the Remembrance of his paſt Services, " and the moſt faithful, diligent, and obſequious Behaviour, whereby
" he had advanced the King's Glory, and his own Reputation, for " a Courſe of ſeveral Years. Yet, as I am not ignorant, neither
" ſhall I diſſemble, that ſeveral high Crimes were laid to his Charge;
" which yet did not appear to be founded upon ſuch very cogent
" Reaſons, but a Man, of no extraordinary Penetration, might " eaſily diſcover, they were exhibited by his Enemies: Neither had " any Man, at that Time, ſhould the Cardinal have been really
" chargeable with them, either the Courage or Honour to form " an Accuſation againſt him, before he fell under the Diſpleaſure of " the King, and was continually menaced and reproached by him,

" becauſe the Affair of the Divorce had not ſucceeded according to his " Majeſty's Expectation and Deſire; who, having obſerved the di- " latory Proceedings, or rather Prevarication of the Pope, and find- " ing no certain Way out of the Labyrinth, wherein he had been in- " volved for the Space of almoſt five Years, was now determined, " at any Rate, to break through Matters of Form; and to effect by " Force, what could not be obtained in an ordinary Method; and ſo, " with the Græcian Heroe, to cut the Knot, which he could not un- " tie. Taking therefore an Occaſion of conferring with the Car- " dinal, he diſcovers to him his Deſign of contracting a ſecond " Marriage, without Regard to the Pope's Approbation or Con- " currence; and at the ſame Time requires, that he would aſſign " ſome juſt Cauſe, why his Collegue, Campejus, notwithſtanding " the contrary Inſtructions he had lately received from Rome, ſhould " proceed to give Sentence for the Divorce. His Majeſty alledged " ſeveral Things in Defence of what he propoſed, and particular- " ly repreſented the Effects of his royal Diſpleaſure, which the Car- " dinal had Reaſon to fear he might incur, in caſe he ſhould ſhew " himſelf reluctant to ſo reaſonable a Demand. It doth not ap- " pear what Anſwer was returned by the Cardinal; this only is cer- " tain, That whether it were from ſome Diſlike which he expreſ- " ſed of the Thing, when it was firſt moved, as proceeding from " ſome raſh and ill-concerted Scheme, or that he wholly diſpaired " of bringing his Collegue into it; or as Sleiden conjectures, for " he cites no Authority for it, that his Majeſty was by ſome Means " aſſured, that Cardinal Wolſey himſelf had adviſed the Pope not " to ratify the Sentence of Divorce, leaſt the King ſhould marry " one who was inclined to favour the Lutheran Hereſy; to which " of theſe Cauſes we are to impute the King's Anger, or whether " to any other? this, I ſay, is certain; the Cardinal was ſo ſevere- " ly reproached and menaced by the King, that upon his with- " drawing, he diſcovered a moſt ſenſible Diſorder and Conſterna- " tion of Mind: For when the Biſhop of Carliſle, who, upon his " Return to Weſtminſter, attended him in his Barge, obſerved it " was a very hot Day, the Cardinal made anſwer, If you had been " as well chafed, as I have been within this Hour, you would then ſay, " you were indeed very hot."

16. I have made this long Extract from Godwyn, as the Sentiments of that learned Prelate in Relation to the political Conduct of Cardinal Wolſey, and the Effects of it, which were ſo glorious to the King and to the Kingdom, are in general agreeable to the Account, imperfect as it is, which I have endeavoured to give of his Adminiſtration. This Biſhop wrote with the Spirit and Ingenuity, which became a Father of the Church of England. He was an Enemy to Popery, and he has ſaid many Things that are ſevere enough upon Cardinal Wolſey in particular; where he apprehended that great Stateſman and Eccleſiaſtick, juſtly deſerved his Animadverſion. But this did not hinder him from doing that Juſtice to his Memory, to which he had real Pretenſions from a diſtinguiſhed and ſuperior Merit. It is ordinary indeed, for Men of little and impotent Minds, engaged in ſome weak or wicked Cauſe, to place the main Strength of it, in their Endeavours to blacken and depretiate thoſe of a contrary Principle; they will allow no good Qualities, except within the Sphere of their own Activity; and they form all their Judgements, both of Perſons and Things, only as they have Relation to their partial and narrow Views; or perhaps merely to ſome faſhionable Opinions, which are but of Yeſterday; and about which, ſucceeding Ages will wonder how Men of common Apprehenſions and common Honeſty, could poſſibly have ever been ſo very much divided. A Lover of Truth, on the other Hand, forms all his Judgements from the Evidence of Truth, and from that only. As the perſonal Qualifications of Men are of no Conſequence to determine what is true or falſe, ſo there is no Neceſſity, that the Juſtice or Honour of any Cauſe ſhould be made to depend on them. It is of no Manner of Uſe, in the Search after the true Church, whether Luther, King Henry the Eighth, or Pope Leo the Tenth, was a better Chriſtian? The true Doctrine of the Church, and the proper Method of diſcovering it, is the ſame, whatever the Character may be of thoſe, who either oppugn or profeſs it. Biſhop Godwyn, in his Hiſtorical Writings, regulated himſelf by theſe wholſome Maxims. He was zealous for the Reformation, but knew, it did not want to be ſupported by any unjuſt Invectives, or vile Detractions. In particular, with reſpect to the Affair of the Divorce, he did not think it requiſite to inquire, as upon an Article, wherein the Merits of the Reformation were concerned, whether Cardinal Wolſey, or Archbiſhop Cranmer acted with more Integrity and Reſolution? a Paſſage, I ſhall afterward cite from him, which hath ſome Reference to this Queſtion, appears, at leaſt, very honorary, and advantageous to the Cardinal.

1. AFTER the Revocation of the Cauſe to Rome, the King commanded the Queen to be removed from Court, and for his Diverſion took a Progreſs into the Country, accompanied with Ann Bolein. Having given a particular Account of the moſt memorable Things that happened, relating to Cardinal Wolſey and his Collegue, in that Progreſs, I ſhall not here repeat them. Grafton in Northamptonſhire was the Place, to which the King then repaired, and it was the laſt Scene of Enterview between his Majeſty and the two Legates. Cardinal Wolſey after that, was never admitted into the King's Preſence; and Campejus thought it was now Time for him to think of making his Return to Rome. I mentioned ſome Incidents, on Occaſion of their attending the King in that Place, which may not be diſagreeable to the Reader, if he will give himſelf the Trouble of conſulting my firſt [l] additional Paper. I have there ſaid ſome Things in general, both concerning the Character of Campejus, and of Ann Bolein. In Relation to the Latter, I ſhall here, by the Way, take the Liberty of obſerving a Miſtake, which Biſhop Burnet has committed about the Time of her Return from France. "How "long, ſaith he, ſhe continued in that Service I do [m] not find; "But it is probable, ſhe returned out of France, with her Father "from his Embaſſy in the Year 1529. When, as Stow ſays, he "brought with him the Picture of her Miſtreſs, who was offered "in Marriage to the King." Afterward the Hiſtorian proceeds to mention the Buſineſs of the Contract, between the Lord Piercy and this Lady out of Cavendiſh, but complains, that Writer hath not told us, in what Year this happened. 1529.

2. Cavendiſh being a Writer of ſo great Authority with our Hiſtorian, he might have conſulted him with more Attention, than he appears to have done. Then he would have found this Author ſaying in Manuſcript, for it is not in the printed Copies, that Ann Bolein came over into England, when the French Queen died, and as this Hiſtorian himſelf ſaith, in the Year 1524. After this it is highly probable, the [n] Contract happened with the Lord Piercy, upon [o] which ſhe was diſmiſſed from Court, and ſent Home for ſome Time, to her Father: Then ſhe was called to Court again, and the [p] King fell paſſionately in Love with her, all which happened before the King had moved any Thing publickly relating to his Divorce. For [q] Cavendiſh ſaith, the Cardinal's Embaſſy into France in the Year 1527, was the Effect of Ann Bolein's Contrivance, in Concurrence with his Enemies at Court. And the Letter of this Cardinal to Sir Gregory Caſſal, which was the firſt Diſpatch our Hiſtorian could find, concerning the Divorce, is dated on the Fifth of December, 1527. From theſe Circumſtances laid together, beſides the poſitive Teſtimony of Cavendiſh, it ſeems reaſonable, or rather neceſſary, to place the Return of Ann Bolein into England earlier than that Year. Neither is it certain from Stow, that Sir Thomas Bolein then brought over the Picture of the French King's Siſter with him; all this Annaliſt ſaith, is, "that Year "was a common Report about London, that the King had been "told, his Marriage with Queen Catherine was not lawful; where-"upon the King ſhould ſue a Divorce, and marry the Ducheſs of "Alanſon. And thereupon, Viſcount Rochfort had brought with "him the Picture of the ſaid Lady." From which Words it cannot be certainly inferred, that Sir Thomas Bolein might not have brought this Picture with him from France before this Year. It is indeed more than probable, he did bring it ſooner; becauſe this Ducheſs was in the Year 1527 married to Count Albert titular King of Navarre; and conſequently, which is an Error our Hiſtorian has fallen into, could not be offered in Marriage to King Henry at this Time. Saunders may be ſuſpected to have led moſt of our Writers into this Miſtake: but Doctor Heylin having corrected it, it might reaſonably have been expected, that our learned Hiſtorian would have taken Care to avoid it.

3. Campejus, upon his Audience of Leave, was not only reſpectfully treated by the King, without any Sign of Diſpleaſure or Reſentment, on Occaſion of what had paſſed, but diſmiſs'd with a Reward, and ſent under an honourable Conduct, toward the Sea-ſide in Order to his Embarkation. But when he came to take Ship, all his Baggage was opened and ranſacked with his Papers, by the Searchers. And when this Legate afterward complained of ſuch Uſage, as a Violence and Indignity offered to him, contrary to the Law of Nations, and the Rights of his legatine Character, which entituled him to the common Privilege of Ambaſſadors, the King remonſtrated, in Reſpect to the Searchers, that what they had done, being occaſioned by Miſtake, in purſuance of certain general Orders which they had received, and were bound by Oath to obſerve, and not done on any Account particularly relating to him, he was concerned at what had happened, and deſired it might be excuſed. But concerning the Privilege Campejus pleaded in Virtue of his Legation, the King wondered, how he underſtood our Laws ſo little, as to aſſume, after that Time, the Name of a Legate in England; Since, after he was made Biſhop of Salisbury, he was bound by Oath to maintain the Royal Prerogative. There is another Argument in Anſwer to this Complaint of Campejus, and the firſt of the Three in Order, concerning the Validity of which, as of the other Two, the Reader may judge for himſelf: They are at leaſt as ſpecious, as ſome Arguments, which have been made uſe of in other Reigns, and under other Governments, to defend unjuſt Violences againſt Perſons inveſted with a publick Character. But Princes ſeldom want Reaſons to aſſert and maintain, whatever they have Power to execute. What raiſes a generous Indignation in the Breaſt of every Man of Probity, is, that Princes and Miniſters ſhould imagin, Mankind either do not ſee thorough thoſe thin artificial Colours with which they would varniſh over any diſhonourable Action; or if they do ſee thorough them, which is commonly indeed the Caſe, yet that ſomething at leaſt is to be done in order to ſoften Matters, and as much, as may be poſſible, to ſalve Appearances.

4. Yet I do not apply theſe Reflections to the Caſe before us; they only riſe accidentally from it; and whatever the pretended Reaſons might be of this Uſage, which Campejus met with, it is very probable ſeveral of our Hiſtorians have obſerved the true Reaſons of it. The firſt whereof was, that this Legate was violently ſuſpected to have carried away clandeſtinely, either Money or Letters of private Correſpondence. And, particularly, that Cardinal Wolſey having a Deſign to withdraw out of England, had taken an Opportunity, under Cover of his Collegue, to convey great Sums of Money to Rome. The other Reaſon, and perhaps the principal Reaſon was, that the King hoped by this Means to recover the decretal Bull, which he ſo much deſired ſhould be laid before the Council; and which he could not eaſily believe Campejus had deſtroyed. Tho' in caſe, by this Means, the decretal Bull had been recovered, and publickly expoſed not only before the King's Council, but the great Council of the Nation in Parliament aſſembled, it might ſtill be queſtioned, whether an Inſtrument obtained after ſuch an irregular Manner, or rather extorted againſt the Conſent of the Party entruſted with it, would either have done any great Service, or Credit to the King's Cauſe?

5. Car-

5. Cardinal Wolſey being now left alone, diſcharged of his Commiſſion for trying the King's Cauſe, expoſed not only to the Diſpleaſure and Reſentments of the King, but of the preſent and future Queen, and having many other powerful Enemies at Court, began to apprehend, that his Affairs were in an ill Situation. Yet he did not ſuſpect his Ruin and Diſgrace were ſo near, as he had ſhortly after Cauſe to believe. Beſides the Reaſons of Diſguſt beforementioned, taken againſt him by the King, Edmund Campian in his little Treatiſe of the Divorce, obſerves, that Sir Francis Bryan being at Rome, did, by Means of a Courtezan, the Familiar of one who was in the Pope's Confidence and kept his Papers, procure a Letter of the Cardinal's, which wrought his Ruin after the following Manner; having ſhewed to her the Cardinal's Hand, and paid the Price of her Treachery, ſhe conducted the Affair ſhe had undertaken with ſo much Art, that upon Pretence of viſiting this Servant of the Pope in his Study, ſhe took the Opportunity of conveying away that Letter, which Sir Francis immediately tranſmitted to the King. This Account of Campian, Lord Herbert ſuppoſeth to be very improbable, upon a Reaſon aſſigned by him, which ſeems effectually to confute it; becauſe he "found by original Diſpatches, that Bryan was come from Rome, "before any Argument of the King's Diſfavour to the Cardinal "appeared."

6. However, now that the Cardinal could not be ignorant the King was much alienated from him, he would not appear (ſo free, eaſy, and prudent was his Manner) to take the leaſt Notice, as if he was declining in Favour, or apprehended, that any ill Deſigns were forming againſt him. So that when Michaelmas Term began, he went into Weſtminſter-hall, without abating any Thing of his uſual Pomp and Dignity; and there ſat as Chancellor, but no longer than the firſt Day of the Term; the next Day he ſtay'd at Home, expecting the Coming of the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk, who yet did not come 'till the Day following; and then by Order of the King, which was only verbal, acquainted him, it was the King's Pleaſure, he ſhould ſurrender up the great Seal of England into their Hands; and that he ſhould depart to Aſher, a Seat near Hampton-Court, belonging to the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter.

7. The Cardinal demanded a Sight of the Commiſſion, which gave them this Authority. To which it was anſwered, they were ſufficiently authoriſed from the King's own Mouth; but he did not think that a full and effectual Warrant, repreſenting that "the [r] great Seal was perſonally delivered to him by the King,

" ſhip, during the Term of his Life; whereof, for ſurety, he had
" the King's Letters Patents to ſhew." After ſome warm Debate, the Dukes departed without effecting the Deſign, upon which they came, and returned to the King at Windſor: who ſent them back the next Day to the Cardinal, with more authentick Credentials, having empowered them, by his Letters Patents, to demand of him the Broad Seal: In obedience to which he ſubmitted, and delivered the Seal to them.

8. The King afterward commanded him to leave York-Place, now Whitehall, a great Part of which he built, as he did Hampton-Court entirely; and then he was to repair to Aſhur. But before his Departure, he called his Officers before him, taking an Account of the Things ſeverally committed to their Charge. Concerning the Value of his rich Furniture, ſome general Computation may be made from the Inventory of Cavendiſh, which I ſhall recite in his own Words. " In his Gallery were ſet divers Tables, upon which " were laid divers and great Stores of rich Stuffs; as whole Pieces
" of Silk of all Colours, Velvets, Sattins, Muſts, Taffaties, Gro-
" garams, Scarlets, and divers rich Commodities. Alſo, there " were a thouſand Pieces of fine Hollands, and the Hangings of " the Gallery with Cloth of Gold, and Cloth of Silver, and rich " Cloth of Bodkin of divers Colours, which were hanged in ex" pectation of the King's coming.

" Alſo, on one Side of the Gallery were hanged the rich Suits
" of Copes of his own providing, which were made for the Col" leges of Oxford and Ipſwych, they were the Richeſt that ever I
" ſaw in all my Life; then had he two Chambers adjoining to the " Gallery, the One moſt commonly called the Guilt Chamber;
" wherein were ſet two broad and long Tables, whereupon was
" ſet ſuch abundance of Plate of all Sorts, as was almoſt incredible " to be believed, a great Part being all of clear Gold; and upon " every Table and Cupboard where the Plate was ſet, were Books,
" importing every Kind of Plate; and every Piece, with the Con" tents and Weight thereof."

9. Orders having been given by the Cardinal for the Delivery of all this Furniture, if it might not rather be ſaid of all this Treaſure, to the King, he prepared to go by Water for Aſhur; but before he took Boat, Sir William Gaſcoign his Treaſurer, officiouſly came unto him, and expreſſed much Concern to hear it reported, that he was to go ſtraight to the Tower. This Inſtance of Sir William's Regard to his Maſter, tho' the Effect of a well-intended Zeal, was not well received by the Cardinal; he gently reprimanded that Knight for his too eaſy Credulity, and as not having taken a right Method of adminiſtring the beſt Comfort to his Maſter in Adverſity; he ſaid, ſaid, he would have him, and all the Authors of ſuch falſe Reports to know, that he never deſerved to come there. There is ſomething ſo well expreſſed, and which diſcovers ſo perfect a Reſignation of Mind, ſo generous a Ceſſion of all thoſe Things to the King, which he acknowledged himſelf to have received by his Favour, that I ſhould be injurious to him to vary in the leaſt, either from his Sentiments or Diction. Although it hath pleaſed the King to take my Houſe ready furniſhed for his Pleaſure, at this Time, all the World ſhould know, I have nothing, but it is of Right for him, and of him I received all that I have. It is therefore convenient and reaſon, to render the ſame to him again.

10. When he entered his Barge at the Privy-ſtairs, there were a vaſt Number of Boats upon the Water filled with People, expecting to ſee the Cardinal carried to the Tower. If Cavendiſh his Obſervation upon this general Conflux of the Populace be true, "That all "Men in Favour are envied by the common People, tho' they do "adminiſter Juſtice truly." How much more enflamed will the Emotions of their Envy be, or rather of a juſt and laudable Indignation againſt very wicked, cruel, and corrupt Miniſters?

The Cardinal, after he landed at Putney, had not gone far upon his Mule, before he obſerved a Horſeman riding down the Hill towards him; whom, upon Inquiry, he found to be Mr. Norris; who came to him with a Meſſage from the King, and aſſured him in the King's Name, that he was as much in his Majeſty's Favour, as ever he had been, and ſhould ſo continue; that his Majeſty therefore adviſed him to be of good Comfort, and not give Way to any deſponding Thoughts, for he ſhould not Want: And although he had proceeded ſo unkindly againſt him, it was more at the Inſtigation of other Perſons, than from any Motive of Anger or Reſentment in himſelf. He added, the King was able to make him a Return more than equivalent to his Loſs, and of double the Value; and for his own Part, he had great Hopes of living to ſee him in better Eſtate, than ever he had been.

Upon this Meſſage of Mr. Norris, the Cardinal is ſaid to have alighted with great Agility, and without the Aſſiſtance of any Servant, from his Mule, and to have kneeled down upon both his Knees in the Dirt, holding up his Hands in a Tranſport of Joy to Heaven. This Action of the Cardinal has been very differently interpreted. Some have made it an Argument of the Meanneſs and Deſpondency of his Mind, and of his acting below the Dignity of thoſe Characters which he ſtill ſuſtained. And indeed, to ſee a Prince of the Church, and Archbiſhop of York, humbling himſelf in the Dirt, upon the Receipt of an inſiduous Meſſage, as the Event proved it to be, from a Prince, who had no better conſidered his great Services, and at beſt ruined him with a very ill Grace, did not appear to give any extraordinary Evidence of the Force or Firmneſs of his Mind. But, as it has been obſerved, concerning ſome Generals, who had given repeated Proofs, on all other Occaſions, of a brave intrepid Reſolution, that at certain particular Conjunctures, their uſual Proweſs and Preſence of Mind have failed them; ſo it might happen to the Cardinal, that at this critical Seaſon, through ſome bodily Indiſpoſition, or a Concurrence of foreign unhappy Circumſtances, he was leſs Maſter of himſelf, or leſs ſenſible, for the Time, of what he owed to his own Dignity. It will be hard however, to form a general Character of any Perſon, from one or two particular Actions, under Circumſtances of great Diſtreſs, againſt the former general uninterrupted Courſe of their Behaviour; and I believe few Men will be found among thoſe who are moſt celebrated for their Fortitude, that would ſubmit to be tried by this Rule. It will be yet more difficult to account for the Cardinal's Manner of writing to Gardiner, then Secretary of State, who had been frequently employed by him, if he did not owe the Opportunity he now had of ſerving the Cardinal at Court, principally to his Favour. In this Letter, which was ſent by Cromwell, the Cardinal ſollicits the favourable Interpoſition of the Secretary, after a Manner, which I ſhould be willing to conceal, if the Character of a faithful Hiſtorian, did not oblige me to report it. He deſires Gardiner, "as he tendered his poor Life, and at the Reve"rence of God, and that Holy Time (of Chriſtmas) he would ſend

"him his Letter, appealing alſo to his Pity, knowing in what "Agony he was; and that he would not only deſerve towards God,
"but bind him thereby to be his continual Beadſman; and ſo ended
"from Aſhur, written, (theſe, ſaith Mr. Strype from whom I now quote, are his Words,) "with his rude Hand, and ſorrowful Heart;
"ſubſcribing himſelf [t] the moſt Miſerable Thomas Cardinal of York."
A memorable Inſtance of the Viciſſitude of what we call Fortune! A great Miniſter, whoſe Power and Intereſt for ſome Years, had given him, in a Manner, the intire Direction of Affairs in the Court of his Maſter, and great Weight and Authority in ſeveral foreign Courts, if they had not rendered him, in ſome Degree, formidable to them; is here, in the moſt abject Manner, proſtrating himſelf, and his Dignities of Cardinal and Archbiſhop, before a Creature of his own making! Shall we call this a judicial Act of Providence to humble a Man, who, with all his great Qualities, had too much diſcovered the Air and Manner of a Perſon elated with Proſperity and Succeſs? Such Inſtances of Revolution in the Fortune and Tempers of Men, are very proper to ſhew us, that it is not in Man, whatever ſhining humane Qualities he may be Maſter of, to direct his Way: But that God often makes the Height of his Pride and his Power, the Occaſion of rendering him more deſpicably wretched: Or, ſhall we ſay, there is ſomething ſo mean and unworthy of Cardinal Wolſey, in this Addreſs, that the natural Genius and Force of his Mind was now departed from him, by Reaſon of an ill State of Body, and of his wanting at Aſhur, not only the Conveniences, but what, by Perſons of Condition, would be thought the neceſſary Supports of Life; for, according to the Account of his Gentleman-Uſher Cavendiſh, who attended him in that Place, they had neither Beds, Sheets, Table-cloaths, or Diſhes to eat their Meat in; nor Money wherewith to buy any. Under theſe Circumſtances, the pitiful Application which was made to Gardiner, may be conſidered, not properly as the Act of the great Cardinal Wolſey, but of a Man juſt creeping feebly out from a Fit of Sickneſs, and in great Diſtreſs on other Accounts; who had not yet recovered any competent Degree of Strength, either in Regard to the Faculties of his Body, or Mind.

11. Others have thought, theſe low Submiſſions of the Cardinal might be conſidered as Arguments of his Humility; I ſhall ſay nothing more concerning the latter Inſtance. But as to the Former; his kneeling in the Dirt, an Act of pure voluntary Humility, to which the Circumſtances he was in, did not oblige him; it is ſaid, it was, upon that very Account, a more ſenſible Token of a Mind truly humble; that it was at leaſt, a Manner of Behaviour agreeable to his Circumſtances at that Time, tho' he was not ſtrictly obliged to it; and that it is no Way inconſiſtent with the Character of a great and generous Mind, to deſcend to do thoſe Things, in certain Caſes, which, at other Times, would be very improper, and perhaps diſhonourable or indecent; that there are Expreſſions and Inſtances of Humiliation in the Devotions and Hiſtory of David, which ſeem to require a Judgement ſhould be made of them by this Rule: And that it was no juſt Imputation upon the Courage or Bravery of Beliſarius to beg, when he was reduced to a Neceſſity of begging. The Painters therefore, and Statuaries, who would expreſs the Air and Manner of that General, under the Circumſtances of a Beggar, have taken Care, at the ſame Time they repreſent both thoſe Characters, to preſerve them diſtinct. They give him the Elevation of one conſcious of his Merit, and of the Dignity, from which he was fallen; yet to which he ſtill appears, in all Reſpects, equal. But this noble Conſciouſneſs is tempered with a modeſt and humble Air, ſuitable to the Circumſtances of a Perſon, under the Preſſure and other Diſadvantages of extreme Want.

12. While the Cardinal continued at Aſhur, Cromwell took an Occaſion of repreſenting to him, that he ought in Conſcience to conſider, no competent Proviſion had been made for ſeveral of his Servants, who had been very true and faithful to him, and had never forſaken him (that was his Expreſſion) in Weal nor Woe. To which the Cardinal, anſwered "Alas! Tom, you know I have "nothing to give you, nor them, and am aſhamed and ſorry that "I cannot requite your faithful Services." Cromwell propoſed that his Chaplains whom he had preferred to rich Benefices, ſome to the Value of a Thouſand, others of five hundred Pounds annually, ſhould ſeverally contribute towards the Support of his Servants.

13. Upon this Repreſentation, the Cardinal, in his Epiſcopal Habit, called all his Gentlemen, Yeomen, and Chaplains, who then attended, before him: But there is ſomething ſo moving in Cavendiſh his Account, of what paſſed on that Occaſion, that I think my ſelf obliged to report it in his own Words. "My "Lord, ſaith he, went with his Chaplains to the upper End of "his Chamber, where was a great Window, beholding his goodly "Number of Servants, who could not ſpeak to them, untill the "Tears ran down his Cheeks; which, being perceived by his Ser-"vants, cauſed Fountains of Tears to guſh out of their ſorrow-"ful Eyes, in ſuch Sort, as would cauſe any Heart to relent. At "laſt, continueth he, my Lord ſpake to them to this Effect and "Purpoſe."

Moſt faithful Gentlemen and true hearted Yeomen, I much lament, that in my Proſperity, I did not ſo much for you, as I might have done, and what was in my Power to do; I conſider, that if in my Proſperity I had preferred you to the King, then ſhould I have incurred the King's Servants Diſpleaſure; who would not ſpare to report behind my Back, that there could no Office in the Court eſcape the Cardinal and his Servants; And by that Means I ſhould have run into open Slander of all the World; but now is it come to paſs, that it hath pleaſed the King to take all that I have into his Hands, ſo that I have now nothing to give you; For I have nothing left me, but the bare Cloaths on my Back; "with many other Words in their Praiſe; and ſo he giving them "all hearty Thanks, went away, and afterward many of his Ser-"vants departed from him. Some to their Friends; Maſter Crom-"well to London, it being then the Beginning of the Parliament."

14. Stow in relating this Speech of the Cardinal, hath ſeveral Particulars not mentioned by Cavendiſh: The Cardinal does not, according to that Annaliſt, lament to ſee his Servants about him; but he laments a certain Ingratitude on his own Behalf, towards them; as he did not know, or conſider before, the Treaſure he had in his Houſe of ſo many faithful Servants. He did not reflect upon any Thing with greater Remorſe, than on his having neglected to prefer them according to their Merits; yet reminds them, that he had not ſo many temporal, as ſpiritual Preferments in his Diſpoſition. He tells them no Prince had been ſo truly and faithfully ſerved; he requires them to have Patience, and doubts not, but the King, conſidering how falſe the Suggeſtions of his Enemies were, and that there is no Manner of Proportion between his Puniſhment, and any Offence he had given, will ſhortly reſtore him to Favour; and then he ſhould have more Power, as he would not want Inclination to ſerve them; for whatever might be the Surpluſage of his yearly Revenues above his Disburſements, ſhould be divided among them. "I will never, ſaith he, during my Life, "eſteem the Goods or Riches of this World any otherwiſe, than "ſhall be ſufficient to maintain the Eſtate that God hath, and "ſhall call me to. And if the King do not ſo ſhortly reſtore "me, then will I write for you, either to the King, or any "Nobleman in this Realm, to return your Service. For I doubt "not, but the King, or any Nobleman of this Realm, will cre-"dit my Letter in your Commendation." However, after having adviſed them for a Time, to repair ſeverally Home to their Wives or Parents; he recommends to them, that they would not chuſe to ſerve any under the Degree of a King; and ſpeaks with Aſſurance, that the King would not refuſe them.

Cromwell having obſerved, that ſeveral of the Servants, who were ready to obey the Commands of their Maſter, wanted Money to this End, did himſelf propoſe a Contribution, and recommended it after a very handſome inſinuating Manner, eſpecially by an Act of his own Liberality. His Example was followed by the Chaplains, and by that Means a competent Sum was raiſed for the Benefit and preſent Supply of the Servants.

Stow hath not mentioned where he had this Speech; yet I am much inclined to believe, the Additions, which he has made to that of Cavendiſh, genuine. The former does not appear on all Accounts ſo full and tender, as might have been expected on the Occaſion; there are ſeveral Topicks of Conſolation uſed by the Cardinal in the latter, with a more open and generous Reproach of himſelf, for his former Neglect of his Servants, which it became a good and benevolent Maſter to employ, under Circumſtances of Diſtreſs; but which, great as it was at preſent, did not, obliterate the Senſe of his Dignity or former Grandour; if we may judge from the Advice which he gave to them, that they ſhould not willingly ſerve any other Maſter, below a crowned Head.

1. WHILE the Cardinal continued under theſe diſtreſſed Circumſtances, at Aſher, the Proceſs againſt him, upon a Bill of Indictment by Hales the Attorney General, was carried on with all imaginable Vigour. That Indictment ſet forth, "How "Thomas Legate de Latere, Cardinal and Archbiſhop of York, being "not ignorant of the Duty, he owed to his Sovereign, yet had "obtained certain Bulls from Pope Clement the Seventh: Which "ſaid Bulls he cauſed to be publickly [t] read in Weſtminſter. By "Virtue of which, he exerciſed Juriſdiction and Authority-Lega-"tine, to the Deprivation of the King's Power eſtabliſhed in his "Courts of Juſtice; which he had exerciſed to that Time, to the "Prejudice of both ſecular and eccleſiaſtical Perſons. And that "by Colour thereof, he had given away the Church of Stoke Guild-"ford in the County of Surrey, (being of Right in the Donation "of the Prior of St. Pancrace) to one James Gorton, who alſo "enjoyed it accordingly. All which was to the Contempt of the "King and his Crown, and contrary to the Statute of the 16 of "Richard the Second. Moreover, that by Colour of the ſaid Au-"thority, he had cauſed the laſt Wills and Teſtaments of many "(out of his Dioceſe) to be exhibited and proved in his Court; "and their Goods and Chattels to be adminiſtred by ſuch as he "appointed. Alſo that under Colour of the ſaid Authority, he "had made divers Viſitations out of his Dioceſe, and drawn di-"vers Penſions from Abbeys, to the Contempt of the King and "his Laws." 1529. 1530.

2. Cavendiſh

2. Cavendiſh makes the Articles exhibited againſt the Cardinal in the Parliament Houſe, prior to his Indictment; and repreſents, as if his Enemies had been conſtrained to take this Method, upon the Miſcarriage of the Bill of Attainder, by Means of the excellent Defence made for him by Cromwell in Parliament. But this Author was miſtaken in his Account of the Matter; for the Parliament did not ſit 'till the Third [u] of November, 1529; and on the Twenty eighth of October, John Scuſe and Chriſtopher Gemney, were authoriſed by Writ, and at the King's ſpecial Permiſſion, to appear in Court, as Attorneys for the Cardinal. And in Virtue of the Submiſſion he made, purſuant to the Proceſs againſt him, all his Effects had been ſeized, whereby he was reduced to the laſt Circumſtances of Diſtreſs at Aſher, before the [x] Articles of high Treaſon were preferred againſt him in Parliament. Having made ſome Remarks on thoſe Articles, in the firſt additional Paper, I ſhall not here reſume the Conſideration of them; or make any farther Reflections upon the Cardinal's Acquittal by the Commons, principally upon the Defence, if not ſolely, that was made by one of his menial Servants, newly introduced into the Houſe, without Power and Authority, without Quality, or any conſiderable Fortune; without thoſe Influences, which Men have ſince underſtood to manage with Succeſs; without any ſecret or more open Direction from Court, or rather againſt the known Diſpoſition of it: Theſe are Circumſtances which offered as ſtrong a negative Argument in Proof of the Cardinal's Innocence, eſpecially as to the main Articles againſt him, as perhaps ever happened in any Caſe, or can well be ſuppoſed to happen in any Time future. And therefore, we may juſtly preſume, he had very good Grounds for the modeſt Aſſurance, wherewith he delivered himſelf in the following Paſſage, in a Letter, which he wrote to Cromwell, from Aſher. "As "touching the Articles laid unto me, whereof a great Part be un- "true; and thoſe which be true, are of ſuch Sort, that by doing "of them, no Malice or Untruth can be juſtly arrected unto me; "neither to the Prince's Perſon, nor the Realm; this may be urged "to the King."

3. But beſides what I have ſaid in another [z] Place, I cannot here omit to make ſome farther Remarks on a very heavy, if I might not ſay, moſt diſingenuous Imputation, caſt upon the Cardinal, by the learned Hiſtorian ſo often mentioned, in his Hiſtory of the Reformation. "He (Cardinal Wolſey) not only ſerved the King in "all his ſecret Pleaſures, but was lewd and vitious himſelf; ſo that "his having the French Pox (which in thoſe Days was a Matter

" of no ſmall Infamy, in a Perſon of his Character) was ſo publick, " that it was brought againſt him in Parliament, when he fell in " Diſgrace."

Among the many Articles preferred againſt the Cardinal in Parliament, this was confeſſedly one: " That he came daily to the " King and blew upon him, rowning in his Ear, when he knew " he had the contagious Diſeaſe of the great Pox broken out upon " him, in divers Places of his Body." And from hence our Hiſtorian learnedly concludes, his having that Diſeaſe was notorious. But is it then reconcileable to any known Law of Equity or Juſtice, to infer the Guilt of any Perſon, barely from his being accuſed? This might perhaps be a convenient Method in certain Caſes, to prevent tedious Delays and embarraſſing Forms of Law in the Proſecution of Criminals: But Men will never be therefore convinced, that any Criminal ought to ſuffer, or be found guilty upon a bare Indictment, without good Evidence. And our Hiſtorian himſelf, if we may judge from what he has ſaid on other Occaſions, where he was under no perſonal Prejudice, was really of the ſame Opinion. Eſpecially, where he affirms, "[a] It was a Blemiſh never " to be waſhed off, and which could not be enough condemned, " and was a Breach of the moſt ſacred and unalterable Rules of " Juſtice, which is capable of no Excuſe, to attaint Perſons with- " out bringing them to a Tryal." And yet here he condemns Cardinal Wolſey as guilty of a Crime, which was indeed charged againſt him, but never proved, or I might rather ſay from which he was acquitted. I am not at all ſollicitous for the Cardinal's Honour and Reputation in this Matter, any farther, than the Laws of common Humanity and Candour oblige me: But as thoſe are particularly indiſpenſable Qualifications of a good Hiſtorian, they ought to have influenced our learned Hiſtorian, ſo much at leaſt, as to have made him more cautious in his Cenſures, upon ſo ſlight a Foundation.

It is well known, that tho' the Cardinal did not perſonally make Anſwer to the Articles exhibited againſt him, yet Cromwell vindicated him ſo well in the Houſe of Commons, that as this Hiſtorian himſelf [b] confeſſeth, they were thrown out of the Houſe. And in the manuſcript Life of the Cardinal, Mr. Cavendiſh ſaith, the Cardinal told him, that " If he might come to his Anſwer, he feared " no Man alive. For he liveth not, ſaid he, that ſhall look upon " this Face (pointing to his own Face) that ſhall be able to accuſe " me of any Untruth, and that know well my Enemies."

4. I ſhall

4. I ſhall only add, in Relation to the Articles, that tho' my Lord [c] Coke affirms, he printed very correctly from the Original, the Articles exhibited to the King againſt Cardinal Wolſey; yet ſome have thought there is Reaſon to ſuſpect the Truth of his Record, from Sir Thomas More's ſubſcribing firſt before the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolk; it being certain, the Act of Parliament, which eſtabliſheth the Precedence of the Lord Chancellor, was not then made. But however, this Difficulty may be accounted for; the Subſcription of the Chancellor before thoſe two Dukes, cannot be of any Force to overthrow the Credit of my Lord Coke's Teſtimony, there being nothing, in this Method, but was agreeable to that obſerved in other Inſtruments; particularly in the [d] Conveyance made of York-Place for the Uſe of the King. What is much more ſurprizing in that Conveyance, is, the Concurrence of ſo great and excellent a Perſon as Sir Thomas More, and ſo famed for an unbiaſſed Integrity; and who had moreover, as himſelf acknowledgeth in the [e] Extract I have taken of a Letter from him, many perſonal Obligations to the Cardinal.

5. The Reaſon why I make this Remark, and which I am unable perfectly to reconcile with the Character of Sir Thomas More, will appear more fully from what I am going to obſerve, in Reference to a Converſation between the Cardinal and Judge Shelley, who was ſent by the King, to demand, in his Majeſty's Name, York-Place of the Cardinal; requiring him, as he pretended, according to the Opinion of all the King's Judges and learned Council, that his Grace ſhould make a Recognizance, and before a Judge, acknowledge and confeſs, the Right thereof to belong to the King and his Succeſſors; and ſo his Highneſs ſhould be aſſured thereof. I am not ſo well verſed in the Laws of the Land, as to be able to determine, whether, according to the Letter of any Law then in Being, a Biſhop could, by a perſonal Act, make an abſolute Ceſſion for himſelf and his Succeſſors, of the Church's Patrimony. Admitting there might poſſibly then be a Power in the Crown, acting according to the utmoſt Extent of it, to authoriſe or receive ſuch a Ceſſion; yet the pious and equitable Reaſons alledged by the Cardinal againſt the Exerciſe of it are ſo ſtrong, that one would think a good and religious Prince ſhould not have been able to withſtand the Force of them; which the Reader will beſt diſcover in the Cardinal's own Words.

" Maſter Shelley, I know the King, of his own Nature, is of a " royal Spirit, not requiring more than Reaſon ſhall lead him to, " by the Law; and therefore I counſel you, and all other Judges

" and

" and learned Men of his Council, to put no more in his Head,
" than Law, which may ſtand with Conſcience. For then you " tell him, that although this be Law, yet it is not Conſcience;
" for Law without Conſcience, is not fit to be miniſtred by a King
" nor his Council, nor by any of his Miniſters; for every Coun" cil to a King ought to have Reſpect to Conſcience before the Ri-" gour of Law; [f] for it is honourable to do what is equitable and " becoming, not always what is ſimply lawful. The King ought,
" for his royal Dignity and Prerogative, to mitigate the Rigour of " the Law; and therefore, in his princely Place, he hath conſti-
" tuted a Chancellor, to order for him the ſame: And therefore,
" the Court of Chancery hath been commonly called the Court of " Conſcience; for that it hath Juriſdiction to command the Law, " in every Caſe, to deſiſt from the Rigour of the Execution. And " now I ſay to you, Maſter Shelley, have I Power, or may I with " Conſcience give that away, which is now mine for me, and my " Succeſſors? If this be Law and Conſcience, I pray you ſhew me
" your Opinion."

To which this weak Judge, to ſpeak as tenderly as the Nature of the Thing will allow, replied,

" Forſooth, there is no great Conſcience in it; but having Re" gard to the King's great Power, it may the better ſtand with
" Conſcience, who is ſufficient to recompence the Church of York
" with the double Value."

The Cardinal's Anſwer to this inſidious Argument, was ſuch, as became a prudent and faithful Guardian of his epiſcopal Rights. " That I know well, ſaith he, but there is no ſuch Condition, but " only a bare and ſimple Departure of others Rights. If every " Biſhop ſhould do ſo, then might every Prelate give away the " Patrimony of the Church, and ſo in Proceſs of Time, leave no" thing for their Succeſſors to maintain their Dignities; which " would be but little to the King's Honour."

6. However, the Cardinal was at laſt prevailed upon to ſubmit to the King's Commands: How he ſatisfied, or could ſatisfy his own Conſcience in the Matter, I do not pretend to examine; but that he made his Submiſſion with the greateſt Regret of Mind, may be very reaſonably inferred from the Appeal, which he then ſolemnly entered before Judge Shelley, in the following Words, " There" fore I charge your Conſcience to diſcharge me; and ſhew his
" Highneſs from me, that I muſt deſire his Majeſty to remember,
" that there is both Heaven and Hell."

7. But tho' I meddle not with the ſecret Motives of Conſcience upon which the Cardinal made this Ceſſion, relating to York-Place, and (as it appears from a ſubſequent Act of Parliament to confirm it) for the King's ſpecial Pleaſure and Paſtime; yet, it may not be here improper to recite the prudential Reaſons, upon which he confeſſed himſelf guilty, and ſubmitted to the Indictment of Premunire. Cavendiſh his Words, in the Manuſcript, relating to his Submiſſion, are remarkable, "From Peterburgh the Cardinal went and ſtaid three "or four Days at Sir William Fitz-williams, in whoſe Garden I "had much private Diſcourſe with my Maſter the Cardinal; "among other Things, he asked me what was ſaid of him at "London? I anſwered, I had heard him blamed there for ſo tamely "ſubmitting to the King, and acknowledging himſelf guilty of "the Premunire. Well, ſays he, they who cenſured me thus, per-"ceived not ſo much as I: For I conſidered that my Enemies had "brought the Matter ſo to paſs againſt me, that they cauſed the "King to take the Matter into his own Hands; and after he had "once Poſſeſſion of all my Goods, rather than he would have "delivered them again, or taken Foil therein at my Hands, with-"out doubt he would have imagined my Undoing and Deſtru-"ction; whereof the Beſt would have been perpetual Impriſon-"ment: And I had rather confeſs the Matter as I did, and live at "large like a poor Vicar, than lie in Priſon with all the Goods and "Honours I then had. Beſides, ſays he, if I had ſtood it out "with the King, there was a Night-Crow (meaning Ann Bullen) "that ever cried in his Ear againſt me; and if ſhe might have "perceived any Obſtinacy in me, would not have failed to have "ſet it forth with ſuch Vehemency, that I ſhould rather have ob-"tained the King's Indignation, than his lawful Favour: There-"fore I thought it beſt to keep ſtill his Favour, with Loſs of "Goods and Dignity."

[f] Laus eſt facere quod decet, non quod licet.

8. It is the more difficult to account for the Prejudice, which this Lady had entertained againſt the Cardinal, on Account of the great Zeal and Aſſiduity, he had all along diſcovered in puſhing the Divorce. I have given ſeveral Inſtances of his Sincerity in that Affair; but it ſtill appears more fully, from a [g] Paper, among other of my moſt valuable Collections, communicated by the very worthy and learned Mr. Baker, Entituled, A Memorial of ſuch Communication as my Lord Legate's Grace had with the Queen's Almoner, which, I believe, hath never been printed before, and cannot but be acceptable to the curious Reader.

9. But whatever the true Reaſons of this Lady's Diſtaſte at the Cardinal might be, it is certain in Fact, and from the Paſſage juſt cited from Cavendiſh, that ſhe was his Enemy. And therefore, what our learned Hiſtorian has aſſerted, that many kind Meſſages were ſent to him both from the King, and Ann Bolein, ſeems very much to want Confirmation. Cavendiſh ſaith indeed, ſhe did, at the King's earneſt Entreaty, ſend the Cardinal a Preſent of a Tablet of Gold that hang by her Side; but this was the only Meſſage he received from her. In the [b] Collections of Mr. Maſter, are ſeveral Extracts from Letters between the Cardinal and Cromwell, during the Cardinal's Diſgrace. In one of them, "He entreats Cromwell to ſollicit "the King to be gracious unto him, and to practiſe, that the "Lady Ann may mediate for him." Cromwell, in a Letter to the Cardinal writes, "Mr. Page received your Letter directed to my "Lady Ann, and delivered the Same; there is yet no Anſwer; "ſhe gives kind Words, but will not promiſe to ſpeak to the King "for you." And in another Letter to a third Perſon, Cromwell writes, "None dare ſpeak to the King on his (the Cardinal's) Part, "for Fear of Madam Ann's Diſpleaſure."

10. In the Hiſtory of the Reformation, there is one Miſtake committed relating to the Cardinal, and the Time concerning which I am now ſpeaking, that deſerves to be corrected. We are told by the [i] learned Hiſtorian, "The Cardinal was admitted to ſit in the "Houſe, where he ſhewed himſelf as ſubmiſſive in his Fawning, "as he had formerly done in his Scorn and Contempt of all who "durſt oppoſe him."

Here is a Fact which never ſubſiſted, made the Occaſion of introducing a Charge, which would have required other Evidence, beſides the Author's poſitive Affirmation, ſuppoſing the Fact had been really true.

Beſides the Difficulty of Explaining the Senſe of this Paſſage, and of reconciling it with the Propriety and common Uſe of the Engliſh Tongue, to ſay, That a Man was ſubmiſſive in his Scorn and Contempt of all who durſt oppoſe him; the curious Reader will naturally enquire, by what Authority, or upon what probable Grounds this is ſpoken? For firſt, it is ſufficiently plain from Cavendiſh, who attended the Cardinal at this Time, that he remained at Aſhur during the whole Seſſions of Parliament. Secondly, There are great Improbabilities which ſhake the Credit of this Story, from the Cardinal's being found guilty of the Premunire, and his ſtanding obnoxious all this Time to the Penalties of it. Under theſe Circumſtances, without ſome direct or poſitive Proof, it is not very natural to ſuppoſe the Cardinal would chuſe to appear in Parliament. It is true, on the Twenty firſt of November, the King granted him his Protection; but he was not pardoned 'till the February following; which was two Months after the Breaking-up of the Parliament. But what I take to be the moſt conſiderable Objection againſt this Story, is, that the King had made a Seizure of York-Place, and all the Cardinal's rich Moveables; ſo that he had no Houſe for his Reſidence in Town, or near to it: And it is highly improbable, that he ſhould come in the Morning from Aſhur, diſtant about twenty Miles from London, where, for the moſt part, he was in an ill State of Health, and then return again at Night, at the very Seaſon of the Year, when the Days were ſhorteſt.

In Doctor James his Collections, I find a Letter from [k] Sir Gregory Caſſal at Rome, bearing Date the Third of January 1529, wherein a very extraordinary Overture is made by the Pope to the Cardinal: His Holineſs propoſeth, that if the Cardinal ſhould deſign a Journey into Spain, himſelf would go too, and that they ſhould proceed in Quality of two Legates, acting conjunctly as Brothers, or Coadjutors veſted with equal Powers, and treating one another with equal Regard; for that theſe Conditions ſeemed requiſite, in order to induce the Emperor to comply with the Terms, which they ſhould demand of him: The Pope thinks it adviſeable, that himſelf ſhould take the Opportunity of conferring with the French King by the Way. Yet I am ſenſible this Letter, upon a Review, ought not to be referred to the preſent Year, according to the Engliſh Stile, but to the Year preceeding. However, having omitted it in the proper Place, I thought it might not be altogether unacceptable to the Reader here.

11. Beſides the Reaſons already mentioned, upon which the Cardinal was induced to make his Submiſſion to the King, by confeſſing himſelf guilty upon his Indictment, it may be proper to obſerve, that he had Aſſurances given to him, in Conſequence of his Submitting, of Favour, and kind Uſage, which he never received. He writes to Cromwell from Aſhur, about the Beginning of the Year 1530, that for his [l] Maintenance, and to put him into a Capacity of doing Good to his Servants, and of beſtowing Alms, which York will not do, the King, if he take from him Winchester, will allow him a Penſion out of it: "For God, ſaith he, "be my Judge, I never thought, and ſo I was aſſured at the ma-"king my Submiſſion, to depart from any of my Promotions. "For the Rigour of the Law, for any Offence that can be arrected "to me deſerveth no ſuch Puniſhment; and ſo truſting in the King's "Goodneſs, I am come to this Point. I hope his Grace will "conſider the ſame accordingly. I have had fair Words, but "little comfortable Deeds. Thoſe Noblemen did otherwiſe pro-"miſe, upon their Honours to me; upon Truſt whereof, I made "the frank Gift of my whole Eſtate."

In the ſame [m] Collections I alſo find this Remark: "When "the Cardinal ſubmitted, and made a free Gift of all that he had "to the King, which he did at the Perſuaſion of divers Noblemen, "it was promiſed him, that the King would take Order for the "Payment of his Debts, and Maintenance of his Eſtate; now he "writes he is in great Want, and deſires Relief."

12. If the Cardinal, at the Inſtance, and upon the Promiſe of certain Noblemen, did really make any Ceſſion, as theſe two Extracts import, either of his own Rights, or thoſe of the Church, which he was not ſtrictly obliged to make, and which he could not have been obliged to make by any fair legal Proceſs; tho' his Submiſſion, in this Reſpect, was not perhaps ſtrictly allowable in one, who could be no Stranger to the inſidious Arts, ſometimes practiſed in the Courts of Princes, by Perſons of the firſt Diſtinction, if not by Princes themſelves, in Order to impoſe upon Expectants by colluſive Promiſes; yet, he was at leaſt more excuſable in ſuppoſing, (as it was) Perſons of Honour and noble Birth, could not, on any Account, be induced to falſify their Word: There is ſomething ſo ſervile, ſo vile, and ſhocking in ſuch a Falſification, or even in the diſtant Approaches towards it, that a Man muſt have in himſelf ſome very noxious Principles of Corruption, who can believe Perſons of the firſt Dignity, capable of being debaſed to ſo very unjuſt, and ignominious a Degree.

1529. 1530. 1. THE Cardinal, during his Reſidence at Aſher, received frequent, Cavendiſh ſaith, daily, Meſſages from Court, but more of them afflicting, than conſolatory. His Enemies uſing, all poſſible Artifices, now they had reduced him ſo low, to cruſh him intirely; they endeavoured at leaſt ſo to mortify and intimidate him, that he ſhould not think himſelf capable, by any Means, of regaining the King's Favour. For they were apprehenſive, if he ſhould be in a Condition to form an Attempt to that End, and ſucceed in it, they would find, to their Coſt, the Effects of his Reſentment; if ſome of them had not cauſe to fear thoſe Conſequences from it, on Account of the malicious and unjuſt Calumnies whereby they had impoſed upon the King, which might have affected them in their neareſt Intereſts. Never to forgive the injured Party, is not a recent Maxim practiſed in the Courts of Princes; but has been exemplified almoſt in all Courts, and in all Ages by baſe and corrupt Men in Power; yet in Proportion to the Greatneſs of their Power, for that Reaſon, more vile and contemptible.

2. The Cardinal obſerving the Deſigns of his Enemies, uſed all wiſe and neceſſary Precautions in Order to obviate them; and armed himſelf with ſo much Patience, that they could not provoke him either to ſay or do any Thing, that might juſtly render him obnoxious. However his ſeveral Misfortunes had ſo ill an Effect upon the State of his Health, as it has been commonly ſuppoſed, that at [a] Chriſtmas he was ſeized with a dangerous Sickneſs. And Doctor Butts, who was ſent by Order of the King to attend him, upon his Return to Court, reporting, that if he ſhould not ſhortly receive Comfort from his Majeſty, he would within four Days be a dead Man; the King made Anſwer, "God forbid that he ſhould "die, for I would not loſe him for Twenty thouſand Pounds. I "pray you go to him, and do your Care to him." Upon which Doctor Butts adviſing the King to ſend ſome comfortable Meſſage to him, his Majeſty took a Ring from his Finger charged with a Ruby, upon which his own Picture was engraven, commanding the Doctor to acquaint the Cardinal, that he was not, in his Heart, offended with him for any Thing, uſing other Expreſſions which diſcovered a tender and friendly Concern for him. And upon this Occaſion it was, that, at the King's Deſire, whoſe Words I recite in the [b] Margin, Ann Bolein took a Tablet of Gold that hung by her Side, and gave it to Doctor Butts to be delivered to the Cardinal in Terms, and after a Manner, very obliging. The Cardinal received theſe Preſents with much Joy; and whether it was owing to the Emotions occaſioned by it, or to the Advice of his Phyſicians, (among whom he had the greateſt Confidence in Dr. Cromer) or to any other Cauſe, in the Space of four Days he found himſelf in a good Way of Recovery. And his Phyſicians, to whom he made Offer of a Reward, which they declined to accept, returned to Court, having ſtrict Command from the King, who would gratify them at his own Expence, not to take any Thing of him.

3. Nothing memorable occurs to me that happened to the Cardinal at Aſhur from this Time, 'till towards Candlemas; When the King cauſed to be ſent to him, but without imparting his Deſign to the Lords of the Council, four Loads of rich Furniture; after the Receipt of which he made Requeſt to the King, which was granted, that he might be removed from Aſhur to Richmond.

4. Theſe Favours were not conferred on the Cardinal with ſo much Privacy, but the Lords of the Council, who were his Enemies, had Notice of them; and fearing leaſt, the Place of his Reſidence being ſo near to the Court, his Majeſty might be moved on one Occaſion or other to viſit him, or perhaps to recall him; they adviſed, that he ſhould be ſent down to his Province in the North; concealing the true Reaſon of their Advice, as is uſual with Miniſters who would cover their private Deſigns under the Umbrage of publick Good; and pretending, that his Preſence would be neceſſary towards compoſing certain Animoſities in the North. The King, upon this ſpecious Suggeſtion, approved the Propoſal, and Cromwell was commanded by the Duke of Norfolk to acquaint his Maſter the Cardinal, that he muſt immediately repair to his Charge at York. Tho' the Cardinal expreſſed an Inclination rather to remove to his Church at Wincheſter, but this, when Cromwell acquainted the Duke of Norfolk with it, was much oppoſed by him.

5. The Lords, who ſuſpected leaſt the Cardinal, being deſirous to plant himſelf ſo much nearer to the King, might one Way or other find Means of favourable Acceſs to Court, endeavoured to divert him from going to Wincheſter, and moved, that the King might grant him a Penſion out of that Biſhoprick, to the Value of four thouſand Marks; the Reſt of the Revenues that ſhould ariſe out of it, were to be ſhared by certain gaping Courtiers, the Nobility themſelves, as Cavendiſh relates, not diſdaining to participate in dividing the Spoil. The Revenues of St. Alban's were conſigned under the ſame Conditions, whereof ſome of them had Two hundred Pounds; but whether by Way of annual Penſion, or of a plenary Gratuity at once, that Author doth not mention. All the Revenues of the Lands belonging to the Cardinal's Colleges of Oxford and Ipſwych, the King took into his own Hands; the Adminiſtration whereof, by the Cardinal's Aſſignment, was committed to Cromwell; who acquitted himſelf in the Diſcharge of that important Truſt, with great Fidelity and Exactneſs.

6. Still the Lords expected with Impatience the Removal of the Cardinal to a greater Diſtance from Court; among the reſt of them, the Duke of Norfolk obſerving to Cromwell that his Maſter made no more Haſte to go Northward, expreſſed himſelf in Terms, which do not appear altogether ſuited to the Dignity and Character of ſo very great a Peer, ſo able a Stateſman, and ſo fine a Gentleman.

7. Upon Cromwell's Report to the Cardinal of what the Duke of Norfolk had ſaid, he immediately came to a Reſolution of taking his Journey into the North. The only Excuſe he had for delaying it, was for Want of Moneys, with which he therefore deſired by Cromwell that the King would be pleaſed to ſupply him. And you may ſay, (theſe are his following Directions to Cromwell,) "that the laſt Money I had from his Grace was too little to pay "my Debts; and to compell me to pay the reſt of my Debts, "were too much Extremity, ſeeing all my Goods are taken from "me: Alſo ſhew my Lord of Norfolk and the reſt of the Coun-"cil, that I would depart, if I had Money."

8. While the Cardinal was walking in the Garden of the Palace at Richmond, an Occaſion happened from which, they, who will conſult [c] Cavendiſh may obſerve, that this great Prelate and Stateſman was not altogether free from the Illuſions of prophetick Conjectures. And there is another remarkable Inſtance in the ſame Author of his Credulity in Reſpect to what they call [d] ominous Accidents. For when he was one Day at Dinner, his great Croſs, which was placed by him, fell, and in the Fall broke Dr. Bonner's Head. Upon his asking whether it had drawn any Blood, and Cavendiſh, who was then in Waiting, replying yes, he turned his Head aſide, and gravely obſerving it was an ill Omen, immediately, after the Bleſſing, retired to his Bedchamber. The Expoſition which himſelf afterward gave of this Preſage to Cavendiſh at Pontefract, I ſhall recite in that Author's own Words. "The great Croſs that he bare "as Archbiſhop of York, betokened himſelf and Dr. Auſtin; the "Phyſitian who overthrew the Croſs, was he that accuſed my Lord, "whereby his Enemies caught an Occaſion to overthrow him; it "fell on Doctor Bonner's Head, who was then Maſter of my "Lord's Faculties and ſpiritual Juriſdiction, which was then dam-

" damnified by the Fall thereof; and moreover the Drawing of " Blood betokeneth Death; which, ſaith Cavendiſh, did ſuddenly " after follow."

9. I ſhall not undertake to defend the Propriety of this Interpretation, much leſs to ſhew there was any neceſſary Connexion, between the Event and the Circumſtances pretended to point towards it. I ſhall only obſerve that the Cardinal ſeems to have had as good Grounds for believing vulgar Predictions, whether prophetick or ominous, and as certain Rules for expounding them, as ſeveral other great Men that might be named, and even ſome of the greateſt Princes in Hiſtory.

10. It is more for the Cardinal's Honour, that I ſhould obſerve a ſignal Teſtimony which he gave of his Humiliation, under the afflicting Hand of Providence; for inſtead of that ſoft Raiment, which he had been uſed to wear in King's Palaces, (if he was not the firſt, as he hath been reproached by ſome Writers, had that been really a Crime, who introduced the Wearing of Silk among the Clergy) he now put on a Shirt of Hair, which he wore frequently next to his Body. This Mortification he is reported to have exerciſed by Advice of a certain ancient Father at Richmond, who, ſaith Cavendiſh very ſignificantly, converted him to deſpiſe the vain Glory of this World; with whom, or with ſome other of the more venerable Brethren there, he conferred every Afternoon during his Reſidence in the Charter-houſe, to which he removed from the Palace at Richmond, and where he lay at a Lodging which Dr. Collet had provided for himſelf.

11. Notwithſtanding all the Oppoſition that was made at Court to any favourable Deſigns of the King towards this great Miniſter now in Diſgrace; yet a publick and effectual [e] Grant was paſſed by his Majeſty, conſigning to him in Money, Goods, and Chattels, as appears from a ſpecifick Account, a Sum exceeding the Value of Six thouſand and three hundred Pounds. Which Grant I have cauſed to be printed, not only for that Reaſon; but becauſe an Eſtimate may, on ſeveral Accounts, be made from it, concerning the real Proportion, which the Value of Money bears at preſent, to what it bore, during this Period, in the Reign of Henry the Eighth.

12. It has been obſerved by moſt, if not by all Hiſtorians, that have written concerning the Cardinal's Diſgrace, that Ann Bolein was a principal Inſtrument of it, but Mr. Strype mentions an additional Occaſion of her Diſpleaſure againſt him, that no other has obſerved; and upon this, according to him, a remarkable Event depended, which haſtened the Demolition of Abbeys, and

forwarded the Progreſs of the Reformation, begun under that Reign.

13. One Motive, towards the Converſion of this Lady, was her reading Tyndal's Book, entituled, The Obedience of a Chriſtian Man. According to the Account of this learned and reverend Author, which the Reader may conſult in his fifteenth [f] Chapter, there was ſomething providential, both in the Method of putting that Book into her Hands, and in her being obliged to reſtore it to the Cardinal. But I apprehend it may be of more Uſe to give the Reader a ſhort Abſtract of one excellent Expoſition upon a noted Text of Scripture in that [g] Book, than to amuſe him with any curious, however pious Conjectures, about the Circumſtances of that Story. Upon thoſe Words, for He is the Miniſter of God for thy Wealth, Tyndal thus deſcants, "To defend thee from a thouſand Inconveniences, from "Thieves, Murderers, and them that would defile thy Wife, thy "Daughter, and take from thee all thou haſt; yea, Life and all, "if thou didſt reſiſt. Furthermore, tho' he be the greateſt Tyrant "in the World, yet is he unto thee a great Benefit of God, and a "Thing, wherefore thou oughteſt to thank God highly. For it is "better to have ſomewhat, than to be clean ſtripped of all together. "It is better to pay the Tenth than to loſe All. It is better to ſuffer "one Tyrant, than many. Yea, and it is better to have a Tyrant "to thy King, than a Shadow, a paſſive King, that doth nought "himſelf, but ſuffers others to do with him what they will, and "to lead him, whither they liſt. For a Tyrant, tho' he doth not "Right unto the Good, yet he puniſheth the Evil and maketh all "Men obey; neither ſuffereth he any Man to rule, but himſelf only. "A King, that is ſoft as ſilk and effeminate, that is to ſay, turned "into the Nature of a Woman, what with his own Luſts, which "are as the Longing of a Woman with Child; and what with the "wily Tyranny of them that over-rule him; ſhall be much more "grievous to the Realm, than a right Tyrant. Read the Chronicles, "and thou ſhalt find it ever ſo."

14. The Lutheran Principles, by Means of this and other Books that were publiſhed, tho' under ſevere Prohibitions, had now been propagated in ſeveral Parts of the Nation, and the People began to queſtion many of the received Doctrines, and the Reaſonableneſs of aſſenting to them by an implicit Faith. Several Churchmen and devout Perſons among the Laity, on the other Hand, looked upon all Innovations as dangerous; and were apprehenſive, that if they were once permitted to be introduced, they might, by Degrees, be carried ſo far, as to ſubvert the very Fundamentals of Religion.

15. Lord

35. Lord Herbert, on this Occaſion, charges both the [b] Reformers and the Papiſts with too violent and indiſcreet a Zeal. And as he appears to have delivered himſelf on this Head, with his uſual Freedom, and much Impartiality, I ſhall here recite his own Words. "Whereas in the Beginning, a voluntary Mitigation of "the Rigour of ſome of the late Doctrines of the Roman Church, "and a benign Interpretation of the Reſt, might have conſerved "an univerſal Peace among Chriſtians; they now, by an obſtinate "and wilful Impugning of all thoſe, who ſaid it was poſſible for "them to err, did leave the Undertaking of this great Work, ei-"ther to diſcontented Clergymen, or to the more laick and impro-"vident Sort; which therefore, as it proved in ſome Kind tu-"multuous and refractory, ſo certainly the Authors on either Side "were much to be blamed; when in handling of Controverſies, "they either out of an Affectation of Glory, or Hope of gaining "large Stipends from their Followers, (upon pretence of revealing "ſome new and readier Way for obtaining Heaven and everlaſting "Salvation) did teach divers peremptory and uncharitable Doctrines. "Whereas yet, according to the Rules both of Piety and Wiſdom, "they ſhould have proceeded more moderately; conſerving, in the "Midſt of their Differences, a brotherly Love, and pronouncing "the Errors, on what part ſoever, more worthy their Pity, than "Hate. Which Rule yet was ſo little obſerved in England, that "many Reformers Books and Perſons were publickly burnt, while "their Diſciples (for Revenge) fell foul upon the Perſons of their "Adverſaries, ſetting forth Books to the Prejudice of the whole "Eccleſiaſtical Order."

16. But it is no unuſual Thing for wicked or weak Men, in the Heat of their Zeal, that they may avoid one Extreme, to run precipitately into another; or even for Fear of granting to the Clergy their juſt and neceſſary Rights, to aſſert all the ſtrange capricious, and extravagant Notions of Eraſtianiſm. Too many modern Inſtances, and ſome of the firſt Diſtinction in the Church, might be produced to verify what I ſay.

17. Lord Herbert has produced a remarkable Speech about this Time, upon the Plan of which, all our modern Latitudinarians have ſuperſtructed: It has been elſewhere obſerved, that I have met with a full and ſatisfactory Anſwer to this Speech, with the Materials of which, his Lordſhip, if he had ſo pleaſed, might have ſupplied us out of the ſame Repoſitory, where he found it. I had once purpoſed to inſert both the Speech and the Anſwer to it at Length in this Work; but leaſt I ſhould too far exceed the Bounds of it, muſt ſatisfy my ſelf at preſent with obſerving in general ſome of the principal Aſſertions in the Anſwer oppoſed to the looſe Scheme and dangerous Maxims, laid down by the Author of the Speech; which the Reader may find in Lord Herbert's [k] Hiſtory of Henry the Eighth, or in [l] Mr. Collier's Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. But neither Hollingshead, Stow, Godwyn, or other of our Hiſtorians, before his Lordſhip, have mentioned any thing of it.

18. It is ſaid then, in the Anſwer, towards obviating any ill Effects, which the Speech might have on prepoſſeſſed or ignorant Perſons, That the Liberty of private Judgement contended for in it, cannot be an Argument that there is no certain Rule or Standard, whereby the Judgements of Men ought to be regulated. That different Claims or Pretenſions to a Right, however they may be multiplied, do not deſtroy the Nature of Right. That the Diviſions in Point of Doctrine among Chriſtians, are ſo far from being an Objection againſt the Truth of Chriſtianity, or the Authority of the Church, that our Saviour expreſsly foretold there ſhould be Hereſies in the Church, that they who are approved ſhould be made manifeſt. That Errors and Irregularities are no more to be prevented in Religion, than in civil Life, by allowing to Men a Liberty of private Judgement in Oppoſition to publick Laws. That yet we ought to follow our Spiritual Paſtors and Teachers with our Eyes open, not as Men having Dominion over our Faith, but as probable Guides to inform our Underſtanding, to reſolve our Doubts and direct our Practice. That no Society can ſubſiſt, unleſs the Principles, upon which it is founded, and can only be preſerved in a regular State, are aſcertained and explicitly profeſſed; whenever an explicit aſſent to them is required from the ſeveral Members of it. That the external Rites of Religion are only indeed appointed as miniſterial to Vertue and internal Sanctification; yet they are not therefore vain; but rather neceſſary for that Reaſon towards rendering us more happy and perfect. That natural Principles are, confeſſedly, the main Foundation of all Religion; but there is ſomething more required to recommend us to the Favour of God, than merely not to be impious or atheiſtical; and thoſe natural Principles are ſo far from diſcharging an Obligation to believe, whatever God may think fit to reveal, that our Belief of any revealed Truth does neceſſarily ariſe from them. The Member therefore who ſpake, made a falſe Inference in ſaying, it is indifferent, whether my Lord Rocheſter, Luther, or other Perſons named by him, were in the Right; becauſe tho' particular Opinions, which do not deſtroy Unity and Order in the Church, may more ſafely be tolerated; yet a Toleration of them, where theſe eſſential Preſervatives of Society are in Danger of being deſtroyed, cannot conſiſt with the proper Deſign or Wiſdom of Government. The Biſhop of Rocheſter therefore in aſſerting the Rights and Powers of thoſe, whom God has appointed Paſtors and Governours in his Church; and who, from the Nature of their Inſtitution and Office, are the principal Members in the Chriſtian Society, is ſo far from deſerving Cenſure, that he hath ſaid nothing but what became a Father of his apoſtolical Spirit, and primitive Sanctity.

To which I ſhall only add, that the Speech in Lord Herbert's Hiſtory, wherein the Author would be thought to accommodate himſelf to ordinary Capacities; and which appears intended, as an Appeal to common Senſe, is in ſome Parts of it as abſtruſe and unintelligible, as ſome modern Performances, which have been publiſhed for the Edification of the Populace, with the like admirable Deſign.

1. IN this Chapter I ſhall conclude with the laſt Scene of Cardinal Wolſey's Life; who, towards Eaſter, after he had, according to Cavendiſh, received from the King the Sum of Ten thouſand Pounds, ſet forward on his Journey towards York. But it is not improbable, here is ſome Miſtake, either in that Author, or in thoſe who have copied from him; for I do not find that Sum mentioned in any authentick Record. The Preparation however, which the Cardinal made for his Progreſs, was not unſuitable to his Dignity. He had in his Retinue a Hundred and ſixty Perſons, with twelve Carts, which were ſent with Goods from his College at Oxford, beſides ſeveral other Carriages employed in the neceſſary Uſes for his Buildings. He prepared to celebrate the Feſtival of Eaſter at Peterborough, and on Palm-Sunday, went in ſolemn Proceſſion ceſſion with the Monks there, bearing his Palm. Upon Thurſday following he kept a Maundy, waſhing and kiſſing the Feet of fifty-nine poor People, and after he had dried them, gave to every One of them Twelve-pence, with three Ells of good Canvaſs to make them Shirts, a Pair of new Shoes, and a Cask of red Herrings. On Eaſter-Day he roſe early to his Devotions; and afterward went in Proceſſion, in his Cardinal's Habit, having his Hat on his Head, and ſinging High Maſs ſolemnly himſelf. After which, he pronounced the Bleſſing with plenary Remiſſion of Sins to all the Audience.

2. In his Way from Peterborough he travelled by eaſy Journeys, 'till he came to Stoby, where he continued 'till after Michaelmas, exerciſing many Acts both of Charity and Piety. Every Sunday, if the Weather permitted, he would go to ſome poor neighbouring Pariſh, and there celebrate divine Service; and when he had either ſaid or heard Maſs, cauſe one of his Chaplains to preach; and afterwards dine in ſome Houſe of good Reputation in the Place; where Diſtribution was made of Meat and Drink to the Poor; or of Money, where thoſe, in a great Conflux of People, were wanting. Beſides, he frequently interpoſed, by his good Offices, while he reſided in thoſe Parts, to reconcile Perſons at Variance, and to adjuſt the Differences between them.

3. Shortly after Michaelmas he removed towards Caywood Caſtle, one of the Seats belonging to the Archbiſhop of York, and about twelve Miles diſtant from that City; where, by his pious and prudent Behaviour, and his great Hoſpitality, he acquired much Honour, Love, and Eſteem, from Perſons of every Diſtinction. There, at great Expence, he repaired the Caſtle, employing on that Occaſion, three hundred Perſons daily at Work. To this Place his Clergy of the Church of York, as it was their Duty, repaired to their chief Head, the Patron of their Dignities, and their ſpiritual Father; who received them after a Manner agreeable to that ſacred Relation; To whom he declared, "It was the moſt ſpecial Cauſe "of his coming, to be amongſt them, as a Father, and a natural "Brother."

4. They, who would be acquainted with certain Ceremonials to be obſerved by the Archbiſhops of York, before and at their Inſtallment, may conſult [a] Mr. Cavendiſh, on Occaſion of what paſſed in Relation to that Affair, between the Cardinal, and his Clergy. The Effect of their Conſultation was, that his Grace ſhould be inſtalled on Monday following the Feſtival of All-Saints, but without that Pomp and magnificent Appearance, wherewith the Inſtallment of his Predeceſſors had been uſually celebrated.

5. The Cardinal's Deſign not being unknown to the Country, where for his Purity and Liberality, and alſo for his familiar Geſture and good Behaviour, (thoſe are the Words of Cavendiſh) he was in great Eſtimation and had gained much Love; ſuch Store and Variety of Proviſion was ſent in by the Gentlemen, Abbots, and Priors, as was almoſt incredible.

6. Yet during the ſhort Interval, before the Day, againſt which all theſe Preparations were made, he was arreſted by the Earl of Northumberland and Sir Walter Welch upon a Charge of High Treaſon. This Arreſt was contrived by his Enemies, to whom the great Eſteem and Veneration paid to him by all Perſons in the North, and the Support of his Dignity by a juſt and regular Conduct, had rendered him ſtill more invidious. Beſides they apprehended, leaſt the King finding him now ſo popular, and recollecting his former Services, might the ſooner be induced to recall him, if not prevented by ſome ſiniſter Accuſations of this Kind; which yet had ſuch Effect, that the King was moved to much Indignation againſt him, and was determined he ſhould come up and receive his Tryal in Perſon. But this Reſolution his Enemies, who conſidered the Conſequences of charging him Face to Face, rather ſubmitted to, than approved. However on Friday before the Day appointed for his Inſtallment, he was put under an Arreſt. Upon the firſt Exchange of Civilities between him and the Earl of Northumberland, who had been ſometime educated in his Family, far from apprehending the Deſign, upon which the Earl came, he treated him not only with all the Regard due to his Quality, but with all the Tenderneſs and Complacency, that could have been ſhewed to an ancient Domeſtick, and a Friend, whom he loved. Yet after he had taken the Earl by the Hand, and led him into his Chamber, while they were both ſtanding at the Window, the Earl trembling ſaid, I arreſt you of High Treaſon. At which Words the Cardinal was ſo ſurpriſed, that he ſtood for ſome Time without ſpeaking. But at length, recovering himſelf, he deſired to ſee the Earl's Commiſſion, which that Lord denying to ſhew, he refuſed to obey the Arreſt. But afterwards Sir Walter Welſh, who was a Gentleman of the Privy-Chamber, coming into the Room, the Cardinal ſurrendered to him, as being ſufficiently commiſſioned by his Poſt. Therefore, ſaith he to that Knight, after ſome other Expreſſions which diſcovered the Force and Compoſure of his Mind, "put your Commiſſion in Execution, I will obey you and the "King: For I fear not the Cruelty of mine Enemies, no more "than I do the Truth of my Allegiance; wherein I take God to "Witneſs, I never offended his Majeſty in Word or Deed; and "therein I dare ſtand Face to Face with any, having a Difference "without Partiality."

7. What

7. What principally afflicted the Cardinal on this Occaſion, and for which he moſt refuſed to be comforted, was a generous Reflection, that he had nothing wherewith to reward his true and faithful Servants, and in particular Cavendiſh his Gentleman-Uſher. On Sunday following, when he was ready to ſet forward on his Journey towards London, the Porter had no ſooner opened the Gates of his Palace, but there was ſeen aſſembled before it a Multitude of People, in Number above Three thouſand, "Crying out with a loud Voice, "God ſave your Grace, God ſave your Grace, the foul Evil take them, "that have taken you from us; and thus they ran after him tho- "rough the Town of Caywood; for he was there very well beloved "both of rich and poor."

8. The Cardinal's Diſgrace did not only affect himſelf, his Friends, and more immediate Dependents; but appears to have been the principal Occaſion, that the whole Clergy of the Realm were proſecuted in a Premunire. The Effects of which were yet perhaps more ſupportable to them, than the Submiſſion which they were obliged to make in Conſequence of it; whereby they departed from certain eccleſiaſtical Rights they had long exerciſed, and obliged themſelves for the future not to enact, promulge, or put in execution, any Commiſſion or Ordinance, except his Majeſty's Conſent and Licenſe to that End, ſhould be previouſly obtained. And, more expreſsly, towards aſſerting to his Majeſty the Eccleſiaſtical Supremacy, a Petition was offered in Convocation, to be preſented to him, that he ſhould be ſtiled, the Protector and Supream Head of the Church, and Clergy of England. But certain Members took Umbrage at the modern Title, Supreme Head of the Church, and made great Oppoſition to it; upon which it was moved, this following Qualification, as far as is lawful by the Law of Chriſt, ſhould be added. But the King diſliked that Addition, as leaving his Power ſtill diſputable and indetermined; repreſenting however, (as being conſcious how dangerous and irregular a Uſe might ſometime be made of ſo high a Claim) that Words are not always to be taken in the ſtricteſt Senſe. Several have thought, upon the Authority of Archbiſhop Parker, that this Title paſſed in Convocation, without the additional Clauſe: But herein that learned Primate, as Biſhop Burnet has very well obſerved for the following Reaſon, was certainly miſinformed. "[b] For when the Convoca- "tion in the Province of York demurred about the ſame Petition, "and ſent their Reaſons to the King, why they could not ac- "knowledge him Supreme Head, which (as appears from the "King's Anſwer to them) were chiefly founded upon this, that "the Term Head was improper, and did not agree to any

b Hiſt. of the Reformation, p. 1. B. 2. p. 112.

" under Chriſt; the King wrote a long and ſharp Anſwer to them,
" and ſhewed them, that Words are not always to be underſtood in
" the ſtrict Senſe, but according to common Acceptation, and
" among other Things he ſhewed this Explication was made in the " Province of Canterbury, in ſo far as was agreeable to the Law of " Chriſt. By which it appears the King was ſatisfied, at that Time, " to have it paſs any Way: and ſo it was agreed to by nine Bi-
" ſhops, the Biſhop of Rocheſter being One; and fifty-two Abbots
" and Priors, and the major Part of the Lower Houſe of Convoca" tion in the Province of Canterbury.

9. By Way of Commutation for the Forfeitures, which the Clergy had incurred by offending againſt the Statutes of Proviſors, a Grant to the King was propoſed of a Hundred thouſand Pounds; upon which, he paſſed a general Pardon to the Clergy of the Province of Canterbury. That of York made an Offer, towards redeeming themſelves, of eighteen thouſand eight hundred and forty Pounds, and were alſo pardoned; but the Ceſſion, to which they at length ſubmitted, of their Eccleſiaſtical Powers and Privileges, was not made without great Difficulty and Oppoſition.

10. Concerning the Penalties incurred by the Premunire, it has been generally thought, that notwithſtanding the Proceedings againſt the Cardinal, for obtaining and exerciſing his Legatine Powers, were rigorous, yet they were not ſtrictly ſpeaking illegal; and that the Clergy therefore who ſubmitted to his Authority, were legally obnoxious to the ſame Penalties, becauſe the Statutes of Proviſors had never been repealed. But this Opinion, were the Matter to be ſtrictly examined, is not ſo clear as to admit no Diſpute, according to " certain [c] Maxims in the civil Law, national Statutes may " be repealed, not only by expreſs Notification, but by Diſſuetude, " by tacit Conſent of the People, and Connivance of the Legi-" ſlator." Whether the Form of Government in any Nation is Popular, Ariſtocratical, or Regal, theſe Rules hold equally good. Thoſe eſpecially who are entruſted with a Share in the Legiſlature, may be ſuppoſed to have an Intention to vacate any Law, as well by their Silence, as by their Suffrage. For what Superiours, who beſt know the Reaſon and Senſe of the Law, either do, or ſuffer to be done, muſt naturally be preſumed agreeable to what they really intend.

If it ſhould be queſtioned then, how we ſhall know, that the ſupreme Power is willing a Law ſhould no longer oblige? this, we ſay, may be known, not only by a direct Revocation of the Law; but, in all Caſes, where any Offence againſt the Rule of it, is ſo far from being complained of, or puniſhed, that it has rather received Marks of publick Approbation; which was the very Caſe of Cardinal Wolſey, and other Legates before him, from the Time, when the penal Statutes, concerning which I am ſpeaking, were made. For as Biſhop Burnet[d] obſerves, "the Pope's Uſurpations ſtill encreaſing, thoſe Statutes lay dead, among the Records, and ſeveral "Cardinals had procured and exerciſed a Legatine-Power, which "was clearly contrary to them."

11. What I argue is, that if any Law can ceaſe to operate, by Diſuſe, or the tacit Conſent of the Legiſlature, few Inſtances in Hiſtory have occurred ſo remarkably evidential of ſuch Diſuſe and Conſent, as in the Caſe more particularly of Cardinal Wolſey; who not only obtained, and for the Space of fifteen Years exerciſed his Legatine Powers, by Approbation of the Sovereign, but without the leaſt Remonſtrance againſt it, by either of the two Houſes of Parliament, or any regular Complaint, had that been requiſite, from the People without Doors. It is not indeed univerſally true, that the Silence of Perſons in Authority, does always imply their Conſent: Yet the Rule, I conceive, will ever hold good in all Caſes, under theſe three Conditions, that the Action, which is the Subject of Inquiry, be contrary to a known Law, and frequently repeated: And that the Adminiſtrator or Adminiſtrators of the Law, have Power to cenſure or hinder it. The Reaſon of this Rule is, that all Perſons in Authority are preſumed to do their Duty, but eſpecially the collective Body of a Nation, regularly aſſembled, and acting in a legiſlative Capacity. If this Way of Arguing be well founded, King Henry the Eighth did not ſo much proceed againſt Cardinal Wolſey, with an ill Grace, and according to the Rigour of Law, which are the ſofteſt Expreſſions that can be uſed on the Occaſion, but againſt the common Law of Nations.

12. It might here, upon my having mentioned the Submiſſion made by the Clergy, not be improper, to ſtate the Arguments on both Sides relating to the Supremacy, without determining any thing poſitively on ſo nice a Subject, as I have done in the Caſe of diſſolving Monaſteries, and of the Divorce. But my Work is now too much protracted, to permit a diſtinct Inquiry upon that Head. The Principles, that I have, on ſo many Occaſions, laid down, as the genuine Principles of the Church of England, concerning the independent Powers and Rights of the Clergy; and which are founded upon immutable Reaſons of Wiſdom and Order, ſuppoſing the Church a regular Society, and the Founder of it a wiſe Legiſlator; thoſe Principles, I ſay, are ſufficient to ſhew, what it might have been proper for me to have ſaid, relating to this

Branch

Branch of the Queſtion. They, who would know where to find the main Strength of the Arguments for the civil Supremacy, may conſult ſeveral Acts of Parliament provided in that Behalf, with the Reaſons upon which they eſtabliſh it, and the Pains and Penalties whereby it was convenient to enforce them. But ſuch who would enter into the Detail of this Controverſy, may conſult my Lord Coke's learned Collections and Arguments in the Caſe of Cawdrey, with the Anſwer to them by Parſons. In the Former he will find the Facts and Reaſons much better propoſed than in any of our modern Writers, ſome of which have advanced Notions, ſo deſtructive to the true Rights of the Chriſtian Church, that they cannot be thought of, without Horror. In the Latter, there appears as much Subtilty, if I might not ſay, as ſtrong an Eſſay of human Wit, as perhaps any Writer in Controverſy has produced in any Age.

13. All I ſhall farther obſerve upon the Submiſſion of the Clergy, is a pertinent Remark of Dr. Burnet, for he was not then a Biſhop, relating to one Article of it.

" The Clergy, ſaith he[e], did not bind themſelves never to meet " without the King's Writ: They only ſaid the Convocation had " ever been, and ought always to be aſſembled by the King's Writ, " which only ſhews what is their regular Method of aſſembling them- " ſelves. But tho' this obliges them to meet always when they are " required to do it, by the King's Writ; yet it doth not bind them " from Meeting, in Caſe the Neceſſity of the Church requires it, " and the King refuſes his Writ; for then they are reduced to thoſe " prudential Conſiderations, in managing their Matters, as in a " Caſe of Perſecution."

14. But I return, from theſe incidental Obſervations, to the Cardinal, who, in his Journey towards London, was entertained with much Kindneſs and Reſpect by the Earl of Shrewsbury at Sheffield-Park, with whom he ſtay'd a Fortnight; whilſt He was there one Day at Dinner, he complained of a ſuddain extraordinary Coldneſs at his Stomach. If he had any foul Play done to him, there was more Reaſon to ſuſpect it from thoſe who were charged with the Cuſtody of him, than from any Attempt he made upon his own Life; his Behaviour, from the Time of his going into the North, having been confeſſedly Pious, and ſuitable to his high Character and Station in the Church. Cavendiſh indeed ſpeaking of the Effects, wherewith this violent Diſorder was attended, and from which the Cardinal never recovered, ſaith, It was apparent he had poiſoned himſelf. But it is highly probable, this Expreſſion ought to be taken in a ſofter Senſe, than the Words ſtrictly import, and that he only intended by it, that he was poiſoned by taking ſomething prepared for him, by other Hands. For, when his Body after he was dead, lay publickly expoſed, with his Face uncovered at Leiceſter, and the Mayor and Aldermen there, to prevent falſe Reports of his being alive, took a formal View of it, there appear'd no Symptoms of his being poyſoned. Neither indeed, was there at that Time, any Reaſons for his offering Violence to himſelf, but rather many, why, in reſpect to the Circumſtances he was then under, he ſhould not be ſuſpected to have had any ſuch Deſign. He not only behaved himſelf with Spirit and a becoming Reſolution upon this Arreſt, but continually aſſerted his Innocence, preſſed for his Trial, and deſired nothing more than to ſee his Enemies Face to Face. And the Earl of Shrewsbury, who had mediated to the King, that he ſhould be conducted to London by Sir William Kingſton Conſtable of the Tower, afterwards aſſured him, that God and his Friends had wrought for him according to his own Deſires, that he had more Cauſe to rejoice than lament, or miſtruſt the Matter: And that his Enemies were more afraid of him, than he had need to be of his Enemies. In ſhort, that Sir William Kingſton had been ſent to do him Honour, and to convey him forward to London by ſuch eaſy Journeys, as he ſhould command. After this State of his Caſe at that Time, the Reader may judge for himſelf, where the ſtrongeſt Grounds of Suſpicion concerning his being poyſoned, if he really was poyſoned, may be ſuppoſed to lie; whether upon thoſe who ſecretly oppoſed his Return to London, and endeavoured to prevent it, or upon himſelf, who ſo earneſtly deſired to ſee his Accuſers Face to Face, and was now put in ſo fair, or rather ſo favourable a Way of obtaining his Deſire? And therefore after Sir William Kingston had ſaluted him with Commendations from the King, and aſſured him in his Majeſty's Name, that he was not ſent for, becauſe his Majeſty ſuppoſed him guilty of the Crimes laid to his Charge, but to the End Juſtice might have its due and regular Courſe; He readily prepared, ſick and infirm as he then was, to proceed in his Journey. But being reduced to ſo weak a State, that, in the Opinion of his Phyſicians, he had not above four or five Days to live, he was not able, as he had propoſed, to ſet forward the next Day, but two Days after he arrived at Nottingham, lying one Night at a Houſe of the Earl of Shrewsbury's called Hardwick-Hall; and, which proved his laſt Stage, the next Day at Leiceſter-Abbey: Where, at his coming in late, having been ſo ſick by the Way that he could ſcarce ſit on Horſeback, the Abbot with all the Convent met him at the Gate with lighted Torches, whom they honourably received and welcomed with great Reverence: To whom he only made this ſhort but moving and prophetick Speech; Father Abbot, I am come to lay lay my Bones among you. After this, which happened upon Saturday, he was led up Stairs, but not without much Difficulty, to Bed. On Monday Morning, Mr. Cavendiſh about Eight of the Clock ſtanding by his Bedſide, thought, he perceived his drawing on towards Death. The Cardinal obſerving him, asked, what is it a-Clock; upon which he anſwering Eight of the Clock, the Cardinal repeated thoſe Words ſeveral Times, ſaying at Length, "That can-"not be, for at Eight of the Clock you ſhall ſee your Maſter's "Time draw near, that I muſt depart this World." Which Words Cavendiſh, with others to whom he reported them, underſtood as ſpoken alluſively to his Maſter's Death at Eight a-Clock the next Morning. Before he died, he made a Speech, directing himſelf to Sir William Kingston, wherein, after he had declared, he only waited God's Pleaſure to render up his poor Soul to him; he adds, "I pray "you have me heartily commended unto his Royal Majeſty; and "beſeech him on my Behalf to call to Remembrance, all Matters "that have been between us from the Beginning, and the Pro-"greſs; and eſpecially between good Queen Katherine and him; "and then ſhall his Grace's Conſcience know, whether I have of-"fended him or not?

"He is a Prince of moſt royal Courage, and hath a princely "Heart; and rather than He will miſs or want any Part of his "Will, He will endanger the one Half of his Kingdom.

"I do aſſure you, I have often kneeled before him, ſometimes "three Hours together to perſuade him from his Will and Appe-"tite, but could not prevail. And, Maſter Kingston, had I but "ſerved God as diligently, as I have ſerved the King, He would "not have given me over in my grey Hairs. But this is the juſt "Reward, that I muſt receive for my diligent Pains and Study, "not regarding my Service to God, but only to my Prince."

15. Theſe penitential Confeſſions, like others which frequently occur in the Devotions of good Men, are not to be underſtood abſolutely, but comparatively. For the Cardinal doth not appear, in the Courſe of his Life, to have been chargeable with any culpable Neglect of God's Service, private or publick. His Zeal, if we recollect certain Paſſages in his Hiſtory, was rather, in both Reſpects, commendable and exemplary. But that he exceeded in too obſequious a Compliance with the Will of a Prince, who rewarded him after the Manner we have mentioned, is what I will neither pretend to deny or to excuſe: The Reſt of his Speech relating to Innovations in Religion, may be ſeen in Cavendiſh. The greateſt temporal Concern, except that perhaps for his [f] Colleges which ſeems to have afflicted him more than any Thing, [g] was the Satisfaction of his Creditors. And to ſhew his Deſire to do Juſtice to the King, he declares he will diſcover before he dies, where a certain Sum of Money, to which his Majeſty laid Claim, might be found. The laſt Words of his Speech were, Maſter Kingſton farewell. I wiſh all Things may have good Succeſs. My Time draws on; I may not tarry with you; I pray you remember my Words. He dy'd of a Dyſentery on Tueſday Morning, being the twenty-ninth Day of November, after he had received extreme Unction, and been aſſiſted by the Prayers of the Abbot.

16. And thus concluded the Life of the great Cardinal Wolſey. The next Day, after he had been, with his Coffin open, barefaced, to be ſeen of all Perſons that deſired to ſee him, 'till three of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Abbot with great Solemnity performed the Funeral Office over him.

17. On the Feaſt of Saint Andrew, which was the Day following, early in the Morning about four of the Clock, ſeveral religious Rites were performed, as was uſual at the Interment of Biſhops; the Abbot ſaying Maſs; after which his Body, about Six of the Clock, was depoſited in the Middle of the Chappel of the Abbey; but of which, even the Ruins are not at preſent to be diſcovered.

18. As the Cardinal was an Eccleſiaſtick, whom the Laws of the Church, in that Age, reſtrained from Marriage; and as, in every Age, Clergymen in particular are reſtrained from all impure Commerce with Women; it will not be very natural for the Reader to expect, that I ſhould here proceed, according to the uſual Method of Biographers, to enquire, what Iſſue He left, or whether He left any? However as I would not be, or appear chargeable, on any Account, with Partiality, I ſhall not diſſemble, the Cardinal is ſuppoſed, in the thirty-eighth Article of his Impeachment, to have had two Children by one Woman. Whether Winter, called his Son in the twenty-ſeventh Article, was one of them, I have not been able to diſcover. Nor ſhall I here reſume the Queſtion, what Weight a publick Accuſation ought to have, which was never proved? Without conſidering the Force of any Argument drawn from the Authority of thoſe Articles, I readily grant, that Winter was generally ſuſpected to have been the Cardinal's natural Son; and that there are indeed ſome ſtrong Preſumptions, that he was really ſo. The Cardinal took Care, that he ſhould have a learned and liberal Education; He ſent him, at his own Expence, to ſtudy at Paris; He multiplied [g] Preferments upon him, beyond what the Rules of Prudence, or a juſt and regular Uſe of his Power would allow; and in the Grant of Arms made to him, wherein his ſeveral Preferments are enumerated, there is a near Affinity between them, and thoſe of the Cardinal; this however ought to be mentioned to the Cardinal's Honour, that the Relation of Winter to him, if he was really the Cardinal's natural Son, was not thought a ſufficient Cauſe for advancing him to the Dignity of a Biſhop. Not that he wanted a common Share of Learning, or a juſt [b] Character in reſpect to his Morals. But even in that dark and ignorant Age of Popery, I queſtion whether one Perſon could be found upon the Epiſcopal Bench, who was not diſtinguiſhed by his Learning, and ſuperior Abilities.

19. Neither ſhall I omit to obſerve, there were ſeveral ſcandalous Aſperſions caſt upon the Cardinal, in a Libel written by one Skelton, Poet Laureat; but what Credit may be given to the Invectives of his Poem [i], we may conclude from the vile and infamous Conſtruction, which he put upon the Cardinal's moſt noble and magnificent Deſign in founding his [k] Colleges, particularly that of Oxford; a Copy of the Grant of Arms to which, I have exhibited [l] in the Collections; and ſhall here take an Occaſion of referring to the Inſcription upon the [m] Foundation-ſtone of it.

20. There was alſo a Memorial, as it was called, highly injurious to the Cardinal, printed in the Year 1706, under the borrowed Name of Cecil, Lord Burleigh; wherein however this Honourable Atteſtation has been given to him by the Author, whoever he was, that his Decrees in Chancery were equitable and juſt. Which Teſtimony, I apprehend, is equally applicable to the Decrees made by thoſe, who were impowered by Commiſſion from the King, when he could not ſit in Court himſelf, to act in his Name. For that there might be no Delay of Juſtice, during the Time the Cardinal was taken up in the Adminiſtration of publick Af-taken from him, for putting them to a Commiſſion for empowering the Maſter of the Rolls at that Time, and three Maſters in Chancery, or any two of them, to hear Cauſes. But the Cenſure he incurred, was not ſtrictly for ſetting the Seals to ſuch a Commiſſion; but for ſetting the Seals to it, without Warrant from the Council.

It ſufficiently appears, from the Phraſeology and modern Terms of the Memorial before-mentioned, it was not written by the Lord Burleigh, and from the Title and Deſign of it, that it was publiſhed under a fictitious Reference to the Adminiſtration of Cardinal Wolſey; with a Deſign of reflecting on two Miniſters of State, who at that Time, had the chief Direction of Affairs.

It may perhaps be expected, that in Conformity to many modern Examples, I ſhould here in the Concluſion give a ſummary Character of Cardinal Wolſey; but I rather chuſe, the Reader ſhould collect it himſelf from the foregoing Hiſtory. If the Judgement of Biſhop [o] Godwyn is true, as it appears to be very well founded, the Cardinal was greater under Circumſtances of the laſt Diſtreſs at Aſher, where he wanted every Thing, than when he was arrayed in all his Glory at Court. For according to the Extract I have made from that learned Prelate, the Deſign of the King in uſing the Cardinal after that Manner, and ſometimes by ſhewing Favour to him, was only that he might bring him at laſt to do, what Archbiſhop Cranmer did afterwards, by giving Sentence for the Divorce. This Reflection diſcovers to us one of the brighteſt Parts of Cardinal Wolſey's Character, and enables us to form a better Judgement of him. Amidſt the Affluence of a great Fortune, a Man muſt be very weak, or very wicked, who does not preſerve a good Reputation. But an indigent Condition ſhews what a Man is, and takes off thoſe falſe Colours, under which, in a Flow of Proſperity, Vice not only finds a thouſand Ways of Concealment, but, with vulgar and ignorant Perſons, of Triumph. There is ſcarce indeed any Trial, that is difficult to a Man of the leaſt Honour and Vertue, who is eaſy in his Fortune, which ſhould induce him to act contrary to his Conſcience. The greateſt Difficulty lies in overcoming the Temptations incident to Men, whoſe Minds are depreſſed with the Apprehenſions of Want, or of that Diſgrace and Neglect, which are ſuppoſed inevitably to attend it. I do not know, whether ſeveral Perſons living and dead might not be named, who, under thoſe Apprehenſions, have engaged in mean and diſhonourable Deſigns, to which they were above all Things reluctant; who would otherways have been unmoved at all the Flatteries, and at all the Terrors, of this World. And therefore the inflexible Vertue and Conſtancy of Cardinal Wolſey, during ſo great and ſevere a Trial, and over which he finally triumphed, is what I would leave an Impreſſion of upon the Reader's Mind. For if it do not prove, what it is not intended to do, that he was a Man of conſummate Vertue, it muſt be admitted at leaſt, he gave hereby one of the ſtrongeſt Evidences, which could be given, that he was a Man of Honour and Probity.

I Sende unto your grace att this tyme a Copie of a Bill maide in forma Inſt'ri by the Sciſmatiques Sanctt and ſanctt Severine, and rede the 17th day of this monthe in the 7th Seſſion of the generall counſaill of Latrynen. Wherein your grace ſhall p'ceve ſuch ſubſtanciall demenor as they have uſide. The Popis holines ſaide unto me that he hade cauſide this ſaide bill ſoo to be rede oonly for the Rebuke ſhame and infamy of the ſaide Sciſmatiques. His holines is determinyd to reſtore theme ſhortlie. but if he ſoo doo. it ſhall be doon (as he ſaithe) withe thare grett ſhame and honor of all ſuch as haithe taken armes againſte them: beſidis that the Sciſme ſhall contynue ſtill in France. And that he woll never doo ony thyng concerning thabſolution of France from thenterdictt; nodr' for ſuche Sciſmatiques as be thare withoutt thexpreſſe conſentt of his confederattes. My Lorde the Cardinall Hadriane doithe now gretlie avauntt hym ſelf that ſithen that I dide ſhow unto hym your gracis moſt honourable l'res aganſt the ſaide Sciſmatiques he haithe laboride extremelie aganſte them and brought the matier unto this paſſe, the whiche is nothyng ſoo. For itt is here oppenlie knowne to all men that all thyng, whiche haithe been doon aganſte the ſaide Sciſmatiques, haith been brought aboutt oonlie by the Cardinale Sanctt' Vitall' Sedunen' and my ſelf. All odr' that ony thyng haith doon herin, they have doon itt att our inſtances. tho' I be verray loithe to writt ony thyng aganſte ony p'ſon unto your grace. Yitt in ſuche thynges as be doon or ſaide aganſte your gracis honour by ſuche as ſhulde and be bounde gretlie to regarde the ſame having ther leving of noo odr' chriſtian prince butt oonlie of your grace. I can nott of dutie hould my peax, thambaſſador of Arrogonne being reſidentt here did latelie come unto me in my title whiche is a complett myle from his houſſe, to ſhew unto me, that the ſaide Cardinall Hadria' dide dyvulgate emonges the Cardinalls and odr', certain thynges aganſt your gracis honour. Furſt that your grace wolde come over the See, Nott to invaide thennymyes of the churche butt to maike a peax at your pleaſour. Secundlye he ſhewide unto the ſaide Ambaſſadour that noo man in Rome hade ony trew tythynges from Englounde but he, by

reaſon that he haithe oon factour thare namide Polidorus who he ſaide was bodie and ſoull to my Lorde of Wincheſtre. and from hym he hade writing that your grace wold nott in ony caſe p'ſonallie p'cede aganſte the Franſhmen. the whiche relacion did gretlie diſcomforthe all ſuche as be your gracis ſervaunttes and regardith your honour. and gretlie incuragithe all thoos that be your Enymyes. When I dide advertiſe the ſaide Cardinall herof deſiring hym to maike noo relacion contrarie to your graces owne l'res to me directide in the whiche was never founde lie. he did ſwer that he never did ſay ony ſuche thynges. tho nott oonlie the ſaide Ambaſſadour. butt alſo ſome of the beſte Cardinalls in Rome woll prove itt affore his Face. in ſoo moche as the ſaid Ambaſſadour of Arragon doith writte att this tyme as he haithe certifyyde me unto thambaſſadour of Arrogon reſidentt in your gracis courtt deſiring hyme to ſhewe this thing in ſuch maner thare that the ſaide Cardinall maye be warnyde to deſiſte from making of ſuche untrewe relacion contrarie unto your gracis l'res and honour. Yiſterday the ſaide Ambaſſadour of Arrogon hade worde from the Viceroy. that themp'ours armye that kepide the Citie of Verona aganſte the Venecians was departid from thence into a ſtrong caſtile of themp'ours nye unto itt. for lake of paymentt of ther wages. ſoo that the Venyſhans may entre the ſaide citie at ther pleaſour. the ſaide Ambaſſadour ſhewide me alſo that the ſaide Viceroye was myndide to procede aganſte the Venyſhans. and how the Popis holineſs had promyſide unto hyme and alſo writen unto the ſaide Viceroy that he wolde paye wages to thre thouſaunde Swices that ſhulde june with hyme. and alſo ſende unto hym foure hundrethe men of Armes aganſte the ſaide Venyſhans. When we hade yiſterday knowlege that the Popis holines had ſentt for the two Sciſmatiques for thare forſaide reſtitucion. thambaſſadours of themperour and the King of Arrogon and I dide goo all to geders unto his ſaide holines. and deſiride hym inſtantlie that like as his predeceſſour did nothyng in the privation of the ſaide Sciſmatiques withoutt the conſentt of all princes cryſtinyde frendes unto the churche. in like maner he wolde do no thyng concerning ther reſtitution withoutt ther like conſenttes. hereunto his holines aunſwerde that the mater was ſoo farr paſſide that he couthe not revocke itt. Albe itt he ſaide that in the maner of ther reſtitucion he wolde regarde thonour of the confederattes in ſuche forme as affore I have writen and thare he made unto us all a ſolompne promyſe that he wold nothyng doo nother touchyng the relaxacion of thenterdictt of France ne the reſtitucion of thoder Sciſmatiques withoutt thexpreſſe conſentt and conſaill of all the confederates. the Popis holines is myndid as your grace may p'ceve by his breve to ſende oon Legate unto your grace for to treatte univerſall peax. After myne opinyon it ſhall nodir be honourable ne p'fitable that your grace doo admytt ony ſuche Legate and ſpecially for that intentt. For his holines doithe it oonlie for aſhewe and to be ſean to kepe his Oithe. For his mynde is verraylie that your grace ſhuld make noo maner of peax. but ſuche as ſhulde be for your grett honour. Albe it when I ſhall have knowlege of your gracis pleaſour herein I ſhall applie me to the ſame. Every man here haithe regarde unto his own honour and proffett. wherfor I doubtt nott butt that your grace woll doo the ſame. I movide the Popis holines oppenlie in the conſiſtorie when this matier was treatide that he ſhulde ſende noon unto your grace bifore he ſhuld have knowlege of your mynde and pleaſſour therin. And for that cauſe. he writith att this tyme therof unto your grace. My lorde of Worceſter your gracis oratour here haith and doith dalie unto your ſaid grace right goode ſervice in all your cauſes. by reaſon of the verray goode favours he is in withe the Popis holines. thus I ſhall dalie beſiche the bliſſide trynytie for the preſervacion of your moſt highe and Royall aſtate. From Rome the 25 day of June 1513. Your mooſt humble beedman and Subjecte.

PLeaſe it your grace the Popis holines this day, at 22d of the cloke recevide l'res from his Meſſanger lyyng in the Douchery of Millan conteygnyng that uppon Sonday laſt a grett moſt cruell batill was commyttyde at a cytie in Lumbardy callide Neware. In the w'ch towne was p'ſente the Duke of Millane withe fyve thouſande and fyve hundreth Swices abyding thare the co'myng of ſeven thouſonde moo Swices in there Ayde and p'tie. The Franſhemen in the mean tyme being in nomb'r oon thouſande Men of Armes fyve hundreth light horſe and eght thouſande footmen maide a grett aſſawlit unto the ſaid towne of Noware and with ther artillary did beatt downe above fyvety zerdes of the walles. All beitt the Swices beinge within the ſaid citie with grett violence put them bake and ſtronglie Iſhewide outt aganſte them p'ceving p'fitelie thatt the ſaide ſeven thouſonde Swices war in maner att thare haunde. Thare they toke by force the Franſhmens Artillary. And dide ſhoot the ſame aganſte them. Whereupon the ſaide ſeven thouſonde come into thare aide. And thare ſtrightlie begane emongis them a marvalus cruall batell. In the whiche was ſlayne uppon the Franſhe p'tie, the greatt capitan namyde Monſigniour de la Tramoglia, with his two ſonnes, and Segniour Johan Jacobe Eryvlew heade of the Franſhe faccion in the Ducherie of Millane, whoos deithe importith uppon the Franſhe p'tie as moche as oon thouſonde launces. Oon of his ſonnes alſo namyde Camyllo was thare ſlane with all odr' capitanes oon exceptide, namyde the Barron de Barnyſe who with a verray ſmall company is flede into a certain caſtill and thare is obſedide in ſuche maner as he can nott eſcaipe. As for the reſt of the ſaide Franſhe hoſt, foure partes therof completly war ſlayne in the felde. And they that flede be kyllide extremly by villans. Uppon the Swices p'tie the victorie ys here extemyde m'valous noble. Albe itt thare be ſlayne of them uppon fyve thouſounde. In the tyme of this moſt cruall batell, the Viceroy of Napulls was paſſing over the water of Powe for to have joinyde withe the foreſaide Swices aganſte the Franſhemen. Albe itt the Duke of Millane ſentt hym worde in all haſt after the feld was doon, that he ſhulde taike the nextt way aganſte the Venyſhans hoſt, and noo farther com towardis hym. he alſo ſentt worde in all haſt to the Capitanes of themperours hoſte beinge within Verona. that they ſhulde ſtrightlie ſtoppe the paſſe ſoo that the Venycians ſhulde nott flee in ony wiſe for thententt that they ſhulde be introcludide bytwixtt the foreſaide Spanyardis and there ſaide hoſte intending therby there utter diſtruction whiche is verray like to ſuccede. As hereaftire every thyng ſhall here come to paſſe or that more ſpeciall knowlege in the premiſſes ſhall be hade. I ſhall nott faille to advertiſe your grace. The Popis holines att the heringe hereof haith more declaride hym ſelf againſt the Franſhmen then he haithe doon heretofore as itt is here oppynyonyde by reaſon that this night he haith ſhott in the Caſtill angill a ſolempne peall of gonnes in tryhumphe of the premiſſes. The Popis ſaide holines and all od'r grett men here doith nowe looke daylie to here that your grace ſhall utterlie extermynate the Franſh king whiche I ſhall daylie beſiche the moſt bliſſide trynytie to bryng to ſuche paſſe as your grace woll deſire with prouſp'ous p'ſervacione of youre moſte highe and noble aſtate. From Rome in verray grett haſte as apperith the 10th day of June att thre of the Cloke aftire that the ſonne was ſett. 1513. Your mooſte humble ſubjecte and beedman.

PLeaſe it your Grace, the 5th day of this monthe the Popis holines was advertiſed from oon Ambaſſadour of the Florentynes reſident in the Franſhe court, upon your gracis late conflictt withe thennymyes of the churche; and the maner of your moſte victorious tryumphe obteignyde aganſte the ſame. whiche was unto his holines, and all odre your gracis frendes lovers and ſervaunttes here marvalus greatt joye and comforthe. And ſurelie unto youre Ennymyes in this court noo leſſe pean and diſcurage. Uppon the morowe nexte aftur, I wentt unto the Cardinall Sinogalen deſyring hym in your gracis name, for to have deliverde unto me the Breve that your grace knowthe of, putt into his kepinge for your highnes by Pope July of bliſſide memory according to the ſaide Popis commaundement. He aunſwerde me that nodre he is, ne ever was of oder mynde, but that your grace ſhulde have itt upon thaccompliſhyng of ſuche condicions as be compriſide in the ſame, whiche he grauntithe that nowe your grace moſte noblelie and withe moſte glorious victorie haithe fulfillide. Albeitt he ſaithe that bicauſe the ſaide breve is of ſoo greatt and ſoo weghtie Importance, apperteignynge the perpetuall honour of ſoo highe and myghtye a prince, he durſte nott be ſoo boulde as to deliver itt from his haundes unto ony leving creatour withoutt ſpeciall commaundment geven unto hym from your grace in writing, whiche hade, he ſaithe, he will withe all his hartt and mynde deliver itt unto me for your gracis bihove and honour. Soo he grauntithe that the ſaide Pope Julie commaundide hym. He praithe yowr grace to latt it be noo odrewiſe ſhewide; butt that ye hade the ſaide breve in your haundes in Pope Julys days. He wolde nott that the Popis holines that now is ſhulde in ony maner knowe the contrarye. And ſtonding that his holines haithe confirmyde all ſuche Indulties and graces as the ſaide Pope Julie dide graunt unto your grace, whereof this ſaide breve is oon and moſt of gravitie. Me ſemyth yow'r highneſs may right honourablelie and condignlie deſire of his holines ſpeciall confirmation of the ſaide breve in more ample maner under leade whiche I truſte veralie nodre he woll ne conveniently may denye. I ſende unto your grace withe thies preſenttes a lettre from my ſaide lorde Cardinal Sinogalen, writen with his owne haunde uppon his loving contynuyde goode mynde and woll towardis your grace in the premyſſes. If itt may ſtonde withe your gracis pleaſour att convenyentt tyme aftur your receptt of the ſaide breve, to geve unto hym ſome promocion more or leſſe in recompence of his trewe and faithfull demenour towardis your ſaide grace in this behalfe, I thynke that nott oonly itt ſhulde grettly redunde unto your honour, butt alſo reteigne hym ever to contynewe as oon of your gracis moſte kynde and loving frendes during his lyve. Afture that thies Newes affore ſaide war dyvulgate in the citie here thambaſſadour of Venyce beyng here reſidentt deſiride me withe grett inſtance moſte humblelie to beſiche your grace uppon thare bihalf, that ſtoundyng that themperour is now preſentt withe your grace ye woll voichſafe to move his majeſtie for ſome goode and indifferentt peax to be aſtabliſhide bitwixt the ſame and them, he depechide a curiour ſtrightlie unto their Signorie with writing uppon this forſaide overthrowe of the Franſhmen. and ſaithe he doubtithe nott butt the hoill Signorie woll in all haſte poſſible addreſſe their lettres towardis your grace of moſt humble ſupplication for the premyſſes, ſuppoſing verralie, that by reaſon of themperial Majeſties preſence with your highneſs, ye ſhall ſett ſom goode ordour betwixt them and doubtith not as he ſaith butt that the ſaide Signorie wolbe right tractable therunto. I have percivide how that latelie my lorde the Cardinall Hadrian dide advertice your grace uppon the breve of confirmation of all ſuche graunttes as Pope Julie hade grauntide unto your highnes ſundrie days affore that ye wer advertiſide therof frome me ande my lorde your Oratour here. And in like maner uppon the reſtitution of the Sciſmatiques Saintt Croſſis and Saintt Severyne. I pray your grace nott to thynke herefore that he ſhulde in your cauſes be more diligentt or uſe better ſtudie for thexpede therof than we doo, well I am aſſuride that the ſaide breve was grauntide and finallie expede ſave oonlie at the plombe ſundrie days affore that ever he knewe it laboride fore. As ſoon as he hade knowlege of itt he corruptide oon of the Secretaries and gatt of hym a copie to thententt he myght ſhewe unto your grace his pretendide diligence and goode ſervice. He myght right longe affore have ſhewide unto your grace the intendide reſtitution of the Sciſmatiques. His diligence and labours ware moche more ſean in brynging that matier to paſſe then ever I dide ſee in hym for ony cauſe apperteigning owdre to youre gracis honour or pleaſour. Thus I ſhall moſt hartlie beſiche the bleſſide trinitee for the preſervation of your moſt highe and royall aſtate. MY Lord of Lynkecolne I recommande me unto yow.

And lette yow wyte that I have ſpokyne with the Duke; whyche in the begynnynge was as yll affrayde as ever he was in his lyffe leſt no good effecte ſhulde comme to pas. A. D. 1514.

Neverthelef, in farther Communyng, we wente more rondly to oure matters; in ſo moche that I ſayde to hym, ſeinge that the Kyng your Maſter hathe ſoght ſo gentely unto Us for bothe Amyte and Mariage, I aſſure yow (oure Honour ſavyd) we colde be well content to gyffe herkyne therto, and yff the Offers wer reſonable agre upon thos ſame; but this be not reſonable, excepte the Amyte ſhulde no longer contynw then the Payment off Money: And yett natt ſo, except therwer a reſonable ſumme of Mony to be payd in hand by and by:

Iff hys Maſter wyll have the Maryage, I can natt ſe how itt can be conveniently, excepte the Amyte be made duryng our Lyffes and on yer affter, to the intente that all Supycyon off bothe ſydes may be ſett apart:

Whyche Maryage and Amyte your Maſter may have under thys maner; that is to ſay, Paynge Erly on Hundred Thouſand Crownes, and att hys requeſt I natt to ſtyke for no redy Mony in hande, but I to ſtande contente therwith for Recompenſe off all thynges.

Whyche, yff your Maſter conſidere what Herytaunce he holdyth from Me, and what good my Amyte may do to helpe forth hys Mater in Italy, I thinke he wyll nat grettly ſtyke at:

Thys forther more I ſayde to the Duke, ſurly I can natt ſee how the Amyte made for yers can any longer indure then the Payment, whyche exſpyryde ſhulde be occaſion off new Breche and Demans, wherby noder He nor We ſhulde lyff quiettly, whyche, yff ther fall Alyance, I wholde be lothe to ſee; wherfor I ſee no way to eſchwe all Dangers and Parraylles, and to Recompenſe Me for witholdyng off myne Inheritance (whiche yff I wolde be ſlake in my Subjectes wold murmure att) but to make thys Amyte duryng oure Lyffys and on yere affter, Paynge yerly as above reherſed; whyche Amyte wons grantyd, the Alyance ſhulde natt be refuſyde, nor no nother thyng whyche with my Honour ſavyd I myght do:

Saying forther more to hyme that, yff I myght demande with my Honour any leſſe, or take any leſſe offere (ſeyng hys Maſter is ſo well mynded to the forſayd Alyance and Amyte) I wolde be glade to do that at hys requeſt, but leſs then thys hit can nott ſtonde with my Honour, nor my Subjectes wyll nat be content that I ſhulde take.

My Lord, I ſhuyd hym forthermore that, yff he thoght we myght truſt to have thys Ende, I wolde be content that yow and they ſhuld Commune on all other Artycylles, concernyng the Amyte and Maryage, tyll we myght have abſolute aſſurance in that behalfe for lyſyng off tyme:

To whyche he Anſwarde, that he colde natt aſſure Me thereoff; but that he truſtyde, ſeyng my Demans wer ſo reſonable, that hys Maſter wholde agre therto.

On truſt hereon we woll that yow begyne to Penne the reſydue off the Artycylles as ſoone as yow can;

And thus fare yow well.

Wryttyn with the Hande of yowr lovyng Maſter

REverendiſſime in Chriſto pater & domine, Domine mi obſervantiſſime. Nunquam defuit profecto Summi Pontificis mens quam optima, Domino Andreæ Ammonio veſtræ Reverendiſſimæ Dominationis ſervulo fideliſſimo, iſtius Collectoriæ officio gratificandi, cum ipſius virtutibus & meritis ſic exigentibus, tum præcipue ſereniſſimi Regis noſtri pluribus literis inſtantia & interceſſione. Itaq; bullas ſuas ipſi domino Andreæ deſuper expeditas ejus Serenitas conceſſerat certo ſibi perſuadens R'mum D. Cardinalem Hadrianum cuicunq; juri vel intereſſe, quod in eo officio prætenderet, honeſta illi recompenſatione propoſita, ceſſurum. Verum ipſe Cardinalis id facere continue recuſavit, neq; item ad poſtulationem ac etiam preces multas Sereniſſimi Regis, diverſis ad eum Scriptis literis, ad id unquam adduci potuit, quinymo ipſas regias literas parvi faciendo, palam dictitabat ab ejus M'tis mente nunquam fuiſſe profectas, idq; non modo cunctis R'mis D. Cardinalibus affirmatiſſime prædicabat, verum etiam, quod longe plus eſt, ſeipſum a nonnullis magnis Dominis iſtius Sapientiſſimi Regii Conſilii, certiorem factum, mentem eſſe Regiæ Majeſtatis, ut is Cardinalis officio prædicto nullo pacto cederet, idq; Polydorum ſæpius ſcripſiſſe, dubium non eſt. Eadem itaq; verba ab ipſo Cardinale creberrime jurejurando confirmata, tenuere aliquocies ipſum Pontificem in ancipiti conſilio & deliberatione; effectumq; eſt, ut res hæc diu pendens in ejus expeditione plurimum habuerit difficultatis. Sed tandem ejus Sanctitas in hanc devenit ſententiam, ut ipſe dominus Andreas ſuccederet in locum prædicti Polydori ſub nonnullis appoſitis modis & conditionibus, quas veſtra R'ma Dominatio ab eodem Domino Andrea planius intelliget, ipſi R'mo Cardinali Hadriano per S'mum D. N. portione fructuum dictæ collectoriæ ad ſe ſpectante, quæ mille & quadringentorum Ducatorum ſummam annuatim excedit, libere pro hujuſmodi recompenſatione, condonata & conceſſa; ex quo nullam ipſe Cardinalis jacturam patietur. Quamobrem ipſe Sanctiſſimus D. N. ut præfato Cardinali ſatisfaceret, nonnulla ei conceſſit brevia ejus continentiæ quam veſtra R'ma D. videbit; quæ non mirabitur, ſi brevia prædicta Regiæ M. forſan aliquantulum excedentia videbuntur, quando ea duntaxat de cauſa ab ejus Sanctitate factum extitit, ut rabiei ipſius Cardinalis & pro eo intercedentium ſatis, hac etiam vice, fieret. Mens tamen Pontificis eſt, ut dominus Andreas ab Regia Majeſtate Subcollector declaretur, eiq; tradatur conceſſio ab eodem Cardinale facta, quæ, ut per S'mum D. N. per Tabellarium dedita opera ad Sereniſſimum Regem mitteretur, ſine ſcitu meo, inſtantiſſime rogavit, tamen ejus Sanctitas me omnia ſecrete ſcire voluit, ut copioſius ab ipſo D. Andrea cognoſcet veſtra R'ma D. cui eundem D. Andream, in hac & cæteris ſuis in rebus, quam maxime poſſum ex corde commendo, atq; meipſum, quos ambos ſibi ſervitores deditiſſimos & fidiſſimos jam dudum veſtram R'am D. noviſſe non dubito; atq; paratiſſimos pro eadem, quoties opus eſſet, vitam ipſam effundere. Et feliciſſime valeat D. V. R'ma cui quam humillime ſeipſum commendat, Rome 27. Martii. 1515.

King Henrie the VIIIth his Letter to his Ambaſſadour the Buſhopp of Bathe att Rome. From the Longueville Libr. V. 50.

The King ſheweth himſelfe to bee offended with the Biſhop of Bathe his Ambaſſadour for haveing ſuffered a Bull to have been procured againſt him out of the Court of Rome in the favour of the Biſhopp of Turney which by all meanes he willeth him to ſee ſpeedilye revoked and annulled

RIght Reverend Father in God we greete you well, And albeit that we of ſpecial truſt and confidence have deputed you to bee reſidente in that Court as our Orator not onelie to ſollicit and execute all ſuch matters and cauſes as wee have and ſhall comitt from tyme to tyme but alſo vigilantlie to intend and foreſee that nothing ſhould bee impetrate or obteyned there prejudiciall or hurtfull to us or this our Realme or derogatorie to our dignity Royall

N°. 4. C. 2. Book II.

Yet

Yet nevertheles by the inſpection of ſuch writeings as you ſhall receive here incloſed conteyneing the tenor and effect of a Bull latelie paſſed and ſpread into that Court att the inſtance of one bearing and pretending himſelfe Biſhopp of Tourney what exorbitant grants have bene obteyned there by untrue ſuggeſtions contrary to all lawe and Juſtice and redounding greatlye to our diſhonor the defeating and derogacion of our right and prerogative royall within our Cittie of Tourney, and finallie the invocation Brachij ſeculariſ ſoe that if hee were not admitted to his poſſeſſion by our Captaines Soldiers and Subjects within the ſaid Cittie hee might call in the aſſiſtance of other princes and ſoe by might and power attayne the ſame which was and is a colour and driftie ſubtillie contrived and made not onelie to ſtirr and ſett ſedition betweene the ſaid French king and king of Caſtile and us whoſe aide and aſſiſtance the ſaide Buſhop muſt needs call and require in this caſe, and none other, but alſoe by that meanes doth (as much as in him is under ſhadow of the popes Authoritye) to recover the ſaid Cittie out of our poſſeſſion and domynion And how it ſtandeth with Juſtice and the Popes honor thus to admitt our diſobedient and untrue vaſſal and ſubject to the poſſeſſion of that Sea and to command him to remayne in the ſame our Cittie in contempt of us and the unſuretie thereof, Wee thinke the Pope (of his great wiſedome) can and will circumſpectly conſider, For hee may well thinke and conſtantlye believe that in that caſe ſounding to our unſuretie and tendinge to the loſſe of our ſaid Cittie neither wee nor our Captaines Soldiers or Subjects ought or may in any wiſe to obey to his proceſſes and ſentences as thinges done contrary to Juſtice, in the abſence of us, and others haveinge Intereſt therein wee never being called nor admoniſhed for the Juſtifieing of our right or title in that behalfe, Over this it is to bee conſidered that by theis the Popes proceſſes cenſures and ſentents and all and ſingular the perſons Spirituall and Temporall of our ſaid Regallatye bee expreſslie comanded to ſuffer the ſaid pretended Biſhopp peaceablie and without contradiction to enter the poſſeſſion of the ſaid Biſhoppricke under the payne of Excomunicacion interdiction and privacion of offices and benefices with Inhabilitys to receive any other promotions hereafter which implieth as much as to diſcharge our Subjects there from their fidelities and allegiance towards us, but alſo to receive him cum Brachio ſeculari and with as great a power as hee would bring with him which thinges bee ſoe exorbitant and contrary to the lawes of god and man Juſtice and reaſon, that it is the greateſt diſhonour that ever came to the Pope ſo indiſcreetly to paſſe ſuch thinges againſt Princes which were extreame wrong and injury if they were attempted againſt the pooreſt man liveing.

And albeit our Brother the King of Caſtile will in noe wiſe bee agreeable to give anie ſuch ayde to the pretended Biſhopp though hee were required by virtue of the popes Bull ſoe to doe conſidering that it ſhould bee contrarie to the league and amitye between us and him, yet the Pope (as much as in him is) hath by the ſaid clauſe licenſed and authoriſhed him and other Princes to aſſiſt him the ſaid Biſhopp with there greate powers againſt us ſoe by that meanes they might (if our Cittie were unprovided of defence) ſurprize and take the ſame from our obeyſance, And in caſe the Pope will thus reward us for all the benefitts wee have done unto him and the Church of Rome as well by extincting the Chiſme by actuall battaile, as alſo by entertayneing the Swizers to our great coſts and charges takeing and concludeing of ſundry amityes of divers princes, more for his ſurety then for our owne We have good cauſe to thinke our benevolence coſt and charges full ill imployed and beſtowed in that behalfe.

For firſt by the ſame the Pope hath done as much as in him is to call our Rebell and diſobedient Subject to bee admitted to the Biſhoppricke of Tourney without makeinge of homage or fidelitie to us contrary to Juſtice, by meane whereof if hee ſhould bee ſuffered to enter and make his aboade within our Cittye in contempt of us, he might and would not onelye raiſe and ſtirr ſeditions among our ſubjects but alſtſo the perdition thereof, like as the preſident of Paris his Father and hee laſt ſomer enterpriſed to doe which thinge was detected and openlye known for a trueth ſoone after the impetation of the ſaid Bull.

Secondlye our ſubjects ſpirituall and temporall within our ſaid Cittye ſhold bee bound by vertue of that Bull under the terrible cenſures to aide and favour the the ſaid Biſhopp ſo by that meanes they ſhould in a manner bee diſcharged of their Oath and fidelity to us made and conſequently maynteyne our Rebell againſt us to our diſhonor and unſuretye.

Thirdlie by the clauſe of Invocacion Brachij ſecularis the Pope hath done as much (as in him is) to raiſe warre and hoſtillitye betweene us and ſuch princes of whome the ſaid Invocacion ſhold bee demanded And under colour thereof hath authoriſed them to gather an Army to bring in the Biſhopp to the danger of our ſaid Cittie and to our expreſſe wrong.

Fourthly by this ſtrange and inordinate Bull (whereof the like was never ſeene) he attempteth to take from us the ſuperiority Regall preheminence Juriſdiction and Authority that we have in the Region and Dominion of Tourney in that hee in our abſence and without our knowledge hath in this great matter (ſoe much touching our honour) fulminated his cenſures and by his delegates called and adjourned us and our ſubjects out of the Regallity and territory, into places unſure under the obedience of other princes in derogation of our honor and contempt of Juſtice; Whereas all cauſes bee determinable within the ſame, and no appeale or reſort either to the Court of Paris or elſe where can have place there.

Fifthly hee hath revoked the Authority and Adminiſtration of that Sea by him graunted at our inſtance to the Right Reverend Father in God the Cardinall Arch Biſhopp of Torke without care of his knowledge or conſent, whereas if any one of us both had bene called thereunto wee would and might have ſhewed ſufficient grounds and cauſes, according to the premiſſes why wee might not ſoe doe, for wee remember well, that one of the cauſes principallie moveing the Pope to grant the Authority of Adminiſtration of the ſaid Biſhoppricke to the ſaid Cardinall, was, foraſmuch as the ſaid Biſhopp hadd neither made his homage nor fidelitye for his Temporalities nor yet done his dutie or releive for the ſame which cauſe yet remeyneth, the ſaid Biſhopp not onely neglecting and refuſeing to doe the ſame, But alſo conſpireing againſt us as a diſobedient and traiterous ſubject, and if the Popes ſaid holines ſhall by theis ſiniſter meanes more favour ſuch Rebells then us, that have done ſo much for the Church or yet the ſaid Cardinall being an honourable member of the ſaid Church and congremall of the Colledge, Tollendo ius quæſitum partibus non vacantis, it will give ſmall courage to princes either to obey his proceſſes, or yet to aſſiſt him in his neceſſity.

Sixtly though the importable greif before rehearſed bee ſo extreame, that in warrs nothing could bee done more injurious or imagined by the Father of the Church to any Chriſtian prince, yet the committing of this cauſe (whereupon our regallitye and intereſt dependeth) to ſubject vile and ſimple perſons of lowe degree being ſuch as could recover our ſaid Cittye by inventions and ſemblable drifts and perchance comanded and aſſigned by their ſuperior to execute the ſaid proceſſes for makeing ſedition procureing of diſcords and raiſeing of Brutes, is the thinge wee moſt ponder and eſteeme; wherein the Pope hath largely exceeded his ordinary power and governed by the key of comon diſcretion, and well aſſured may hee bee that if hee in his perſon would thus rigorouſlye without ground of Juſtice proceed againſt us, wee could not ſuffer it, and much more wee diſdaine ſuch deligates of lowe degree, ſuſpect unmeet and corrupted perſons to bee the Judges in the ſoveraigntie of our Regallitie, And if his holines take regard to his houſe and ſuretie hee will not onely forthwith revoke the ſaid Bull,and extinct the diſorder made by the Authority thereof but alſo bee well warye how he granteth ſemblable Bulls againſt the ſoveraigntye of princes hereafter, remembring the danger that may enſue unto him by the ſame.

By the premiſſes you may evidentlie perceive what diſhonor prejudice danger and diſpleaſure ſhould and might have enſued unto us, if wee had not bene ſufficiently furniſhed with power to reſiſt the malicious drifts of our enemyes, Whereas by your negligence and inadvertiſement the ſaid Bull hath beene attayned without any your lett or contradiction contrary to the ſingular affiance truſt and confidence that wee have alwayes had and putt in you, And in caſe you as our Orator take no better regard to your charge for our honor and ſuretie in ſoe greate matters concerning us in that Court Wee muſt and will provide ſuch a one to furniſh that roome as will more aſſuredly tender the ſame and bee more vigillant therein Wherefore we will and command you that the ſubſtantial revocation of the ſaid Bull with ſufficient clauſes to extinct all proceſſes and ſententes made and to bee made by authority and vertue thereof againſt us, the ſaid Cardinall or any of our ſubjects with redentigration and renovelling of the Authoritie and Adminiſtration of the ſaid Biſhoppricke to the Cardinall aforeſaid and to ſend the ſame to us with all dilligence poſſible, or els wee ſhall bee forced to ſubrogate ſome other diligent and able perſon in your place that will better regard our honor and ſuretie then you have in this caſe done.

Faile you not to accompliſh this our commandement as you will avoide our diſpleaſure, att your perill.

How you ſhall further order your ſelf in diſcloſeing and ſolliciteing of the premiſſes you ſhall be advertiſed by ſuch lettres as the Cardinall of Yorke now directeth unto you the contents whereof wee will that yee as effectually followe as though it proceeded of our ſelfe.

Occaſional Remarks on the ancient Method of Educating young Noblemen in Families of Biſhops. B. II.

N°. 6. C. 4. Book II.

I Have obſerved, " That the Nobility in the Cardinal's Family, rather " reſided there as in a Place of Education, than under the Notion or Cha- " racter of Servants."

It may be here not improper to ſay ſomething in Order to corroborate this Obſervation,

John de Athon, upon the Conſtitutions of Othobon, Tit. 23. in reſpect to the Goods of ſuch, who dyed inteſtate, and upon the Word Barones, has the following Paſſage concerning Grodſted Biſhop of Lincoln.

Sanctæ memoriæ Robertum Cognominatum Grodſted dudum Lincolnienſem Epiſcopum, Regi Henrico quaſi admirando, cum interrogavit, ubi Noraturam didicit, quâ Filios Nobilium Procerum Regni, quos ſecum habuit Domiſellos, inſtruxerat, cum non de nobili proſapia, ſed de ſimplicibus traxiſſet Originem, fertur intrepide reſpondiſſe, In Domo ſeu Hoſpitio Majorum Regum, quam ſit Rex Angliæ; Quia Regum, David, Salomonis, & aliorum vivendi morem didicerat ex Intelligentia ſcripturarum.

Reyner, in his Apoſtol. Bened. from Saunders acquaints us, that the Sons of the Nobility were placed with Whiting Abbot of Glaſtenbury for their Education, who was contemporary with the Cardinal, and which Method of Education was continued for ſome Time afterward.

There is in the Cuſtody of the preſent Earl of Stafford, a Nobleman of the greateſt Humanity and Goodneſs, an Original of Inſtructions, by the Earl of Arundell, written in the Year 1620, for the Benefit of his younger Son, the Earl of Stafford's Grandfather under this Title;

Inſtructions for you my Son William, how to behave your ſelf at Norwich.

In theſe Inſtructions is the following Paragraph, " You ſhall in all Things " reverence honour and obey my Lord Biſhop of Norwich, as you would do " any of your Parents, eſteeminge whatſoever He ſhall tell or Command you, " as if your Grandmother of Arundell, your Mother, or my ſelf, ſhould ſay " it; and in all things eſteem your ſelf as my Lord's Page; a breeding, which " youths of my houſe far ſuperior to you were accuſtomed unto, as my Grand- " father of Norfolk, and his Brother my good Uncle of Northampton were " both bred as Pages with Biſhopps, &c.

Theſe Inſtructions are written upon Parchment in that Earl's own hand, and ſigned by himſelf, and though they ſeem to be the product of his firſt thoughts, yet ſuch an excellent vein of piety and good ſenſe does ſpread through them, as may be ſufficient to remove thoſe prejudices, which ſome perſons have poſſibly entertained to the diſadvantage of that great Peer, on Occaſion of the Character given him by the Earl of Clarendon; wherein this noble Hiſtorian does not appear to have ſpoken with that Impartiality, or to have taken all the requiſite Care to inform himſelf, which he has diſcover'd in other parts of His Hiſtory. There are ſeveral Remains of the Earl of Arundell in writing, which ſhew, he was ſo far, in reſpect to his intellectual Talents, from being a weak man, that he had a very good Underſtanding, improved by an uncommon Meaſure of Knowledge.

REverendiſſime in Chriſto Pater & Domine mi Colendiſſime humilimas Commendationes. N°. 9. C. 11. Book. II. A. D. 1518. An. 10. H 8. Bib. Cot. Vit. C. 3. Fol. 228.

Quanti ſemper, præ cæteris, fecerit Sereniſſimam Anglorum Regis Majeſtatem Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter, quamque cupiat ut mutua inter Se Benevolentia & is Amor, quo prædictus Rex univerſam Familiam noſtram ſemper eſt proſequutus, non conſervetur modò, verùm etiam indies augeatur, multis & illis non obſcuris Argumentis hactenus cognoſcere licuit, quorum Reverendiſſima Dominatio veſtra bona in parte conſcia egregiam Majeſtati ſuæ Fidem facere poterit.

Quoniam verò in amovendo ex Collegio noſtro Domino Hadriano olim Cardinali aliquanto ſeriùs quàm fortaſſe ſua Majeſtas voluiſſet Res peracta fuit, ſi Quis forte minùs rectè ſentiens interpretetur noluiſſe Sanctiſſimum Dominum noſtrum ſereniſſimo Regi Morem gerere, Is tota prorſus veri aberrat via, neq; verò unquam Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter alterius Mentis fuit, ſed magni momenti negotium non erat niſi maturè & ut Juris forma poſtulat conducendum eſt.

Igitur hodierno Conſiſtorio Dominus Hadrianus nuper Cardinalis a Sacratiſſimorum Patrum Gremio ſevulſus, & ob ſua tam mala Merita jure Exauctoratus, in quem quia non niſi legitimè Proceſſum fuit, idcirco nullus quamlibet Malignus Æſtimator poterit objicere Hadrianum aut Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri, ſuapte Natura Clementiſſimi, Odio aut Sereniſſimi Regis veſtri Extimulatione, ſed propriis ſuis Meritis Pœnas dediſſe.

Ipſius verò Eccleſiæ Proviſio differetur, donec Majeſtas ſua, id quod Reverendiſſima Dominatio veſtra optimè novit, Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro ſignificaverit.

Hæc fuit, Reverendiſſime Domine, hujus tàm neceſſariæ quàm prudentis Cunctationis Cauſa; quam, etſi puto Reverendum Patrem Dominum Epiſcopum Wigornienſem, qui majoréve cum prudentia an gratia & dexteritate pro Sereniſſimo Rege in Urbe Oratorem agit, plenius ſignificaturum, Oratam tamen velim Reverendiſſimam Dominationem veſtram, dignetur etiam ipſa Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri & meo Nomine Sereniſſimo Regi, apud quem plurimum & Gratia & Auctoritate pollet, declarare; Et inſuper nihil eſſe in quo Sanctiſſimus Dominus ipſi ſatisfacere non ſit paratus; Domum verò noſtram eſſe ita Majeſtati ſuæ addictam, ut non minus de Nobis quàm de ſuis ſubditis diſponere poſſit.

Benevaleat Dominatio veſtra Reverendiſſima, cui Me humilimè commendo & offero.

PLeaſe it your grace, I am enformed by ſuche credible perſons as I baue ſecretly cauſed to make privye eſpeialls emongs the clergy of my Dioceſſe and peculiar Juriſdiction that ther is moche untowardnes in the Clergy which as they ſaith doith greately grudge to make contribution of the thirde parte of the the goodds or promotions ſaying that now they muſte pay the Subſidye graunted at the laſt Convocation which as yet they have not payed neither be able to paye as they ſaith, neither knowith wher or of whom to borrowe it. And in caas they ſhuld nowe paye the third parte of their ſaid goods or promotions they ſhuld leve (as they ſaith) in contynuall pouerty, and their chauncells perſonagies vicaragies barnes and other howſes decay and utterly be deſtroyed, ſaying alſo that if the Kings grace ſhuld now and alſo in tyme to come thus by his graces letters miſſives, privy ſeales, or other weyes herafter require aide of the ſp'ualtie as oftentimes as it ſhall pleace his grace ſo to doo, beſids the graunts of Convocations, to which they knowledge theymſelves bound, the Churche and clergie ſhall at length be put to ſuch importible charges, as they ſhall not be able to beare to the utter undoing and deſtruction of the ſame, as they ſaith it is almoſt already, and ſo hoſpitalitie ſhuld ceaſſe.

It is reaported to me alſo, that diuerſe of the clergy ſaith ſome of theyme doith find ther fathers ſome ther mothers, and ſome bothe which as they ſaith they be bound to doo by lawes of godd And in caas now they ſhuld be compelled to put theyme owt of their howſes, they ſaith they ſhuld be compelled to do agenſt charitie, the lawe of nature and lawes of the churche; and ſo thair fathers and mothers ſhuld be conſtrayned to go a beggyng to their vtter ſhame, and they theymeſelves to leve in miſerie.

Item it is reaported that if the clergy hadd money or knew how to come by it they wold right gladly contribute according to the Kings graces demaund. Saying that for the tyme they hadd money they wer as glad to departe to their prince as euer was Clergye, but they have ſo long paid that they be vtterly vndone and can pay no more: Adding if the Kings heighnes knewe their pouertie his grace would not demaund the third parte of the gudds of the Churche or yet any parte more then they haue already paide and graunted to pay.

It is reaported alſo that the Kings grace haue hadd already of theym in diſmeis in preſts in ſubſidies and other payments to the ſome of euery yere of his graces reigne of a diſme which is 16 Diſmeis, And reaported that the Churche was neuer ſo continually charged by no Kings days, And if ther ſhuld nowe be any newe Contribution demaunded the Churche ſhuld be vtterly deſtroyd.

Alſo I am enformed that the Clergye doith common amongs theymeſelues that conſidering that laymen which ſtandith only forthe keping of their own goodds and fyndyng of ther wifes and childre woll nothing graunte they were moche to be blamed if they wold not ſtand for the defenſe of the goods of the Churche whiche they allegith to be Bona pauperum & non regum neq; nobilium.

Your grace may perceive by this reaporte is made to me if they be trwe that ther is a great vntowardnes in the Clergy for the whiche I am right ſorey In caas theis reaports be trewe as peraduenture a great parte bee I beſeech your grace that I may knowe your beſt adviſe and counſell how I may beſt ordre me ſelfe in this behalfe. And that knowen I will helpe to the beſt of my power (as I wold God ſhuld helpe my Soule) to enduce the Clergye to avaunce according to the Kings graces Inſtructions.

Uppon thirſday next enſueing diuerſe of the Clergye within my Juriſdiction be aſſigned to appere before Me her at Otford aud then I ſhall perceve whether I ſhall find trewe or no ſuche reaports beforſaid as haue been made vnto me. And as I ſhall then fynd ſo will I certify your grace.

As toching the demeanors of the Kings graces ſubiects ſent vnto me by his graces Commiſſioners of this Countie which partely knoweth the demeanor of theym I have written my lettres to Sir Thomas Bolayne and Sir Henry Guldeford Knights, which lettres I doubte not but your grace haue either ſeen or els ſhall ſhortely ſee. If at any tyme any of the ſaid laymen ſhuld be ſent unto the Kings grace or yours, in caas they ſhuld be ther well and fauorable entreated they that doith abide at home will thinke that they ſhuld be as fauorable entreated And ſo they wold little regard this demaund And in caas they that ſhall come to the Kings grace and yours ſhuld be hardly entreated they that be at home will thinke they ſhalbe as yll entreated and peraduenture might cause theym to make more busyness at length to thair own paynes then the Kings grace wold be contented withall. And what shalbe best done in this matier I commyt it to your graces wisedom. At Otford the 15th daye of Aprile.

Coll. Nº. 23. C. 12.

NON expectabis, multo omnium feliciſſime Cardinalis, quod hac brevi Oratiuncula, immensam illam Laudum tuarum Aream velimus ingredi, vel Tantulo verborum numero virtutum tuarum omnium summam perstringere, quando eas vix ingenti volumine, tantum abest, ut sermone non dico diurno, sed ne semestri quidem, aut annuo vel enumerare quispiam possit. Nos verba facturi sumus de hisce duntaxat Rebus perpaucis illis quidem sed Quæ ob earundem Magnitudinem nisi essent Omnibus, nedum adstantibus, cognita (quod hos meos spiritus non mediocriter recreat) viderentur fortasſis incredibilia, nec citra Assentationis notam referri posse, cæterum tantum aberit hic noster sermo ab Assentatione, quantum abest a Necessitate. Quippe hujuscemodi sunt, Proceres humaniſſimi, hujus ampliſſimi Præsulis Dotes quæ ab omnibus, vel Inimicis (Quorum Laus ut est perquam rara, ita minime fucata) commemorari debeant; adeo, ut nulla fuerit Adulationis ſuſpicio, ſi earum Amore ducti, paulo liberius (ut noſtra Mediocritas tulerit) loquamur, pro noſtro erga ejus Celſitudinem Studio, & nobis delegato a Contubernalibus Officio. Nam non eſt noſtri Ingenij, hujus Infantiæ, harum Virium, ſed ne Oratoris quidem, quantumvis magni, quantumvis eloquentis, tot egregia hujus laudatiſſimi Cardinalis, digne pro Meritis concelebrare. Nulla ſane eſt tam torrens dicendi Copia, nullum tam efficax aut ſplendidum Orationis Genus, nulla vis, ubertas nulla, quæ huic eſt Oneri reſponſura. Quid enim huic defuit, quod ſummis quibuſq; Viris unquam adfuit? Præclarane Indoles? at hæc ſpem non ancipitem maximi hujus (quo nunc illum ornatum cernimus) honoris, univerſis præbuit; an eximia Corporis Temperatura? At hanc, ut videmus, obtinuit optimam; an Diligentia? Qui Pueritiæ Tempus extremum, initium habuit, Omnium bonarum Artium apud inclytam Oxoniam hujus tantæ Magnitudinis Altricem, in qua tam vigilanter bonis Literis incubuit, ut alios ejus Ætatis diligentiſſimos, longo præceſſerit Intervallo; an Ingenium? At hoc jam inde ab Adoleſcentia vel maxime divinum, omnium Calculis conſecutus eſt; an Rerum uſus, Probitas, Innocentia, Pudor, Integritas, Religio, an Virtus ulla? Quibus non modo clariſſimo Marcioni, ampliſſimo Antipræſuli, perplacuit, ſed Regi Regum omnium prudentiſſimo, Henrico, ejus nominis ſeptimo, viro acerrimi (ut mea fert Opinio) judicij, qui harum Rerum Gratia, hunc incorruptiſſimum Antiſtitem percharum habuit: Nam probe intelligebat Princeps, in perpendendis hominum Ingeniis, & hujuſmodi Dotibus longe ſolertiſſimus, iſtum aliquando huic ſuo Regno magno Uſui, atque honori futurum; in cujus Teſtimonium, eundem auxit Beneficiis, credidit illi Conſilia, commiſit Legationes, idq; in graviſſimis Regni Negotiis, in quibus quam dextre, ac prudenter ſe geſſerit, non eſt hujus Loci neque Temporis referre, hujus Filius Rex illuſtriſſimus univerſis optimi atq; excellentiſſimi Principis Artibus conſummatus, ut paternæ Hereditatis, ita & Judicij, atq; Animi Succeſſor innumeris hujus reverendiſſimi Præſulis captus Virtutibus, nullo non Honore digniſſimum judicavit; ſummus Pontifex ob Ingentia in Eccleſiam catholicam Merita hiſce inſignibus donavit, & quia videbat illum omnibus hujus Dignitatis Cardinalitij numeris abſolutiſſimum, adjecit & alteram Dignitatem ſecundum ſummum pontificium ſupremam, creavit Legatum, & id quidem a Latere. Quid ergo nos Homunculi poſt tantos, ac tam exquiſitos ſummorum Principum honores, ad quos tamen maxima harum virtutum, quibus eoſdem promeruit, pervenit Utilitas, conferre poſſumus? Quid nobis relictum eſt, quid ex officio nobis incumbit? Niſi, ut Deum immortalem communibus Votis ſollicitemus, quatenus eundem nobis quam diutiſſime, ſuperſtitem, incolumem, florentem conſervet, hiſce ſucceſſibus congratulemur, has ejus virtutes prædicemus, quas ſilentio præterire non poſſumus, niſi velimus eſſe omnium multo ingratiſſimi, non agnoſcentes multiplicia in hanc Rempublicam per Te, ornatiſſime Præſul, collata Beneficia, quis enim tam altam huic Inſulæ Tranquillitatem peperit, niſi hæc tua gratioſiſſima ſublimitas? quis pauperem a Potente, inopem a locuplete, ſimplicem & innocentem a juris publici vafricie, incunctanter explicuit? explicuit iſta diligentiſſima ſublimitas, quis ejuſdem facultatis profeſſores verſipelles in aliorum Exemplum acerrime corripuit? Corripuit hæc ipſa juſtiſſima ſublimitas, quis collapſas improborum inexplebili avaritia villas reedificari, Agros omni frugum Genere fertiliſſimos, in Paſcua deductos, Agricolis juſſit reſtitui? Juſſit iſta ipſa prudentiſſima ſublimitas; quis plurimarum nationum Chriſto militantium, Regum, Imperatoris, ſummi denique Pontificis, Favorem, huic Regno conciliavit? Conciliavit iſta tua præſtantiſſima ſublimitas. Omnia ergo hujus Reipublicæ Commoda, poſt nobiliſſimum, atq; invictiſſimum Regem noſtrum Henricum, ejus nominis octavum, cui tuam Celſitudinem debemus, ſi recte ratiocinabimur, uni huic accepta referamus oportet fortunatiſſimæ ſublimitati, Ecquem ex omni Antiquitatis Memoria preferre poſſumus, per quam religioſi Antiſtites, & Vos viri generoſiſſimi, qui tanta contulit vel uni Civitati, genti, aut populo, quanta hic non tantum huic Regno, ſed Orbi Chriſtiano? Of the Excommunication of Dr. Clyffe LL. Dr. Chauncellor to Nicholas Weſt Bp. of Elye.

Coll. Nº. 24. C. 12. B. II.

MD. that in the yeere of our Lorde 1528,9. Dr. Edmonds Mr. of Peter Colledge being then Vicechancellor of Cambrydge, the ſaid Dr. Cliffe attempted to call before hym one Sr. Henry of Barnard Oſtell, commonlye called Sr. Henrye the Conjurer, who for a certayne fact of Incontynence charged upon hym, as done without the libertye of the Univerſitie, the ſaid Clyffe proceded agaynſt hym, and did excommunicate hym; which thyng was complayned of to the Vicechancellor and the ſaid Dr. Clyffe charged with perjurye for infryngyng the liberties of the Univerſitie, and therupon for his contempte was excommunicated by the ſaid Vicechauncellor, and a daye appoynted, when the Vicechancellor with his aſſiſtance ſhould call the ſaid Dr. Clyffe before theim to make anſwer. Wherupon the Vicechauncellor dyd choſe for the place of Examinacion the Logycke Scholes, ſyttyng in the ſeate commonlye appoynted for the Awnſwerer, and his Aſſiſtance being rownde about hym, amongeſt which Aſſiſtance Thomas Thoorlbye Doctor of the Cyvyll Lawe was. Then the ſaid Dr. Clyffe was called, and he with his Companye made appearaunce and being much charged for breakyng the priviledges, which weare then alleged by the Proctors, and openlye reade; the ſaid Clyffe in a great ſtomacke, and in a ſtoute glorye awnſwered that he had done nothyng otherwyſe then by the Lawe dyd beare hym, and to the Lawe would he ſtand, with ſolemne proteſtacions in the Biſhops name his Mr. and in Concluſyon brought furth his Boke of the Syxte, Titulo de privilegiis capite volentes, Titulo 7°. and reade the forth parte of the Lawe verye ſeriouſlye, triumphing before the victorye, and ſayed theſe words to the Vicechancellor, Sr. you ſee the playne grownde that I ſtand upon, the Lawe is manyfeſt and open to juſtyfie my doinge, and for that it is not your Profeſſion to expende the Lawe, I here offer my Boke, and where you have amongeſt your Aſſiſtance a lerned man in the Lawe (meanyng Doctor Thurlbye) who I am ſuer wyll ſoe judge of the Lawe, as I do alledge it. Therupon I offer hym my Boke to ſee the Lawe, and your worſhipe ſhall perceave, how I am unjuſtlye moleſted, and therfore deſyer to be diſmiſſed with my coſts, that the Intereſt of my Mr. the Reverend Father the Biſhop of Elye may be acknowledged, and the Adverſarye put to perpetual ſilence. Than the Vicechancellor required the ſaid Dr. Thurlby to conſyder of the Lawe alledgyd, which he dyd, and after a longe expectation to underſtand what he ſhould judge of this Lawe, he ſayed in Concluſion thus: Mr. Dr. Clyffe as Chancellor unto the Biſhop of Elye, yow have ſtoutely mayntayned his Juriſdiction, to the derogacion of the priviledge of the Univerſitie, &c. And for ſome countenance yow have alledged this Lawe, which maye ſeme at the firſt ſight to make muche for yow; but if it would have pleaſyd yow, to have well wayed the whole Lawe, and have brought in the latter parte of the Lawe, begynyng thus; In eos autem quibus ne interdici, ſuſpendi, vel excommunicari a quoquam valeant a ſede Apoſtolica eſt indultum, &c. yow ſhould have ſeen the particular caſe which we have nowe in hand, to be there ſufficiently ruled, that ſtandyng ſuche privilege, as the Univerſitie have alledged playnlye to them graunted, yow could not have excommunicated this partye beyng owt of yowr Terrytorye, and ſo infrancheſyd: and therupon yow miſtake the lawe, for it wyll not ſerve your purpoſe, &c. with this th' Univerſitie as many as were preſent rejoyſed to ſee his hold ſo well wyped awaye, he and his complices amazed, but yet would not ſo gyve over, but wrangled as they could; and after many words, the matter was ſuſpended, and referred to the Judgement of the Cardinall Woolcey and of his lernyd Counſayll, and ſo it was brought upp before the Cardynall, and longe reſoned of before hym, Dr. Stephen Gardyner his Secretarye takyng the parte of th' Univerſitie agaynſt Dr. Clyffe, who with his Counſayll awnſwered for hymſelfe. But in concluſion the ſaid Dr. Clyffe was commaunded to repayre home to th' Univerſitie to ſubmitte hymſelfe to the Vicechancellor prayinge hym to have his abſolution, promyſyng that he would for hereafter attempte no more ſuche matter agaynſt the priviledg of th' Univerſitie, whereto he was ſworne, ſaying that he was ſorye, that there ſhould be any variance betwyxte thUniverſitie and the Biſhop. And ſo upon this ſubmiſſion on his knees before the Vicechancellor mekely takyng his abſolucion, he was diſmiſſed from any further penaunce, and therwith at the requeſt of his Frends, before the Cardynall he was reſtored agayne to his place and Degree agayne within thUniverſitie, as before. And ſo the privileges of the Univerſitie in their exempcions from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhope of Elye corroborated and renued after a licke proceſſe that ſome tyme was had betwyxt the Biſhop and thUniverſitie in annis. 1429. and 1430. ſo delegated by Martyn then Bp. of Rome to the Prior of Barnewell, and to Dr. Jo. Depyng which proceſſes is recorded in the Blacke Book of th' Univerſitie, &c.

MAxima ſumus lætitia affecti, Reverendiſſime D'ne & Preſul maxime Ampliſſime, poſtea quam ex Vicecancellario noſtro cognovimus, ſic tuæ Celſitudini acceptum fuiſſe Inimicum noſtrum (nam quidni vocemus Inimicum, qui plus quam inimica in nos molitur?) ut facile intelligamus, Celſitudimem tuam, & optime velle rebus noſtris, & id agere, ut quam optime, & quam firmiſſime habeant. Quid enim? Quid illa, Colendiſſime D'ne, cum homine tua verba? Tun' neſcis Academiam & totam & volentem in noſtra eſſe poteſtate? Aut ſi ſcias, Tun' audes nobis creditam ditam invadere & oppugnare? Redibis Cantabrigiam, illic Anathematis nexu ſolvendus. Hæc tua verba, Ampliſſime D'ne, quid aliud quam firmas eſſe juſſerunt Leges noſtras? rata privilegia? Inviolabilem Academiam? Quæ dum nobis in ſenatu noſtro exponeret Vice Cancellarius noſter, quibus tunc animis, aut qua nos mente fuiſſe credat Celſitudo tua? dum ſilentium rumpentes incredibili gaudio, alii te Patrem Patriæ diceremus, alii Preſulem Ampliſſimum, alii Dominum Clementiſſimum? Multi te noſtræ libertatis & vindicem & Aſſertorem; Omnes præter fauſtas Imprecationes, quibus ſæpe eſt tuæ Celſitudini adclamatum, primum Deo immortales gratias ageremus, qui tuam ſublimitatem exoriri mundo voluit, ſeu ſidus aliquod proſperum hominibus & ſalutare, cujus aſpectu & Radiis hæc tua Academia & florere & diu ſervari poſſet: Deinde tue Celſitudini; quæ vultu ſereno dignata fuit, propius aſpicere & intueri.

Verum enim vero, Clariſſime Domine, multo maximam hujus læticiæ partem nobis adimit, partim fruſtrata expectatio noſtra, partim tua contempta ſpretaq; authoritas. Nam poſt exactos quadraginta dies, Cancellarius ille nondum revertitur, Anathematis (ut videtur) fulmen contemnens: quod annon peſſimo exemplo faciat, non ſolum Juventutis noſtræ, ſed Plebis etiam omnis Cantabrigienſis (nam in plebem quoq; hujus inauditæ audaciæ rumor emanavit) tua, optamus, judicet Celſitudo. Quis enim poſthac Legum, Canonumq; cenſuras reformidabit? poſtquam Clyffus Legum Doctor & Juris conſultus eadem violaſſe prudens convincatur? Quis in jus vocari, Templo & ſacris omnibus arceri, grave aliquid putabit? poſtquam Clyffus Legis Doctor, & iis armis uti ſolitus in ſibi contumaces; jam hæc omnia ſic æſtimat, ſic veretur, ſic curat, ut in ſe vibratum Anathematis telum, hactenus vel nolit, vel diſſimulet ſe ſentire. Hæc Legum Doctor & Legis peritus? Hanc Legum eſſe vim? Hoc Juris eſſe robur alios docet? Qui tuæ Celſitudinis juſſum quando tam ſpernit confidenter, quali precamur exemplo alios docet, parendum eſſe eidem? Sed ſatis eſſe arbitramur, ſublimitati tuæ ſignificaſſe, nondum rediiſſe hominem. Nunc gratias (quod inſtituimus facere) agamus Celſitudini tuæ, quæ in preſenti Cauſa noſtra, pluſquam optare auſi fuimus, propitia & facilis obviaq; petitionibus noſtris, etiam jubeat nos, majora de tua bonitate nobis ſperare, ſi modo univerſis reſtiterimus Erroribus, quibus hodie non leviter mundus concutitur. Id quod ut intelligat ſublimitas tua, & nobis ſumme in votis ſemper fuiſſe, & eſſe hodie vel hoc magis, quia tua Celſitudo quam religioſe ſequemur, nos dignatur admonere, præter alia, quæ nos jam inter nos & agitamus & molimur remedia; unum iſtud non leve Momentum habere credimus, ad eiuſmodi in perpetuum profligandos Errores (quod tamen, ſine tuæ Celſitudinis ope, efficere non valemus) nempe ſi Regia Indulgentia concedatur Academiæ noſtræ, tres habere Bibliopolas, homines probos atq; graves, qui Sacramento & mulcta grandi adſtringantur, nullum vel importare, vel vendere Librum, quem non prius viri aliquot abſolutæ eruditionis (quos Cenſores huic rei præficiet Academia) talem pronunciarint, ut qui tuto vendatur. Quos tum Bibliopolas, quoniam e re noſtra magis erit, Alienigenas eſſe, ſic enim conſuletur librorum pretiis, ſumme credimus neceſſarium, illa uti libertate & Immunitate gaudere, quibus Indigenæ tui fruuntur, ita Provinciali Jure donati; ut Londini aliiſq; Regni hujus Emporiis, ab exteris Negotiatorbus libros emere poſſint. Quod Votum noſtrum, Reverendiſſime D'ne, magno huic Malo, cui obviam ire & tua juſſit ſublimitas, & nos accingimur exterminium, nec minus preſidium rectis Studiis, haudquaquam (ut ſperamus) rejiciet Sereniſſimus Rex, & Princeps noſter, neq; ſuæ qualicunq; negabit Academiæ, quod omnes omnium Gentium inſigniores ſcholæ, Principum ſuorum beneficio obtinent. Verum iſtud ſi prius impetraverimus abs tua Celſitudine, facile exoratum iri confidimus Sereniſſimum Principem, qui pro rara Eruditione, ac ſtudio in bonas literas diutius repugnare minime queat, & pro ſumma erga tuam Sublimitatem Reverentia, facile annuet petitionibus noſtris, ſi ſciat eas tuæ Celſitudini placere, quam in rebus noſtris præſentiſſimam fuiſſe fatemur; Et nunc precamur, ut eadem facilitate accipiat hæc Vota noſtra, qua nuper & Vicecancellarium noſtrum acceperit & Cauſam noſtram. Nos noſtris (quod unum poſſumus) operam dabimus, Celſitudinem tuam Mundo, literis vocibuſq; commendare, & precibus Deo. Nam aliud quod tantis beneficiis rependamus, habemus nihil, preter amorem, gratitudinem,

A Letter from Sir Thomas Alen, Prieſt to George Talbot the 1ſt of that Name Earl of Shrewsbury.

Coll. N°. 29. C. 12. B. II.

PLeaſeth it your Lordſhip to underſtand, upon Monday was ſennight laſt paſt I delivered your Letter with the Examination to my Lord Cardinal at Guildford, when he commanded me to waite on him to the Court, and I followed him. The ſame time I ſhowed him they were but poore men, and did the ſame miſchance of Innocence, and of no malice, pretending to have been their rights. I followed him to the Court, and there gave attendance, and could have no anſwer. Upon Friday laſt he came from thence to Hampton Court, where he lyeth. The morrow after I beſought his Grace I might know his pleaſure, I could have no anſwer. Upon Monday laſt as he walked in the Park at Hampton Court, I beſought his Grace I might know if he would command me any ſervice, he was not content with me that I ſpoke to him. The Sunday before I delivered delivered the Letter unto him which Ralph Leech brought. I can have no anſwer to neither of both, ſo that who ſhall be a ſuitor to him may have no other buſineſs but give attendance upon his pleaſure. He that ſhall ſo do has needful to be a wiſer man than I am. I ſaw no other remedy but came away without anſwer, to rid (that is diſpatch) ſuch buſineſs in London as your Lordſhip Commanded to be done. Except I would have done as my Lord Dacres ſervant doth, who came with Letters for the King's ſervice 5 months ſince, and yet hath no anſwer. And another ſervant of the Deputy of Calis is likewiſe who came before the other to Walſingham, I heard when he anſwered them, if ye be not content to tarry my leiſure, depart when you will. this is truth. I had rather your Lordſhipp Commanded me to Rome, then deliver him Letters, and bring anſwer to the ſame, when he walks in the Parke he will ſuffer no ſervant to come nigh unto him, but commands them away as farr as one may well ſhoot an Arrow. Sir William Compton ſhewed me that my Lord Cardinal wrote to Mrs. Vernon that ſhe would accept of the King's favour, to beare his good mind to his ſervant Tirwhyt. And now hath by the means of Carew upon Thurſday laſt got the King's Letter after the ſame manner, and another to Godfrey Foliamb, to advertize, and ſhew unto her, the danger of the ſame, and alſo the King deſired her to make him anſwer in writing, and yet, as the ſaid Sir William ſheweth unto me, the King hath granted the Wardſhipp of young Mr. Vernon, and Mr. Liſter both to my Lord Cardinal. Sir Thomas Parr departed the ſame day I wrote laſt to your Lordſhipp, and Mr. Weſton hath his room of the Ward, with Mr. Lovel, and Sir Edward Dyet is Chamberlane to the Queen.—— Then follows an Account that the King intended to keep his Chriſtmas at Windſor. The Duke of Suffolk lyeth in Oxfordſhire. That Sir Weſton Brown comes not to London, and ſeveral private Affaires, and mention is made of Dr. Talbot. And that he had pay'd the Lord Conyers 50 l. and remindes the Earle of the debt of 80^{m} owing the Abbot of Weſtminſter, &c. That he hath got 3 Tunns of new Gaſcoign Wine, and deſires to know whether he will have the new or the old ſent down. That the Earl hath ordered 3 hogſheads of wine of Aleman, or Wine of Bayon, and 3 hogſheads of French white Wine ſuch as he had laſt yeare, but it was not yet come. And for Rheniſh wine it was all bad this yeare. There came 2 Veſſels of Muſcadine, which was good, the King had the one, and the Cardinal the other. This Letter is dated at Coldharbor the 25th day of November.

In another Letter from the ſaid Sir Thomas Allen Prieſt and Beedman dated at Coldharbor the 18*th day of* July, is the following Poſt-ſcript.

SIR Robert Sheffield is put into the Tower again for the Complaint he made to the King of my Lord Cardinal. Item here is 75 Couple of old Ling, Seavenſcore and 6 Couple of new Ling, and 33 Couple of Lobs.

The Cardinal's Letter to the Ambaſſadors in France.

MY Lords, I commend me unto you in right hearty manner. And by the Contents of your Letters to me addreſſed, bearing Date the 28 of Decem. N°. 39. B. II. c. 13.

Decem. I not only underſtand the good Diligence and effectual Devoir that you have done, and put you in for the Subſtantial ſolliciting and fruitful Expedition of the King's Cauſe and Matter to you committed, But alſo the great Conformity and Towardneſs of the French King in the Furtherance of the ſame; who, as it appeareth by the Writing, is right appliable to the Accompliſhment as well of the Conventions, whereunto he is bound by the Treatys as allſo to amoving all Impediments, that mought impede, or let the perfecting thereof: Manifeſtly declaring thereof not only by the Anſwer given to the Lord Ligny, but allſo by making his Submiſſion, and Oaths benevolently as a virtuous Prince; and accounting and accepting upon him the Reſtitution to be made to the King's Subjects for Deſpoyls done upon the Seas, and taking the Charge upon him for recovering of Mortaign, wherein he hath partly declared his Mind, in his loving Letters to the King's Highneſs addreſſed, but not ſo amply as your Letters purport.

Whereupon the King's Highneſs as well for the great Honours, and comfortable Cheer to you ſhewed and made, ſince your Arrival in that Ream, as for the Towardn is the ſaid King ſheweth himſelf to be of, not only in the Entertainment of firm Love and Amity between the King and him; but alſo to do unto his Grace ſuch Honour and Pleaſure as he can, His Highneſs hath now at this Time, by his right kind and loving Letters given unto him right ſpecial and cordial Thanks, like as by a Copy of his ſaid Letters here incloſed, you ſhall perceive more at Length. And well aſſured you may be, the King's Highneſs upon Sight of theſe your ſaid Letters, not only much commended your great Diligence, and provident Dexterity, in the wiſe conducing of theſe his weighty Matters, whereby you have deſerved his ſingular Favour and Thanks, but alſo took great Rejoycing Conſolation and Comfort, in this honourable, princely, and loving Demeanor of the ſaid French King: Having good Hope and Confidence, that by this his Conſtant Dealing at the Beginning, the Amity and Alliance to the great Comfort of their Friends, and Diſcomfort of their Enemies, honourably and kindly commenced and begun between them, ſhall not only proceed from good to better, but allſo finally attain the deſired End, and univerſal Weal of all Chriſtendome.

And as touching the King's Mind and Pleaſure in the Difficulties touched in your former Letters, concerning the Qualities of the Hoſtages, I doubt not, but ye have perfect Knowledge by the King's Letters, to you lately ſent, containing ample Inſtructions, how to order your ſelves in ſo great a Matter, as that is; not doubting but that after your accuſtomed wiſe and provident manner, you will ſo circumſpectly order yourſelves therein, that the beſt Hoſtages as may poſſibly be gotten, may be had. Or at the leaſt the final Reſolution of the King's ſaid Letters, ſhall be attained; wherein, as heartily, as I can, I require, and inſtantly deſire you to apply yourſelves with all Effect. For to this Point all other Princes take ſpecial Regard; whereupon not only dependeth the ſurety of the Conventions, but alſo the ſtopping of diſhonourable Bruits, which by Acceptation of inſufficient Hoſtages might be ſpread over all, which is more to be pondered, than the Importance of Tournay, or any other Thing thereupon depending.

And as unto the perſonal meeting of both Princes, the viewing of the Place, and Appointing the Number to come with the ſaid Princes; in mine Opinion, ye have taken a right ſubſtantial and diſcrete Way; praying you effectually to follow the ſame, allways foreſeeing, that the Number be not too great, in avoiding ſundry Incommodes and Inconveniences, that might follow thereof, as I doubt not, you can right well conſider.

Finally, as touching the monthly Wages appointed to the Soldiers of Tournay after their Diſcharge to be payed at their Arrival in Dover; foraſmuch, as ye my Lord Chamberlayn for ſundry Cauſes and Conſiderations, and eſpecially for ſuch payments of Debts as be owing by many of the ſaid Soldiers in Tournay.——

AUditum audivi de me peſſimum, beatiſſime Pater; quo intelligo, quoſdam amicos feciſſe nomen meum graviſſime coram te & tuis fœtere, ut qui auctoritatem & poteſtatem Clavium & ſummi Pontificii minuere molitus ſim. Inde hæreticus, apoſtata, perfidus, & tercentis nominibus, imo ignominijs accuſor. Horrent aures & ſtupent oculi: Sed unicum ſtat fiduciæ preſidium, innocens & quieta conſcientia. Nec nova audio, talibus enim inſignibus & in noſtra Regione me ornaverunt homines iſti honeſtiſſimi & veraces, id eſt, peſſime ſibi conſcii; qui ſua portenta mihi conantur imponere, & mea ignominia, ſuas ignominias glorificare. Sed rem ipſam, beatiſſime Pater, digneris audire ex me infante & inculto. Coll. Nº. 43. l. 2. c. 13.

Cœpit apud nos diebis proximis prædicari Jubileus ille Indulgentiarum Apoſtolicarum, profecitq; adeo, ut præcones illius, ſub tui nominis terrore, omnia ſibi licere putantes, impiiſſima hæreticaq; palam auderent docere, in graviſſimum ſcandalum & ludibrium Eccleſiaſticæ poteſtatis, ac ſi Decretales de abuſionibus quæſtorum nihil ad eos pertinerent; Nec contenti, quod liberrimis verbis hæc ſua venena diffunderent, inſuper Libellos ediderunt, & in vulgus ſparſerunt. In quibus, ut taceam inſatiabilem & inauditam avaritiam, quam ſinguli pene apices olent craſſiſſime, eadem illa impia & Hæretica ſtatuerunt, & ita ſtatuerunt ut confeſſores juramento adigerent, quo hæc ipſa fideliſſime inſtantiſſimeq; populo inculcarent. Vera dico, nec eſt, quo abſcondant a calore hoc. Extant libelli, nec poſſunt negare. Agebantur tum illa proſpere, & exagitantur populi falſis ſpebus, & ut Propheta ait, carnem deſuper oſſibus eorum tollebant. Ipſi vero pinguiſſime & ſuaviſſime interim paſcebantur. Unum erat, quo ſcandala ſedabant, ſcilicet terror nominis tui, ignis comminatio, & Hæretici nominis opprobrium. Hæc enim incredibile eſt, quam propenſi ſint intentare, quandoq; etiam ſi in meris opinioſiſq; nugis ſuis contradictionem ſenſerint, ſi tamen hoc eſt ſcandala ſedare, ac non potius mera tyrannide, ſchiſmata & ſeditiones tandem ſuſcitare.

Verum nihilominus crebreſcebant fabulæ per tabernas de avaritia ſacerdotum, detrectationeſq; Clavium, ſummiq; Pont. ut teſtis eſt vox totius hujus terræ. Ego ſane (ut fateor) pro zelo Chriſti, ſicuti mihi videbar, aut ſi ita placet, pro juvenili calore urebar, nec tamen meum eſſe videbam, in ijs quicquam ſtatuere aut facere. Proinde monui privatim aliquot magnates Eccleſiarum. Hic ab alijs acceptabar, alijs ridiculum, alijs aliud videbar, prævalebat enim nominis tui terror, & cenſurarum intentio. Tandem cum nihil poſſem aliud, viſum eſt, ſaltem leviuſcule illis reluctari, id eſt eorum Dogmata in dubium & Diſputationem vocare. Itaq; Schedulam diſputatoriam edidi invitans tantum Doctiores, ſi qui velint mecum diſceptare ſicut manifeſtum eſt, etiam Adverſarijs opportet, ex prefatione ejuſdem Diſceptationis * * * * * *

Coll. N°. 44. Rym. Conv. Ex Origine. T. 13. p. 736.

" LEO, Biſhop, Servant of the Servants of God to our moſt dearly beloved " Son in Chriſt Henry King of England, Defender of the Faith, prayeth " Health and Apoſtolical Benediction. We, who by divine Appointment, " tho' unequal to ſo great a Charge, do preſide in the Government of the Uni- " verſal Church, have made it the conſtant Subject of our Meditations, how

" the Catholick Faith, without which Men are excluded the Means of being " Saved, may flouriſh, and continually encreaſe under our Adminiſtration.
" And we do likewiſe exert our Selves with all Zeal and Vigilance, to the End,
" ſuch Diſpoſitions, as are made, by the faithful, eſpecially thoſe, who are diſtin-
" guiſhed with the Royal Authority towards reſtraining perſons, that endea" vour to depretiate the Faith, or by wicked Fictions and Calumnies to corrupt
" it, may be render'd ſtill more and more Subſervient to their proper and in" tended Effect. And as other Biſhops of Rome, our Predeceſſors, according to " the Exigency of Affairs, or Circumſtances of Time, have thought it incum" bent on them to confer ſpecial Favours on Princes in the Communion of the " Catholick Church eſpecially on ſuch of them, who in Times of Difficulty or " Danger, or when Schiſm and Hereſy have raged with the greateſt Violence, " did not only in the Points of Doctrine and Worſhip inviolably adhere to the " Romiſh Church, but as true and legitimate Children of that Church, and as " reſolute Champions in her Defence, have ſtrenuouſly oppoſed all the At" tempts of her Enemys by employing both rational Arguments, and Tempo" ral Force againſt them. So we, following their Example, in acknowledge" ment of thoſe great and immortal Benefits, which your Majeſty hath confer" red on us, and on this holy See, wherein by divine Providence we ſit, deſire
" to extoll and perpetuate the Memory of them, with condign Praiſes; and to " give your Majeſty thoſe Teſtimonys of our Regard, by which your Zeal " may be ſtill incited, and rendered more vigilant, towards driving away the " Wolves from our Lord's Sheep, and that an Inciſion may be made with the " material Sword of ſuch putrid and corrupted Members, whereby others may " be infected, and the Hearts of thoſe confirmed in Soundneſs of Faith, who " have believed, but whoſe Belief hath yet been leſs firm and ſettled. Now,
" whereas, lately our beloved Son John Clark, your Majeſty's Ambaſſador with " us, did in our Conſiſtory before the venerable College of Cardinals, our Bre" thren, of the holy Roman Church with many other Prelates of the ſame,
" preſent a Book, in order to be examined by us, and to receive our Approba" tion, which Book your Majeſty, inflamed with an active and always well " regulated Charity, with Zeal for the Catholick Faith, and with a ſpecial De" votion towards us and the holy See, hath compoſed as a ſoveraign and whol" ſome Antidote againſt the Errors of divers Hereticks, which have been for" merly condemned by the Authority of the holy See, and of late revived by " Martyn Luther. And when the ſaid Ambaſſadour had repreſented to us in an " elegant Oration, that as your Majeſty had refuted the flagrant Errors of Lu- " ther by clear and irrefragable Arguments, ſupported both by the Authority " of the holy Scriptures, and of the Fathers; So your Majeſty was determi" ned to employ your Royal Authority and the ſecular Arm, to proſecute all " ſuch, as ſhould preſume to follow or defend thoſe Errors. And when we had " accurately and with great Care peruſed the ſaid Book, and conſidered the ad" mirable Contents of it, every where watered with the Dew of celeſtial
" Grace, we rendered our moſt thankful acknowledgements to Allmighty God,
" from whom every good and perfect Gift doth come, that he had vouchſafed
" ſo to inſpire your Mind diſpoſed to every Thing that is good, and to infuſe
" ſo great Grace into it, as to qualify you to write in a manner, whereby you " are able to vindicate his holy Faith, againſt this Reviver of old and con" demned Errors, and may further excite by your Example other Kings and " Chriſtian Princes to a generous Æmulation, that they ſhall alſo be inclined " to protect and defend with all their Aid, on every Occaſion the Orthodox " Faith, and the Evangelical Truth at this time, in ſo great peril and danger.
" Now, thinking it highly requiſite, that they who have laboured ſo piouſly
" in Defence of the Truth of Chriſt, ſhould be rewarded with all due Praiſe
" and Honour; and being deſirous, not only, that thoſe Things, which your
" Majeſty hath written againſt Luther, with equal Force of Argumentation " and Eloquence, ſhould be Celebrated after the moſt honorary Manner, and " receive our Solemn and moſt authentick Approbation, but alſo that your " Majeſty may be graced and diſtinguiſhed by ſuch a Title of Honour, that all " the Faithful both in our own, and in all ſuccceding Ages may underſtand,
" how acceptable and engaging this Preſent of your Majeſty is to us, and eſpe-
" cially at this Conjuncture: We who are the true Succeſſor of Peter, whom
" Chriſt, when he aſcended into Heaven, left his Vicar upon Earth, and to " whom he committed the Care of his Flock; We, I ſay, who ſit in this holy " Seat, from which all Titles and Dignitys have their Origin, do, upon ma- " ture Conſultation had with our Brethren upon this Occaſion, and with their " unanimous Conſent and Approbation, decree to grant your Majeſty this " Title, Defender of the Faith; And accordingly by theſe preſents, do " actually confer that Title upon your Majeſty, commanding all the " Faithful, to aſcribe this Title to your Majeſty, and whenever they " write to your Majeſty, after the Word King, to add, Defender of the Faith. " And, in Truth, the Excellency and Dignity of this Title, and your Ma- " jeſty's perſonal and extraordinary Merits being conſidered, no Title could " have been thought of more proper, or more worthy to be aſcribed to your " Majeſty; which ſo often as you ſhall hear or read, you ſhall be reminded of " the Virtues and good Qualities, in Regard to which it was given. Neither " will your Majeſty hereby become elated with any Motions of pride, but ra- " ther according to your uſual prudence, be more humble, more ſtrengthened, " and confirmed in the Faith of Chriſt, and in your Zeal for the holy See, " from which this Honour was derived; accounting it Matter of all thankful " and pious Joy in God, the Author of every good Gift, that you ſhall leave " this perpetual ſtanding Monument of Glory to your Poſterity, and ſhew to " them, if they deſerve to merit the ſame Title, they muſt ſeek to attain it, " by the ſame method, and in following the excellent precedent, which your " Majeſty has ſet before them. To whom, as having ſo highly deſerved of us, " and of the holy See, together with your Wife and all your Children, or the " Children which may deſcend from them, we give, in the moſt full and ample " manner, our Benediction, in his Name, from whom, the Power of giving it " is derived; praying, and beſeeching the moſt high God, who ſaith, By me " Kings Reign, and Princes Rule, and in whoſe Hand are all the Hearts of Kings, " that he would confirm your Majeſty in your pious Reſolutions; that he " would encreaſe your Devotion; and render you ſo renowned for your great " and worthy Endeavours in the Cauſe of Religion, and your Virtue ſo con- " ſpicuous to the whole World, that the Teſtimony which we have given of " you, in adorning you with ſo excellent a Title, may never be thought to have " proceeded from any inſignificant or unjuſt Cauſe. Finally, we pray God, " that after the Courſe of this your mortal Life is ended, He may make you a " Partaker of his eternal Glory.

Given at Rome at St. Peter's 1521. the fifth of the Ides of Octob. and in the ninth year of our pontificate.

Coll. N°. 47. C. 21. B. II. Str. Eccleſ. Mem.

'SIR, I perceived by ſuch Writings as lately came to my Hand from your 'Secretary, that your Grace hath received three or four Letters from me, 'of ſundrie Datys. And faraſimuch as in ſome of them, nothing was contained 'but only News, it is not thought requiſite any ſpecial Anſwer to be made 'thereunto, but only your Gracious Thanks to me to be given. Which I would 'be right and glad to deſerve, by all the Induſtry, Labour and Policy, that 'I can uſe,

'And, Sir, as touching thoſe News, which at that Time were written by 'your Ambaſſador, Sir William Fitz-Williams, touching the Promiſe made by 'the French King, on his Honour, that he would give Battail to the Emperor's 'Army within brief Time; I think verily, that your ſaid Ambaſſador, as 'a faithful Gentleman, reported no leſs than the French King ſpake; howbeit, 'by the Contents, as well of ſuch other Letters as I have received this Day 'from your ſaid Ambaſſador, as by the News comen from the Emperor to his 'Heir, encloſed, your Grace ſhall well perceive, that nother the French King 'is in ſuch a Readineſs within ſo brief Time to give Battel, though he promiſed 'on his Honour ſo to do; ne yet, that the News written on either Party, be ſo 'true, that firm Credence oweth at all Times to be geven unto them. Never'theleſs, by provident Foreſight, more Credence is to be geven to Writings of 'ſuch as moſt commonly make true Reports, than of others, which accuſtoma'bly uſe to contrive News upon untrue Grounds, for the Advancement of their 'own Affairs. Whereunto your Grace having good Experience, as well in 'times paſt, as by the Experience now occurrent, can beſt judge: Eſpecially when 'the Loſs and Damages of the French King be by him Cauſeleſs to your Grace 'arrected. So that I ſuppoſe neither this cruel Battle is ſo neer Hand, ne yet 'ſuch Reports, though they be ſpoken upon his Honour, be always to be 'believed.

'Over this, Sir, whereas your Grace, foreſeeing the Daungers, Damages, 'Loſſes and Prejudice, that might enſue to your Navy, and the Subjects of 'your Realm, if, in this ſuſpect and caſual Time, they ſhould reſort to Bur- 'deaux for this Vintage, like as they have been accuſtomably uſed to do here- 'tofore; deſired and commanded me to declare unto you my poor Advice and 'Opinion, what was moſt expedient to be done therein; I calling unto me the 'whole Number of ſuch your Counſillors as be here with me, after long Rea- 'ſoning, and debating of the ſaid Matter, finall concluded by one Aſſent, that 'ſuch Remedies as were expreſſed in my Letter then to your Grace ſent, were 'moſt covenable Proviſions, to remedy the ſaid Daunger, Loſs and Damage. 'And ſurely, Sir, if by our Wits and Intendments, better Remedies could have 'been foreſeen, the ſame ſhould have been notified, and intimated unto you. 'But inaſmuch as your Grace pondereth the Daunger and Caſualties that may 'enſue, by reparing of your Navy and Subjects to Burdeaux, that you count 'none Aſſurance by Treaties, Plakards, Proclamations or Articles, to be con- 'firmed by the Princes on all Parties, to ſuffice for that Indempnity, and pre- 'ſuppoſe ſuch Writings and Promiſes to be fraudulent and evaſive Allectives, 'to bring your ſaid Navy and Subjects in Daunger. Thinking alſo, that the 'ſending of a convenient Number of your ſmall Ships to Burdeaux, or Livorna, 'to be given for bringing Gaſcoin Wines into your Realms, ſhould raiſe a Mur- 'mur among your Subjects, &c.

'The Cardinal's other Letter to the King, concerning the Ships of the Mer- chants, and his own, going into France, was more full, having conferred with the French King's Chancellor, then at Calais, about theſe Matters: Prefacing his Letter with great Obſervance towards his Majeſty:

Another Letter of the Cardinal to the King, about the Danger of his Ships.

'SIR, Whereas your Grace, moſt prudently and providently conſidering the 'imminent Dangers that may iſſue, as well by taking of your Navy and 'Subjects, with ſuch Goods and Subſtance as they have, and ſhall bring with 'them to Burdeux, if they ſhould thither repair this Year for Vintage, as they 'have been heretofore accuſtomably uſed to do; as alſo pondering the Suſpi- 'cion that might be impreſt in the French King's Mind, by the abſtaining of 'your ſaid Navy and Subjects from thence: Which Jealouſy might percaſe 'cauſe him to reſtrain and ſtop your Penſion, payable unto you within brief 'Time; Yee not only deſire me maturely to debate and conſider what is beſt to 'be done therein, but alſo to advertiſe your Grace with Diligence, of my poor 'Advice and Opinion upon the ſame, like as in your Secretary's Letters by 'your Commandments unto me addreſs'd, it is contained more at Length.

'Sir, When I groundly conſidered your provident Forecaſt, as well for the 'Conſervation of your Navy from Damage, as the Princely Zele that yee bear, 'to preſerve your Subjects, and their Goods, with the ſubſtantial Regard that 'yee take to your Honour and Surety, in foreſeeing Politickly before Hand, 'the Daunger and Damages that in this Suſpect Time, may enſue to your 'Highneſs, your Realm and Subjects; it is unto me one of the ſingular Con- 'ſolations and Comforts that ever I had: Whereby I evidently perceive, that 'no Man can more groundly conſider the Politick Governance of your ſaid 'Realm, ne more aſſuredly look to the Preſervation thereof, than Yee your 'ſelf. And therefore, though your Grace of your Goodneſs require my poor 'Advice, yet well aſſured I am, Ye can better provide Remedy for the ſame, 'than I can imagine, or deviſe.

'Nevertheleſs, to accompliſh your Noble Pleaſure and Commandment, I 'ſhall declare my poor Opinion, though remitting always the ſame to your 'Reformation and Correction.

'And firſt, Sir, albeit I ſuppoſe and think, that the French King troubled 'and infeſted with ſo many [Enemies] and Armies on every Side, as well 'within his own Realm, as in the Dutchy of Milain, and upon the [Borders] 'of Navarr, will be well ware, how he attempt any thing, either by Land or 'Sea, whereby he ſhould give Occaſion to provoke you to break with him, and join

‘ join with any of his Enemies: By Means whereof he might fall to many Daun‘ gers: Yet upon that Ground will I not take my Foundation: Tho' this Day the ‘ Chancellor of France, after he had Dined with me alone, without any of his ‘ Collegues, declared expreſly, that not only the King, his Maſter, hath in you
‘ his moſt Affiance, before all other Princes, but alſo plainly ſhewed, that ‘ though ſuch Advice and Counſel, as I in your Name, and as your Lieute‘ nant, ſhould ſhew unto him, for the firm Entertainment of the good Amity ‘ between your Grace and him, he had Commandment to be conformable; and ‘ that both his ſaid Maſter, and he, was as good Engliſh, as any of your Sub‘ jects; like as it ſhould be well known, by his favourable entertaining of ‘ your Subjects, repairing to any of the Dominions under the Obeiſance of his ‘ ſaid Maſter. Whereby it appeareth, that as yet, for any Bruits they have ‘ no maner Suſpicion.

‘ Nevertheleſs, for the aſſured remedying of the doubtful Daungers by your ‘ Grace foreſeen, and remembred, I thought not moſt Surety, to lean only to ‘ Words, unleſs the ſame were corroborate by available Bands and Writings.
‘ Wherefore, beſides other Remedies, which I ſhall hereafter particularly ‘ declare in this my Letter, I have taken this Order with the ſaid Chancellor ‘ of France.

‘ Firſt, Foraſmuch as Complaints be here daily made by your Subjects, of ‘ ſuch Depredations as be committed upon them by the French Men, which is ‘ manifeſtly proved before the ſaid Chancellor, and not only no Redreſs made ‘ to ſome of your Subjects upon the ſame, but alſo divers Ships have been re‘ ſcued from them; whereof one, with certain French Men apprized there-
‘ of, arrived here in your Haven this Day; I have therefore upon thoſe ‘ Grounds, without ſpeaking of the Matter of Burdeux, cauſed the ſaid Chan‘ cellor to determine, that Proclamations be made throughout the Realm of ‘ France and Britain, upon the Sea Coaſts, that no Man, under Pain of Death, ‘ ſhall Enterprize to take any Engliſh Ships, or Engliſh Mens Goods; but that ‘ all Engliſh, both by Land, Sea, and freſh Water, ſhall have as free Courſe in ‘ Surety to paſs, remain, and return at their Liberty, as ever they had hereto‘ fore in the Dominions of the ſaid French King.

‘ I have alſo moved the ſaid Chancellor to write to the King, his Maſter, ‘ that over and beſide the ſaid Proclamations, an open Placard, Signed and ‘ Sealed by the ſaid French King, ſhall be made, and deliver'd to your Grace; ‘ making Aſſurance to all and ſingular your Subjects, repairing to Burdeux, or ‘ any other his Dominions under his Obeiſance by Sea or Land, that they, and ‘ every of them, ſhall not only be favourably entertained, but alſo ſuffered ‘ ſafely to return with their Ships, Goods and Merchandizes, according to the ‘ Treaties, without any Trouble or Vexation to any your ſaid Subjects. To ‘ the granting and Expedition of which open Placard, I find the ſaid Chan‘ cellor right agreeable. And albeit the French King be bound hereunto by ‘ Treaty, yet, if contrary to the ſame Treaty, Proclamations, and Placards, ‘ they ſhall attempt any Thing againſt your Subjects, it may be more grie-‘ vouſly arrected unto the ſaid French King's Charge, when ye ſhall make your ‘ Declaration againſt him.

‘ And, Sir, during our Abode at this Diet, having the Chancellor of France ‘ here, they ſhall not dare to Enterprize any Thing at Burdeux againſt the ‘ Goods or Ships of any Subject of your Realm. And a Treux or Abſtinence
‘ of War being taken by the [Commiſſioners] of this Diet, as I truſt it ſhall ‘ be, then Hoſtility ſhall ceaſe on all Parts, during the Treux. Whereby your ‘ Navy and Ships ſhall be in Surety.

‘ And yet, Sir, for an habundaunt Cautele for the Safeguard of your Ships
‘ and Navy, repairing this Year to Burdeux, I have deviſed Three Ways.
‘ Whereof the firſt is, That Proviſion by your Grace ſhould be made in your ‘ Ports, that no Ship above the Portage of an Hundred, or Six Score, ſhould
‘ paſs Burdeaux this Year, and that no Multitude of Ships ſhould Conſort there ‘ together, and at once; but ſuch a convenient Number as ye ſhall think good; ‘ ſuffering them firſt to return, for Knowledge, how they have ſped, be‘ fore any mo Ships be ſent forth. By which Means, not only the great ‘ Ships of your Realm ſhall be in Safety, but alſo the moſt Part of your Navy ‘ conſerved from Danger.

The

'The Second Remedy is this, that in caſe it may like your Grace, not only 'to Licence your Subjects to bring their Wines upon Strangers Bottoms, but 'alſo give Liberty to the French Men, and Britons, to bring Gaſcoin Wines to 'your Realms upon their proper Ships; ye ſhould not only have right great 'Plenty of Wines at better Prizes than it hath been accuſtomed to be ſold 'heretofore, with the Augmentation of your Cuſtoms, but alſo relieve Flan- 'ders, and the Emperor's Countries with Wines; whereby during the Wars, 'they ſhall be deſtitute, if they be not relieved by your Means. And beſides 'that, Sir, there ſhall ſo many French and Britons Ships reſort to your Realm, 'under Colour of your ſaid Licence and Liberty, that ye ſhall always have a 'good Counter Security and Paine, to take their Ships, if they wol any Thing 'Enterprize againſt you.

'Finally, Sir, among other Devices and Capitulations, that we be now in 'making for the [Safety] and Surety of the Fiſhers, as well of Flanders, as of 'France, during this Herring Time, I [do intend] beſide the foreſaid Proviſions 'for the Safeguard of the Navy, to deviſe the Articles to be concluded by the 'mutual Conſent of both Parties; that not only your Subjects, with their 'Ships, Goods and Merchandizes, ſhall ſurely and ſafly paſs and repaſs through 'all Harbours under the Dominion of the Emperor and French King; but alſo, 'that no maner of Ships, Srrangers or others, ſhall be taken within their 'Streamys. By which Articles, the Liberty of your Stremys and Territories 'of the Sea ſhall be more largely extended, and amplified, as well by the Em- 'peror's, as the French King's expreſs Conſents, by ſpecial Articles, than ever 'it was before. Which Articles alſo ſhall be a high Remedy for the Preſerva- 'tion of your Navy, and free Liberty to be given thereby unto them, freely 'to paſs and repaſs to all Coaſts and Countries under the Dominions and Obei- 'ſances of the ſaid Princes, without Damage.

But ſoon after this Letter of the Cardinal's to the King, wherein he laid down ſuch a Politick Scheme to be had with the Commiſſioners of the other King, to preſerve the King's and Merchants Ships, and the Trade to Bourdeaux; there were Letters ſent from Court to him, of great Spoil notwithſtanding done by the French to ſome Engliſh Ships. Which occaſioned another Letter from the Cardinal to the King, who now much required, and depended upon his Judgement. Therein alſo he gave his Majeſty his Thoughts about the Seiz- ing theſe Ships; and alſo about Entring into another Truce with the French King, when as yet no open Rupture of the Amity was made; tho' there appeared too much tending thereto; and the King's Ambaſſadors at the French Court were not well uſed. And whereas Advice was taken, about deferring the ſending of Ships to Bourdeaux for ſome Time longer, till the latter Vintage; when there might be a Likelihood of ſafer Sailing; the Cardinal ſhewed his Reaſon, why he was againſt it. Becauſe, in all Probability, there would more Jealouſies ariſe upon the Emperor's coming into England, which was intended to be about that Time. Of all theſe Matters, thus the Cardinal ſhewed his Mind in his next Letter; after ſome Lines, thus proceeding:

The Cardinal to the King on this Occaſion.

'AND whereas your Grace doubteth not, but that I, with your Council 'here, [at Calais] had had ſo large Knowledge of the Damage of your 'Subjects, being daily deſpoiled on Sea, as ye have advertiſed me, ſince both 'I and they would have agreed with your Grace in one Opinion; Sir, Truth 'it is, that I had certain Knowledge of ſundry Deſpoils done upon the Sea by 'French Men, before I advertiſed your Grace of my ſaid poor Anſwer and Opi- 'nion for this Burdeux Voiage. Which, upon their Complaints, had good 'Redreſs and Reſtitution: Whereby I was moved to have the better Truſt. 'And ſince that Time, I received another Letter from your Secretary; where- 'in he writeth, that two Hulks, wherein were certain Goods appertaining to 'Engliſh Men, were lately taken by French Men; the one being conveyed to 'Boleyn, and the other to Frith in Scotland.

'And as touching the Hulk conveyed to Boleyn, ſurmiſed to appertain to 'Birch, wherein one Roch of London pretendeth to have Goods; I have cauſed 'ſome of your Council here, to hear the Complaints of the ſaid Roch. And

'albeit

'albeit the ſaid Roch neither can, ne will juſtify the ſaid Hulk to appertain to 'Birch, yet he challengeth certain Goods in her, whereof I doubt not, he ſhall have
'Reſtitution, if he can duely prove them to be his. And as unto the other Hulk
'carried into Scotland, I ſee no Remedy, but Letters to be deviſed and ſped by 'your Grace, to be ſent to the Council of Scotland, by the Parties dampnified,
'there to purſue for Reſtitution. And if they be French Men that have ta'ken the Goods, then a Certificate to be made, of their Names and Dwelling
'Places, with a Specialty of the Goods taken, I ſhall endeavour my ſelf with
'the Chancellor of France, for Reſtitution to be made according to Juſtice.
'And this, in effect, be all the Deſpoils that I know newly done. Howbeit
'ſome other Purſuits have been made here, for Redreſs of Depredations done
'upon the Sea about Midſummer, and before: Which ſhall alſo be remedied in 'the Countries, where the Offenders dwell. For which Purpoſe, Letters be 'delivered by the Chancellor to the Parties Complainants.

'This, Sir, like as we heretofore conformed our Opinions and Mind touch'ing the Voiage of Burdeux, to your high Pleſure, ſo we eftſones remit the
'ſame to your great Wiſdom.

'And, Sir, to enquire of the French Men, why they take the Eaſterlings
'Hulks, it appertaineth not to me, as your Lieutenant. For if they will pre'tend Inimity to be betwixt the Merchants of Danske and them, your Grace
'may not conveniently let the ſame: Howbeit to reſtore your Subjects Goods
'being in them, I have and woll ſpeak accordingly.

'And whereas your Secretary further writeth, that this firſt Vintage may be 'further reſpited and deferred, upon good Grounds, without Diſtruſt or Jealou-
'ſy, by Declaration of this manifold Deſpolys, and cruel Intreaty of your 'Subjects upon the Sea, as well by French Men, as Spaniards; by reaſon where-
'of it may be ſaid, they abſtain from the ſaid Venture; like as to good Policy
'it appertaineth, for the Servation of themſelves, and Surety of their Goods;
'I think the ſame full good and reaſonable Conſiderations, if they take it
'well: Howbeit to defer that Voyage to the latter Vintage at Candlemas, ſo
'that by Vertue of a Treux to be taken here, they may then reſort thidder in 'Surety; Sir, under your Favour and Correction, your ſaid Subjects ſhall be in 'more Danger, going, than now: For if ſome Suſpicion and Diſtruſt be taken
'now by the French King, as your Grace judgeth by the ſtrange Entreaty of 'your Ambaſſador, it is to be ſuppoſed, that by that Time it ſhall be further
'ſpread and encreaſed. And ſo I ſay, that if the Treaty, not yet declared
'broken, the Placard, Safe Conduct, and all the other Remedies before touch'ed, cannot now ſtand in ſtead; then the Abſtention of War, which may be 'as ſoon broken, if there be no Truſe, as all the other Aſſurance, cannot then
'prevail; eſpecially conſidering this Amity ſtanding yet unbroken betwixt
'you and the French King, no Treux can be taken betwixt you and him. For 'taking of a Treux, pre-ſuppoſeth Rupture of Amity. And therefore this
'Treux muſt be only taken betwixt the Emperor and the French King, for the 'Indemnity of their Subjects: Which cannot help your Subjects. In Conſide-
'ration whereof, theſe Remedies now provided, may better ſerve at this Time,
'than the Abſtinence of War then, and eſpecially the Safe Conduct, comprized
'in the Placard for all your Subjects reſorting to France. Which is an 'aboundant Cautele; tho' the ſame, ſtanding the Amity, needed not.

'Sir, if Princes accuſtomably obſerved their Safe Conducts to their Enemies
'in Time of open War, it is to be ſuppoſed they will not break it, ſtanding
'the Colour of Peace and Amity.

'And on the other ſide, the Second Vintage is commonly in February, about
'the Purification of our Lady: In which Month it is included by Treaty, that 'the Emperor ſhall be with you in England: And then the Diſtruſt and Jea-
'louſy ſhall be more largely impreſt in the French Mens Minds, than it is 'now. And albeit your Subjects may then go ſurely without Impeachment, 'yet it were not poſſible to bring Wine of the Second Vintage, to ſerve the 'Emperor at his coming into your Realms.

'And whereas it is further written, that by this Treaty taken with the Em'peror, it is ſufficiently provided for the Indempnity in the Penſion of France
'to be paid by the Emperor, if the French King refuſe to pay the ſame: Sir,
'the Matter dependeth upon your Declaration. And therefore, good it were 'to ſave the next Payment to be made by the French King, if it might conve'niently be.

'And whereas it is alledged, that my Doubt is ſolved by mine own Wri'ting; whereas I ſuppoſe the French King ſhall not provoke your Enemity,
'but conſerve your Amity; Sir, if my Letter be well regarded, I writ that 'only conditionally, unleſs he be driven thereunto by Diſtruſt and Diffidence;
'and ſo that Doubt remaineth not unabſolved.

SIR, it may like your Grace to underſtonde that enſuing the Tenour of my Letters ſent unto your highnes yeſterday I have deviſed ſuch Commiſſions and Lettres to be ſent unto your Councellors the Biſhop of Bath and Richard Pace and Maſter Thomas Hanniball jointly and ſeverally as at the laſt time of vacation of the papal dignitie were delivered unto the ſaid Maſter Richard Pace for the Preferrement either of me (or that failing) of the Cardinal de medicis unto the ſame which Lettres and Commiſſions if it ſtonde with your gracious pleaſure to have that matter ſet further it may like your Highneſs of your benigne Grace and Goodneſs to ſigne, ſo to be ſent to the Courte of Rome in ſuch diligence diligence as the Importance of the ſame with the brevitie of the tyme doth neceſſarily require and to the intente alſo that th' Emperor may the more effectually and ſpedely concur with your highnes for the furtherance thereof. Albeit I ſuppoſe verely that enſuying the Conferences and Communications which he hath had with your Grace in that behalf he hath not pretermitted before this Tyme to avaunce the ſame, yet neverthelefs for the more acceleration of his Furtherance to be gyven thereunto I have alſo deviſed a Familiar Lettre in the Name of your Grace to be directed unto his Majeſtie which if it may pleaſe your Highneſs to take the payne for to note with your own hand putting thereunto your ſecrete ſigne and mark beyng between your Grace and the ſaid Emperour ſhall undoubtedly do ſingular benefice and Furtherance, to your gracious intent and vertuous purpoſe in that behalf beſeechyng Almighty God that ſuch Effect may enſue therof as may be to his pleaſure, the Contentation of your Highneſs the Weale and exaltation of your moſt royal Eſtate, Realme, and Affairs, and however the matters ſhall chaunce, I ſhall no leſſe knowledge my ſelf bounden fere above any my deſerts unto your Highneſs then if I had attayned the ſame whereunto I would never in thought aſpire, but to do honor, good, and ſervice unto your noble perſon and this your Realm, and thus Jeſu preſerve your moſt noble and Royal Eſtate. SIR, after my moſt humble and lowly Recommendations this ſhall be only to advertiſe your Highnes that after grete and long altercation and contrarietie which hath depended between the Cardinallis in the Conclave they at the laſt reſolved fully and determined (the Faction of Francc abandoned) to Elect and chooſe either my Lord Cardinall de Medicis, or me, which deliberation comyng to the knowledge of the Nobles and Citizens of Rome they alledging that the Affairs of Italy being in the Trayne as they then were (it ſhould be to the extreme danger thereof to chooſe a Perſon abſent) made ſundry greate acclamations at the Conclave Windowe whereby the Cardinalls beyng in fear not only of the Inconvenience like to inſue unto Italy but alſo of their own perſons albeit they were in manner principally bent upon me yet for eſchewing the ſaid Danger and murmur by inſpiration of the holy Goſte without further difficulty of buſynes the xixth Day of the laſt month in the morning Elected and chooſe the ſaid Cardinall de medicis who immediately was publiſhed Pope and hath taken the Name of Clement viith, of which good and fortunate News Sir your Highnes hath moche cauſe to thank Allmyghty God. For as moche as not onely he is a parfite Friend and faithful to the ſame but that alſo moche the rather by your means he hath attayned to this and for my parte as I take God to Record I am more Joyous thereof than if it had fortuned upon my perſon knowing his excellent Qualities moſt mete for the ſame And how greate and ſure a Friend your Grace and th' Emperor be like to have of him, and I ſo good a Father, by whoſe aſſumption unto that dignitie not only your and the ſaid Emperor's Affairs but alſo all Chriſtendome ſhall undoubtedly come to moche better and more proſperous perfection, like as upon the firſt knowledge thereof the Frenchmen be all ready departed from Myllayn and paſſed a River towards France called Tycino truſting that the next News which ſhall come from thence ſhall be of their arrival at home, wherein as I ſhall have further knowledge ſo I ſhall advertiſe your Highnes thereof accordingly. And thus Jehu preſerve your moſt noble and Royal Eſtate. At my poore Houſe beſides Weſtminſter. The vijth day of December by your

Cardinal Woolſey's Letter to Rome, for procuring the Popedom to himſelf, upon Pope Adrian's death.

MY Lord of Bath, Mr. Secretary, and Mr. Hannibal, I commend me unto you in my right hearty manner; letting you wit, That by Letters lately ſent unto me from you my Lord of Bath, and Mr. Hannibal, dated at Rome the 14th*th* day of September. Which Letters I incontinently ſhewed unto the King's Grace his Highneſs. And I have been advertiſed, to our great diſcomfort, That the ſaid 14*th* day, it pleaſed Almighty God to call the Pope's Holineſs unto his Infinite Mercy, whoſe Soul Jeſu pardon. News certainly unto the King's Grace and to me right heavy, and for the univerſal weal or quiet of Chriſtendom, (wherunto his Holineſs, like a devout and virtuous Father of Holy Church was very ſtudious) much diſpleaſant and contrarious; Nevertheleſs, conforming our ſelves to the Pleaſure of Almighty God, to whoſe Calling we all muſt be obedient; the Mind and Intention of the King's Highneſs, and of me both, is to put ſome helps and furtherances, as much as conveniently may be that ſuch a Succeſſor unto him may now, by the Holy College of Cardinals, be named and elected, as may, with God's Grace, perform, atchieve, and fulfil the good and vertuous Purpoſes and Intents, concerning the Pacification of Chriſtendom; whereunto our ſaid late Holy Father, as much as the brevity of the time did ſuffer, was, as it ſhould ſeem, minded and inclined; which thing, how neceſſary it is to the ſtate of Chriſt's Religion, now daily more and more declining, it is facil and eaſy to be conſider'd; and ſurely amongſt other Chriſtian Princes, there is none which as ye heretofore have perfectly underſtood, that to this purpoſe more dedicated themſelves to give Furtherance, Advice, and Counſel, than the Emperor and the King's Grace, who as well before the time of the laſt Vacation, as ſithence, by Mouth and by Letters, with Report of Ambaſſadors and otherwiſe, had many ſundry Conferences, Communications, and Devices, in that behalf. In which it hath pleaſed them, far above my merits or deſerts, of their goodneſs, to think, judg, and eſteem me to be meet and able for to aſpire unto that Dignity; perſuading, exhorting, and deſiring me, that whenſoever opportunity ſhould be given, I ſhould hearken to their Advice, Counſel, and Opinion in that behalf; and offering unto me, to interpone their Authorities, Helps and Furtherances therein to the uttermoſt. In comprobation whereof, albeit the Emperor, now being far diſtant from theſe Parts, could not, nor might in ſo brief time, give unto the King's Grace, new or freſh confirmation of his Purpoſe, Deſire, and Intent herein: Yet nevertheleſs my Lady Margaret, knowing the inclination of his mind in this ſame, hath, by a long diſcourſe made unto me ſemblable Exhortation; offering, as well on the Emperor's behalf, as on her own, that as much ſhall by them be done, to the furtherance thereof, as may be poſſible. Beſides this, both by your Letters, and alſo by particular moſt loving Letters of the Cardinal's de Medicis, Sanctorum Quatuor, & Campegius, with credence ſhow'd unto me on their behalf, by their Folks here reſident, I perceive their good and faſt minds, which they, and divers others their Friends owe unto me in that matter. And finally, the King's Highneſs doth not ceaſe, by all the gracious and comfortable means poſſible to inſiſt, that I, for manifold, notable, urgent, and great reſpects, in any wiſe ſhall conſent that his Grace and the Emperor do ſet forth the thing with their beſt manner. The Circumſtances of whoſe moſt entire, and moſt firm mind thereunto, with their bounteous, godly, and beneficial Offers for the Weal of Chriſtendom, which his Grace maketh to me herein, is too long to rehearſe. For which Cauſes, albeit I know my ſelf far unmeet and unable to ſo high a Dignity, minding rather to live and die with his Grace in this his Realm, doing Honour, Service, Good or Pleaſure to the ſame, than now (mine old days approaching) to enter into new things; yet nevertheleſs, for the great zeal and perfect mind which I have to the exaltation of the Chriſtian Faith; the honour, weal, and ſurety of the King's Grace, and the Emperor, and to do my Duty both to Almighty God and to the World, I referring every thing to God's diſpoſition and pleaſure, ſhall not pretermit to declare unto you ſuch things, as the King's Highneſs hath eſpecially willed me to ſignify unto you, on his Grace's behalf, who moſt effectually willeth and deſireth

you to ſet forth the ſame, omitting nothing that may be to the furtherance thereof, as his ſpecial truſt is in you.

Firſt, Ye ſhall underſtand, that the mind, and entire Deſire of his Highneſs, above all earthly things, is, That I ſhould attain to the ſaid Dignity, having his perfect and firm hope, that of the ſame ſhall enſue, and that in brief time, a general and univerſal Repoſe, Tranquillity, and Quietneſs in Chriſtendom; and as great Renown, Honour, Profit, and Reputation to this Realm as ever was; beſides the ſingular comfort and rejoice that the King's Grace, with all his Friends and Subjects ſhould take thereof; who might be well aſſured thereby, to compone and order their great Cauſes and Affairs, to their high Benefit, Commodity, and moſt Advantage. For this, and other great and urgent Cauſes, the Pleaſure of his Highneſs is, That like as ye my Lord of Bath, and Mr. Hannibal, have right prudently and diſcreetly begun: ſo ye all, or as many of you as be preſent in the Court of Rome, and continue your Practices, Overtures, Motions and Labours, to bring and conduce this the King's inward Deſire to perfect end and effect.

And becauſe it is not to be doubted, but that before the receipt of theſe my Letters, ye having former Inſtructions, ſhall have far entred your Devices in this Matter, wherein the King's Grace truſteth ye do loſe no time or opportunity that poſſibly may be had; I ſhall therefore, briefly and compendiouſly touch ſuch this things, as the King's Highneſs would ye ſhould ſubſtantially note in this behalf.

One is, That albeit ye both before, and alſo now, know the King's mind and deſire herein, as is aforeſaid, taking that for your Foundation; yet nevertheleſs, foraſmuch as it appeareth by your ſaid Letters, and otherwiſe, that the Cardinal de Medicis, whoſe preferment (if this may not be had) both the King's Grace and I tendereth above all other, mindeth to experiment what may be done for himſelf, great policy and dexterity is in your Labours and Communications to be uſed, ſo that ye may firſt, by great enſearch and enquiry, perfectly underſtand, as nigh as may be, the Diſpoſition, Mind, Affection, and Inclination, as well of the ſaid Cardinal de Medicis, as of all the reſidue, if it be poſſible; which thing well known, well ponder'd and conſider'd, ye ſhall thereby have a great light to the reſidue of your Buſineſs, wherein always ye muſt ſo order your ſelves, that the Matter appearing unto you much doubtful and uncertain, your particular practices (the deſired Intent peradventure failing) ſhall not be cauſe of diſpleaſure or unkindneſs to be noted by any that may be elected; and for your introduction herein, the King's Grace ſendeth unto you at this time two Commiſſions under his great Seal, the one couch'd under general words, without making mention of any particular Perſon; and in the other, his Highneſs hath made mention of me by ſpecial Name: Beſides that, ye ſhall receive herewith two Letters from his Grace to the College of Cardinals, with the Copies of the ſame; the one in ſpecial recommendation of me, and the other in favour of the Cardinal de Medicis; beſide ſuch other particular Letters in my recommendation to certain Cardinals, and other, as by the Copies of them herewith encloſed ye ſhall now perceive. After the receipt thereof, if the Cardinals before that time ſhall not be entred into the Conclave, ye taking your Commodity, as by your Wiſdom ſhall be thought moſt expedient, ſhall deliver unto the Cardinal de Medicis, the King's Letters, and mine to him addreſſed, ſhewing unto him, with as good words and manner as ye can, that for his great Virtue, Wiſdom, Experience, and other commendable Merits, with the entire love and favour which the King's Grace and I bear unto him, thinking and reputing him moſt meet and able to aſpire unto the Papal Dignity before all other. Ye have Commandment, Commiſſion, and Inſtruction, ſpecially and moſt tenderly, to recommend him unto the whole College of Cardinals, having alſo the King's and my Letters to them in his favour; upon which Declaration ye ſhall perceive his Anſwer to be made unto you in that behalf; whereupon, and by knowledg of the Diſpoſition of the Reſidue, ye may perceive how to govern your ſelves in the delivery of the reſt of your ſaid Letters; for in caſe it may evidently appear unto you, that any of the Cardinals, to whom the King's Letters be directed, have firmly eſtabliſh'd their Minds upon the ſaid Cardinal de Medicis, the more circumſpection is to be uſed with any ſuch in the delivery to him of the King's Letters, and overture of the ſecretneſs of your minds touching me; conſidering that if the King's Intent might

in no wiſe take effect for me, his Grace would, before all other, advance and further the ſaid Cardinal de Medicis. Nevertheleſs, if either by his Anſwer to be made unto you, or by other good knowledg, ye ſhall perceive that he hath ſo many Enemies herein, that of likelihood he cannot attain the ſame, ye may be the more bold to feel his mind how he is inclin'd towards me; ſaying, as indeed the King's Grace hath written unto him, That in caſe he ſhould fail thereof, the King's Highneſs would inſiſt, as much as to his Grace were poſſible, for me; which ye may ſay were in manner one thing, conſidering that both the Cardinal de Medicis and I bear one mind, zeal, and ſtudy, to the Weal and Quiet of Chriſtendom, the Increaſe and Surety of Italy, the Benefit and Advancement of the Emperor's and the King's Majeſty's Cauſes; and I being Pope, he in a manner (whom I above all Men love, truſt, and eſteem) were Pope, being ſure to have every thing according to his mind and deſire, and as much Honour to be put unto him, his Friends and Family, as might be deviſed in ſuch wiſe: That by theſe and other good words and demonſtrations, yt may make him ſure, as I think he be, that failing for himſelf, he with all his Friends do their beſt for me; and ſeeing no likelihood for him, ye may then right-well proceed to your particular labour and practices for me, delivering the King's Letters both to the College of Cardinals, and to the other, apart, as ye ſhall ſee the caſe then to require; and ſolliciting them, by ſecret labours, alleadging and declaring unto them my poor Qualities, and how I having ſo great experience of the Cauſes of Chriſtendom, with the entire Favour which the Emperor and the King's Grace bear unto me; the knowledg alſo, and deep Acquaintance of other Princes, and of their great Affairs; the ſtudious mind that I have ever been in, both to the Surety and Weal of Italy, and alſo to the Quiet and Tranquility of Chriſtendom; not lacking, thanked be God, either Subſtance or Liberality to look largely upon my Friends; beſides the ſundry great Promotions, which by Election of me ſhould be vacant, to be diſpoſed unto ſuch of the ſaid Cardinals, as by their true and faſt Friendſhip had deſerved the ſame; the loving Familiarity alſo which they ſhould find in me; and that of my Nature I am not in great diſpoſed to rigour or auſtereneſs, but can be contented, thanked be God, frankly, pleaſantly, and courteouſly, to participate, diſpoſe, and beſtow, ſuch things as I have, or ſhall come to my diſpoſition, not having any ſuch Faction, Family, or Kinſman, to whom I might ſhew any partiality in beſtowing the Promotions and Goods of the Church; and which is higheſt to be regarded, that is likely and in manner ſure, that by my means, not only Italy ſhall be put in perfect ſurety for ever, but alſo a final reſt, peace, and quiet, now moſt neceſſary to be eſtabliſhed betwixt all Chriſtian Princes; whereupon the greateſt and moſt notable Expedition might be made againſt the Infidels that hath been heard of many Years. For the King's Highneſs in that caſe would be contented, and hath fully promiſed, God willing, to come in Perſon, when God ſhall ſend time, unto Rome; whither alſo I ſhould not doubt to bring many more of the Chriſtian Princes, being determined, if God ſhould ſend me ſuch Grace, to expone mine own Perſon in God's Quarrel; by means of which my preſence many things ſhould be ſtated, that for Superiority and otherwiſe, in times paſt, hath been occaſion of diſagreement amongſt Princes; Albeit peradventure the greateſt reſpect ſhall not now be had hereunto, nor this be the beſt Elective to win the Cardinal's Favour; wherein you muſt therefore uſe your ſelf by your wiſdoms, as you ſhall ſee the time, ſeaſon, and care to require; aſſuring them, for the removing of the doubt in changing of the See, or not ſpeedy repair thither; that after the Election once paſſed and notified to me, I would not fail, by God's Grace, within three months to be in Rome; there, and in the Parts thereabout, to remain during my Life, whereof ye may make faithful aſſurance. By theſe, and other good means and promiſes on the King's behalf of large Rewards, which his Highneſs referreth to your diſcretion, and is contented to perform that which ye do therein; It is not to be doubted but that you ſhall obtain the Favours of many of them; ſo as if reſpect may be had to the Honour of the See Apoſtolic, and the Surety of Italy, the Tranquility of Chriſtendom, the Defence of the ſame againſt the Infidels, the Exaltation of the Faith, the Perſecution of Chriſt's Enemies, the Increaſe and Weal of the College of Cardinals, with their Advancement and Promotion; gentle, frank, and liberal Entertainment of them, and generally to the benefit of all Holy Church. The King's Grace ſuppoſeth poſeth his mind and deſire herein, with all your good means, diligence, and ſollicitations, is not unlike to take good effect; wherein, for the more authority, and better conducing of your purpoſe, the pleaſure of his Grace is, That you join with the Emperor's Ambaſſadors, as far as you may ſee and perceive them to favour this the King's Intent, like as his Grace thinketh, that according to the often Conferences, Communications, Promiſes, and Exhortations made by the Emperor to me in this behalf, and according to my ſaid Lady Margaret's deſire or offer, they have commandment to do. In the politick handling of all which Matters, the King's Highneſs putteth in you his ſpecial truſt and confidence, ſo to order your ſelf in the Premiſes, as you ſhall perceive to accord with the inward deſire of his Grace, and the ſtate and diſpoſition of the thing there; for which purpoſe his Grace hath furniſhed you at this time, jointly or ſeverally, with two ſundry Commiſſions, the one general for me, and in my favour, by the which you have ample Authority to bind and promiſe, on the King's behalf, as well gift of Promotions, as alſo as large Sums of Money to as many, and ſuch as you ſhall think convenient; and as ſure ye may be, whatſoever ye ſhall promiſe, bind his Grace, and do in that behalf, his Highneſs will inviolably obſerve, keep and perform, the other ſpecial, as afore Letters to the College of two effects, the one for the Cardinal de Medicis, and the other for me, with other particular Letters in my favour; all which his pleaſure is, That you ſhall uſe in manner and form aforeſaid; that is to ſay, If you ſhall perceive the Affair of the Cardinal de Medicis to be in ſuch perfect train that he is like to have the ſame Dignity, ye then proceed to that which may be his furtherance, uſing nevertheleſs your particular labour for me, if you think it may do good, after ſuch ſort as ye ſhall not conceive any ingratitude or unkindneſs therein. And if you may ſee that the ſaid Cardinal de Medicis be not in ſuch great likelihood thereof; then conſidering, that the King's Grace and I, think verily he will do his beſt for me, ye ſhall effectually ſet forth your practices for attaining and winning as many Friends for me as poſſible may be, delivering your Letters for the Intent, as you ſhall ſee cauſe. Wherein you being now furniſhed for both Purpoſes, and alſo having one of the Commiſſions general and indifferent, without any Perſon therein ſpecially recommended, things to be done or omitted, as you ſhall know to ſtand with the ſtate or commodity of the Affairs there, and with the Ground of the King's Mind to you now declared, which ſhall be your beſt and perfect Inſtruction; and as you ſhall do or know herein, ſo the King's Grace deſireth you often and ſpeedily to advertiſe me, by your Letters, having no doubt but that his Highneſs will ſee your travels, diligence, and pains in this behalf, ſo to be conſidered, as you ſhall have cauſe to think the ſame well employed and beſtowed.

And my Lord of Bath, as you do know well, becauſe Mr. Pace, at the time of the laſt Vacation, was ſent purpoſely from hence with Commiſſion and Inſtruction for that Matter; the King, and I, ſuppoſing that upon knowledg of this news, he being at Milan, would incontinently repair unto Rome; hath therefore made the foreſaid Commiſſions, and alſo this Letter to be directed unto you, jointly and ſeverally willing you, in ſuch ſubſtantial and diſcreet wiſe to proceed in that Matter, not forbearing any thing that may be to the furtherance thereof, as his Grace, and my ſpecial Truſt, is in you: And thus moſt heartily fare you well. At my Mannor of Hampton-Court, the 4th day of October.

The reſt is the Cardinal's own Hand.

MY Lord of Bath, the King hath willed me to write unto you, That his Grace hath a marvellous Opinion of you; and you knowing his mind as you do, his Highneſs doubteth not but this Matter ſhall be by your Policy ſet forth in ſuch wiſe, as that the ſame may come to the deſired effect, not ſparing any reaſonable Offers, which is a thing, that amongſt ſo many needy Perſons is more regarded, than per-caſe the Qualities of the Perſon; ye be wiſe, and ye wot what I mean; truſt your ſelf beſt, and be not ſeduced by fair words, and ſpecially of thoſe which (ſay what they will) deſire more their own preferment than mine. Howebeit, great dexterity is to be uſed; and the King thinketh thinketh that all the Imperials ſhall be clearly with you, if Faith be in the Emperor. The young Men, which for the moſt part being needy, will give good ears to fair Offers, which ſhall be undoubtedly performed; the King willeth you neither to ſpare his Authority, or his good Mony, or Subſtance. You may be aſſured, whatſoever you promiſe ſhall be performed; and our Lord ſend you good ſpeed.

Your loving Friend,

T. Cardinalis Eborac.

A Copy of my Lords Legats Letter ſent to the Ambaſſadors att Rome upon knowledge of the Popes election.

Coll. N°. 51. B. II. C. 25. (ad P. 522.) E Bib. Yelverton.

THIS Letter was written to the Biſhop of Bathe being Ambaſſador at Rome immediatelie upon Election of Pope Clement whereas the ſaid Biſhop had inſtructions to congratulate with him both in the Name of the King and the Cardinall and withall in caſe poſſible to practiſe with the ſame Pope to bring him to joyne with the Emperor and the King againſt Francis the French King againſt whome they had joyntly begunne this warre.

My Lord of Bathe Mr. Secretary and Mr. Hanniball.

I Recommend me unto you in my right heartie manner ſince my writeinge unto you, I have at ſundry tymes receyved your Letters of the laſt of October and nyneteenth of November wherein to the Kings and my good and full contentation yee have right diligently advertiſed me of ſuch Things comeing to your knowledge as have ſucceeded in thoſe parts, as well concerning the Cardinals then being in conclave as otherwiſe, And how after long altercations and ſundrie contrarietys which ſeemed to be amongſt the Cardinalls, Att laſt by the grace and inſpiration of the holie Spirritt they agreed and condiſcended upon my Lord Cardinall de Medeces whome the ſaid nyneteenth daie they elected and publiſhed Pope takeing him the name of Clement the ſeaventh with other matters mentioned and comprimiſed in your ſaid letters more at large for the which your ſubſtantial good and ſpeedie advertiſements by me always ſhewed and declared unto the Kings highneſs his grace and I give unto you moſt ſpeciall and heartye thankes, namely for the deſired newes of the ſaid Election which I aſſure you to bee as much to the Kings and my rejoyce conſolation and gladneſs as poſſibly may bee deviſed or imagined for which cauſe his highneſs and I (in ſigne token and comprobation of the ſinguler comforte which wee take in the ſame, not abydeing or tarrying for any intimation to bee made thereof either by the Popes holyneſs now elect, or by the College of Cardinalls) thought convenient and requiſite with dilligence to ſpeede unto you letters congratulatory directed unto the Popes holyneſs whereby the ſame may perceive the entire love and moſt cordial affection that his grace and I contynually beare unto him, which letters congratulatory being herewith, you the effect ſhall perceive by the Coppies of the ſame here incloſed the Kings mynde and pleaſure is that yee (taking a convenient tyme for that purpoſe) ſhall in due requiſite and moſt loving manner preſent and deliver unto the Popes holyneſs that is to ſaie.

Firſt the Kings letters and afterwards myne, makeing ſuch humble hartie filiall and obedient commendations on the behalf of his grace, and of me aparte, as to the moſt entire affection and devoute mynd which hee beareth unto his holyneſs, you doe know to bee for either of us meete convenient and concordant, After the reading whereof yee ſhall ſhew and declare unto his holyneſs att length, what joy comfort and gladnis it is both to the Kings highneſs and me, to perceive and underſtand that once in our lives it hath pleaſed God of his great goodneſs to provide and ſend ſuch a paſtor and governor unto his Church, as his Grace and I have long and inwardlie deſired; Who for his vertue, tue, Wiſdome and other high and noteable quallityes meritts and deſerts wee have alwaies reputed the moſt worthy and able perſon in this World to aſpire and be called to that dignity. And for my part I have in this behalfe attayned that thing which I have intirely and cordially long'd for and deſired, Aſſureing you that I cannot with my tongue or penn expreſſe the inward joy which I have taken and doe take to ſerve, for ſurelie beſides the manifold perticuler cauſes moveing the Kings highneſs and me moſt ſpecially to deſire the exaltation weale and comfort of ſo faithfull and ſo conſtant a Freind as his holyneſs hath bene ever unto us, haveing firme and undoubtful hope, that the ſincere love and conſtant affection heretofore, ſurelie eſtabliſhed rooted and knitt, is and ſhall bee for ever moſte aſſuredlie permanent and indiſſolute on either parte, his grace and I conſider the preſent Calamityes trobles diſſentions Jarrs varyances diſcords wherewith Chriſtendome is all over vexed afflicted and inquieted, beſides many other enormyties Perills dangers and miſcheives whereby the ſtate thereof is greatly and pitiouſly compelled to declyne, for the ſuccour of which infirmityes none ſo apt and convenient a medycine would have been exhibited in this ſtormy ſeaſon, as by the proviſion of God to have a Pope and head, which both may can and will endeavour himſelfe to repaire and reſtore the ſame unto the due perfection, whoſe aſſumption is undoubtedly to be reputed a due gift of God onely, and an act moſt fortunate and gracious and chanced in a moſt convenable tyme and ſeaſon, for which the Kings grace and I have given and doe give unto the Almightie God as loveing thankes as may bee. And yee may aſſure his holyneſs that the Kings grace (like an obedient and moſt loveing ſonne) and as a moſt pious and vertuous Prince (will not faile effectuallie firmely and conſtantly to joyne and concurre with him, in all things which may ſound to his honor weale and ſurety, the tranquillity quiett and repoſe of Chriſtendome offering his Graces authoritie puiſſance Releave and blood for the furtherance thereof to the uttermoſt, like as I alſo as a moſte devout and aſſured member of his ſhall not faile to imploy my witt ſtudie perſon ſubſtance and life to doe unto his holyneſs all the ſervice and pleaſure to me poſſible as by the contynual experience of the ſame ſhall aſſuredlie prove from time to time whenſoever and ſo ſoone as the caſe ſhall require, All which matters ye ſhall extend with the beſt moſt hartye and loveing words and demonſtrations that you can deviſe in ſuch wiſe as his holyneſs may thereby perceive the aſſured mynd and cordiall affection which the kings grace and I doe beare unto the ſame. Over thys ye ſhall ſhew unto the Popes holyneſs that albeit the Kings highneſs was reſolved and determyned that his Army being in France, haveing there right good ſucceſſe with honorable victory ſhould have remeyned there all this winter haveing made their waye and entrye into the bowells of France without reſiſtance, the Towne of Aucree neere to the river of Zone taken bee dedition and the caſtles and walls throwne downe, the towne of Bray ſituate upon the ſaid River mightily fortified and by the enemy valiantly defended, by ſtrength gotten and acquired and the ſaid enemys by their loſſe profligated, The Towne of Mount Lidder ſix leagues beyond the ſaid river, after approaches fire and batterye made thereunto, wherein were Pontremy and divers noblemen with 500 footmen and 500 ſpeares furniſhed by them after a conflict made wherein were taken Mounſieur Dannavile and two other great men of Armes and as many ſlaine, beſides 60 footmen and 60 men att Armes and as many ſlayne by the Kings leivetenant to the uſe of the Kings highneſs as parcell of his inheritance of his Realme of France rendered and delivered the Townes of Roy and ——— with other Townes and Caſtles alſo taken And the ſaid Armye being upon waie of Travers of the Realme of France towards the Towne called Larm in Lamoges where they ſhould be in convenyente readyneſs both to proceed ſtrayte to Paris, alſo to joyne with the Duke of Burbon, and ſuch as with the 10000 Lance Knights being at the Kings charge hee had with him for which purpoſe alſo the number of 8000 freſh Soldiers horſemen and footmen were prepared for their inforcement and paſſed on their way unto Dover and other places on the Sea coaſt readie to take paſſage; The Kings Army being alſo ſufficiently and amply furniſhed of mony for their contynuance and the ſome of 100000 crownes ſent unto Ray Samſon for the payment of the Lance Knightes from moneth to month ſo as on the Kings part nothing was loſt or pretermitted which ought or conveniently might have beene done for the contynuance of this Winter warr, whereby the Enemy diſturber of the quiet in Chriſtendome might the rather bee inforced to know and informe himſelfe or els ſuffer ſo largely that his timerity ſhoulde thereby be mittigated and repreſſed, yet ſuch fervent colds reigned att that tyme with other divers incomodiate weather, That firſt the Lance Knights being under the leading of the County Felix, and ready to joyne with the Duke of Burbon, partly by means thereof and partlie (as is aforeſaid) by corruption abandoned the Feilde, and after a great bounty taken, retyred into their Countryes, and that Army thereby at thys time clearly diſſolved. The Duke of Burbon alſo paſſed towards Spaine by the way of Italie and over that the horſes and the beaſts which drew the Kings and Emperors Artilleryes and other carriages died daily and nyghtlye in ſuch number that there remeyned not enough in dry weather to remove the ſame and contynuing two or three dayes longer they ſhould have beene fayne to leave the ſaid Artillery for lack of Carriage which could not then for a long ſeaſon have been recovered, Men alſoe paſſing by the waye as well Engliſhmen as Burgonians, periſhed for cold in ſo great number that a pitty it was to ſee. And finally there was ſuch lacke and default in payement of the Burgonians that for that and other conſiderations before ſpecified the Duke of Suffolke and Counte De Buren leaders of the common Army for the King and Emperor could ſee no other remedy but for a tyme to withdrawe themſelves in ſome ſure place in Townes for releife and ſuccour of their men and beaſts or els utterly to looſe the ſame, leave the Artillery and putt the common Affaire in extreame hazard like as they by common aſſent retyred unto Valentia takeing alſo in their way certayne Caſtles and places of Boyben and Beonerroy which being delivered by the Duke of Suffolke to the Burgonians to bee kept to the Kings uſe were ſince by the ſaid Burgonians abandoned and forſaken And findeing the tyme of the yeare clearlye unſeaſonable of new to proceed and retorne unto the Enemyes Countrye they by mutuall accorde agreed to diſcharge their ſaid Armyes till the begynning of the next ſpring of the yeare leaveing every thing in ſuch ſtate and order as they may then right ſpeedylie bee ready to proceed again unto their enterpriſes, and foraſmuch, as the ſaid Armye being beyond the Sea, chanced the death of the Pope Adrian, and the Election of the Popes Holyneſ being unto that dignity by meanes whereof it is uncertaine what further direction ſhallbe taken for his holyneſ and ſtates of Italie for the yeare now enſeweinge and comeinge eſpeciallie the affaires of the Dutchy of Millayne being in better trayne then they were, It is thought by the Kings Highneſs and his councel neceſſary and requiſite, that yee ſhewing unto the Popes holynes the ſaid ſucceſs's with the firme and conſtant mynd which the Kinges grace is of, to perfect theis other victories with, in caſe other princes, to whome as well for their perticuler cauſes as the tranquillity of all Chriſtendome it apperteyneth, will doe the ſemblable ſhall deſyre his holyneſs to aſſertine his highneſs of his mynde in this behalfe, ſhewing unto him not onely the vertuous groundes, why their common enterpriſes bee attempted againſt him who by his inordinate ambition annoys and infects all Chriſtendome and how much the repreſſing of him ſhall ſound to the pleaſure of God the weale of Chriſts Church, the ſuretie of the Popes holyneſs and of all Italie, which have beene the principall cauſes moveing the Kings grace, to expreſſe his labour, travaile payne ſubjects and aſſiſtance with his ſubſtance, for reformation thereof, but alſo ſuch thinges as for this preſent tyme bee thought good and profitable to perſecute warr againſt the common enemy which bee theis.

Firſt the honourable grounds moveing the Emperor and the King now laſt into theis warrs of France.

Secondly the firme conjunction which is contracted betweene the Emperor and the King.

Thirdlie the haſe eſtate whereunto the French King is brought being exhauſt of mony and his ſubjects not able to contribute more unto him.

Fourthly his horſemen greatlye deminiſhed without likelyhood how he may repayre them.

Fiftly

Fiftly the revolting from him of the Duke of Bourbon haveing 500 Gentlemen in France ſworne unto his parte.

Sixtly the mindfull hatred that the French King hath amongſt all his commons, the feare that he is in by the diſtruſt of his Lords, not knowing which of them are his Freindes or his enemies, The doubt leaſt that the French King hath amongſt all his commons (not being preſſed) may gather freinds and fortify places now weake which afterwards by peace may be impregnable The diſhonour which the French King hath taken in Italie the conſideration between the ſtates of Italie the abandoning of the French King by the Venetians by reaſon of the new elected Pope ſhall declare themſelves more ſincerlie for the Emperor and the Kings grace than before, The way and meanes found on this ſide for entring the Bowells of France without beſeigeing any ſtrong places the example of ſmall reſiſtance againſt the Duke of Suffolke and ſemblablye againſte the Emperour on that ſide on Spaine, and faculty to winne the peoples favours, the diſcourage of the French King by diſappointment of the Scottiſh invaſion and flying of the Duke of Albany, The anoyance already done to the Scotts not being mynded or able to contynue their warres, the readyneſs wherein the Emperor and Kinges Shipps, Artillery and Ordnance is in, The goodlye ſommes of mony granted to the Emperour and the King by their Lords and Commons, the likelyhood that the French King once preſſed ſhall not bee able of a long ſeaſon to bee againe ſoe Inſolent, whereby an end ſhall bee of the warrs in Chriſtendome for many a day, And finally the great incertainty which is to be reckoned in obeiſance of any conventions to bee made by the French Kinge concerning the ſame peace or truce, which hee will noe longer obſerve then ſhall bee for his owne benefitt.

Theis thinges well and ſubſtantiallye conſidered, the Kings ſpeciall truſt is that the Popes holyneſs (who hath alwayes hadd fervent inclynation to thoſe matters, as to a virtuous Cardinall and honorable member of Chriſts Church apperteyneth) will (now that it hath pleaſed almighty god to conſtitute and ordeyne him to bee head of the ſame) no leſſe tender the weale and quiett of Chriſtendome then hee hath hitherto bene moſte deſirous thereof Which ſhall bee the higheſt merritt and honor that in this his begynning his holyneſs may or can attayne. Wherefore the Kings inſtant deſyre is to know aſſuredly whereunto his grace may truſt, and what expectation his highneſs may have of perfect favour and effectual aſſiſtance from thoſe parts, without any more outward demonſtrations to bee made therein then ſhall bee entirely and ſinceerly accompliſhed, for aſyet hitherto the Kinges grace for the inward zeale which hee hath to the weale of Chriſtendome, hath in a manner borne the moſt and weightieſt burthen of theis warrs, and moſt effectualye hath proceeded unto the ſame obſerveing all promiſſes without varyance, delay or alteration, others have bene more ſlack and remiſſe then ſhall bee now convenient or needful to rehearſe, and hitherto noe profitt hath come unto his highnes, but onely honorable renowne for his gracious and virtuous mynde and intent, though other bee in ſtate and condition more meete, to their purpoſe, praſe and hearken to a perpetuall peace which in proceſſe ſhalbee but a colour and ſhaddow of goodneſs rather then that thing whereof may come in the iſſue a perfect and general eſtabliſhment of reſt and peace in all Chriſtendome.

The premiſſes well and ſubſtantiallye conſidered it ſhall not onely bee A vertuous and meritorious but alſoe a faithful Act for the Popes holyneſs to declare his full mynde reſolution and intent plainly herein to the kings grace (who hath alwayes bene inclyned to doe unto the holy Church And perticularly to the Pope now being, as much honor, as hath bene in the faculty and power of his grace) who may by ſuch loveing knowlege as ſhall be given unto him by the Popes holyneſs, order and trayne his weighty matters and cauſes accordingly: For his holyneſs after ſoe many gratitudes to the holy Sea Apoſtolique heretofore, moſt largely extended, is now deſirous and mynded to experiment and ſee what correſpondency ſhall bee ſhewed unto his grace for recovery of ſuch portions as belong to his moſt mightie tytles and inheritance deteyned and withholden by the common enemye, like as to pollicy, wiſdome, and good reaſon doth apperteyne, and to the intent that ſemblable knowlege may bee had of the myndes intents and diſpoſitions, as well of the Venetians as alſo of the Duke of Millaine how they will concurre for the anoyance of the enemy, The kings mynd is either by your ſpeciall letters to bee ſent unto Venice, or by ſuch other good meanes as you ſhall think convenient yee doe enſearch know and underſtand the inclination mynd and reſolution of the Venetians, which hadd the kings highneſs is contented that Mr. Secretarie and Mr. Hannibal in conſideration of your long demurrs in theis parts ſhall retorne home, paſſinge by the Duke of Millaine for knowlege of his intent and mynde in the premiſſes for which purpoſe letters of Credence ſhall bee a ſufficient inſtruction for you in ſuch thinges as ſhall be needful to be commanded at this tyme.

Furthermore yee ſhall on the Kinges behalf ſhew unto the Popes holyneſs, that if the ſame be mynded to eſtabliſh and forther univerſal peace in Chriſtendome, none ſoe good or convenyent way or means can bee deviſed to compell the common enemye to come unto honorable and reaſonable conditions, as att thys tyme to preſſe him earneſtly and by all wayes poſſible. Wherefore amongſt other anoyances to be done unto him as well on that ſyde as of the Countryes of Spaine and on this ſyde, It ſhall be in any wayes requiſite and expedient, that the Duke of Burbon (whereſoever he bee at this preſent tyme either in Italie Spaine or elſewhere) ſhall with all poſſible and convenient diligence repayre ſtriaght hither to the kinges grace with whome his highneſs is mynded to conclude on the Emperours behalf and his owne ſuch notable thynges for anoyance of his ſaid enemyes as (God willing) ſhall bee for the high furtherance of the common cauſe and affaires, And for that cauſe you ſhall deſire his holyneſs to putt his hand and helpe, that in any wiſe the ſaid Duke of Burbon may repayre hither (as is aforeſaid) and ſolemnlye if he remeyne in thoſe parts, you may confer with him upon his ſpeedie comeing as alſo to aſſure that the kinges highneſs wilbe gladd and very joyous to ſee him within this Realme being mynded to accept and enterteyne him in moſt kinde and loveinge manner, and to take ſuch way with him by the Emperors conſent concurrence and agreement for the enterpriſes to bee atchieved and done withall diligence as ſhall be to his moſt ſuretye, honor, and weale, whereas if he ſhould refuſe to come unto the kings grace for order to bee taken in the preſent affaires his highneſs is not mynded to charge himſelf further then hee hath done, for any aſſiſtance to be given unto the ſaid Duke, And thus by all good meanes to you poſſible you ſhall advance and ſollicitt, as well with the Popes holyneſs as otherwiſe that no tract or deley bee uſed therein, but that to avoyd loſſe of tyme (which cannott be recovered) the ſaid Duke may accelerate his comeing into this Realme and in caſe after the thing perfected with the Kinges grace he ſhall think good to paſſe into Spaine yet the moſt requiſite waie for the ſubſtantiall promoting of all the common affaires were to paſſe by the kinges grace, if hee bee not paſſed already out of Italie aſſerteyneing you that the kinges highneſs hath ſemblably written unto the Emperor, that if before the arrivall of thees letters the ſaid Duke ſhall have fortund to taken the Sea towards Spaine, the Emperor ſhall upon his comeing to him cauſe him to uſe all poſſible diligence in his comeing hither like as I am ſure the Emperor knowing the importunity of the matter will doe accordinglye Albeit that in the beginning of this letter it is mentioned that the kinges grace not abydeing nor tarrying any intymation to be made by the Popes holyneſs of his election, doth ſend now his letters congratulatory (as is aforeſaid) yet nevertheleſs I adverſiſe you to bee kept unto your ſelf, that I have receyved with convenient diligence att ſeveral tymes, not onely your letters of the third day of December but alſo of the 18th of the ſame.

In the firſt was conteyned matter of right good effect, whereat the kinges highneſs and I take ſingular rejoyce and comfort, to heare and perceive the Popes holyneſs was of ſoe good mynd and inclynation towards the Emperor and the kinges affaires, myndeing either to concurre with him effectually in caſe hee may bee advertiſed they intend to contynue and proſecute the warrs after this winter Or els if the Emperor be not able ſoe to doe, his holyneſs doeing ſecretlie as much as hee ſhould bee bound to doe (if hee as Pope did enter the league) would keepe himſelf in ſuch ſtate as hee might bee mediator. That after the French King ſhould offer ſuch peace unto them both as ſhould ſtande with their honor, wherein his Holineſs then (as ye affirmed) had great hope with other good matters conteyned in your ſaid former letters, howbeit the laſt

ſeeme to bee of another ſorte conſidering that (as yee write) his Holineſs giveth to much hearkening unto the French Cardinalls with other matters therein conteyned ſoundeing rather to an appearance of overmuch inclynation to the French party and their practiſes and abuſes then unto his firme adhereing unto the Kinge and Emperor. Wherefore the Kinges highneſs and I not a little marvaile, haveing made thes our ſpecial truſt and confidence, that upon your declaration unto him of the kinges mynde and intent, with the great reaſons, and urgente conſiderations ſpecified before in our letters why the common enemye ſhall be earneſtlie preſſed without which he will never be induced to any reaſonable poynte, his holyneſs enſewing that which hee wrotte in your former letters will effectually concurre with the Kinge and the Emperors, either declareing himſelf to accept the league, if the Emperor and King will contynue the warrs, and makeing alſo ſome new league with the kinges grace and the Emperor (as your ſaid letters purport) or els if the Emperor ſhall not be furniſhed for the ſaid contynuance to produce by pollicy an honorable and profitable peace (as is aforeſaid) for you may ſay unto his holyneſs that of all perſons liveing which might have aſpired unto this dignitye the kinges and my entire confidence is that none would or could bee more favorable unto the Emperor and kinges affayres then hee, And it were not honorable that his holyneſs (being Cardinall of the league with other things ſounding to the peachment of the common enemye) ſhould now being Pope find fault or exception att the ſame, And ſure may hee bee, that whatſoever practiſe of the French men, ſhall ſett forth with him, He ſhall find them but abuſes wherein his holyneſs hath good experience in tymes paſt knowing right well that they will neither obſerve nor keepe any of their conventions or promiſſes longer then ſhall ſtand with their comoditie and profitt Beſides his holyneſs not adhereing and concurring effectuallie with the King and Emperour it ſhould bee an occation for them to thinke no ſmall ingratitude for the ſame, And therefore their cauſes and affaires ſhould be greatlie hindered, and the reputation of the Emperor furthered greatly, who by that meanes ſhoulde bee further from any good or reaſonable way to bee taken then hee is now, and conſequentlye the enemy proſpring in Italie, and the king and the Emperor diſpayreing of the Popes entyre favor, what a danger as well the ſtate of his holyneſs as of all Italie were in, is plaine and eaſie to bee conſidered, The French King being alſo at ſuch ſore deale would thinke to have all his pleaſures and commands of the Pope which hadd or refuſed hee then haveing ſo great a foote would and might uſe his holyneſs as a Chaplaine And finally the Pope not then ſoe well aſſured of the kinges and Emperors aſſiſtance as hee now is ſhould experiment what it were to caſte away two ſuch freinds which bee able and mynded to maynteyne conſerve and defend his eſtate to the uttermoſt The ſect alſo of the Lutherans might by meanes thereof the rather be accepted by divers ſubjects of the Emperor as well in Almaine as elſewhere which ſhould heare of the Popes ingratitude and peace; that might ſpread ſoe farr both in France and Spayne and Italie that the dignitie of Chriſts Church might thereby in breife tyme bee ſuppreſſed, and hadd in ſmall reputation All which dangers with many more which might enſue for lack of the Popes effectual joyneing att this tyme, with the king and Emperor either for warre or conduceing of peace (as is aforeſaid) yee muſt inſtantly beſeech his highneſs vertuouſlie and diſcreetly to ponder and remember, ſhewing unto the ſame that for knowledge what the Emperor is mynded and able to doe this ſommer for the anoyance of the enemy, his highneſs hath before this by me diſpatched his eſpetial letters both to his Majeſtye and alſo to the Kinges Ambaſſador their reſident with intimation of the kinges mynde being right well able and thinkeing beſt that the enemye be earneſtly preſſed on both ſydes if the Emperor ſhould be furniſhed to doe the ſemblable for lack thereof yet there may bee ſuch an enterpriſe attempted and is deviſed to be done by the Duke of Burbon with the aſſiſtance hee ſhall have from the king and Emperor, without exceſſive charges, and praſe ſhall as much and more abaſe the French kinge, then if the kinges grace and Emperor had invaded France in their owne perſons with their Armyes royall to which purpoſe the kings highneſs hath not onely inſtructed his Ambaſſadors reſident with the Emperor lookeing right ſhortlie for the Emperors anſweare and reſolution therein, with repaireing hither of the Duke of Burbon, but alſo hath written to the Lady Margaret deſireing her to call a Councell generall like as the kings highneſs doth heere the ſemblable and to know and underſtand what they will contribute and what ſhee and other the Emperors lowe countryes bee mynded to doe in thes behalf; wherefore yee ſhall exhort the Popes holyneſs in any wiſe to leave and forbeare any demonſtration of favor, and inclynation towards the French parte ſhewing himſelfe firme and conſtant in his love and affection towards the Emperor and the kinges cauſe which ſhall bee the next meanes and way to make the French King to make overture and offer of reaſonable conditions, and much the rather if his holyneſs will declare himſelf in the league, whereas by the contrary hee ſhall bring the enemye to ſuch elation that uſeing firſt crafty practiſes and ſubornations with the Popes holyneſs againſt whome undoubtedlie hee beareth in his heart an old rooted ſecrett and hidden mallice, and ſetting the leſſe by the Emperor, and the kinges grace, hee ſhall at the laſt findeing tyme and opportunity diſcover his peſtiferous intent to the utter ruyne, ſlander and oppreſſion as well of the dignity of the Church of Rome, as alſoe of the ſtate of Italie for ever And therefore if the Popes holyneſs bee mynded to bee the Author of a good peace and unity in Chriſtendome and will regarde his own weale honor and ſuretye hee muſt effectually adheere to the Emperor and king leaveing his familiarity with the French Cardinalls and hearkening to the practiſes of their faction which wil bee the immediate waie to cauſe the common enemy to know himſelfe and either to come to reaſonable and honorable conditions, or by the firme concurrence together of the Pope and Emperor, and the kinges grace with the Venetians and other ſtates of Italie and other their freinds to bee brought to ſuch baſe and lowe eſtate as hee ſhall not be able to doe anoyance diſpleaſure or hurte unto them hereafter, And of the Popes Anſwere herein with all matters worthy of knowledge which you ſhall advertiſe me by your letters in diligence to the intent the kinges grace may trayn his matters accordingly And of the comeing hither of Mr. Melchior from the Pope, and is not yet arrived nor any knowledge had of him But by your letters to make unto him ſuch anſweare as ſhall apperteyne.

The Cardinalls Letter to Mr. Secretary Pace 240. at Rome.

Coll. N°. 53. B. II. C. 25. (ad p. 523.) Bib. Yelv.

MR. Secretary, I commend me unto you in my right hearty manner, by my other letters to my Lord of Bathe and Mr. Hanniball att this tyme directed I have written unto you all att length as well in the kinges cauſes as my owne This ſhall bee onlye to advertiſe you That albeit I am right well aſſured that yee have to the uttermoſt and beſt of your power indeavored and imployd yourſelf to the obteyning of the bull of legation now granted unto me by the Popes holynes, yet nevertheles to bee playne with you, as one in whome I have my ſinguler truſt and confidence, I eſteeme ſomewhat more ſtrangneſs to bee ſhewed unto mee then my merritts requires in that theire hath bene difficultye made to amplifie my facultyes (per non familiares) and ſuch other things as bee conteyned in my inſtructions given unto my Lord of Bathe Suppoſeing verily yee haveing familliar and perfecte Accquaintance with the Popes holynes may by your dexterity and wiſedome doe ſoe much to the remedynge thereof, if as of your ſelfe alone you ſometymes doe repaire unto his holineſs putting the ſame by good meanes and introduction in remembrance of my meritts, and faithfull mynde towards him, as well in minoribus as nowe, ſhewinge furtherthermore howe by Pope Leos graunte and Pope Adrians who paſſed my legation with as large facultyes as now I have ad Quinquennium and ſoe from 5 yeares to 5 yeares, dureing my life, I knowe right well how that for the prerogatives the kinges highnes hath in this Realme, as for other cauſes, all the profitts that may ariſe of my legation, haveing alſoe all the Amplification of the faculties aforeſaid will not be worth a 1000 Duckatts by the yeare whatſoever reporte may bee made to his holynes to the contrarye by ſome that might ſuppoſe and think that greate revenues might growe thereof, And yee may ſay though yee perceive that I repute and eſteeme the benevolence as much and as high as the ſame is worthy to be taken yet nevertheles yee have taken mee to bee one that can note and conſider the cauſes of the ſaid Bull And what emolument honor and benefitt ſhall enſue unto mee thereby more then I had before by the Graunts of other Popes, to whome I was entirely dedicated as to his holynes. wherefore you may ſay your opinion is, as of yourſelfe, that in ſigne and comprobation of A ſpeciall grace and more large favour towards mee than others generally, he ſhould amplifie the ſaid Bull with the ſaid other facultyes, or rather with more, which then ſhall bee a very demonſtration and manifeſt appearance that his holynes ſingulerly tendereth and loveth me, whereof I may take ſuch rejoice and comforte as praſe hereafter may bee to the contentation of his holynes, And thus by good manner to uſe yourſelfe in this matter without knowledge that it proceedeth of me, That by your politique handling not onlye the ſaid facultyes may bee extended to my deſire But alſoe the Popes holynes to knowe what it is that he hath done for me, and what of likelyhood is my expectation. In which your doeing, you ſhall adminiſter unto mee ſinguler pleaſure to bee amongſt other remembred accordingly. And heartilye fare you well att my Palace beſides Weſtminſter the laſt of February.

Your loveing Freind,

T. Car'lis Ebor.

CLemens Epiſcopus Servus Servorum Dei Dilecto Filio Thomæ Tituli Sanctæ Cæciliæ Presbytero Cardinali noſtro & Apoſtolicæ Sedis in Regno Angliæ Legato de Latere, Salutem & Apoſtolicam Benedictionem.

Licet alias, Fælicis Recordationis, Leo Papa Decimus Prædeceſſor noſter Te ad Cariſſimum in Chriſto Filium noſtrum Henricum Angliæ Regem Illuſtrem Fidei Defenſorem pro nonnullis arduis Negotiis Reipublicæ Chriſtianæ ſuum & Apoſtolicæ Sedis Legatum de Latere ad certum tempus tunc expreſſum deſtinaverit,

Et, inter cætera, Tibi omnia & ſingula Loca Religioſorum, tam Virorum quam Mulierum, tam Exempta quam non Exempta, cujuſcumque Status Religionis

gionis & Ordinis fuerint, eorumque Præsidentes & alias Personas, tam in Capite quam in Membris, quotiens oportunum foret, per Te vel alium ydoneum, quem ad id deputandum duceres, Auctoritate Apostolica Visitandi & Reformandi, & de eorum Vita & Moribus Inquirendi Castigandi & Puniendi, ac alia tunc expressa Faciendi & Exequendi Facultatem per quasdam Literas concesserit, non Obstantibus quibuscunque Privilegiis & Indultis Apostolicis eisdem Locis & Ordinibus sub quacunque forma verborum concessis, etiam si in eis caveretur expresse ut Neminem contra vel præter hujusmodi Privilegia & Indulta ad se Visitandum vel aliter, admittere teneantur, nisi eorumdem Privilegiorum & Indultorum expressa ac de verbo ad verbum mentio fieret.

Ipseque Leo Prædecessor Legationem & Facultatem hujusmodi diversis Temporibus & Facultatibus prorogaverit, Et piæ Memoriæ Adrianus Papa Sextus etiam Prædecessor noster Legationem & Facultatem hujusmodi ad certum aliud Tempus tunc expressum per alias suas innovaverit, Et Nos Legationem, Concessiones, Facultates, & desuper concessas Literas prædictas Innovaverimus & Extenderimus & Ampliaverimus, ac omnibus illis, quæ præfati Antecessores nostri in suis Literis voluerunt non obstare, Derogaverimus, prout in singulis Literis prædictis, quas hic pro expressis haberi volumus, plenius continetur.

Tamen nonnulli Religiosi, se, prætexu Privilegiorum Apostolicorum suorum, exemptos esse asserentes, Facultates Tibi circa Præmissa a Præfatis Predecessoribus & a Nobis concessas in Dubium revocare nitentes, & Tuam Jurisdictionem declinantes, a Visitationibus, per Te ad Religionis Conservationem, Ecclesiasticorum Morum Restitutionem & Lutheranæ aliorumque Scandalorum & Hæresium Extirpationem institutis, appellarunt & provocarunt, necnon Appellationes & Provocationes hujusmodi forte in Romana Curia aut alibi committi obtinuerunt, prætendentes, inter cætera, Ordini suo seu forsan eorum alicui speciali Domui vel Conventui a Romanis Pontificibus esse concessum ne quis Legatus de Latere eos visitet, in cujus Facultatibus non fieret tum Ordinis tum Privilegiorum eorum de verbo ad verbum specialis & expressa mentio, & quod in suis privatis regularibus Institutis (quorum observationem se expresse voviisse asserunt) sit cautum ut suo generali Ministro firmiter obediant, quod illi sic interpretantur ut, sine illius generalis Ministri consensu, nullius alterius Jurisdictioni, inoffensa Regula Sancti Francisci, parere aut quovis modo obtemperare possint, Nos igitur, cupientes ut Tu, qui Opere potens es & Sermone, & ut accepimus pro tuo erga Religionem & Cultum divinum jugi Studio ad Reformationem Religiosorum Locorum infra Limites tuæ Legationis consistentium accuratissime direxisti Animum, cujusque eximia Virtus Probitas & Fides a Nobis comprobata multo majora pollicentur ut feliciter Cœptum munus hujusmodi ad optatum Finem deducere, ac ut in dicto Regno Vitia extirpare, ac Virtutes plantare, ac horrendæ Lutherianæ Pesti & multis aliis in Ecclesia Dei indies serpentibus malis liberius occurrere possis, Motu proprio non ad alicujus nobis super hoc oblatæ Petitionis instantiam, sed de nostra mera Deliberatione ac certa Scientia, & de Apostolicæ Potestatis plenitudine, nostras & Prædecessorum nostrorum Literas, etiam ad hoc ut circumspectio tua per Te vel alium seu alios omnia & singula Ecclesias, Monasteria, Domos, & alia Loca tam exempta quam non exempta, quorumcunque, etiam Sancti Benedicti, Sancti Augustini, Cluniacensium, Cistertiensium, Præmonstratensium, Grandimontensium, Carthusiensium ac prædicti & aliorum Mendicantium, etiam Prædicatorum, Carmelitarum, Heremitarum, etiam Minorum regularis Observantiæ Sancti Francisci Ordinum & Congregationum fuerint, & quocunque Nomine censeantur ac Prærogativis & Privilegiis Apostolicis muniti sint, tam in Capite quam in Membris visitare, reformare, corrigere, ac Delinquentes punire, castigare, & (eorum sic exposcentibus Demeritis) etiam Carceribus mancipare, ac Monasteriis Domibus & Locis, necnon Dignitatibus Officiis & Beneficiis Ecclesiasticis privare & Illos ab eis amovere, & alia in Præmissis & circa ea necessaria seu quomodolibet oportuna mandare facere & exequi, ac ut prædictis & aliis Appellationibus & Provocationibus, quæ a quibuscunque Ordinum & Locorum prædictorum Visitationibus, per Te factis & faciendis forsan sunt interpositæ, aut in futurum interponentur, deferre minime tenearis, sed Appellationibus & Provocationibus eisdem, tam interpositis (quas a quibuscunque Judicibus, quibus commiſſæ reperiuntur, Ad nos harum ſæpe advocantes, & Tibi in eiſdem ſtatu & terminis, quibus nunc reperiuntur, etiam ſi in eis ad aliquos Actus ſit Proceſſum, audiendas, decidendas, & Fine debito terminandas committimus) quam interponendis, rejectis, ad Viſitationum hujuſmodi Terminationem & Executionem procedere libere & licite valeas, ipſique Viſitationes & illarum Terminatio & Executio per Appellationes & Provocationes hujuſmodi, ante aut interim interpoſitas, non ſuſpendantur, ſed ſuum plenum effectum ſortiri debeant in omnibus & per omnia, perinde ac ſi ab illis appellatum non fuiſſet, Auctoritate Apoſtolica, Tenore Præſentium, extendimus & ampliamus,

I shall add, since it may not be unacceptable to the Engliſh Reader, a Translation of this Letter, done by a young Gentleman of Oxford.

THE satisfaction and pleasure, most Reverend Father, was inexpressibly great, which I receiv'd from your last Letter; by which I am inform'd, that your Grace is determinined to reform the whole Body of the Clergy, and that you have notify'd and prefixed the Day, on which you will speedily begin and proceed upon that work: For which I have truely no less ardently wish'd, than did Symeon mention'd in the Gospel, to see the much desired and expected Messiah. And since I have read these Letters of your Lordship, I persuade my self that I have in a manner a sensible demonstration of a more entire and perfect Reformation of the English Ecclesiastical Hierarchy, then I could expect or even hope to see effected, or so much as attempted in this Age. I endeavoured, as it was my duty, to execute the same design within the Compass of my own small jurisdiction, which your Lordship will soon finish in both the large Provinces of this Kingdom: For the Space of three years this important Affair was the great End of my Study, Labour, and Attention, till I discover'd what before I had not imagined, that all things, relating to the primitive simplicity of the Clergy, (especially of the monastick State,) were perverted either by Indulgencys or Corruption, or else become obsolete and exploded by the iniquity of the Times: As this, in a declining Life, improv'd my inclination and vigilance, so it took from me all hopes of ever seeing a Reformation, even in my own particular Diocese. But I do now conceive from your Lordships most acceptable Letter an assured hope and full Expectation of seeing a Reformation both publick and universal. For I am fully perswaded, by many instances, that whatever your Lordship may at any time design or undertake, as it will be wisely concerted, so your prudence and Resolution will accomplish it without Difficulty or Delay. Of so surprising an extent is your knowledge of Divine and human affairs; so Extraordinary your favour and interest with our sovereign Lord the King and with his Holiness the Pope; which advantages your Lordship has in such a manner improved, that you have acquir'd the most exalted Character in the whole World: And certainly in Consequence Conſequence of your moſt renowned Negotiation, (the Fruits of which having by your ſole conduct compoſed the difference and ſettled peace among Chriſtian princes, you have determined to employ in reforming and ſettling the Eccleſiaſtical ſtate and Diſcipline) you will derive ſubſtantial and immortal honour from God, and All Poſterity, and be diſtinguiſhed by a Name ſo much Superior to that of any other, who in the Memory of Man hath been ſent hither or elſewhere in Quality of Legate from the Pope, as Peace is more to be deſired than War, and the Clergy are, or ought to be, more holy and venerable than the Laity. For if, while the Names of ſeveral other Legates are buried in Oblivion, thoſe two Legates who yet left the Conſtitutions framed by them on account of their too ſpeedy Return to Rome leſs perfect, are juſtly celebrated and eſteemed throughout the whole World; what Time or Prejudice will be able to eraſe or obſcure the Honour and Luſtre of your Grace's Character, when you ſhall reſtore the whole eſtate of the Engliſh Clergy and of the Monaſterys to their primitive Rules and Dignity, and enact Laws for their preſervation and laſting eſtabliſhment; Laws, which you ſhall cauſe to be confirm'd and recommended by being carefully and conſcientiouſly obſerved.

I doubt not but your Grace will with leſs difficulty, and greater Succeſs, effect this Buſineſs, ſince our moſt Chriſtian King, by whoſe Encouragement and Advice, as I conceive, you have taken upon you this Task, will ever, to your Deſires, contribute his authority and aſſiſtance; and the Prelates, the epiſcopal eſpecially, will chearfully concur, by their beſt endeavours; and as I judge by my ſelf, and ſo far as my own Mind ſuggeſts to Me, this Reformation of the Clergy and Religion will ſo abate the Calumnies of the Laity, ſo advance the honour of the Clergy, and ſo reconcile our Sovereign Lord the King and Nobility to them, and be ſo much more acceptable to God, than all the ſacrifices we can offer, that I intend the ſhort courſe of Life which I have now to run, ſhall be entirely devoted towards the Advancement of it, a further Teſtimony of which my zeal I ſhall give at the day appointed by your Lordſhips letter, if God ſhall ſo long grant me life and health. In the mean time I ſhall daily and inceſſantly pray to God, that he would keep your Lordſhip in ſafety, and give ſucceſs to all your undertakings.

A Letter to the Author.

Reverend Sir,

THough this draught be meanly performed, yet it muſt be allowed to be of authority, as to the manner of the Seſſion of the Peers in their different Habits, and on their reſpective Benches, and with reſpect alſo to thoſe, who carryed the Regalia, the Officers of State and the Attendants on the King; ſince it was deſigned by the Order of the then Garter King of Arms, and is ſtill preſerved in a fair Vellom Manuſcript which hath his Name and Arms in ſeveral places, and likewiſe repreſents him performing his Duty at this Parliament in his proper Robe and Place. N°. 58. B. II. C. 25.

Your requeſt for a Copy of this deſign is probably confined only to Cardinal Wolſey, yet being Maſter of this days leiſure, I ſhall curſorily obſerve ſome other particulars in it, which relate to the Spiritual Peers, for there is the authority of an Act of Parlament to give them that Epithet.

It is certain Cardinal Wolſey is herein exhibited, becauſe the Arms of the See of York empaling his own Arms, are placed over him. Theſe Arms had been granted to him, by this ſame Garter and theſe are ſett upon an Archiepiſcopal Croſſe, ſurmounted with a red or purple hat having the uſual Cordons and nodules, appropriated to a Cardinal.

He is here repreſented in a full or rather in a three quarters face, which is the more obſervable, if the Traditionary Report have any foundation, that the diſeaſe, which was objected to him in the Articles, had left ſuch a blemiſh in one of his Eyes, that to hide that defect He was conſtantly pictured in profile: If that ſhould be true, either We are to ſuppoſe His Seſſion in this part of the Houſe required ſuch a method of the poſition of his face, or that He contracted the marks of this diſtemper after the time that this picture was taken.

The

The ſeat of the Archbiſhop of York in the Houſe of Lords antiently was on the left ſide of the Cloth of Eſtate towards the end of the Travers, that is, on the left hand of the King, directly oppoſite to the place where Warrham, Archbiſhop of Canterbury ſits in the preſent draught, and I have ſeen ſome delineations of the Houſe, where theſe Archbiſhops are thus placed. This manner of their ſeſſion was altered by an Act of Parliament [a] which enjoins, "That no "perſon or perſons of what Eſtate degree or Condition ſoever He or they be of "(except only the Kings Children) ſhall at any time hereafter attempt or pre-"ſume to have place at any ſide of the Cloth of Eſtate in the Parliament "Chamber, neither of the one hand of the Kings Highneſſe, nor of the other, "and therein a particular Bench or Form is appropriated to the two Arch-"biſhops.

The Arms of the See of Canterbury, empaling thoſe of Warrham, are over the Head of that Archbiſhop, who is here on the Cardinals Right Hand, which however muſt be in an inferior place becauſe the Cardinal is nearer to the perſon of the Sovereign.

Dr. Burnet [b] informs us, "That even after Wolſey was Cardinal, Warrham as "lord Chancellour tooke place of him, as appears from the Journalls of the "Houſe of Peers 7 H. 8. and afterwards [He means after Wolſey was made lord "Chancellour] gave him place; as appears on many occaſions, and particular-"ly in the letter written to the Pope 1530 ſet down by the lord Herbert, "which the Cardinal ſubſcribed before Warrham."

The learned Anthony Harmer in his Specimen of ſome Errors in that Hiſtory, p. 45. hath made ſome juſt Strictures on this paſſage, to which I ſhall add ſome Collections touching the precedency of Cardinals taken only from our own Hiſtorians. It ſeems evident from Eadmer [c] that the Archbiſhops in his Age took place of Cardinals, and we find that Cardinals though legats yielded the precedency to Biſhops [d] which was obſerved even in the Council of Vienne. [e] But this was afterwards altered; for when Kempe Archbiſhop of York upon his advancement to the dignity of a Cardinal, in reſpect thereof claimed in Parliament the precedence of Chichele Archbiſhop of Canterbury, which the later on the other ſide inſiſted upon as belonging to the Prerogative of his See, and this controverſy being referred to the Pope, He exhorts Chichele to ſubmit and conform himſelf to the Cuſtoms of the Church of Rome and to give place to the Cardinal [f], which inſtance confutes Dr. Burnets Suppoſition; ſeeing Cardinal Kempe upon his Promotion to the Purple had reſigned his Place of Chancellour of England.

The two Croſſes here are born by Prieſts which is evident from their Tonſure, but though theſe Croſſebearers are behind the Travers neareſt to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and notwithſtanding all Primates had Croſſes carried before them within their Provinces (as Biſhops had Croſiers within their own Dioceſſes) and notwithſtanding former Archbiſhops of Canterbury had their Croſſes in the Parliament Chamber, inſomuch as the Lords frequently made their Promiſſory Oaths upon them [g]. Yet I am inclinable to believe that both theſe Croſſes belong to the Cardinal; and neither of them to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury; For Innocent III. [h] had determined "Quod Patriarchæ Dominicæ "Crucis vexillum ante ſe faciant ubiq; deferri niſi in urbe Romana, & ubicunq; "ſummus Pontifex preſens extiterit, aut ejus Legatus utens inſignijs Apo-"ſtolicæ dignitatis:" So that if the Patriarks of Conſtantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jeruſalem ought to have deſiſted from bearing Croſſes, much more ſhould that of Metropolitans deſiſt in the like caſe. Wolſey had been made legate de latere on 18 June xi H. 8. and I ſuppoſe this figure repreſents the Parliament begun on 15 Apr. 14 H. 8. But yet if He had been only a Cardinal, without the Legateſhip, Warrham could not have born the Croſſe in his preſence; ſince Gregory XI. hath enjoined, "Quod Patriarchæ, Primates, & Archiepiſcopi non "faciant Crucem deferri coram eis in præſentia Cardinalium." Which Archbiſhop Warrham muſt know becauſe it is recorded in his own Regiſtry [i]. And in the Year 1600, we find Cardinal Aldrobrandin Legate in France inſiſted, that the Biſhops ought not in their preſence to wear Rochets k. Therefore as to the power of the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, though he had the honour of being a Legate born l, yet his power, as ſuch, ceaſed in the preſence of a Legate de latere m. For in the Canon Law a Legate de latere is ſaid to be inveſted with an Ordinary Juriſdiction n, it being ſuppoſed that He is not only ſent by the Pope himſelf, but by the See, and therefore his Authority doth not expire by the Death of the Pope himſelf o.

Almoſt Every Action of Wolſey hath been interpreted as an inſtance of Pomp, Ambition, or Inſolence, notwithſtanding, probably, upon a ſtrict examination, moſt of them will be found to be ſtrictly precedented. This particular of two Croſſes gave Polydor Virgil an opportunity of making an uncharitable Reflection "Non contentus una cruce, qua utebatur, quod Archie-" piſcopus eſſet Eboracenſis, alteram præ ſe ferri voluit, per duos ſacerdotes " ſtatura elegantes, & equis magnis inſidentes, qui aperto capite, quocunq; " anni tempore incederent. Nunc plane conſtat Wolſæum ſuæ ſibi conſcium eſſe " culpæ, qui propterea binas in pompa habet cruces, quod una non ſatis foret " ad ejus expianda commiſſa" p.

Skelton Poet laureate of that time wrote a moſt ſevere Satyr and invective againſt this Cardinal, and upon its publication fled to the ſanctuary in Weſtminſter for refuge, He therein takes notice of theſe Croſſes in the following lines.

With worldly pompe incredible
Before him rydeth two Preſtes ſtronge
And they bear two Croſſes right longe,
Gapynge in every mans face.
After them folowe two laye men ſecular
And eache of theym holdyng a pillar
In their hondes ſteade of a Mace.
Then foloweth my lorde on his Mule
Trapped with Gold under her cule
In every poynte moſt curiouſly
On eache ſyde a pollaxe is borne
Which is none wother uſe are worne
Pretendynge ſome hyd miſtery
Then hath he ſervants five or ſix ſcore
Some behynd and ſome before, &c.

Here is a long Catalogue, and yet poſſibly not one particular is ſingular to the Cardinal. For the ſame Honours according to the Cuſtoms of Rome were to be paid to every Legate de Latere as to the Sovereign Pontiff himſelf q. Nay he might of right uſe all Papal Enſigns and Ornaments, for which Pariſius r produces the Vouchers.

I know not what was the figure of the pillars here mentioned, but it was not an unuſual Enſign, becauſe Chaucer in the Plowmans Tale ſetting forth the duty of Clergymen v. 2044.

And uſin none yerthly honours,
Ne croune, ne curious covertours,
Ne pillar, ne other proud pall, &c.

According to the preſent Cuſtoms in this Country no one will charge the Cardinals riding on a Mule to be a mark of his inſolence or haughtineſſe, neither on the other ſide was it any teſtimony of his humility, but according to the uſage of his Age and in correſpondence to the antient practice of Clergymen, who eſteemed it unbecoming them to ride upon an Horſe, when our Saviour rode on the Fole of an Aſſe. Thus St. Baſil on Pſalm 32. Excluſus eſt ab uſu ſanctorum Equus; and here I cannot forbear from diverting you with the odd ſimplicity of the Stile, wherein Peraldus [s] expreſſes himſelf on this occaſion, "Chriſtus nunquam equitavit, tantum ſemel aſinavit, atq; adeo neq; "mulavit, neq; palafrenavit, neq; dromedariavit." His ſentiment was like that of ſome other rigid diſciplinarians, that the Clergy ſhould travell on foot. But it is well known that our Judges till the firſt year of Queen Mary rode always to Weſtminſter on Mules [t]. Hence Chriſtopher Urſwyke who had been Dean of Windſor in his Will made 10 Oct. 1521. deviſes to Mr. Cuthbert Tunſtall maiſter of the Rolles his gowne of black furred with Martron, his typpet of ſarcenet furred with Sables, and his little Mule with ſadle and bridle and all hir harneys. Lib. Mainwaryng in Cur. Hiſt. l. 3. c. 14. l. 4. c. 3. and that they firſt began to ride on mares, Ibid. l. 2. c. 13. unleſſe there be ſome Error in the print. And as to Cardinals, David Chambre in his Hiſtory of the Popes abridged [u] acquaints us, that Innocent IV. gave them liberty to ride on horſeback, but that Pope Clement V. ordained they ſhould ride upon aſſes according to the example of our Saviour.

But theſe rich trappings and houſings of the Cardinals mule may give offence; Herein he could juſtify himſelf by an eſpetiall privilege to theſe of his Degree, Equitare mulas phaleratas, & clavam argenteam ante ſe deferre [x]. Here then is a Poleax or Mace alſo, and the ſame Author p. 30. acquaints us that in the Roman Court, the Cardinals "Dum equitant mulas, præmittunt apparitores cum argen- "teis clavis & bulgis ab acupictoribus gentilitijs inſignibus auro & argento re- "dimitis, necnon famulos duos pediſſequos (parafrænarios vocant) buculis duo- "bus innixos."

The Chancellour had and ſtill hath a Sergeant of Arms who bears a Mace before him, and in like manner the Chancellour of France [y]. But though Wolſey was Chancellour when this draught was made, yet we ſee ſome Biſhop ſupplied his place pro tempore ſtanding behind the Travers on the Right of the Throne.

I ſuppoſe your Intention in publiſhing this draught extends no farther than to the Cardinal's perſon; but there are ſeveral other particulars very remarkable: I ſhall very briefly touch ſome of them, and take the Eccleſiaſticks firſt who are all placed on two Benches on that ſide of the Houſe, which is on the Right Hand of the King as he ſits on his Throne, the Biſhops on one Bench and behind them the Abbots and Prior of Coventry on another placed next to the Wall. For the Prior of St. Johns (as it will be ſoon ſhewn) was then reputed a Temporal Baron.

The whole number of the Biſhops Abbots or Temporal Peers ſummoned, are not here repreſented, but in all probability thoſe only that were then actually preſent in Parliament, and if their Arms had been placed near them, as in the caſes of the Cardinal and Archbiſhop, We might have been inſtructed in ſeveral particulars touching the precedency of theſe Eccleſiaſticks; for I have reaſons to believe ſome Sees and ſome Abbeys had a ſtated precedence annexed to them, while others were contingent and ambulatory in their places according to the antiquity of their reſpective Conſecrations.

I ſhall begin my obſervations on the Miters, the greateſt mark of Dignity of theſe Eccleſiaſticks, which this figure exhibits in the ſame forme, though certainly there was a difference between thoſe of Biſhops, who had an ordinary Juriſdiction through the Limits of their Dioceſſes, and thoſe of the Abbots, whoſe juriſdiction was circumſcribed within the precincts of their Cloyſters. Nay ſome of the Abbots had the uſe of the Miter before they were exempted from the Juriſdiction of their Dioceſan. Thus the Abbot of Taviſtock had licence to procure a Bull utendi mitra, ſandalijs, & alijs inſignibus Pontificalibus Pat. 36 H. 6. p. 2. and obtained a grant by patent to ſit in the Houſe of Lords in 5 H. 8. Selden's Titles of Hon. p. 260. and yet was not exempted from the Juriſdiction of the Biſhop of Exeter till by a Bull dated 18 Sept. 1517.

One of the Epiſcopal Enſigns within the Diſtricts of their Dioceſſes was a Croſier Staff, which the Abbots who had Pontifical Ornaments granted them by Bulls, uſed alſo in conſequence of that Privilege, and yet we are inſtructed by the Effigies on Seals that the Biſhops carried theſe Croſiers in their left Hands, whereas the Abbots bore them in their Right, and probably there was ſome known Contradiſtinction likewiſe in the Form, or Wearing of the Rings, Gloves, and Sandals.

But the preſent Enquiry is touching the Miters; the practice in foreign parts is, that Biſhops wear them with the Broadſide, not with the Horns (as they are termed) or Slits before, the Abbots for difference wear them turned in profile with the Croſſe on the Inſide to intimate their Juriſdiction is confined to their Monaſteries [z] which Variety of poſture is carefully obſerved by ſome of our Heraldick Authors [a]. But this method of diſtinction doth not appear in this figure, for the Biſhops and Abbots wear their Miters axactly alike in front.

When ſeveral Abbots had obtained Indulgences from the Popes to uſe Miters, the Biſhops being diſſatisfied at their entring the Synods and Councils, Pope Clement IV. by a Bull dated 19 Kal. Sept. in the 2d year that is A. D. 1266 determined, "Ut in Synodis abbates exempti mitris aurifrigiatis, ſed ſine gem-" mis, laminiſq; aureis vel argenteis utantur, non exempti ſimplicibus albis " & planis: in alijs vero locis utriſq; ijs uti Mitris liceat, quas ſedis Apoſtolicæ " indulta permiſerint." Du Freſn. Gloſſ. voce Abb. mitrati. The Ceremonial of the Proceſſion and ſitting in Parl. 5 H. 8. takes notice, that the Miters of the Biſhopps were real Gold, thoſe of the Abbots argent garniſhed Gold, all of them with murrey labells [b]. I can't here omit what a ſecular Clergyman who wrote upon Heraldry in the Reign of H. 6. ſaith of theſe Abbots, who bore Miters, which hath relation too to the Mules, which was according to the fantaſtick Humour of his age, "Quod iſti magni Abbates, & abbatiſſæ debent in ſuis Ar-" mis portare leopardos, mulos, burdones, vel titiros, pro eo, quod ipſi habent " & portant inſtrumenta Epiſcoporum, ut mitram, & crucem, ut muli leo-" pardi, & tales beſtiæ portant inſtrumenta generativa equorum & leonum, non " tamen eis utuntur naturaliter, neq; habent ipſum actum vel generationis " exercitium. Sic dicti Abbates & Abbatiſſæ habent mitras, & baculos, non " tamen ipſum actum habent, vel exercitium conferendi, & miniſtrandi certa " ſacramenta, & negotia Epiſcopis pertinentia [c]."

Whatever might be the Diſtinction in their Miters, the Robes of the Abbots differ from thoſe of the Biſhops; the former wore Gowns, Hoods, and black Caſſocks, but Waltham and Cirenceſter had doubtleſſe white Caſſocks underneath according to the Habit of Canons Regular of St. Auſtin, and thus they are depicted in the Proceſſion to Parl. in 3 H. 8. which may be conſulted in Muſeum Aſhmol. Oxon. n. 13.

If the Arms of theſe Eccleſiaſticks had been here placed, we ſhould have been inſtructed in the method of their precedencies, which if I am not miſtaken were different, that is that ſome of the Abbots like the Biſhops had by vertue of their Abbeys a certain fixed precedency, and that others of them took place according to the priority of their Creations. But to omit that enquiry, we here find the Prior of St. Johns of Jeruſalem, who was no part of the Clergy [d] ſitting at the Head of the Temporal Barons, and thence he was formerly ſtiled Primus Baro Angliæ [e]. The Barons Bench begins on the forme which is placed athwart the Parliament chamber, and the ſame is continued with a ſupplemental forme next the Wall behind the Earls Bench. Here we have the Robe of this Prior, which is repreſented alſo in colours in Muſ. Aſhmol. in a rolle of Proceſſion to the Parlt. 3 H. 8. being a Gown Sable doubled Ermin murrey, a Collar with the Croſſe on the left ſide of his Gown Argt. his Stockings red, and

I have ſufficiently tired you, and therefore omit the explaining that part of this Draught, which exhibits the Sovereign, the Regalia, the Temporal Peers, the Great Officers, the Aſſiſtants, the Officers attending, and the Speaker of the Houſe of Commons at the Bar, with others of that houſe, whereof one is covered, a privilege granted to ſeveral Perſons in the Reign of Henry 8.

I am your moſt faithful Servant,

Heralds Office 2 January 1722. John Anſtis Garter.

I had forgot to obſerve, that this Compariſon of Abbots with Miters to Mules was not ſolely the Notion of the Heralds, for *Chaſſanæus Catal. Glor. Coll. N° 59. B. II. c. 30.

PLeaſeth your good Lordſhip to underſtand, that ſithence the Beginning of the Parliament, there hath been the greateſt and ſoreſt Hold in the Lower Houſe for the Payment of Two Shillings of the Pound, that ever was ſeen, I think, in any Parliament. This Matter hath been debated, and beaten fifteen or ſixteen Days together. The higheſt Neceſſity alledged on the King's Behalf to us, that ever was heard of: And, on the contrary, the higheſt Poverty confeſſed, as well by Knights, Eſquires, and Gentlemen of every Quarter: As by the Commoners, Citizens and Burgeſſes, there hath been ſuch Hold, that the Houſe was like to have been diſſevered. That is to ſay, the Knights being of the King's Council, the King's Servants and Gentlemen of the one Party; which in ſo long Time were ſpoken with, and made to ſee, yea, it may fortune, contrary to their Heart, Will and Conſcience. Thus hanging this Matter yeſterday, the more Part being the King's Servants, Gentlemen, were there aſſembled: And ſo they, being the more Part, willed and gave to the King, Two Shillings of the Pound of Goods or Lands, the beſt, to be taken for the King. All Lands to pay Two Shillings of the Pound fro the Laity, to the higheſt. The Goods to pay Two Shillings of the Pound, fro Twenty Pound upward: And from Forty Shillings of Goods, to Twenty Pound; to ſixteen Pence of the Pound. And under Forty Shillings, any Perſon to pay eight Pence. This to be paid in two Years. I have heard no Man in my Life, that can remember, that ever there was given to any one of the King's Aunceſtors Half ſo much at one Graunt. Nor, I think, there was never ſuch Preſident ſeen before this Time. I beſeeke Almighty God, it may be well and peaceably levied; and ſurely paſſed unto the King's Grace, without Grudge; and eſpecially, without looſing the Good will and true Hearts of his Subjects: Which I reckon as far greater Treaſure for the King, than Gold and Silver. And the Gentlemen that muſt take Pains to levy this Money among the King's, I think, ſhall have no little Buſineſs about the ſame."

This Gentleman's Conjecture proved true in the Parts of Suffolk; where there was an Inſurrection of Four Thouſand People againſt the Duke, and other Commiſſioners, upon their Collection of this Tax; but appeaſed by the Duke of Norfolk: As there was a Murmuring about it in other Places of the Realm. But to go on with the Letter.

'My Lord Cardinal hath promiſed on his Faith, that the Two Shillings of the Pound of Loan Money ſhall be paid with a good Will, and with Thanks. But no Day is appointed thereof, &c.

'Alſo, the Convocation among the Prieſts, the Day of their Appearance, as ſoon as Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt at Paul's was done, my Lord Cardinal acited alſo them to appear before his Convocation at Weſtminſter: Which ſo did; and there was another Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt. And within ſix or ſeven Days, 'the

‘ the Prieſts proved, that all that my Lord Cardinal's Convocation ſhould do, ‘ it ſhould be void; becauſe that their Summons was to appear before my Lord ‘ of Canterbury. Which Thing ſo eſpied, my Lord Cardinal hath addreſſed a ‘ new Citation into every Country, commaunding the Prieſts to appear before ‘ him eight Days after the Aſcenſion. And then I think they ſhall have the ‘ Third Maſs of the Holy Ghoſt. I pray God, the Holy Ghoſt be among them, ‘ and us both.

‘ I do tremble to remember the End of all theſe high and new Enterprizes. ‘ For oftentimes it hath been ſeen, that to a new Enterprize, there followeth a ‘ new Maner, and ſtrange Sequel. God of his Mercy ſend his Grace unto ſuch ‘ Faſhion, that it may be for the beſt. DIlectiſſimi Amici Sal' atq; aſſiduum in bonis literis profectum. Quantum fidei ſinceriſſimis noſtris monitis preſtiteritis, ex eo facillimum fuit agnoſcere, quod noſtris acceptis literis, diſſidia, factionumq; ſtudia ob procuratorium negotium iſthic inter vos exorta, non ſolum ſedaſtis, verum etiam (quod maxime cupiebamus) per duos, eoſdemq; probos viros rem integram ad nos deferendam cenſuiſtis, quæ ſane obſequentiſſimi animi ſignificatio ſic nobis extitit accepta ut rebus potius, quam literis tum publice tum privatim cumulatam vobis gratiam referre concupiamus; Interea tum eam potiſſimum dabimus operam, ut veſtra ſpe, judicioq; concepto neutiquam fruſtremini. Ubi igitur procuratoriam cauſam ſeditionumq; veſtrarum ſtatum ac ſummam ex duobus viris, hujus duntaxat rei gratia, communi veſtro conſilio ad nos miſſis, omni ex parte percepiſſemus, ex veſtrorum ſtudiorum quiete & tranquillitate imprimis fore exiſtimavimus, ut hæc electio in commodius aliud tempus differatur, duoq; viri tum probi tum vero minus ambitioſi deputentur, qui procuratorium officium uſq; ad divi Michaelis feſtum communi omnium nomine exerceant, nec tanquam procuratoribus, ſed, ut ſcolarum magiſtris, hæc illis provincia demandetur. Huic autem obeundo muneri, quoniam prudentiam, modeſtiam, ac probitatem Thomæ Starke, & Laurentio Barbar artium liberalium magiſtris, haud mediocrem ineſſe accepimus, qui a vobis præficiantur maxime eos dignos eſſe arbitramur, proinde hos in procuratorum locum ſubſtituendos, & uſq; ad præfixum tempus deputandos, vobis ita commendavimus atq; proponimus, ut ſi hoc noſtrum conſilium rejeceritis, veſtrum quoq; commodum & quietem vos aſpernere ſimus judicaturi, at ſi noſtræ huic (ut nihil ambigimus) opinioni adheſeritis, ſtatim poſt feſtum divi Michaelis (tunc enim majorem partem negotiorum, quibus nunc graviſſime premimur, abſolvere nos ſperamus,) hujuſmodi rerum veſtrarum ſtatum, ordinem & columen Statuemus, ut inclytam iſtam Academiam in ſummo literarum otio altiſſimaq; ſtudiorum tranquillitate conſtitutam, indies clariorem, ſplendidioremq; futuram procul dubio confidamus, Et feliciter valete omnes, ex ædibus noſtris prope Weſtmon. die xxi Maii.

IMprobum profecto exiſtimamus in iis ſummis rerum negotiis quibus veſtra conſultiſſima majeſtas undequaq; graviſſime premitur, veſtram ſublimitatem literis noſtris ſollicitare, ne fortaſſe videamur eam nimia importunitate offendere, atq; publica negocia (quod omen utcunq; Deus avertat) utcunq; remorari. Verum quoniam hoc tempore id negotii habemus quod ex veſtræ unius amplitudinis calculo ita plene pendeat, ut aliunde haudquaquam dirimi poſſit, veſtram clementiam ex animo rogamus ut tantillum ocii a gravioribus negotiis ſubtrahat, ac quæ pauculis efflagitamus, benignis auribus excipiat. Demandavit jamdudum nobis per literas veſtra ſublimis authoritas duos viros Academiæ noſtræ Laurentium Barbar & Thomam Starke ad procuratorium negotium exercendum in divi Michaelis feſtum uſq; preficiendos. Quibus literis ubi tam officioſe obtemperavimus, quam multo quidem officioſiſſime debuimus, veſtram clementiſſimam dominationem obſecramus ut ſolitam formulam noſtram eligendi procuratores dignetur pientiſſime ad manus noſtras remittere, atq; eam in uſu integro tantiſper habeamus, donec veſtra majeſtas ab his graviſſimus negociis utcunq; vacua, liberius & commodius nobis & Academiæ noſtræ (quod brevi fore confidimus) proſpexerit. Qua in re ſi veſtra clementia nobis id flagitantibus benigniſſime acquieverit, erit noſtris votis gratum, atq; nos omnia alia in veſtra amplitudine repoſuiſſe, fuerit quoq; gratiſſimum. Ex quo ſane quantum ſplendoris ac beneficiorum noſtræ Academiæ acceſſerit, quanquam quam ex innumeris argumentis exploratum habemus, ex eo tamen, quod proximis jamdudum cenſuum eſtimationibus a Regiis exploratoribus veſtra clemehtia tam candide exceptos eſſe voluerit, pleniſſimum fuit intelligere. Quod ſi pari cura Rempub. noſtram (ſupra quam credibile eſt, indigam) veſtra authoritas ab hoc Regio edicto quod rurſum ad æs recolligendum promulgatur, immunem eſſe dignata ſit (hoc enim vel publicis votis ab ea expetimus, apud quam omnia noſtra pleniſſime relata ſunt) eo certe nomine erimus veſtræ celſitudini multo devinctiores, quanquam fuerimus alioqui devinctiſſimi, mirum in modum, Deo immortali ſemper gratulantes, qui talem nobis dedit patronum, quo nemo preclarior felicior aut optatior eſſe poſſit. Deus optimus Maximus veſtram felicitatem nobis diu ſecundet. Oxoniæ vij° Idus Octobris Anno 1522.

RIght interely well beloved Brother in God, we commend us unto you. And foraſmoche as of late the Kings Grace did addreſſe unto you his Letters miſſyve, willynge you in the ſame, by your power ordinary to procede ageynſt the enormytes, myſgovernances, and ſlanderus levynge, longe tyme heretofore hade uſede and contynuede by the Priores and the Nonnes for the tymes being of his foundation, wythin your Dioceſs, which we dowte not, but that accordynge to the tenor of his ſaid Letters, ye have done, as apperteynythe. Herefore eftſone we do ſignifye unto you by theſe our preſent Letters, that for ſundry lawfull and reſonable Conſiderations, It is the Kyngs pleaſure, and alſo ours, by oure power of Legation, which in the execution of theſe preſents, we be contentid that ye uſe, as our Depute: and upon ſyghte hereof with all diligenſe and celerite, ye ſhall as well by yowre ſaid power and auctoritie ordinari provide and ſett, as alſo by owre ſaid power of Legation, that all the ſaid Nonnes now beynge there preſent be removede unto other places of that Religion, where ye can beſt and moſt convenyently beſtowe theyme, ſpecially where they may be brought and inducede unto better and more religious levynge, ſeing theyme and every of theyme incorporated in the ſame places for their ſuerties. Not faylynge thus to doo in any wyſe as ye intende the Kyngs pleaſure and the executyon of oure ſaid auctoritie of Legation: by vertue whereof, we not onely praye, but alſo charge you effectually to execute the premiſſes accordingly. In the doynge whereof we ſhall aſſiſt you from tyme to tyme, as nede and caſe ſhall requiar. So fare ye hartely well, From Caliſe the 20th day of October.

PLeasith it your grace to be advertyſed the Sonday the 6th day of September Maiſter Stephyns. Dr. Lee with Mr. Crumwell repayred to Gipſwiche and came to your graces College there and brought with theym Coopes veſtements. aulter Clothes. plate and other things the particullers whereof byn compriſed in a payer of Indenturs made bitwene me and the ſaid Mr. Crumwell. the oon indenture the ſaid Mr. Crumwell hath with hym and thoder part remeyneth with me. Alſo all the ſaid parcells be ingroced and incerted into your graces boke indented emongeſt other of your graces ſtuff. which boke remeyneth in my Cuſtody. Alſo the ſaid Mr. Stephyns. Mr. Lee and Mr. Crumwell taryed in your graces College the ſpace of 4 days, in whiche tyme Mr. Crumwell dyd take moche payne and labour not only in ſurveyeng and ordering of hangings benches with all other neceſſaries to the furniture of our hall whiche ys now well trymmed and ordered thrugh his good diligence and helpe And upon our Ladyes evyn, I with all the company of your graces College as the Subdeane Mr. Ellis. 6 preſts 8 clerks and 9 choreſters with all our Servaunts when we had fyniſhed our evyn ſong in our College chirche then immediately after we repayred together to our Ladyes Chapell and there ſong evyn ſong as ſolemply and devoutely as we cowde. and there accompanyed with Mr. Stephyns Dr. Lee and Mr. Crumwell with Mr. Humfrey Wyngfylde (to whom all we of your graces college byn moche boundyn unto for his loving and kynde maner ſhewed unto us) the bayliffs of the towne with the portmen And the Priour of Chriſts chirche. All the whiche accompanyed us that ſame nyght home agayne to your graces college with as lovyng and kynde maner as I have ſene. And at theyr commyng theder they dranke with me bothe wyne and biere and ſo that nyght departed On the next day whiche was our ladyes day. the 8 day of September a day of very fowle wedder and rayned ſore contynewally. ſo that we cowde not go in proceſſion thrugh the towne to our Ladys chapell accordyng to our ſtatute by your grace made but we made as ſolempne a proceſſion in your graces College Chirche as cowde be devyſed. Inſomoche there were 40 of your Coopes worne there and aſmoche people as cowde ſtande in the Chirche and in the chirche yarde. Alſo all the honourable gentilmen of the Shyre were there. As Maiſter Wenteforde. Sir John Willowghbye. Sir Philip Tylney Mr. Bowth Sir Thomas Tey. with Mr. Benefylde. Mr. Pyrton. Mr. Fermeyn. Mr. Humfrey Wyngfylde with many other to the Nomber of 24. gentilmen of the countrey. beſides the bayliffs. Portemen of the towne. the Priour of Chriſts Chirche the Priour of Butley. Doctor Grene Vicar of Alborowth as Commyſſaries bothe to your grace and to the Biſhop of Norwiche and the Duke of Norfolks Almoner Mr. Hege. All the whiche were there. with as good wille and diligence as they cowde to do your grace honour that day. And they all toke repaſt at dynner in your graces College And as I truſt wele enterteyned with good fare and ſuche faſſyon as we cowde deviſe. where with they were right well contented and pleaſed. as I ſuppoſed Fardermore as for your ſyngyng men byn well choſen. very well breſted with ſufficient Cunnyng for theyr Rowmes. and ſom of theym very excellent whiche will not ſerve here with theyr good wills for that wages alleging for theyr ſelfs how they had moche better wages there. from whenſe they came fro, Moreover they will have brekefaſts every day in as ample and large maner as they have had in other places, I feare that theyr commons allowed by your grace will not ſuffice theym as yet (for we can make no provyſions neyther for beeffs ne for Muttons for want of paſture nere unto us) As for Bourne brige ys very bareyne, the ſubdeane and I with Mr. Ruſhe have vewed every part and parcell therof and they ſaye it is not mete nor convenyent for fatte ware, neyther for beeffs nor Muttons, I have enterteyned theym according to your graces commaundment. with good wordis and plentye of mete and drynke promyſing to ſom of theym that be Excellent more wagis for they gruge ſore at theyr wagis. As Mr. Doctor Stephyns and Mr. Crumwell can ſhewe to your grace more at lengthe. Fardermore as for your graces College Chirche oon man is not able both to attende and kepe the reveſtry and do all things in the Churche As to ryng the bells, kepe the Churche clene. prepayre the Aulters lights and other neceſſaries. And to ſe all the Ornaments wele and ſufficiently repayred and kepte withowte eny enpayring. and to ſet forth every day all ſuch ſuch things as is to be occupyed abowte godds ſervice. Therfor by the advyce of Mr. Stephyns Mr. Lee and Mr. Crumwell I have put in to the Churche an other man to helpe the Yeoman off the Reveſtry and named hym Sexten unto the tyme I knowe farder of your graces pleaſure in that behalf Alſo here byn but fyve preſtis beſides your ſubdeane whiche is to litle a nomber to kepe in Maſſys every day according to your graces ſtatutes. and the ſubdeane Cannot attende upon his charge for ſurveyeng of the works and bieldyngs of your graces College wherefore we mooſt humbly deſyer and pray your grace to have moo prieſts to perfourme your graces Ordynance in your ſayd College. Or ells to dyſpence with us for oon of your Maſſes eyther the requiem Maſſe or ells our Ladyes Maſſe unto the tyme we be better furniſhed with prieſtis to accompliſh and perfourme your graces Ordynance and ſtatutes therein And but for Mr. Kentall we cowde in a maner do nothing in our quere. he taketh very great paynes and is alwaye preſent att Mattens and all Maſſes with evyn ſong and ſettith the quere in good ordre fro tyme to tyme and fayleth not at eny tyme. he is very ſober and diſcrete and bringeth up your Choreſters very wele. Aſſuring your grace there ſhall be no better Children in no place of England then we ſhall have here and that in ſhort tyme. I have alſo made 15 Albis of the new cloth whiche I had of your grace delyvered by thandis of Mr. Alvarde your graces Servaunt And yet there is 14. albis more to be made to the ſutes now lately ſent by your grace to us by Mr. Crumwell. beſides albis for 14. tunycles and 7 payer of odde parrers for children. Fardermore there hath byn ſent unto your graces College agaynſt the day of the nativitie of our Ladye 9. bukks. that is to wete. 2. from the Duke of Norfolke. 2. from the Duke of Suffolke. oon from my lady of Oxford. the yonger oon from Sir Philip Bowth. oon fro Mr. Pyrton. oon fro Mr. Sentcler your graces ſervaunt. and oon fro Richard Cavendiſh your graces ſervaunt. whiche bukks were ſpent on our ſayd Ladyes day in your graces College and in the towne of Gipſwiche. wherof oon buk was delyvered to the Chamberleyns of the towne for the 24. hedmen of the ſame towne and in money 10*s.* to make mery with all by the advyce of Mr. Stephyns Mr. Lee and Mr. Crumwell. and in lykewiſe to the bayliffs wyves and the portemennes wives to make mery with a buk and 10*s.* And to the Curatts of the ſame towne a buk with 6*s.* 8*d.* in money. For theyr paynes and labours takyn in our proceſſion Alſo Mr. Ruſhe to whom all your graces College is moche beholdyn unto, ever redy to do pleaſures and alſo to take paynes for us in all our cauſes. and at the ſayd day he gave to us 6 cowple of conyes 2. feſaunts and oon doſſeyn of quayles Alſo the Priour of Butley he gave to us 2. feſaunts and a Fatte Crane.

Alſo we have receyved of Mr. Dawndy 171. Tonnes of cane ſtone and within a fortenyght next after Mighelmes now next comyng we ſhall have oon 100. Tonnes more. So that your workemen ſhall not be unocupyed for wante of ſtone, And the ſayd Mr. Dawndy hath promiſed to me. that bifore Eſter next comyng we ſhall have here redy. 1000. tonnes more of the ſayd cane ſtone. And thus the holy trinitie preſerve your grace. From your graces college in Gipſwiche the 26. Day of September By your mooſt boundyn ſervaunt and humble Chapleyn

THE ſixth of November written unto Mr. Sampſon and Mr. Fernengham as it ſeemeth in the time when the Cardinalls were in Conclave to chooſe Pope Clement, and is an anſwer to former letters of theirs by which the King had been deſired to continue his Army all the Winter then being under the Conduct of the Duke of Suffolke in France unto which his Grace agreeth and further ſignifieth what ends Sir John Ruſſell had made with the Duke of Bourbon and what order he deſireth by the Emperor to be taken for the Payment of the Count de Buren and his Bands who had ſerved with the Duke of Suffolke in France.

Coll. N° 68. B. II. C. 27.

Mr. Sampſon and Mr. Fernyngham I commend me unto you in my right hartye manner, The laſt of October arrived here a Poſt of the Emperors with letters to his Ambaſſador here reſident having alſo your letters to the Kings highneſs and me directed of the Eight and three and twentye days of September with him alſo arrived A Gentleman of the Emperors ſent by this way to the Duke of Burbon who brought ſeveral letters of much freſher date addreſs'd to the ſaid Ambaſſador, And two days following a ſervant of yours Mr. Deane arrived at Woodſtoke with the Kings Grace to whom he delivered all ſuch letters, as yee by him ſent unto the Kings Grace and me, Aſwell thoſe that concern'd the Kings affairs as mine which letters his Grace received and remitted unto me with diligence like as I alſo ſent unto the King's Highneſs with like manner all your ſaid former writings coming to my hands. By the which and alſo by the Coppyes of the Emperor's ſaid letters written to his Ambaſſadour together with the relation of the ſaid Gentleman, the King's highneſs and I perceive in what readineſs, ſtate, and diſpoſition the Emperor's affairs were att the dates of the ſaid letters with his intent to proceed with his ſaid Armye in his own perſon and to ſupplye by the longer contynuance the tardity and ſlackneſs which has bene uſed in the ſetting forth of the ſame haveing alſo made proviſion for the payment of 100000 Crownes for his portion unto the Duke of Burbon towards the entertaynment of 10000 Lance Knyghts And deſireing that the Kings Grace would doe the ſemblable for his parte And to give order that his Army leaveing ſeiges and ſtrong places and paſſing into the bowells of France may continue all this winter with a convenient reinforcement aftermyng and promiſſing that the Count of Buren with the Burgonians horſemen and footmen being under him ſhould ſemblablye contynue, And finally his Majeſty ſhewing the good Newes of arrivall of certaine Gould from the Iſles deſires the priſoners of Hanjour taken in the Kings Armye may be reſerved for the redeeming of the Duke of Burbons freinds which the French King has taken and atcheived, beſides other Good and diſcreet advertiſement compriſed in your ſaid letters as might there come to your knowledge, like as in the ſame is conteyned more at large, And here unto albeit that the lacke of Advertiſement from thence hath not been a little to the Kings marvell and diſcomfort and the no leſs hinderance of the Common Affairs if by the great foreſight dilligence and pollicie uſed on this ſide thyngs had not beene prevented remedied and foreſeene yet ne'rtheleſs it appeareth by the dates of the letters that the ſame hath by reaſon of contrarye and unſeaſonable windes and weather which muſt be ſuffer'd and taken in patience. And to the intent that the Emperor may be by you perfectly advertis'd howe great diligence hath been uſed for the furtherance of the Common Enterpriſes as well by ſending and advancing the Kings Army with all effect The order given unto them at the Emperors former requeſt not to ſerve anye Seidges of ſtrong places and to proceed into the Bowells of France the help Succour and releife by the Kings Grace to the Duke of Burbon in extream Neceſſitie by ſending and advancing unto him the Kings whole portion that is to ſay 100000 Crowns towards the Entertainment of the ſaid Lance Knights without which (lacking then proviſion for the Emperors parte) they had been ſcattered and retyred, and the ſaid Duke utterly loſt and deſtroy'd, the benevolent and conformable mind of the Kings Highneſs att the Emperor's inſtance, and for the weale of the Common affairs, not only to contynue the ſaid Army this winter but alſo to reinforce the ſame with a number of 4000 men which yee ſhall name 7000 men. And finally the Succeſſes and matter of proceedings of the Duke of Suffolke and the Count De Buren with the Kinges and Emperors folks being under their leading I (for your ſaid advertiſement) doe ſend unto you herewith the Coppyes of certayne letters lately come at ſundry tymes from the Duke of Suffolke, with the anſweare made unto the ſame And ſemblably with ſuch letters as upon the arrivall of your ſaid letters bee now written both unto the ſaid Duke of Suffolke and unto Doctor Knight by tenor of which Coppye you ſhall now plainlie ſee and underſtand not only what hath been done, and what trayne the matters on this ſide ſtand in but alſo be ſufficientlie and amplie inſtructed of ſuch thinges as ſhall be needfull and requiſite to bee by you ſhewed and declared, on the Kings and my behalfe to the ſaid Emperor to whome yee may ſhewe that before the arrivall of theſe new letters the Kings Grace had reſolved his contynuance and inforcement of his Army, ready to bee ſett forth as ſoone as the Kinge muſt have word that the Emperors Army was really and actually ſett forwards and in ſurety that the Burgonians ſhould be entertayn'd and contynue with his Armye, and the Emperors portion for the Entertaynement of the Duke of Burbon furniſhed as well for the ſuretie of the Emperors ſaid Armye, wherein the King underſtandeth that his Majeſtie paſſeth perſonallie as alſo for the furtherance of the common affaires conſidering by foreſight and high providence that the ſame ſhall be requiſite and expedient And now much the rather becauſe the Emperor doth inſtance the King ſo to doe though ſo bee by the Capitulations as yee know his Grace is not bounden to contynue his Army longer then the moneth of October, truſt mee that ſince his Grace hath done this of ſpeciall foreſight and benevolent mynde att the Emperors inſtance and contemplation his Majeſtie will (according to his writeinge) ſupply the tardity of ſetting forth by contynuance, And alſo take ſuch aſſured order that the ſaide Count De Buren and Burgonians without whome it ſhall not be poſſible for the

Kings Armye not furniſhed with horſemen to continue, may remayne ſtill with the ſame this winter, and have from tyme to tyme ſubſtantiall Proviſion of payment wherein (as by ſome of the ſaid Coppyes you ſhall perceive) there is great lacke and default, referring you to the reaſons introductions and perſauſions compriſed in the Coppies for inforcing and agreeing of that and all other matters therein neceſſarie to bee knowne ſhewed and declared or ſollicited unto the Emperor which yee ſhall by your wiſedomes and diſcrecions uſe as yee ſhall ſee the caſe and ſucceſſes of the Affaires neceſſarily to require, noteinge eſpeciallie foure materiall and notable thinges which in no wiſe may be omitted. The one is the contynuance of the Emperors Army on that ſide ſo longe as ſhall be poſſible.

The Second is ſubſtantiall order to bee given for the contynuance of the ſaid Count de Buren and Burgonians with aſſured payment to be made from tyme to tyme for the which yee have Grounds and conſiderations enough compriſed in the ſaid Coppies neceſſarie to bee highlie pondered and regarded.

Thirdly that noe default bee in the advancement of the 100000 crownes for the Emperors portion to the Duke of Bourbon without which not onely the enterpriſe ſhould bee ſubverted but alſo loſt and totallye caſt away.

And fourthlie if the French King whoſe armye was long agoe paſſed into Italie and hee himſelf remeyneing att Lions doe revoke the ſame for his owne ſtrength as it is thought and bruted abroad order may bee given unto Proſpero Colonna and others of the Armies of Italie to follow them in the tayle, by meanes wherof the enemies preſſed thus now att one tyme on all ſides ſhall (God willing) with leſſe charge and buiſneſs bee brought to right baſe and lowe eſtate, And the matters beinge in ſoe good trayne, a finall end much the rather putt unto the Warrs of Chriſtendome then this thing in any point ſlacked ſhall be poſſible to bee again brought about in many yeares, for the performance whereof yee may ſay the Kinges Grace for his parte ſpareth neither labour ſtudy travell danger or expences, And that withall effect and travell on every ſide both by ſea and land to the ineſtimable charge of his Highneſs; for beſides the Army by ſea and in France and the great Garriſons laid alſo all this Summer on the Borders towards Scotlande who have done the greateſt deſtructions in Scotland that hath been ſeene this 200 years his highneſs hath there attending now hourely the Battaile (if it bee not ſtruken before this, or the Duke of Albany and Scots fled) 50000 Soldiers largelie and plentifullye furniſhed eskipped and trymed of Ordnance Artillery and Munition Carriages and Victualls and other Neceſſaries, beſides 3000 Lords Noblemen and Gentlemen, which manner of earneſt proceedings on all ſides with effect att once yee ſhall ſaie to the Emperour it is and ſhall bee more beneficiall to the common affaires then by little and little to contynue and prolonge the enterpriſes many yeares whereof enſeweth ſmall annoyance or impeachment of the enemy and to the Emperour and the King noe profitt but loſſe Expences and charges, wherefore his Majeſtie purſuing the matter withall effect (as the Kings intire confidence is hee will) yee may ſay that neither by the Duke of Savoy nor ſuch indirect meanes the French King ſhall ſeeke his peace, wherein the Emperor hath ſubſtantiall order in reteyneing the Meſſengers (ſuppoſed rather to come for exploration then otherwiſe) and of his advertiſement the Kings highneſs moſt cordially thanketh him but God willing ſhall bee at the laſt in breife tyme inforced and compelled to ſend unto ſuch princes great and honorable Ambaſſadors with other manner of Overtures and offers then hee hath yet done not doubting but the Emperor of his great wiiſedome and prudence for manifold and noteable effects that thereof may enſue as well to the particular cauſes of his Majeſtie and the Kings Grace as for the univerſal repoſe quiett and tranquillity of Chriſtendome dependeing thereupon will ſubſtantially and profoundly conſider and regard theſe matters accordingly. Over this yee ſhall ſignifie unto the Emperor that Sir John Ruſſell concluded and agreed with the Duke of Bourbon, and mutual Oathes were made for performance of Articles betweene the Kings Grace and him to the ſame effect as was conteyned in a Bill thereof, which I heretofore ſent unto you (except every Article touching the ſaid Dukes recognition of the Kings grace as his Soverayne Lord) was touched to bee referred unto the Emperor which the Kings Highneſs and I take to bee as well for the Kings purpoſe as can be deviſed. And by the next poſt I ſhall with all diligence ſend unto you a commiſſion for concluſion capitulation and perfecting the treaty betweene the Emperour, the Kings Grace, the Infant, Archduke, and the Duke of Bourbon with inſtructions how to order your ſelves accordinglie. Finally the Kings Grace giveing you greate thanks for your good endeavours uſed in his cauſes there, willeth you to have eſpeciall reſpect and regard that his highneſs and I may have more often knowledge and advertiſements from you of the ſucceſſes in thoſe parts, for ſurely the loſſe thereof is as great an impeachment prejudice and hinderance to the common enterpriſes as may bee imagined or deviſed, And therefore his highneſs truſteth that yee will ſubſtantially looke thereunto according to the ſpeciall truſt and confidence that his Grace hath in you, And fare you heartily well att my place beſides Weſtminſter the ſixth day of November.

POSTSCRIPT.

HERE arrived letters from Dr. Knight the Kings Embaſſadour with the Lady Margarett, that by reaſon of the Mariner ſent unto them by the Arch-Dutches he was advertis'd the French Army in Italy had had an overthrow with the loſſe of 22000 Men which newes (if they bee true) are of right good conſequence; And alſo the Swiſſers had condiſcended to give unto the French King 6000 of them to attend upon him for the ſafegard of his perſon, beſides that how the Duke of Bourbon (not mynding to violate the nutralitye of the French Count) was departed from Bezanzon unto Lure in the Countie of Ferebre, and that the Lance Knights being not paſſed with the Counte Felix 7000 paces were at poſt Suſleſance with whom the ſaid Duke well provided of a goodlye band of horſmen intending with diligence to joyne and ſo march towards the Enemyes. Over that, as well by the relation of the ſaid Mariner as by letters from Rome it appeareth that the Cardinalls entred the Conclave the Firſte daie of October and that the ſixth daie of the ſame arrived there the Cardinalls of Aux, Lorraine and Vandoſme who (booted and ſpurred without tarryeinge) entred the ſaid Conclave, whoſe comeing is like to make ſomewhat longer tract in the election.

I therefore truſting, that his Majeſty hath by your good Sollicitation, ſett forth that Affair with Effect long before this tyme ſhall make no newer Rehearſall thereof unto you. And fare ye heartily well; at Weſtminſter the vith of November.

To my verie lovinge frend Mr. Richard Sampſon Deane of the kinges Chappell and Sir Richard Jerningham the kinges Ambaſſadors to the Emperour.

N° 69. l. 2. c. 27. Bibl. Yelvert. v. 50.

MR. Sampſon and Mr. Jerningham I recommend me unto you, in my right hartye manner, I have not only receiv'd your letters, to me directed dated att Valiodoled the third daie of July, but alſoe have ſeene your letters of the ſame date Addreſſed to the kinges highnes together with the orriginall Treaty by you lately paſſed there with the Emperours Commiſſions for ſuch enterpriſes as are to be made this Summer againſte Fraunce perceivinge alſoe by your ſaid letters the diſcourſe order and forme which hath bine uſed and obſerved ſince the arrivinge off Sir Richard Jerningham to the Courte, and the manner of the Declaration of your Charge unto the Emperour the anſwers debateinge and finall reſolutions made had and taken upon the ſame; The Circumſtance whereof the kings grace and I like very well, and aſwell for your good endeavour uſed therein as for ſpeedy advertiſe-advertiſements of the ſame (though your ſervant by contrary of Wind and other impediments was very long in his Journey) the kings highnes and I give unto you harty thanks, And albeit that by my other letters lately to you directed I truſt come unto your hands longe before this tyme, I did advertiſe you of the matters here att that tyme occurrent, namely of the arrivall here of the Lord Beaver dance with the ſpecialties of his Charge of his departure towards And of the anſwer had from him of ſuch Articles and Conventions as he had Concluded with the ſaid Duke the Coppie whereof I ſend unto you att this tyme with the Coppies alſoe of Inſtructions and Articles given unto Sir John Ruſſell to be Concluded with the ſaid Duke, [The Coppy whereof I ſend unto you att this tyme, with the Coppies of Inſtructions given unto Sir John Ruſſell to be Concluded with the ſaid Duke] on the kings behaulfe. Who is contented to contribute the Some off 100c00 Crownes for entertaynemente of 10000 Allmanes, Who ſhall be ſent by Don Ferdinando unto the Duke Sheweing unto you furtherthermore the Conſideration and weightie importance of that matter, with the good opportunity and Commodity now given unto the kinge and the Emperour the ſemblable whereof is like never to enſue againe if the ſame be pretermitted albeit his grace hath no manner of knowledge att this tyme of the Treaty by you paſſed with the Emperours Commiſſioners, yet for the ſinguler and tender mind which his highnes alwaies beareth towards the furtherance and advancemente of the Common affaires his grace abidinge noe anſwer from you of your ſaid Charge, did with all dilligence poſſible ſett forth, a mighty and Puiſſant Armye, by the Two and twentieth daie of this Moneth ſhould be att Callis to Joyne neere unto the Marſhes of the ſame with 4000 horſemen and 4000 Footmen to be appointed by the Ladie Margarett, on the Emperours behaulff, and from thence to paſs unto the Seige of Bulloyne, as in my former letters and Coppies was mentioned more att large, Yet neverthelefs to the intent that the Emperour may from tyme to tyme be advertiſed of the ſucceſſe off his graet and Weighty affaires whereby his Majeſtie havinge knowledge thereof may the better knowe how to order his matters on that ſide. For his parte, I aſſerten you that enſueing the Deliberation and determination taken as before the kinges grace hath leavied a Puiſſant Army as of Actuall, and puiſſante perſons, with as expert and good Captaines as have paſſed out off this Realme att any tyme this hundred yeres, which Armye largely furniſhed and provided of Ordnance and Artillery and other Abiliments of Warr and ſemblably of Victualls in ſufficient quantity is committed unto the Kinges entirely beloved Cozen and Councellor the Duke of Suffolke beinge his graces Livetenante Generall of the ſame, in whoſe Company be alſoe divers Lords and other Councellours and diſcreete Captaines as namely the Lord Mountjoy, Mountague, Ferrers, Sands, Berkeley, Harbert, Courſon, Sir Richard Wingfeild, Sir Andrew Windſor; Sir John Veare; Sir William Stenington, Sir Richard Weſton, Sir Edward Gilford, Sir William Kingſton, The Lord Cobhams Sonne, Sir Anthony Wingfeild, Sir William Siddney, Sir Jeffery Oates, Sir Richard Cornwall, Sir William Courlen, Sir Gyles Strange, with Sir Edw. Digbye; Sir Edw. Nevill, Sir John Willoughby Brother to the Lord Willoughby, Sir Henry Owen, Sir Arthur Browne, Sir Griffin Dormer, and many other beſides other good Captaines beinge in the kinges Crewes att Callice and Guiſen which with there Nombers ſhall Joyne alſoe with the kings Army, and accordinge to former letters, ſuch extreame dilligence with greate ſtudey labour travell and paine hath beene made, that not only the ſaid Duke of Suffolke was tranſported and arrived att Callis the xxiiith daie of this inſtant moneth, but alſoe the ſaid Captaines and whole Armye, with the Ordnance Victualls and Baggages with other requiſites which ſhould be ſent from thence, were before him and ſince his departure traunſported and paſſed; and remayne now at Callis, only for horſemen that ſhould come from the Ladie Margarett, and for the Carriages and draughts as att the kings Coſtes be provided in the Emperours lowe Contries which godwilling ſhall be att Callis wholly and entirely the laſt daie of this Moneth, on which day the Duke intendeth to ſett forward on his Jorney, truſtinge by the grace of Allmighty god and the good harty inclynacion of his people, is in, with all Actuall proviſion to be made, there ſhall be a longe Aſſaye made to attaine taine their purpoſe. Wherein I praiſe god to ſend them good ſpeed, Wherefore in aſmuch as this matter is ſoe farr ſett forth with effecte on the kinges partie, his grace doubteth not but aſwell enſueinge the tenour of the ſaid new Treaty as for the takinge the occaſion of the ſaid Duke, The Emperour hath alſoe really ſent and advanced his puiſſant Army on that ſide unto Gyen the dilligent proceedinge whereof to the moſt damaginge and annoyance of the enemy, yee muſt inſtantly procure ſolicite and Call upon ſoe as the ſaid enemy now earneſtlie preſſed on both parts, maie thereby be compelled to divide his power, which by that meane ſhall be of leſs ability to make reſiſtance on either ſide. And Conſequently the affaires off the ſaid Duke well ſett forth as the kinges grace truſteth it ſhall be, there ſhall god willinge appeare in briefe tyme high and notable effecte to enſue of this enterpriſe to the Emperour and kings great honour and reputacion the ſinguler benefitt and advantage of their Comon Cauſes, and repreſſinge of the ſaid Enemye beinge the Diſturber of the quiett in Chriſtendome And much the rather this matter ought to be effectually followed for that Allmighty god hath after the long warrs diſcords and deſentions which hath bine in Italy to the great danger of the ſame putting into the harts and minds aſwell of the Popes holines, as of the Venetians and all other Princes and Potentates to unite and knitt themſelves together in one Conformity like as I doubte not but that the Emperour is largely and ſpecially advertiſed from his Ambaſſadours before this, aſwell of the Treaty Concluded att Venice, as of the other paſſed att Rome, which thinges Concurringe ſoe well together muſt needs give the more occaſion to the Emperour not to ſlacke any tyme that may be taken for advancemente, but ſoe to reinforce his ſaid Army that ſome honourable exployte may be done there, For the Furtherance whereof, it is the kings pleaſure that the ſaid Sir Richard Jerningham in any wiſe proceed with the ſaid Army to the intente that he not only may ſee and knowe their manner of doeinge, but alſoe exhorte incourage and ſtill the Leaders and Captaines of the ſame Valliantly to advance themſelves and loſe noe tyme. And for ſuch other cauſes as are mentioned in your inſtructions of which ſucceſſe I pray you from tyme to tyme advertiſe me; And to the intent you maie be participant of ſuch newes and occurrents as have beene here ſince the departure of Sir Richard Jerningham I adviſe you that upon ſuch knowledge had by eſpeciall Order or otherwiſe that the French kinge of his Malicious mind continually made greate preparations to ſend the Duke of Albany in Scotland with a good Army to doe annoyance unto the Realme; The kings grace hath not only prepared and putt in readines the North parts to a great Nomber, which under the leadynge of the Earle of Surry may att all tymes either invade or defend us as ſhall be commanded, and Victuall ordered in Staples for that purpoſe, but alſoe hath greatly enforced his Army upon the Seas. Soe as beſides the Navie under Sir Anthony Poyn on the Weaſt Seas to whome alſoe are ſent one of 400 and the other of 300 And beſides thoſe that keepe the North Seas under Chriſtopher Doe, with his Army, Shipp, and one other, Sir Henry Sherborne amongſt others aſſaulted a ſhipp of 400, ſent two Monthes paſt out of France into Scotland laden with men of which men the Captaine and 300 of his men, were in a long a ſore fight, ſome ſlayne, divers taken Priſoners, and the ſhipp ſore bruiſed with the loſſe of few Engliſhmen excepte the ſaid Sir Henry Sherborne who alſoe was ſlayne with a Gunne And beſides ſuch men of Warr as guide the paſſage betweene Dover and Callis, And ſuch other as Conducte the Kinges Merchants to and from Zeland. Sir William is and hath bin upon the Seas with 36 great Shippes, who though the Wether hath bine to him ſomwhat Stormy and Contrarious hath not only given the Chaſe unto Twelve ſhippes of France ſent to Convoy the Arch-Biſhopp of Glaſcoe and other Ambaſſadours from the Duke of Albany into Scotland, enforced them to take the Havens of Deepe, and Bulloyne in either of which haven two of the French ſhipps periſhed att their entry, but alſoe by ſome off his Shippes lefte for that purpoſe doth yet continually keepe them in the ſaid Havens withoute ſufferinge them to paſſe on their Ambaſſage, And moreover p..... himſelf a long Coaſts takeing ſhippes and boats landing in divers places where he hath burned and done much hurt in ſuch wiſe that the Frenchmen of the Countryes further in be all

diſcended unto the Sea ſide which they have fortified in all places, and doe keepe continuall Watche for feare of the kings ſaid Army, Nevertheleſſe the of this moneth the ſaid Sir William Fitzwilliams deſcended at Treaport where the Towne is ſcittuate upon a high Cliffe and to the ſame one only waie of ſmall bredth, which waie was ſtrongly fortified with Bullwarks and the Towne garriſoned with a band of 3000 men, And albeit that fierce ſhott of Gunnes and quarries was made by the Frenchmen att the Landeing of Sir William Fitzwilliams, yet he with Sir Francis Bryan, Sir John Hopton, Cary, and divers others Captaines with the nomber of 15000 men landed in the ſight of the enemyes, and ſhortly after Wonn the ſaid Bullworks from whence the Frenchmen fledd into the Towne which the Engliſhmen thrice aſſaulted, and the Frenchmen thrice yſſued giveinge battaile, nevertheleſſe they were allwaies putt back But foraſmuch as the Towne was ſoe ſtronglye fortified and manned and the Tide being ſpent the kings ſaid Folks might not with their Boats come againe on Board, if they had made longer demurr, they burnt the Fauxburgs of the Towne wherein 300 howſes and above were, deſtroyed the Bullwarks and tooke away all the Ordnance of the ſame which was much and good, burnt alſoe Twelve Shippes of War and Twelve other Shippes in the Haven takinge all the Ordnance of the ſame Shippes with them And in the Conflicts aforeſaid ſlew above 600 men, with the loſs of noe more than Twelve Engliſhmen, Whereupon they departed to Finhead ſheweing themſelves before the Havens Mouth, where the ſaide Duke prepaireth his Shippinge, and perceivinge he Could not nor durſt not yſſue albeit by A Meſſenger they offered them Battayle with as many Shipps and men equall to his, as he would appointe, knoweinge alſoe both the Wind to be the contrary to the ſaid Duke, either to paſs by the Weſt Seas, or the Narrow Seas, and for that alſoe a great Storm compelled them to leave the Coaſt retorned to the Downes not only to receive Freſh Victualles but alſoe to lodge themſelves in the Narrow Seas, there to lye in Waite for the ſaid Duke, Soe as by theſe meanes the ſaid Duke hath bin diſappointed of that daie on which he made faithfull promiſe to retorne into Scotland which was the Feaſte of the Aſſumption of our Ladie, and with gods helpe ſhall not yet very eaſily find Commoditie to paſſe by, one waie or other thether, by meanes whereof the Scotts beinge in diſpaire of his Cominge began to abandon him, and the Frenchmen, cleavinge to the Queene of Scotts and have accorded that if the ſaid Duke arrive not at the laſt daie off this Moneth (as I truſt he ſhall not) they will not only take unto them another king, forſake the French Faction and Conſtitute Governours about him, but alſoe ſue unto the kings grace for Peace; On the other parte, If this ſaid Duke ſhould or might arrive, the ſaid Earle of Surrey is in perfect readines to encounter with him, And hath what with the Roades before the departure of Sir Richard Jerningham and ſince ſoe devaſted and deſtroyed All Twedale and March, that there is lefte neither Howſe, Fortreſs, Village, Tree Cattell, Corne, or other Succor for man in ſoe much that ſome of the people that fledd from the ſame, afterwards retorninge and findinge noe ſuſtenance weare compelled to come unto England begginge bread, which oftentymes when they doe eate they dye incontinently for the hunger paſſed, And with noe Impriſonemente Cuttinge off their Eares, burninge them in the Faces or otherwiſe can be kepte awaie, Such is the Puniſhmente of Allmightie god to thoſe that be diſturbers of good peace reſt and quiett in Chriſtendome.

Finally the kings grace committeth unto your perfecte Wiſdomes diſcretions and dilligence the due ſolicitation and furtherance of all ſuch things as may be to the Advancemente of the Common affaires, accordinge unto ſuch inſtructions as have bine given unto you before tyme and as you ſhall knowe to ſtand with the minde and pleaſure of his Grace, prayeinge you allwaies to be dilligent in Advertiſementes of the Succeſſes which is the thinge ſhall greatly further proffitt and prevaile thoſe urgent and weighty affaires the far diſtance betweene the kings grace hath prooved much incommodious, their Common buiſines Conſidered, And hartily farewell, Att Hampton Courte this laſt of Auguſt 1523.

A Let-

A Letter from the Cardinal.

To my verie lovinge friend Mr. Richard Sampſon Deane of the Kinges Chapell and Sir Richard Jerningham the Kinges Ambaſſadors to the Emperour.

N° 70. l. 2. c. 27. Bibl. Yelvert. Vol. 50.

MR. Sampſon, and Mr. Jerningham I commend me unto you in my right harty manner by Lucye ſervante to the Duke of Bourbon, I writt unto you my laſt letters and in the ſame advertiſed you the Cauſe manner and forme why the common Army which was under the leadinge of the Duke of Suffolke and the Count de Buren in France, came and repaired into Valentia, with the Intention and mind that the kings grace was of to cauſe the ſaid Army for his parte to retorne, and remayne for this winter in the Emperours Contreyes in Caſe the Count of Buren with the Emperours folkes would doe the ſemblable, nevertheleſſe for as much as the ſeaſon of the yere was ſoe Frequent with extreame Could and other ſore wethers, that neither Men nor Beaſts could longer endure Marchinge in the Field, but dyed daily and mightily on both parts in a greate number for Could; and divers loſt their Fingers, hands, and Feete, being Frozen and Dead, upon their bedds, And ſome daily Cutt offe, being alſoe noe manner of poſſibility to or likelyhood that new Lymoneers and horſes for draught and Carriage ſhould be recovered in leſſe ſpace then ſix weekes att the leaſt without which it was impoſſible to Marche or drawe forthe Artillery and yett after the ſame draught recovered the Army being ſo farr out of the hart of the enemyes Contrey when wett wether ſhould Come, the great Ordnance ſhould in noe wiſe be Carried, Remembringe alſoe that the Duke of Bourbons Army was then totally ſcattered withoute hope of any fruite to enſue of his enterpriſes att this tyme. For theſe reſpectes and Conſiderations, by common conſent of the ſaid Duke of Suffolke and the Count de Buren who by reaſon of impediments were of neceſſity forced ſoe to doe the ſaid Common Army was Cleerely diſſolved and diſcharged, and before knowledge given to the kinges grace of the ſame not only the Burgonians and Launce Knights retorned home to their dwellinge places but alſoe the Pyoners and Carriages were likewiſe diſcharged and paid, The kinges Folke alſoe by little and little paſſinge from Valencia to Burgis and there wholly kepte themſelves till advertiſemente hereof was given to the kings highneſs and his Pleaſure knowne upon the ſame, which matter att the beginninge, foraſmoch as the kings grace was not then ſo plainly advertiſed of the impediments and incommodities as ſince, was to his graces by pleaſure and miſcontentation a goodly reinforſement being then ready to be ſent out of England to the ſame Army As in my laſt letter I wrott to you at length, whereupon Commandemente was given by the kings highnes to the Duke off Suffolke, that in caſe the ſaid Count de Buren, and Burgonians and Launce Knights would retorne into the Enimies Contryes Contrivinge their Warr evaſive, For all this Winter or a good parte thereof, he with the kings Army proceedinge and doublinge the Lymoneeres ſhould doe the ſemblable, howbeit in Concluſion it was doubled bothe by the Ladie Margarett and Count de Buren which their anſwere undoubtedly proveth it to be true, that it was not proffitable for this tyme to redouble the Lymoneeres, and gather againe the ſaid Burgonians and Launce Knights under the ſpace offe Sixe monethes, nor that any exployte, Invaſion, or marchinge otherwiſe than lyeing in Garriſons Could further be done this tyme of the yere with many large reaſons and demonſtrations Juſtifyinge confirminge and approvinge the ſame, ſoe as the kings grace was found to accepte and take the ſame diſſolvinge in ſome ſorte the better parte, tractinge nevertheleſſe the tyme ſoe longe as to experimente whether anie good exployte might be ſtuddied or adviſed and for other cauſes hereafter mentioned.

Part of another Letter from the Cardinal. Fourth Jan.

THIS Letter conteyneth ſpeciall inſtructions to perſwade the Emperour to cauſe the Duke of Bourbon to come into England and ſpeake with the kinge, and to the intent that the Duke might afterwards from the Lowe Contreyes make an entry into France with an Army. N° 71. Bibl. Yelv. Vol. 50.

That this daie the whole Army is not retorned aſwell a greate parte of them as alſoe the Duke of Suffolke and principall Lords Councellours and Captaines yee ſhall find in the ſaid Duke of Bourbon with all other things worthy knowledge So as the kings highnes being with you before the Springe and Covenable tyme of the yere advertiſed of the premiſſes, may in tyme trayne and order his matters and affaires accordingly, in declaration of the premiſſes unto the Emperour you muſt uſe good Circumſpection to the intent you muſt firſt perceive and underſtand the mind and diſpoſition of him and his Councell aſwell towards the Continuance or not continuance of the Warrs As alſoe to doe ſome effectuall and notable thinge for the kings benefitt and advantage wherein Caſe it ſhalbe expedient that this Overture made unto his Majeſtie he take ſome cauſe to deliberate with his Councel before he can make unto you a perfecte and directe anſwer upon the ſame though it is not to be thought but that before the receipte of theſe letters they have there adviſed or ſpoken of ſome enterpriſe or ſome further annoyance to be done this yere againſt the Common enemye, unleſſe they ſaw other appearance of an honourable and beneficiall appointemente both for the kinge and the Emperour then is here yet, wherefore the kings pleaſure is that yee diſcreetly and ſubſtantially, note marke and enſearch what Deviſe or overture ſhall be ſett forth to the intent that ſuch matters as you ſhall prove them with beinge hereafter may come percaſe rather to their owne motion and deſire or peradventure ſome other thinge may be by the Emperour offered to be done att this tyme to the annoyance of the Enemy and benefitt of the kinges grace; that which his highneſs will demand; wherfore you muſt publiqly and diſcreetly handle your ſelves in the diſcloſinge hereof, accordinglye aſſerteyninge you that when the kinges highnes and I have groundly noted and Conſidered the contents of your laſt letter, makinge mention of the ſmall appearance which you ſee that the Emperour ſhall be furniſhed with money and treaſure to doe any noteable acte, And havinge regard on the other ſide how farr the enemyes overtures be from any honorable or proffitable ymployment thinkinge furthermore that it ſhall be noe ſmall danger and perill to the kings and Emperours affaires in caſe either for lack of money on the Emperours parte, or otherwiſe to continew the warrs they ſhould ſeeme and appeare to be of force and neceſſity over much deſirous of Peace or truce, wherebye the Enemy perceivinge the ſame ſhould be greatly incouraged and perchance be more obſtinate then before havinge Commodity given unto them to gather treaſure puiſſance and frends, for theſe Cauſes the king and I for good deliberation have had ſundry deviſes and Communications together to ſtuddy aud find way how the enemy without the Emperours exceſſive charge may be continually annoyed and Compelled to ſpend his money, kepte in buſines, terror and feare, and peradventure ſome good portion adquired and gotten for the kings grace, Whereby in the end the French kinge may alſoe be compelled to offer Conditions of another ſorte then he yet hath done, And in the meane tyme emolumente and profitt may ariſe to the Emperour, and, Finally the Duke of Bourbon with other the kings and his Frends Conſidered holpen maintained and defended, which Adviſe if it may take effecte the Emperour maie ſaie, he is not a little bound unto the kings highnes for that Conſervation of his Charge who thus continewally takes unto him the greater Waight and burthen of the Common Cauſes and affaires.

Firſt it is not unknowne to the Emperour that as longe as the Warrs ſhall continew with France the king's grace aſwell for the paſſage into the Channell as alſoe for the ſuerty and defence of his Merchants and ſubjects, And for annoyance of the enemy muſt keepe a puiſſant Army on the Sea, which arriſeth to noe ſmall yerely Charge and expences, beſides that his Grace muſt alſoe maintaine great Garriſons and Armies aſwell for defence of his borders againſt Scotland and for withſtandinge Scottiſh Invaſions as to infeſt annoye and Invade them att all tymes requiſite, beſides continewall Enemies to be laid att Callice,

Guyon Zands and other places of the kings Marches there for Conſervation ſuerty and defence of the ſame, All which Charges ariſinge to right great and notable ſumms the kings highnes for the Emperours ſake is contented ſtill to ſupport and beare, rather then to be driven to any peace or truce that ſhould not be to both the Princes honorable and proffitable; And to the intente the good effects before ſpecified may be brought to paſſe his grace is alſo contented if ſuch honorable and profitable Condicions of peace be offered as may Comodiouſly be accepted, over this, to Charge himſelf ſomwhat further towards an honorable enterpriſe or exploit to be attempted againſt the ſaid Enemy ſoe that the Emperour for his parte furniſhinge to his Warrs att Italy as apperteyneth, will be Contributary to the ſaid enterpriſe in manner and forme followinge, viz. If the Duke of Bourbon may with ciligence tranſport himſelf by this waie into Flanders and the Emperours lowe Countreyes, And that order be given by the Emperour with all ſpeed poſſible for an Army of 3000 Burgonian horſemen, att the Emperours Charge only and 1000 Launce Knights to be prepared att the Common Charges of the Emperour and the kings grace to whome his highnes will be Contented to ſend 1000 Archers att his owne Charge with a Convenient Captaine havinge his Artillery and ordnance in ſufficient readines att Valentia And that his Army furniſhed of Carriages and other repuiſits out of Flanders may paſſe with the ſaid Duke of Bourbon the waie of Arer or otherwiſe as there is ſufficient apparance of Normandy the ſaid Duke of Bourbon hath a right great love, Intelligence and acquaintance here to recover ſome townes and places to the kings uſe which ſhall be more facile for the Duke of Bourbon to doe then any other perſon, and the waie once open, and entry had; the kings grace finding it ſoe may percaſe either in perſon or by Livetenance advance thether an Army which ſhall deſcend unto Normandie, for the better attayninge of the Countrey, It is thought by the kings highnes and his Councell that theſe effectes followeinge maie thereof enſue.

Firſt the French ſhall by this meanes Continually be putt unto buiſnes Charges and expences, The Frends and lovers of the Duke of Bourbon ſeeinge him entered with ſuch puiſſance ſhall therefore take Courage and be the boulder to declare themſelves on his parte, divers Townes and ſtrong places ſhall facile be rendred and revolt unto him, the reſt of the 200000 Crowns promiſed by the Emperour and the kings grace to the Duke of Bourbon, may be converted towards the Charge of that enterpriſe, the ſame Duke ſhall thus be Countenanced and ayded without putting the Emperour and kinge to dooble Charges, The Emperor for that yere ſhall not need to Charge himſelf with any other puiſſant Army to enter into France but only with the Contribution towards the Charges of the ſaid Armye as aforeſaid which beſides the reſt of 200000 Crownes be noe ſuch exceſſive ſomme as ſhall much greive him, more Diſpleaſure and Terrour ſhall enſue thereof to the French kinge having not only ſtrangers entered into his Dominions but alſoe his owne ſubiects againſt him whereby he ſhall be in continuall feare, to exacte money or doeinge other Feats for gatheringe thereof, then if ſundry Puiſſant Armies of ſtrange Princes only ſhould enter his Contries whoſe parts non of the Lords or Commons would ſoe facile inclyne unto as to the ſaid Duke of Burboyne, the French kinge ſhall ſo extreamly be extinuate and his Realme brought to ſuch diminution that ſhall not be able to conteyne his Conqueſts, or Continew his Army in Italy but of neceſſity muſt abandon the ſame for ſafeguard of his owne eſtate and Perſon, whereby the Dutchy of Millayne ſhall be truly delivered from all dangers of the Frenchmen and eſtabliſhed in good ſuerty for the tyme to come, The Duke of Bourbon thus notably ayded and being ſoe much eſteemed and beloved in France ſhalbe in apparance to make a greate revolution through all that Realme to the king's, the Emperours and his great honor and profitt, the Emperours lowe Contreyes on this ſide ſhalbe in good ſuerty by reaſon that the French kinge ſoe occaſioned by his ſubiects with the helpe of the ſaid Army ſhall not be of hoſtillity to attempte any thinge againſt the ſame lowe Contreyes, the enemy ſhall be Content to ſubmitt himſelfe unto reaſonable proffitable and honorable Conditions For the kinge, the Emperour and the ſaid Duke, and finally both their Majeſties not highly Charged thereby with money and expences, may gather money and treaſure, which ſhalbe an increaſe off Terrour to the French kinge. And havinge ſuch treaſure, they may then be able (the enemy exhauſt of money) to do further as the Caſe ſhall require, this device if it be duely and ſpeedily executed executed ſeemeth to be of ſoe great Conſequence both for the Conſervation of the Emperours honor and reputation the avoydinge of ſuperfluous charges earneſt preſſinge of the enemy the Aſſiſtance and releiſe of the Duke of Bourbon, and the demonſtration of gratitude, on the Emperours parte towards the king's Majeſtie, And that with ſuch other ſmall annoiances as may be done without great Charge aſwell by the Emperour, by the parts towards Spaine, as alſoe by the king's grace, with ſome enterpriſe or bravery to be made alſoe in Brittaine by Monſeir de Pontner who is here with the king's grace, Noe other better or beneficiall a thinge can now be deviſed ſtudied or imagined for advance of the Common affaires whereby ye ſhall deſire the Emperour on the king's behaulf not only to Condeſcend unto the premiſſes for his parte, but alſoe to exert money, and perſwade the Duke of Bourbon, (whether he be in Italy or in Spain) incontinently and with all dilligence to traunſport himſelfe into this Realme to the intent that upon Commiſſion given unto the Emperours Ambaſſadours here reſident or other Command, to Treate and conclude the premiſſes, ſuch deviſe communication and reſolution may be taken with the Duke of Bourbon for attayninge of this enterpriſe as on all parts ſhall be thought requiſite and Convenient, And order to be given to the Emperour for the due execution thereof and faithfull performance of the ſame by his folks on this ſide without uſinge ſuch remiſſe manner difficulty and ſtate therein, by cullorable exſcuſes and for lacke of furniture or money as hath bin done afore tyme; For doubtleſs the kinges grace is not minded further to Charg himſelf for aſſiſtance of the ſaid Duke of Bourbon then he hath done unles he will attempt his enterpriſe on this ſide where is more apparance that he ſhall doe good in revenginge of himſelfe againſt the French, and recovering of his eſtate the better then in any place like, As alſoe yee may ſhew unto the ſaid Duke if he be there havinge alſoe Communication with him att length in this matter for he may ſaie ſua Res Agitur, And for the Emperours ſake; the kinge doth moove theſe affaires mindinge effectually to aſſiſt him if he will enter by theſe parts as is aforeſaid and come and ſpeake with the king's grace, for deliberation and perfecte knowledge what ſubſtantiall waie, and direction are to be taken in the preſent buiſnes, which his highnes would not only be ioyous and glad to ſee within his Realme, but alſoe he may be well aſſured in frendly and loving manner to be accepted uſed and enterteyned duringe his aboad in the ſame, thus yee ſhall inſtantly and effectually ſolicite procure and advance the ſpeedy cominge hether off the Duke with Commiſſion and inſtructions to be ſent by the Emperour aſwell to his Ambaſſadors here reſident for Concluſion off the ſaid Matters with the kinge and the Duke of Bourbon as to the Lady Margarett and others to whome it ſhall apperteyne for preparation of horſemen and footemen and other things requiſite as is aforeſaid, ſoe as noe tyme be loſt but the Spring of this yere taken whereby in a Comodious ſeaſon may be attcheived and performed the enterpriſes intended with honor and proffitt deſiring the Emperour in any wiſe to give ſubſtantiall orders for furniture of money on his parte, and that the Burgonians leaving their accuſtomed delayes and Cullours to be allwaies neere unto their borders, and proceede with effecte to the execution of the enterpriſes as the ſame ſhalbe intended Concluded and deviſed, Thus hartily fare you well Att my Mannour at Hampton-Courte this 15th daie of Januarie.

Your lovinge frend

Card'lis Ebor.

A Letter from the Cardinal to Secretary Pace, and to Sir John Ruſſel.

THIS is to advertiſe you onlye Mr. Secretary and Sir John Ruſſel with hearty commendations, that finding nor here nor at Antwerpe to ſend mony to that Armye by exchange at Convenable tyme, knowing that Mr. Weſton Turcupleer of the Order of St. Johns, with divers others of their brethren, doe now depart towards the Court of Rome, for matters concerning that Religion, I have taken order with the ſame Turcupleer, who ſhall have in his Companye above 40 perſons Engliſhmen, to convey unto ſuch convenient place as ſhal bee meete, N° 72. 1, 11. c. 29. Bib. Lamb.

in or not far out of his way towards Rome, and meete for you and Sir John Russel to pay to him the some of Tenne thousand sterling in Crownes of the same which being secretlie carryed shall not bee knowne but to bee sente by the Prior of St. Johns in this Realme, to the greate Maister of that Religion, for the necessarye affairs of the same. And it is devised that the Turcupleer att his coming unto Antwerp shall have communication with Dr. Knight who is commanded to repayre hither unto him, from the Ladye Margarettis Court, to the intent by his advise and consent hee may understand what place may bee most conveniente whereunto Sir John Russel may come to receyve the said monye, and thereunto to advertise some speciall man that shall shew unto you the said place, and if that of likelyhood yee may be there, Nevertheles in soe much as it is not here knowne whether betweene you and Dr. Knight bee a Cipher, and that there may peril and danger ensue, in case the letters should chance to be intercepted, making mention of the premisses, yee and Dr. Knight will, and bee ordered to call the name of the said Turcupleer Christopher Barker, and by the name of Christopher Barker, yee shall alwaye understand the said Turcupleer And when Sir John Russel shall dispose you to repayre to the said place where the said Turcupleer and Dr. Knight shall appoint you, there to hearken of his comeing, Att which tyme yee shall receyve of him the said 10000 l. and the same ye shall convey with you by some sure and safe meanes unto such place as yee shall think convenyent to have it in good suretye and readyness for the Duke of Bourbon when the case shall require. Nevertheless if you would use such diligence that the said Turcupleer in his owne way towards Trent, which he is most mynded to take, maye knowe by your letters att what place he shall repayre unto you, and beinge convenient for you and Sir John Russell to meete him it should much prevaile to the common benefitt, The politique ordering whereof the king comiteth to your wisdome and discreet management, And as touching the bestowing of the 10000 l. you shall understand that the king not knowing how the said Affaires of the said Duke of Bourbon shall proceed, and (willing rather to have mony there in redynes, then to lacke, when need shall bee) doth send the said 10000 l. to bee reserved for your selfe in some sure place, and not bee imployed but as you shall see the cause to require of necessitye, That is to say, if the said Duke proceeding forward and the Emperour contributeing for his parte as the kinge doth Yee shall as ye see cause imploie it upon the enterteynement of the said Duke and his Armye, and if any other adverse chaunce happen (as god forbid) that the same should not bee well bestowed and to the direct purpose Then the king and I trust verilye Yee will not see it scattered and spent in vayne, but to bee reserved and kept or otherwise as the tyme and comodity shall by your good discretion lead you, whereof I will be loath to give overmuche instructions for as much as it is doubtfull what thinges shall chance in that Art But by suche confirmation as you have heretofore of the kings mynde and intent. And by the Capitulations which yee knowe bee passed betweene the kinge and the Emperour and by the manner of his doeings and the said Dukes proceedings, you shall knowe how to governe the matter to the kinges honor suretie and profitt, and to the beste advancement of his graces affaires, assureing yee that it is not a little to the kings mervaile and myne to heare and understand by your letters of the 27th of June and others sent by Curson (who shall bee dispatched withall diligence with the answeares of the same) that the payment of the Emperours mony for the enterteynement of the Duke of Bourbon is thus retarded and slacked, whereby the proceeding forth of that Armye hath bene greatly hindered The coming alsoe of the Lance Knights to them letted and impeached besides the danger that enseweth by the long demurre of the Emperours ordinary horsemen contrary to the tenor of the capitulation passed betweene the king and him. All which thinges bee greatlie to the hurte and danger of the common enterprises sounding alsoe to the great dishonour of them, and to the comfort of the enemye, like as in all other proceedings the Emperours folkes make great avaunts and promises for payment of monies but when it cometh to the poynte nothing is observed. For which cause yee must have speciall regarde hereunto causeing the Duke of Bourbon to call for the Emperours money, that the king be not driven off thus alwayes with fayre words, and the most burden layd upon hym, In which tymes makeing computation from the first day of August which I understand was the firste daye of your entrye entrye into the French grounds att St. Lawrence and being then to accompt Firſt of the Emperours two hundred thouſand Crownes, and after of the kings albeit the whole Armye had bene then aſſembled, yet it ſhould have bene the 30th day of July before any parte of the Kinges mony ſhould have begunn to runne in payment. The 27th of this inſtant moneth before the 20000*l.* ſent by Sir John Ruſſel ſhould bee expired and ſpente though every thing were attempted to the uttermoſt according to the eſtimate which wee ſent mentioning the rate of theis thinges After which 27th day, the Emperour then begynning anewe, to contribute 100000 Crownes for his part, it ſhould be the 24th of September before you ſhoulde occupye any parte of the monye now ſent by the Turcupleer which with the ten thouſand pound that the king intendeth to ſend by ſome other meanes with dilligence ſhould ſerve though there were no other Fardells towards the ſame enterteynmente till the 27th of October next enſewing ſoe that the Emperour obſerveing his promiſſe for the ſaid contribution, as the king doth, the Duke of Burbon may (God willing) make a great alteration in France, haveing many notable Succeſſes and victoryes before that tyme, eſpetially finding ſoe ſmall reſiſtance as hee is like to find.

Letter of the Cardinal to Secretary Pace.

N° 73. B. II. f. 29. Bib. Lamb.

MR. Secretary I commend me unto you in my right harty manner, The kings highneſs and I received your letters dated att Venice the 17th of this laſt moneth perceiving by the contents of the ſame Not onely the diſpoſition wherein you have found the Duke and Senate with the anſweares by them made unto your charge, but alſoe the expectation may be hadd of their intents and purpoſes declareinge finally ſuch newes from the Campe and other as then were come to your knowlege for which your good endeavour and dilligente advertiſement the kings highneſs and I give you moſt hearty thanks abideinge with great deſire to knowe and underſtand the further ſucceſſes of theis matters, and whether upon ſuch new thinges chanced in the Campe, you can by good pollicye and induſtrye profitt any better with them for the furtherance of the common affaires, wherein the kings highneſs and I bee well aſſured that yee will pretermitt noe good occaſion that may bee taken to induce them to all ſuch thinges as may conferre to the intended end and purpoſe, ſignifieing unto you by certayn letters received from ſundrie parts of Italie the kings highnes and I have bene advertiſed that Albeit two Armys of the imperialls and Frenchmen were within half a Mile the one from the other the 7th day of the ſame laſt moneth ſoe remeyneing and contynueing till the 17th of the ſame alſoe, which is the date of thoſe letters wee had from thoſe parts, yet Nevertheleſs there was at that tyme noe battaile ſtrucken, but rather ſmal appearance thereof for ſo much as the French King ſtronglie incamped in his feild would not iſſue out, nor they might without their great diſadvantage, aſſaile him and enter upon his fortifications, ſoe that it was thought that the French kings intent was onely to wearye and confine the Imperialls for lacke of monye to mantayne and kepe their Armye together, And foraſmuch as the kings grace underſtandeth that 20000 Duckatts ſent by the Emperour into Italie were not then arrived and that a great parte of the 50000 Crownes that were in Sir John Ruſſels hands, which the kings grace ordeyned to have bene given to the Emperours Armye in rewarde is retorned hither by exchange and not poſſible to bee recovered att Rome whereby without other proviſion ſpeedilye made the kings and Emperours affaires might bee in greate danger, and the French king proſecute his purpoſe in one thing of the ſaid Imperialls The kinges highneſs mynded moſt like a loveing Father Uncle and loveing Brother to put ſuccour unto the lacke which their may bee on the Imperialls ſide, hath cauſed conventions to bee made with Anthnoy Vivald Merchant of Seane, and Anthony Dodo Merchant of Venice in ſuch gold and monyes had at ſuch tyme price and rate as you knowing the valuation thereof can beſt rate and agree with their Agents in the Cittie to whome promiſe and aſſurance is made, that upon Exhibition thereof yours and my lord of Bathes Acquietance ſpeceſieing the receipte thereof, the ſame price and value aforeſaid ſhall bee here paid and contented for the ſame Whereupon they write at this tyme not onelie unto you, But alſoe to their ſaid Agents, that is to ſaye Vivald to his Brother, and Dodo to his Father

ſhowing themſelves right glad and comfortable to doe unto the kings grace ſervice and pleaſure herein without any lucre or gayne but onelie as they may ſave themſelves harmeles with theire goods if they performe the ſame, the kings highnes will not faile to have the ſame in remembrance accordinglie Whereof the kings pleaſure is that incontynentlye upon receipte hereof yee ſhall practiſe with the ſaid Agents and Bankers haveinge communication with them upon the certayne price rate and value of the ſaid monye, and to knowe how much they will bee contented to bargayne with you for upon the commiſſion of the ſaid Anthony Dodo and Anthony Vivald after the manner and forme as is aforeſaid makeing your bargayne aſſured with them for that purpoſe ſoe the monye upon requiſition may bee had and receyved accordinglye without byndeing your ſelf to take more or leſſe, but as the caſe and neceſſitye doth require which thing well perfected and done if then my Lord of Bath ſhall write unto you to ſend away part of the monye unto him or other place to bee beſtowed according to ſuch inſtructions as ſhall bee now given unto him in that behalfe which is to performe and make upp the Fiftie thouſand Crownes which was at Rome, by this and other meanes, and rather than faile to imploy alſo more in caſe of extreame neceſſitie upon the ſaid Emperours Armye before they ſhould bee compelled to breake for lacke of a competent ſomme of monye Yee ſhall in this caſe cauſe ſuch monye to bee delivered giveing acequitance unto the Marchant for the ſame as my ſaid Lord of Bathe ſhall appoynte, Wherein the kinges mynde is that yee ſhall give unto the Buſhopp of Bathe from tyme to tyme your good Councell That is to ſaye how hee were beſt to order himſelfe in departeing with more or leſſe of the ſaid monye as is neceſſary in the Emperors Armye and commodious with the knowledge of the ſucceſſes as there ſhall require to the intent his and your good wiſedome and diſcretion may the better concurre together in that behalf, And hee having Councell of the kings truſtye freindes and ſervants there, as all wiſe men bee deſirous to have, may with confidence proceed in his doeings as ſhall apperteyne, not for that hee ſhould not doe any thing herein without your councell for therein by Tracts of tyme might bee perill, but that hee haveing your opinion might conferre the ſame with his owne, and then doe as hee ſhall thinke moſt convenyent for in effect this is the kinges mynde.

Firſt to obſerve his promiſe made in theis and my former letters for advancement of the Fiftye thouſand Crownes to the Emperours Armye, And ſecondlie disburſeing no mony in waiſte for Five or Tenne thouſand more rather then faile if the ſame may be thought ſoe conveniente And that lackeing other proviſion they ſhould bee elſe compelled to faile and looſe their enterpriſes or that the haveing thereof may ſave and conſerve the ſame. Wherefore now yee bee advertiſed of the kings full mynde herein knowing alſoe the ſtate of the matters there, better then can bee done here, the kings highneſs and I doe require you to order your ſelfe doeing diligence herein accordinglie ſoe as his grace may, by your good endeavours there conduce theis matters to the deſired ende to the honor of his highnes and to the benefitt of his affaires, as is the kinges and my ſpeciall truſt in you. And fare yee well att the kinges Manor att Bridewell the 5th of March 15[illegible]

Concerning the Election of the Prioreſſe of Wilton to be Abbeſſe which the Cardinal made contrary to the kings pleaſure. He adviſeth the Cardinall alſo to looke that the Moneys gotten out of religious houſes to the building of his Colledges be well gotten.

THE great affection and love I beare you cauſeth me (enſuing the doctrine of my Maiſter, ſaying (Quem diligo caſtigo) thus plainly as now enſueth to breake to you my mind, enſuring you that neither ſiniſter report, affection to my owne pleaſure, intereſſe parts, nor mediation of any other body beareth place in this caſe; Wherefore whatſoever I doe ſay, I pray thinke it ſpoken of noe diſpleaſure, but of him that would you as much good both of body and ſoule, as you would your ſelfe; Methinke it is not the right trayne of a truſty Coll. N°. 77. B. III. c. 2.

lovinge frend and ſervant, when the matter is putt by the maſters conſent into his arbitree, and iudgment (ſpecially in a matter wherin his maſter hath both royalty and intereſt) to elect and chuſe a perſon which was by him defendid; And yet another thing which much diſpleaſeth me more, that is, to cloake your offence made by ignorance of my pleaſure, ſaying that you expreſly know not my determinate mind in that behalfe; Alas my lord what can be more evident, or plainer than theſe words, (ſpecially to a wiſe man) his grace careth not who, but referreth it all to you; ſoe that none of thoſe who either be or have been att any time noted or ſpotted with incontinence (like as by report the Prioreſſe hath been in her youth) have it; And alſo in another place of the Letter which ſayth, and therfore his highnes thinketh her not, moſt meet for that purpoſe. Thirdly in another place of the ſayd letter by theſe words, And though his grace ſpeaketh it not ſoe openly, yet meſeemeth his pleaſure is, that in noe wiſe the Prioreſſe have yt, nor yet Dame Ellinor's eldeſt Sifter, for many conſiderations, the which your grace both can, and will beſt conſider. A my Lord it is a double offence both to doe ill, and colour it to, but with men that have witt, it can not be accepted ſoe, wherfore good my Lord, Uſe noe more that way with me for there is no man Livinge that more hateth it; Theſe things being thus committed either I muſt have reſerved them in pectore, whereby more diſpleaſure might happen to breed; or ells thus roundly and playnly to declare them to you. Becauſe that I do thinke, that Cum amico & familiari ſincere ſemper eſt agendum. And ſpecially the Maſter to his beſt beloved ſervaunt and frend, for in ſoe doing, the one ſhalbe the more circumſpect in his doeing, the other ſhall declare and ſhew the Loathnes that is in him to have any occaſion to be diſpleaſed with him. | And as touching the redreſſe of religion (if it be obſerved and continued) undoubtedly it is a gracious act, notwithſtandinge if all reports be true, ab imbecillis imbecilla expectantur, howbeit Mr. Ben hath informed me that her age, perſonage, and manner præ ſe fert gravitatem, I pray god it be ſoe indeed, ſeyinge that ſhe is preferred to that roome. I underſtand furthermore (which is greatly to my Comfort) that you have ordered your ſelfe to godward as religiouſly, and vertuouſly as any prelate, or father of Chriſt's Church can doe; Wherin ſoe doinge, and perſeveringe there can nothinge more be acceptable to god, more honour to your ſelfe Nor more deſired of your frends Amongſt the which I reckon not my ſelfe the leaſt. Since hitherto I have playd both the part of a Maſter and frend methinketh, yet once more I muſt occupy the ſame deſiringe you to take yt in good part, for ſurely I doe yt upon noe other ground, but for the wealth of your ſoule, and mind; And bicauſe I dare be bolder with you then a great many that mumbell it abroad, and to the intent that I would that the foundation by you meant, and begunne, ſhould take felice, and proſperous ſucceſſe. Surely it is reckoned that much of the good that buildeth the ſame, ſhould not be the beſt acquiſite, and gotten, reckoninge it to come from many a religious houſe unlawfully, bearinge the cloake of kindnes toward the edifyinge of your Colledge; which kindnes cannot ſinke in many a mans heart, to be in them, ſince that thoſe ſame religious houſes would not grant to their Soveraigne in his neceſſity, not by a great deale ſoe much as they have to you for building of your Colledge, Theſe thinges beare ſhrewd apparance, for except they have accuſtomed to have ſome benefitt for it, They nor noe other that ever I heard of have uſed to ſhew that kindnes, Tam enim eſt aliena ab eis ipſa humanitas; But of this caſe your conſcience can be beſt iudge ſemota affectione And ſubſtantiall ſcruteny made of the indeavour of thoſe which you putt in truſt, in medling with the religious houſes, for I truſt verely that if any thinge be amiſs, it is more longe of them then of you, Notwithſtanding I am ſure you know that in talibus Ignorantia non excuſat peccatum; Wherefore I doubt not but that you will make ſuch enſerch and reformation, and need be, that it ſhalbe to the exoneration of your conſcience before god. I pray you my Lord, thinke not that it is upon any diſpleaſure that I write this unto you. For ſurely, it is firſt for my diſcharge afore god, being in the roome that I am in; And ſecondly for the greate zeale I beare unto you, not undeſerved of your behalfe, Wherfore I pray you take it ſo; And I enſure you your fault acknowledged there ſhall remaine in me, noe ſparke of diſpleaſure, truſtinge heereafter you ſhall recompence that with a thinge much more acceptable to me, And thus fare you well advertiſing you that (thanked be god) both I and all my folke be, and have FRrancis is very deſirous to have the Princeſs Mary, and to have her delivered into his Hands, as ſoon as the Peace is concluded. Our King pretends her Non-Age, and will have all, Penſion, &c. concluded firſt. The Queen Regent is earneſt alſo for the preſent Marriage, Saying there is no Danger, for ſhe her ſelf was marryed at xi. And for this Match there might be a deviſe to ſatisfy both Sides, Saying that the Princeſs will be well towards xii. by Auguſt. At that time both Princes ſhould meet at Calais with ſmall Company and Charge, there her Son after the Marriage ſolemnized might abide himſelf for an Hour or leſs with my Lady Princeſs, She ſaid the King her Son was a Man of Honour and Diſcretion, and would uſe no Violence eſpecially, the Father and Mother being ſo nigh, meaning, that Conatus ad Copulam cum illa, quæ eſt proxima pubertati, prudentia ſupplente Ætatem, ſhould make every thing ſure, that neither Party ſhould now vary, So the King her Son might be aſſured of his Wife, and King Henry carry back his Daughter till ſhe ſhould be accounted more able, &c. this Overture our Ambaſſadors think very ſtrange, &c.

Coll. N° 79. B. III. c. 4.

'IN the Name of God, Amen. I Richard Forſter, of the Dioceſe and Juriſdiction of London, before yow, Reverend Father in God, Lord Cuthbert, Biſhop of London, my Ordinary, and Dioceſan, and Commiſſary to the moſt Reverend Father in God, Lord Thomas, of the Title of Saynct Cecile, Prieſt, Cardinal, &c. together with yow, Reverend Fathers in God, Lords Nicholas, Biſhop of Ely, Henry, Biſhop of Saynct Aſſe, John, Biſhop of Lincoln, and John, Biſhop of Bathe and Wellys, likewiſe Commiſſaryes lawfully deputed, opynly confeſſe and knowledge, that I dampnably have erred in the Holy Sacrament of the Aulter, ſayng, belevyng, and affirmyng, That a Prieſt could not Conſecrate the Body of Criſt. Alſo, that I, accompanyed with certayn of the maner of Levying of Martyn Luther, and his Sect, dyd eate Fleſh on the Saturday. The which myn Hereſy, Error, and dampnable Opinyon, in eſpecyal with all other Hereſies agenſt the Faith of Criſt, and our Holy Moder the Churche in General, here before Almighty God, and you myne Ordinary in this Honorable Audience, I voluntary and gladly, as a true Penytent Perſon, utterly renounce, forſake and abjure. Promytting, and I promyſe faithfully unto Almighty God, our foreſaid Mother, the Holy Churche, and to you my foreſaid Ordinary, and ſwere by theſe Holy Evangelies, and Contents of thies Book, here by me Bodyly touched, that from henceforth I ſhall never retorn agen to the ſaid Hereſies, and dampnable Opinions, or any other Hereſies, and dampnable Opinions: And never more reherſe, believe, or affirme the contrary to the Determination of our Holy Mother, the Churche: Nor hide, conceyl, or kepe cloſe, any ſuch Hereſies and dampnable Opinions, nor their Auctors, or Fawtors in Tyme to come: Nor be converſant, or famyliar wytyngly with any Perſon, or Perſons, ſuſpect of Hereſy. But as ſoon as I ſhall know any ſuch Perſons, or their Fautors, I ſhall truly and faithfully detect them, and their Opinions to their Ordinary, for the Tyme being, without any Delay. Submytting my ſelfe mekely, lowly and penytently, to our Holy Mother, the Churche, and your Correction: Beyng contryte and ſorry, and deſiryng Penance for my ſaid Offences, and Treſpaſſes in this Behalf, which I promyſe, by the Vertue of myne Othe ſurely to do, obſerve and fullfyl. William Archbiſhop of Canterbury to Cardinal Wolſey; In behalf of his Juriſdiction of the Prerogative Court, which the Cardinals Officers aſſumed.

N° 80. PLeaſeth it your Grace to underſtond, that I am informyd by the frends of Jane Roper, wyff and executrice to her late husbond John Roper, that ſhe is called to appear afore certain of your Graces Commiſſaries in your Chappel at Torkeplace; for to take upon her as Executrice, or els to refuſe, or to be repellyd as none Executrice, & the Wyl of the ſaid John Roper to be taken as no Wyl, nor ſhe to be taken as Executrice. So it is as I am informyd, that this Teſtamentary cauſe was callyd afore ſuch Commiſſaries as were deputed to examine ſuche Teſtamentary cauſes, as concernyd the Prerogative. Wher by your Graces Commiſſaries and mine, the party thynketh that ſhe might have had indifferent juſtice. And now by ſpecial labour and ſiniſter meanys to be callyd before other Commiſſaries of the Prerogative, ſhe, and ſome other of her Counſel, wryteth to me, that ſhe is otherwys orderyd then according to good juſtice.

It is written to mee alſo, that in caſe your Grace ſhould call al Teſtamentary cauſes to ſpecial Commiſſaries, that finally the Juriſdiction of the Prerogative ſhould be extinctyd: And alſo al Teſtamentary cauſes ſhal only depend upon your Graces pleaſure, and no mannys Wil, to take any effect, but as it ſhal pleaſe your Grace.

I take God to be my Judge, I write none otherwyſe unto your Grace, then others have written or ſpoken to my face. Her frynds ſaith alſo, that ſhe deſireth nothing, but to be admitted as Executrice to her ſaid husbond. And in caſe there be any thing to be reformyd in the Will of the ſaid John Roper, ſhe is therewith contented as the Law & good Conſcience ſhal require.

I would your Grace knew what rumor and obloquy is both in theſe partys, & alſo in London, that no Teſtaments can take effect otherwiſe then your Grace is content. And it hath openly be ſhewyd me by divers men, that it is a great trouble, vexation & inquyetyng to be callyd afore your Graces Commiſſaries & mine: & alſo to be callyd afore your Graces ſpecial Commiſſaries in your ſaid Chappel, or otherwhere at your Graces pleaſure. And many ſaith, that it is a great overſight in me, that I would make ſoche a compoſition with your Grace, which ſhould turn ſo many men to trouble and vexation. I take God to my Judge, I write none otherwiſe unto your Grace. then it hath been ſhewyd to my face, or elſe written unto me by letters. For I find your G. ſo Loving to me and to mine, that I do hide nothing from your G.

Finally, I beſeech your G. as hartily as I can, that it may pleaſe you, that this matter may be deferryd tyl after Eaſter: at which tyme I ſhal wait upon your G. & I doubt not that by meanys of your G. and my waiting on your G. al inconvenience in this behalf may be eſchued, and the partys more ſhortly releved, then by the proceſs of the Law. I am, & alway ſhal be glad, that your G. uſe al thyng at your pleaſure: but I am ſure your G. wul do nothyng contrary to the Compoſition ſealed with your G^s. ſeal, and ſubſcribed with your G^s. hand concerning the Prerogative, which my Church tyme out of mind hath be in poſſeſſion of. I write plainly to your G. for I know right well your G. wyl be beſt content with truth and plain dealyng, or elſe I would not be ſo bold to write write unto your G. in this maner, as God knowyth, who ever preſerve your G. From Charing, the xxiiiith day of February,

At your Graces Commandement,

Will^{m}. Cantuar.

Another letter from the ſaid Archbiſhop to the Cardinal, of the ſame Import.

PLeaſyth it your good G. to underſtond, I am informyd that your G. intendyth to interrupt me in the uſe of the Prerogative, in the which my Predeceſſors & I, in the right of my Church of Canterbury, hath been poſſeſſed by privilege, cuſtome and preſcription, tyme out of mind. And for the interruption of the ſame, your G. is mindyd, as I am informyd, to depute Dr. Alan. Which if your G. ſhould ſo do, conſyderyng that not only al mine Officers of my Courts of the Arches & the Audience, but alſo the Commiſſaries of my Dioces of Kent, & I my ſelf, not only in matters of Suite of Inſtance of partys, but alſo in caſes of correction, depending before me & them, be continually inhibityd by our Officers; I ſhould have nothing left for me & my Officers to do: but ſhould be as a ſhadow and image of an Archbiſhop and Legate, voyd of authority and juriſdiction. Which would be to me perpetual reproch, & to my Church a perpetual prejudice. N° 81.

Wherfore, in as moche as I truſt verily in your great goodnes, that your G. would not be ſo extreme againſt me & the right of my church before namyd, I beſeech your G. the premiſſes conſideryd, to deferr and reſpect this matter, tyl I may have communication in thys behalf with your G. when it ſhal pleaſe you at your leiſure. And your pleaſure known, I wilbe ready to give attendance on your G. Beſeeching you alſo to give Credence to my Chapellane Mayſter Wellis this Berer, in ſoche matters he will ſhow your G. on my bealf. At my Manor of Croydon, the xviiith day of March.

At your Graces Commandement,

The Comming and reſeyving of the Lord Cardinall into Powles for the Eſcaping of Pope Clement the 7th, An. D'ni 1527. a°. R. H. viii xix°.

MEmorandum that the fifth day of January beyng Sonday even in the yeare aforeſaid. The Lord Thomas Woley Cardinall of Yorke, &c. landyd betweene eight of the Clocke and nyne in the morninge at the Black fryars at London with great Company of noblemen and gentlemen, where met with him the Embaſſadours of the Pope, of the Emperour, the French kinge, of Veniſe, of Florence, and of Millain. And ſo procedyd on horſeback unto Powles Church dore where they did alight. And ther the Officers of Armes longing unto the King gave there theire attendance and at his alighting put on there ſoots of Armes. And here was alſo foure of the doctours Prebendarys of the ſayd Powles in Coppes and grey amys which bare a rich Canape over him of Cloth of gould. And ſo the Lord Cardinall proceeded having Themperors Embaſſadour on his right hand, and the French kings on his lefte hand, untill he came to the Arches where was prepared a Bank with Quyſhions and Carpets where the ſaid Lord kneeled, and there mete him in Pontificalibus the Buſhop of London, the Buſhop of St. Aſſe which ſenſyd him: And the Buſhop of Lincoln, the Buſhop of Bathe, the Buſhop of Landaff, the Lord Priour of Weſtm' the Priour of St. Saviours, Thabbotts of Stratford and of Towerhill, the Priour of Coll. N° 82. B. III. c. 5.

of Chriſt-churche, St. Mary Spytell with other to the ſome of xvi miters. and ſo the proceſſion of the hole quyer procedyd fourth having thambaſſadours with him as afore up to the quier and ſo to the high Aultier wher his oblation doon he went with him into his travers, and duringe that the howre was a ſinging he was reveſtyd In pontificalibus, and then he with all the other Prelats the Quere of Powles and his hole Quyre with his ſute of rich Copes went in proceſſion within the ſaid Church the Officers of Arms about him, and next after him thembaſſadours and then the Mayor of London, and the other eſtates and Gentlemen with the Aldermen of the Citie. The proceſſion doon, the Maſſe of the Trinity was begun ſongen by the Byſhop of London The Priour of St. Mary Spittel Goſpeller. The Priour of Chriſt-church piſtoler. The Maſſe doon, the Lord Cardinall with the other Prelatz went into the Quyer Dore where Doctor Capon declaryd the calamities miſeries and the approbrious deeds and works with the great ſuffrance that our Mother the Holy Churche hath ſuffryd, not all only by the Lutherian Sorte which was lyke to have ſortyd to an ungracious effect. But alſo now of late of the great unhappy delings of the Paynymes and Violators of our Chriſtien faith the men of Warr belonging to the Empercur In the ſorrowfull deſtruction of Rome where they like miſcreantz nothing regarding nother God nor ſhame, violentlye tooke and by force Impriſoned our Holy Father the Pope, the which now of late by the helpe of our Lord God which ſe his Church in P'dicion did releve hit againe Inſomuch that our ſaid Holy Father is eſcaped their hands. wherefore the Lord Legats grace by the Kings Comandement hath here cauſed as this day, this Noble Aſſemble to be had to the end that lauds prayſings and congratulations might be gyven by all true Chriſtien people unto Almighty God and the hole Company of Heaven. And thus doing the ſayd Lord Cardinall did give his benediction to all the people. which Doctor Capon ſayd muche more than I can reherſe, and this doon, the ſayd Lord retournyd to the Aultier where the Lord Cardinall began Te Deum the which was ſolemply ſongen with the Kingis trumpetts and ſhalmes aſwell Ingliſhmen as Venyſians which doon every Man repayred home. And the Lord Legat Cardinal went to his place to dynner. and the Embaſſadours with him.

Letter I. By the King.

N° 83. B. III. c. 7.

TRuſty and well beloved Subjects we greet you well. And whereas we have for an high and weighty Cauſe of ours, not only conſulted many and ſubſtantial well learn'd Men within our Realm and without, for certaine Conſiderations our Conſcience moving, we think it alſo very convenient to feel the Minds of you amongſt you in our Univerſity of Oxenford, which be erudite in the Faculty of Divinity, to the intent we may perceive of what Conformity ye be with the others, which marvelouſly both wiſely and ſubſtantially have declared to us their intent and mind: Not doubting but that ye for the Allegiance and Fidelity that ye are bound unto us in, will as ſincerely and truly without any Abuſe declare your Minds and Conſcience in this behalf, as any of the other have done. Wherefore we will and command you, that ye not leaning to wilfull and ſiniſter Opinions of your own ſeveral Minds, not giving Credence to Miſreports and ſiniſter Opinions or Perſwaſions, conſidering we

we be your Soveraigne Leige Lord, totally giving your true Mind and Affection to the true Overture of Divine Learning in this behalf, do ſhew and declare your true and juſt Learning in the ſaid Cauſe, like as ye will abide by; wherin ye ſhall not only pleaſe Almighty God, but alſo us your Leige Lord. And we for your ſo doing ſhall be to you and our Univerſity there ſo Good and Gracious a Soveraigne Lord for the ſame, as ye ſhall perceive it well emploi'd to your well Fortune to come. In caſe you do not uprightly according to Divine Learning hand your ſelves herein, ye may be aſſured, that we not without great Cauſe, ſhall ſo quickly and ſharply look to your unnaturall Miſdemeanour herein, that it ſhall not be to your Quietneſs and Eaſe hereafter. Wherefore we heartily pray you, that according both to Duty to God and your Prince, you ſet apart all untrue and ſiniſter Informations, and accommodate your ſelves to the meer Truth as it becometh true Subjects to do; aſſuring you that thoſe that do, ſhall be eſteemed and ſet forth, and the contrary neglected and little ſet by: Truſting that now you know our Mind and Pleaſure, we ſhall ſee ſuch Conformitie among you, that we ſhall hereof take great Conſolation and Comfort, to the great Allegement of our Conſcience; willing and commanding you among you to give perfect Credence to my Lord of Lincolne our Confeſſour in this behalfe and matter: and in all things which he ſhall declare unto you or cauſe to be declared in our behalfe, to make unto us either by him or the Authentick Letters full Anſwere and Reſolution, which your Duty's well remembred, We doubt not but that it ſhall be our high Contentation and Pleaſure. Given under, &c.

Letter II. By the King.

TRuſty and Well-beloved, We greet you well. And of late being informed, to our no little Marvell and Diſcontentation, that a great Part of the youth of that our Univerſity with contentious Factions and Manner, daily combineing together, neither regarding their Duty to Us their Soveraigne Lord, nor yet conforming themſelves to the Opinions and Orders of the vertuous, wiſe, ſage, and profound learned Men of that Univerſity, willfully to ſtick upon the Opinion to have a great Number of Regents and Non-Regents to be aſſociate unto the Doctors, Proctors, and Batchelors of Divinity, for the Determiuation of our Queſtion; which we believe hath not been often ſeen, that ſuch a Number of right ſmall Learning in regard to the other, ſhould be join'd with ſo famous a Sort, or in a manner ſtay their Seniors in ſo weighty a Cauſe; which as we think ſhould be no ſmall Diſhonour to our Univerſity there, but moſt eſpecially to you the Seniors and Rulers of the ſame, aſſureing you that this their unnatural and unkind Demeanour is not only right much to our Diſpleaſure, but much to be marvelled of, upon what Ground and Occaſion they being our meere Subjects, ſhould ſhewe themſelves more unkind and wilfull in this Matter, than all other Univerſities, both in this and all other Regions do. Finally, We truſting in the Dexterity and Wiſdom of you and other the ſaid Diſcreet and Subſtantial Learned Men of that Univerſity, be in perfect Hope, that ye will conduce and frame the ſaid young Perſons unto good Order and Conformity, as it becometh you to do. Wherefore we be deſirous to hear with incontinent Diligence, and doubt you not we ſhall regard the Demeanour of every one of the Univerſity, according to their Merits and Deſerts. And if the Youth of the Univerſity will play Maſteries, as they begin to do, We doubt not but that they ſhall well perceive, that non eſt bonum irritare Crabrones. Given under, &c.

Letter III.

To our Truſty and Well beloved, the Commiſſary-Regents, and Non-Regents of our Univerſity of Oxon.

Nº 85. B. III. c. 7.

TRuſty and Well-beloved, We greet you well. And whereas by ſundry of our Letters, ſent and delivered at ſundry times by the Hands of our Counſellors unto you, with Credence declared unto you by the ſame, we have only required and made inſtance unto you, for the obtaining of that, which at the leaſt Deſire of any Chriſtian Man ye be bound and oblig'd to do; that is to ſay, to declare and ſhew your Opinions and Sentence in ſuch a Doubt, as upon the Diſſolution and Determination whereof, dependeth the Tranquility, Repoſe, and Quiet of our Conſcience, we cannot a little marvell that you neither having reſpect to our Eſtate, being your Prince and Soveraigne Lord; nor yet remembring ſuch Gratuities and Benefits as we have always ſhew'd unto you, as well to the particular Wealth of Diverſe as to the Body of that our Univerſity, without any correſpondency ſhew'd on their Behalfe againe, have hitherto delay'd and referr'd not only to ſend us your Determination and Reſolution to our Demand and Queſtion, but alſo refuſed to take Order, or enter into any Way or Meane, whereby you might declare or ſhew unto us, that ye be of Mind and Determination to endeavour your ſelfe for an Accompliſhment of our Deſire in that Behalfe. And ſo much the more marvell we at this your Manner of Delayes, that our Univerſity of Cambridge hath within far ſhorter Time not only agreed upon the Faſhion and Manner to make Anſwere unto us effectually, and with diligence following the ſame; but hath alſo 8 Days ſince ſent unto us their Anſwere under Common Seale, plainly determining, Prohibitionem eſſe Divini & naturalis Juris, ne frater Uxorem fratris etiam mortui ſine liberis ducat Uxorem. For the ſearching of the Truth in which Matter, if ye had before this Time condeſcended upon the Manner and Faſhion convenient in that Behalf, we could then have taken any Delay afterward, upon any other cold Pretence made, but in good Part: Whereas now the refuſeing to agree upon any ſuch Order, and denying to do that which ſhould be but the Entrie into the Matter for declaration of your Forwardneſs, Good Will, and Diligence: We can't otherwiſe think of you, but that you neither behave your ſelves towards Us, as our Merits towards you have deſerved, as good Subjects to a kind Prince and Sovereigne Lord; as by the Learning ye profeſſe, ye be obliged and bound. Wherefore reſolving this in our Mind, and yet nevertheleſs conſidering you to be there by our Authority and Grant, as a Body Politique, in the ruleing whereof in Things to be done in the Name of the Whole, the Number of the Private Suffrages doth prevaile, and being loth to ſhewe our Diſpleaſure, whereof we have ſo great Cauſe miniſtred unto us, unto the Whole in general; whereas the Fault perchance conſiſteth and remaineth but in light and willful Heads; for the tender Conſideration we bear to Learned Men, and the great Deſire we have to nouriſh, maintaine, and favour thoſe that are Good; have thought convenient to ſend unto you theſe Letters by our Truſty and right Well-beloved Clarke and Counſeller, Mr. Edwarde Fox, truſting verily that ye which be Heads and Rulers there, well conſidering and weighing your Dutyes in the Accompliſhment of our Requeſt, for the ſearching the Truth in ſuch a Cauſe, as touching your Prince and Sovereigne Lord, our Soule, and the Wealth of this our Realme: and your great Lack and Blame with juſt Cauſe of High Diſpleaſure to be worthily conceiv'd by us in the denyall and ſlack doing thereof, will ſo order and accommodate the Faſhion, and paſſing ſuch Things as ſhould proceed from that Univerſity in this Caſe, as the Number of the private Suffrages given without Reaſon, prevaile not againſt the Heads, Rulers, ſaid Sage Fathers, to the Detriment, Hindrance, and Inconvenience of the Whole. But ſo to examine, try, and weigh the Opinions and Minds of the Multitude, as the Importance of the Matter doth require: Wherein we doubt not but your Body is eſtabliſhed in ſuch wiſe, that there be left waies and means to the Heads and Rulers how to eſchew and avoid ſuch Inconveniences, when they ſhall chance: As we truſt ye that be Heads and Rulers for the comprobation and declaration of particular good Minds, ye will not faile to do accordingly, and ſo by your Diligence to be ſhew'd hereafter, to redeem the Errors and Delaies paſt. The Favour we beare to the Maintenance of Learning, we would be very glad, as our ſaid well-beloved Councellour can ſhew unto you on our Behalfe; unto whom we will you give firme credence: Given under our Signet at our Caſtle of Windſor.

Extract from Mr. Bayle.

The Opinion of Corn. Agrippa concerning the Divorce. V. Bayle.

I Have read in the work of a very learned man that Cranmer having travelled into Germany, where he acquired the acquaintance of the famous Cornelius Agrippa diſcourſed with him about the Affair of the divorce, and repreſented the neceſſity of it ſo well to him, that that great man eagerly defending the Proſecutions of Henry, was very ill treated by the Emperour, and died in Priſon. He that criticis'd that work, anſwer'd among other things; 1ſt, That R. Wakefield who wrote at that time for Henry the Eighth ſaid poſitively that he anſwers the book of the Biſhop of Rocheſter, and another that is believed to be of Vives, or Agrippa. 2. That Agrippa died in France, and was no ways Priſoner in Germany. I find ſome things in Agrippa's Letters, which perſwade me he was not of Cranmer's opinion. His Imperial Majeſty's Ambaſſador at London wrote to Agrippa the 26 of June 1531, to exhort him to maintain the Queen's Intereſt; and put him in mind of a Paſſage of the Vanity of Sciences wherein Henry the 8th is concerned. Hodie adhuc neſcio cui regi perſuaſum audio, ut liceat ſibi jam plus viginti annorum uxorem dimittere, & nubere pellici. Agrippa anſwer'd that he wou'd willingly engage himſelf in that undertaking provided the Emperor wou'd ſend him his Orders or his permiſſion. He ſhow'd very ſtrongly that he deteſted thoſe cowardly Divines who approved that divorce. Here is what he ſays concerning the Sorbonne. Non eſt mihi incognitum queis artibus res hæc apud Pariſiorum Sorbonam tractata eſt, quæ cæteris tanti ſceleris auſum temerario porrexit exemplo Vix me continere queo quin imitatus Poetam illum exclamem, Dicite Sorbonici in Theologia quid valet aurum; Quantum Pietatis & fidei illorum pectore clauſum putabimus quorum venalis magis quam ſincera Conſcientia eſt, qui extimeſcendas univerſo orbi Chriſtiano determinationes auro venales fecerunt, ac ſervatam tot annis fidei & ſinceritatis opinionem, nunc tandem extrema avaritiæ infamia corruperunt? Nevertheleſs he repreſents the danger to which he ſhou'd expoſe himſelf by writing againſt a Divorce that ſo many Divines had approved, who, ſays he, wiſh me ill becauſe of my Vanity of Sciences. The Ambaſſador return'd to the Charge put him in hopes that the Queen of England wou'd write to the Emperor, or to the Queen of Hungary concerning the order to write on Coll. N° 87. B. III. c. 7.

that matter, and explain'd to him why Eraſmus, Vives, and other good Pens at that time ought not to be choſen before him. Agrippa reckon'd himſelf engaged in that work; for in the Letter that he wrote to the Queen of Hungaria after he retired to Bonn he repreſented how he applied himſelf altogether to his Office of Hiſtoriographer, altho' he had not yet reapt any profit by it. I collect Memoirs, ſays he, for the Hiſtory of the war of Italy and Hungary, and I have a greater deſign in my head beſides that which is to write for your Aunt Q. Catherine. Sed longe majus his negotium pro veſtri ſanguinis decore, pro tua, inquam, matertera Angliæ celebratiſſima Regina meis humeris impoſitum ſuſcepi, in quo licet multi hactenus operam ſuam collocarunt, nullus adhuc nodum rei diſſecuit. I believe that deſign was never perform'd; the Author being diſgrac'd at the Imperial Court, doubtleſs thought it not proper to expoſe himſelf to the Indignation of the K's of England.

N° 88. B. III. c. 8. Paper Office. Anno Dom. 1527.

SAlva ſit tua Celſitudo: Jam conſultis omnibus iſtis, ut aiunt, mutis Magiſtris, quos ad manum habere potui, diligenterque ſingulorum excuſſis Opinionibus, & Rationibus expenſis, comperio, quod & tuæ ſublimitati nuper ſcripſi, magnum inter eos eſſe diſſidium, pluribus aſſerentibus id eſſe Divino Jure prohibitum; aliis contra pertinaciter affirmantibus id Divino Juri nullo pacto repugnare. Et profecto penſitatis utrinque Rationibus æqua lance, mihi videor perſpicere facilem Enodationem omnium Argumentationum, quas illi producunt, qui negant id divino Jure licere; aliorum vero non ita facilem, ut & nunc mihi perſuaſiſſimum ſit non poſſe quavis ratione ſolida comprobari; quod prohibitum ſit Divino Jure (quod hodie vim habet) ne viz. Frater defuncti Fatris, abſque Liberis, Conjugem accipiat. Quod ſi verum ſit, & etiam non dubito certiſſimum eſſe, quis jam, attenta plenitudine Poteſtatis, quam Chriſtus Pontifici contulit, negare queat poſſe Pontificem diſpenſare, quatenus ob aliquam arduam cauſam, Frater Fratris ſui defuncti ſine Liberis, Uxorem ſibi copulet: Cæterum ut concedam pares utriuſque partis eſſe Rationes, & neutras alteris præponderare, ſed velut in Æquilibrio ſtare ſuſpenſas, quum poſſint utrinque pari facilitate ſolvi, me tamen iſtud impelleret, ut ſim in partes Pontificis inclinatior atque propenſior, quod ſciam iſtud ab utraque parte tributum amplitudini Poteſtatis Pontificiæ, nimirum ut ambiguos Scripturarum locos, auditis in ea re Theologorum & Juriſperitorum ſententiis, liceat interpretari; alioquin fruſtra dixiſſet ei Chriſtus, quicquid ſolveris in Terra erit ſolutum in Cœlis, & quicquid alligaveris in Terra erit alligatum in Cœlis. Quum igitur apertiſſime conſtat Pontificem haud ſemel facto ſuo declaraſſe, quod liceat in prædicto caſu diſpenſare cum ſecundo Fratre, hoc ſolum me vehementer moveret ad aſſentiendum, etiamſi potiores Rationes & Probationes non attuliſſet, ſed eſſent, ut dixi, pares in Aſſertionibus ſuis.

Verum nunc cum plane perſpiciam & Rationes efficaciores eſſe pro parte eorum, qui Pontificis Poteſtatem in hac re tuentur, quumque præter hoc, advertam quibus verbis & quam pleniſſime tradita ſit Pontifici Poteſtas a Chriſto, quum & denique clariſſimis Teſtimoniis intelligam ejuſmodi Diſpenſationem effectui ſæpius commendatam, nullus omnino ſcrupulus mihi ſupereſt, quin iſtud Pontifici liceat, quatenus alterius Fratris, abſque Liberis defuncti, Conjugem accipiat. Habet itaque paucis tua Celſitudo quid ego ſuper hac re ſentiam, jam reliquum eſt ut Celſitudini tuæ proſperam & longævam optem Inocolumitatem.

DOmine Gregori, Poſt meam cordatiſſimam Commendationem, poſt ultimum veſtrum a me diſceſſum ex compendio ad vos ſcripſi, ut ob nonnullas maximi momenti cauſas procurare differetis quod de Regiæ Majeſtatis negotio in quibuſdam nobis traditis Commiſſionibus continebatur, quoad rurſus vobis ſignificarem quid ea in re fieri vellemus. Ubi vero ad Regiam Majeſtatem rediiſſem, variis crebriſq; cum ea habitis ſermonibus, adeo abunde ac diſtincte illi aperui quam ex animo ac diligenter, & quam ſincere & ex fide, diu noctuque exoptetis eidem Regiæ Majeſtati inſervire; neque ullum unquam laborem, periculum aut moleſtiam vos velle recuſare, ut omni ſtudio ac viribus id fideliter præſtare poſſitis quod illi gratum aut acceptum quoquo modo eſſe poſſe cognoveritis, omnemq; induſtriam vos eſſe adhibituros, quo veſtræ fidei curæque commiſſa optatum finem conſequantur; quem veſtrum animum propenſiſſima voluntate ſic ſub mea fide Regiæ Majeſtati inſinuavi, ut meam hanc relationem atque ſponſionem pectori ſuo conſtantiſſime adfixerit, certiſſimaque fiducia concepit, omnino futurum, ut noſtræ tunc expectationi quacunque in re & occaſione reſpondeatis: Ex quo fit, ut veſtræ operæ, curæ atque prudentiæ ea nunc tractanda & procuranda committat, quibus nihil magis cordi habeat, nihil ardentius exoptet, aut quod majoris ſit momenti vel gravioris ſucceſſus, nec ullum habet Conſiliarium, utcunque intimum, cui graviora poſſit committere. Quum itaque, me intercedente & procurante, nunc vos Regia Majeſtas præ cæteris ad hoc fidei adſciverit & elegerit, ut in re tam gravi fideliſſima veſtra opera ac miniſterio utatur, fidemque illi meam de vobis jam ei adſtrinxerim, nihil ambigens quin poſtquam ejus animam ac voluntatem cognoveritis, fueritiſque abunde inſtructi, quam maximi hæc, quæ nunc expono, ſunt momenti, utpote quæ potiſſimum concernunt Regiæ conſcientiæ exonerationem animæque ſuæ ſalutem, vitæ conſervationem & incolumitatem, Regii Stemmatis continuationem, publicumque commodum & quietem ſubditorum omnium, eorum pariter qui ſub ejus imperio nunc vivunt, vel qui poſtea unquam in hoc ſuo Regno vivent; quumque perſpiciam ſedulum veſtrum Miniſterium hoc in negotio impendendum omnino redundaturum eſſe in præcipuam veſtram exaltationem & utilitatem, poſtquam infelices iſtos jam paſſos ſucceſſus occaſionem ſe obtuliſſe videtis, qua veſtra familia hujuſmodi operam huic Sereniſſimo Principi navare poſſit, quod ſtatum omnem veſtrum in longe meliorem, quam antea ſit, haud dubie reſtituturus & adaucturus, certiſſimum compertiſſimumque habeo, quod ob has tam urgentes cauſas & tam graves ſucceſſuros effectus, adeo toto pectore vires omnes veſtras induſtria ac ſtudio tantæ conficiendæ rei addicetis, ut omnia queatis ad optatum exitum perducere; atque ita promiſſum fidemque meam præſtabitis, tam optimum Regiæ Majeſtatis inſtitutum juvabitis, ejus deſiderio & expectationi omni ex parte ſatisfacietis, & præter bene peractæ rei honorem & laudem comparandam, mercedem quoque reportabitis tanti Principis liberalitate dignam, quæ certiſſime cedet in perpetuum veſtrum totiuſque veſtræ familiæ commodum & incrementum: Et quum jam mihi perſuadeam futurum omnino ut officiis actionibuſque veſtris ſitis promiſſis ſponſionibuſque meis omnino ſatisfacturi, ad id pluribus verbis neutiquam adhortabor, proinde ad rem nunc ipſam venio. Ante hoc tempus vobis aperui, quemadmodum Regia Majeſtas, partim aſſiduo ſuo ſtudio & eruditione, partim relatu ac judicio multorum Theologorum, & in omni Doctrinæ genere doctorum virorum aſſeveratione, exiſtimans conſcientiam ſuam non eſſe ſufficienter exoneratam, quod in conjugio exiſteret cum Regina, Deumque primo & ante omnia ac animæ ſuæ quietem & ſalutem reſpiciens, mox vero ſuæ Succeſſionis ſecuritatem, perpendenſque accurate quam gravia hinc mala provenirent, aperte ſentit, quam maxime futurum ſit Deo moleſtum, inhonorificum ſibi, & ingratum apud homines, ſuiſque ſubditis periculoſum, ex hoc non ſufficienti conjugio, ſi deprehendatur dicta Majeſtas ſciens ac volens in eo perſtare, & vivere præter modum debitum, juxtaque ritum & legitima Eccleſiæ Statuta: quibus igitur ex cauſis longo jam tempore, intimo ſuæ conſcientiæ remorſu, ſummique Dei rationem habens, exiſtimat animam ſuam læſam & offenſam, adeo quod, quum in ſuis conatibus actionibuſque quibuſcumque Deum potiſſimum ſibi ſemper proponat, Secundo, Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro ſolita veſtra dexteritate aperietis id quod in his ipſis literis ad vos ſcripſi concernens hujus Matrimonii inſufficientiam, ab hiſq; rationibus & cauſis fundamentum capietis, quæ ſuperius enarrantur, integrumq; diſcurſum ejus Sanctitati declarabitis, non omittentes intrinſecum dolorem, conſcientiæ ſcrupulum, Dei rationem, Maſculæ prolis reſpectum, hujus Regni bonum, & alia omnia ut ſuperius ſcripta ſunt: addentes inſuper, nihil vehementius optari a tota Regni Nobilitate, ſubditiſque omnibus nullo diſcrimine, quam e Regiæ Majeſtatis corpore Maſculum hæredem a Deo ſibi dari, in perpetuam conſolationem, gaudium, quietem, ac totius Regni ſecuritatem, poſteritatiſque firmiſſimum columen; prudentiorumq; opinionem eſſe, quod Deus omnipotens a tanto bono concedendo divinam ſuam manum ſubſtrahit, ob errorem, culpamque in dicto Matrimonio hactenus admiſſam, quæ niſi mature corrigatur, graviora ex hac occaſione in hoc Regno mala ſuccedent, quam antea unquam fuerunt audita; etenim ſi hoc negotium in ſuſpenſo & indiſcuſſum relinqueretur, hujuſmodi poſſent quæſtiones, controverſiæ & contentiones ac factiones poſt defunctum Regem exoriri, ob Regni hæreditatem, quæ non poſſent in multorum ævo reſtingui, ut antea olim ex cauſa longe leviori accidit, neq; ex re tam ambigua, tam ſævæ olim depopulationes, bella, inteſtinæq; controverſiæ exortæ, & ad multum tempus continuatæ ſunt, in extremum & ferme ultimum Regni excidium; quæ quum tam gravia ſunt, Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter veluti pater & gubernator Chriſtianitatis proſpicere ex officio debet, & quibuſcunque modis poteſt, pro viribus adniti & conari, ut hæc Regna ac dominia que nunc ſuperſunt in fide & obedientia Eccleſiæ aſſidue contineat, inter quæ, Deo ſit laus, hoc Regnum haud recenſendum eſt inter minima, ſed tanquam illud quod hactenus juvavit, & poſthac pro tuto præſidio ſemper haberi poterit, adverſus ea quæ cedere poſſent in Eccleſiæ Catholicæ vel Sanctæ fidei detrimentum.

Tertio, Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro proponetis præſentem Eccleſiæ ſtatum, rogabitiſque ut in mentem velit redigere, quo nunc in ſtatu ſuæ Sanctitatis res cum Chriſtianis Principibus verſentur, cumq; privatæ contentiones, quæ illi ſunt cum magna eorum Principum parte, addita & ambitione immoderatoq; regum appetitu & ex arbitrio ſuo, Temporale jus omne atq; Spirituale tractandi, Eccleſiaſticamq; Juriſdictonem & Authoritatem invertendi, eo certe animo ut ſedis Apoſtolicæ dignitatem extinguant; his omnibus in unum connexis ac bene conſideratis, ejus Sanctitas manifeſte cognoſcet, Principem nullum, neq; portum, aut refugium tam tutum, cui in omnem eventum queat inhærere, ſibi relictum eſſe, quam hæc Regia Majeſtas eſt quæ nihil ſibi vendicat, nil ambit, quod præjudicio eſſe poſſit dictæ Sanctitati, ſed ejus, Apoſtolicæque ſedis, ſemper fuit, eſt, eſſeq; decrevit firmiſſimum ſcutum, tutiſſimumq; propugnaculum, ita ſuas actiones cum cæteris Principibus firmans & connectens, ut ſemper ex ea occaſione in ſuam hanc optimam ſententiam reliquos poſſit attrahere, adeo

Tertio, probe notandum eſt, quod res nunc aperta & petita, a Regiaq; Majeſtate tantopere optata, ex tam magno conſcientiæ ſcrupulo, cordiſq; remorſu oritur, ut unicuiq; debita ſit, quantumcunq; minori quam Regia Majeſtas ſit de Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro merito. Quocirca judicat, & pro re comperta ſibi perſuadet, quod ſi ullo meritorum vel officiorum ratio habeatur, nunc ipſius Sanctitas huic ſuo deſiderio & petitioni benigniſſime liberrimeque adjuvet, nullo prorſus dubio, difficultate, contradictione aut mora injecta. Negotiumque hujuſmodi eſt, ut cognita Diſpenſationis inſufficientia, quamvis id non requiſiviſſet Rex, ultro proponi offerrique debuiſſet ab eadem Sanctitate tanquam a Patre Spirituali, in ejus ſalutis & conſcientiæ beneficium.

In gratiam igitur & contemplationem præmiſſorum omnium inſtantiſſime vehementiſſimeque a Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro requiretis & contendetis, ut dubio, metuque omni ſepoſito, reſpicere velit ad cauſæ ſtatum, & ad ea quæ ſubſequuntur videantur, rationemq; habere infinitorum commodorum, quæ ex hac re ſuæ Sanctitati Apoſtolicæq; ſedi inde provenient, rem hanc ſtatim, abſq; temporis tractu, & cauſæ circumſtantia, nemini eam aperiens, libere concedere & indulgere nulliq; communicare ſpecialem Commiſſionem ad hunc effectum & finem confectam in forma Brevis concedere, & ad me dirigere, Facultatem addens, ut mihi liceat quoſcunq; voluero ad me vocare, mihiq; aſciſcere ad procedendum in hac cauſa, & inquirendum de dictæ Bullæ ac Diſpenſationis ſufficientia, juxta formam ac tenorem expreſſum in quodam libello hujus rei gratia confecto; quem cum his ad vos mitto, ſic in debita forma conſcriptum & digeſtum ut non ſit futurum opus quo denuo ab ullo alio exſcribatur, ſi forſan periculoſum putaretur eam rem cuiq; patefacere vel in dubium aut dilationem protractum iri negotium, ſi ulli ex Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri officiariis committeretur rurſus conſcribendum; ſed quod in hujuſmodi periculi eventum poſſit ejus Sanctitas ſine ullo diſcrimine vel alicujus cognitione eam dicto libello ſignaturam, ſigillumq; apponere, ut aperte inde conſtet, Pontificis meram voluntatem ſic eſſe, illiuſque Signaturæ ac Sigilli vigore, legitime & ſufficienter poſſim ego procedere ad inquiſitionem de dictæ Diſpenſationis inſufficientia, cognitionem & aliarum cauſarum & rationum, quæ adduci poſſunt pro dicti Matrimonii invaliditate.

Item cum his ad vos mitto Diſpenſationem in debita forma confectam & ſcriptam in modum Brevis, ſecreto impetrandam & expediendam eidem Signaturam vel Sigillum apponendo, vel alio quovis modo valido: Et quamvis ex hac re multa pendeant, ob quæ iſta requiruntur, & quæ, Deo favente, neutiquam timenda ſunt; Attamen Regia Majeſtas exemplo innitens, & recordationi complurium rerum, quæ olim præteritis temporibus fuerunt injuſte aſſerta, vel adducta, in animo habens cauſas ſuas omnes abſq; ulla controverſia aut difficultate ad perfectum finem perducere, & ne ullo quovis pretextu, argumento aut colore, poſtmodum emergente perturbarentur, hoc a Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro requirit, veluti rem neceſſariam, qua nullo pacto carere queat; firmiter confidens, quod Sanctitas ſua, benigne atq; amanter iſti ejus deſiderio aſſentiet, & concedet ſine ullo obſtaculo dictam Commiſſionem, juxta formam quam Regia Majeſtas petit & eodem tempore, atque hæc omnia ita benigne ac liberaliter expedire, ſecretiori & validiori quo fieri poſſit modo, quo optatus finis ſubſequi poſſit in eum effectum, laudabileque propoſitum, de quo ſuperius dictum eſt; Qua ex occaſione Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter in perpetuum ſibi adſtringet, indiſſolubiliq; amicitiæ vinculo hanc Regiam Majeſtatem ſibi alligabit, quæ nulli labori, periculo, opibus, Regno, ſubditis, nec ipſi ſanguini parcens, ab ejus Sanctitate nunquam divelletur aut eam deſeret, ſed totis ſuis viribus conſtantiſſime ſemper illi adhærebit, tum in ſuæ ſanctitatis & Cardinalium liberationem, tum in hoſtibus perſequendis; ad quem finem, magnam jam pecuniarum ſummam ad Regem Chriſtianiſſimum miſit, pro illo Italiæ exercitu continuando, & præter id in animo ſtatutum habet, quod niſi Cæſar de dicta Sanctitate liberanda conſentire, & ad Pacem devenire voluerit, bellum gerere adverſus adverſus has inferiores Cæſaris Regiones & Dominia, quo vehementius urgeat Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri liberationem, Eccleſiæq; in priſtinam ſuam dignitatem, & authoritatem reſtitutionem, eaque de ſe indicia exhibebit ut univerſo orbi manifeſtum ſit futurum, dictam ſuam Majeſtatem eſſe ſólidum perfectum amicum, filium obſequentiſſimum & ejus devotiſſimum; a qua pectoris ſui ſententia, nullo theſauro, nullis opibus, nullis Regnis, ſeu Ditionibus, vel occaſione quacunq; unquam abducetur, ſed ex filiali ſua obſervantia & in Chriſtianam Religionem zelo, innatoq; erga ſedem Apoſtolicam ſtudio, & præcipuo quodam affectu, quem Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro gerit: in compenſationem quoq; gratitudinis, quam tam avide in hoc ſuo negotio ab éjus Sanctitate expectat, decretum prorſus habet in conſtantiſſimo hoc indiſſolubili amicitiæ & conjunctionis vinculo ſinceriſſimo perſtare, id quod dicta Regia Majeſtas Sanctiſſimum Dominum noſtrum vehementiſſime rogat, ut probe velit in omnem partem librare, viciſſemq; efficere, ut ex Regiæ petitionis indulgentia palam conſtet parem benevolentiam & humanitatem a Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro ex mutuo præſtari.

Hac autem cauſa ipſius Sanctitati a vobis, ut dictum eſt, expoſita & declarata, neutiquam dubitandum eſt, quin benevole atq; libenter ſtatim adnuat Regiæ Majeſtatis expectationi & quod huic aſſentiet, dictam Commiſſionem ſecreto modo ipſa concedens, neminem de ea re, ut dictum eſt, participem faciens; qui modus ſervandus eſt, ſi videritis hæc effici non poſſe, niſi cum periculo quin hæc res eis communicetur, qui eam ſint interturbaturi, vel ſi id præſtare fuerit in Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri arbitrio, tunc ejus Sanctitas non gravetur, per Brevia, vel per Bullas, prout validius & magis ſufficiens fore judicaverit, præmiſſa omnia concedere, ad quod veſtram omnem induſtriam, prudentiam, ſtudium, diligentiamq; adhibebitis: Sic omnia prudenter ac circumſpecte agentes, ne in diſcrimen deveniatur negotium hoc his detegendi, qui illud vel impedire vel retardare forſan voluerint aut poterint, ſed potius quam ad id periculi res deducatur contenti eritis ſola dictorum libellorum Signatura, in eam formam confecta, quum ex ea palam conſtet, Pontificis aſſenſum in id actualiter concurriſſe, qui poſtea recentioribus ſcriptis, ſi ita opus fuerit, firmius confirmari corroborariq; poterit.

Et quoniam incertum eſt, utrum ante veſtrum ad Pontificem acceſſum, ejus Sanctitas fuerit in ſuam libertatem reſtituta, necne, quæ forſan libera non tanti faciet Regiæ Majeſtatis amicitiam & conjunctionem, vel allegabit, ſe nec audere nec poſſe, ex ſuis cum Cæſare conventionibus iſta concedere, nec ſecreto ullo modo, vel ullo colore, quod ea in re feciſſet apud Cæſarem juſtificare, & potuiſſet antea in Regiæ Majeſtatis auxilio pro ſua liberatione ſperans, dum adhuc detineretur captivus; eo caſu Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro in mentem redigetis, quam parum fidere poſſit ullis ſibi factis a Cæſare promiſſis, quum nulla in parte redundare poſſit in commodum aut ſecuritatem, ſed ſolum in extremum excidium ac detrimentum ſedis Apoſtolicæ; & licet ad breve tempus multa videretur Cæſar in ejus Sanctitatis gratiam facturus, compertiſſimum tamen ſemper Pontifici eſſe debet Cæſarianos ea facere, ſemperq; facturos, quæ Cæſarem poſſint exaltare, & tendent ad uſurpationem potius & depreſſionem ſtatus Eccleſiaſtici, quam ad ejus continuationem, vel conſervationem; & quotiens adverſus Eccleſiam iſta tentarentur, Regia Majeſtas in hac ſua petitione paſſa repulſam, quæ alioquin ejus Sanctitati in omnem eventum firmiſſime adhæſiſſet, & alios ſuos confœderatos in eandem ſententiam pertraxiſſet, quam, ea deficiente, in contrarium facile poſſent allici, quo animo futura ſit, & quam bene ſuum affectum & obſervantiam collocaſſe exiſtimatura: ſummæ eſt pradentiæ omnia conſiderare.

Haud incognitum præterea eſt Sanctiſſimum Domium noſtrum ad Cæſaris inſtantiam, quum non multam ab ejus Sanctitate gratiam promeritus eſſet, ei conceſſiſſe Diſpenſationem & Abſolutionem a jurejurando ab illo præſtito, de ducenda in Conjugem Domina Principiſſa, nullo ut par fuiſſet a Regia Majeſtate habito, ſeu petito conſenſu, non obſtante quod Cæſar in validiſſima forma, non ſolum præſtito jurejurando, ſed cautione & Eccleſiaſticarum cenſurarum & pœnarum adhibita, quod perſtringeretur de dicto Matrimonio perimplendo, ac ſi Pontifiex contentus eſſe potuit, tantum ei oſtendere gratitudinem, quum veluti hoſtis indies certior tunc poterat haberi, & qui majora parabat quam juſte poſſet optare, ſuis petitionibus, Regia Majeſtate inconſulta, neutiquam parcens, quanto propenſius ejus Sanctitas adnuere debet ejus Principis voto, cujus fidem & obſervantiam vere filialem ſæpe experta eſt. Verum tamen ſi Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter difficulter viſus fuerit poſſe adduci, ut in meam Perſonam dictæ Commiſſioni aſſentiat, allegans quod non ſum indifferens, cui ex ſuæ Sanctitatis honore hoc negotium committi poſſit, cum Regiæ Majeſtati ſum ſubditus & intimus conſiliarius, tunc tamdiu perſiſtetis ea in re, quoad vobis viſum fuerit conveniens, negotii expeditionem non ideo protrahentes, aut differentes, ſed inſtantes ut hujuſmodi Commiſſio concedatur; affirmabitiſq; me pro re nulla quantumlibet grandi, nullo favore, aut commodo, quicquam effecturum eſſe, quod averſetur officio meo, & erga Chriſtum præſtitæ profeſſioni, neq; unquam a recto, vero, juſtoq; tramite digreſſurum; Et quin Cardinalis ſim & Apoſtolicæ ſedis de latere Legatus, ejus Sanctitatis honor, integraque conſcientia, a me omnino conſervaretur, ex hujuſmodique conceſſa Commiſſione, omni ex parte exoneraretur. Tandem ſi ad hoc, nullis rationibus Pontifex potuerit adduci, ab ejus Sanctitate requiretis, ut dictam velit Commiſſionem concedere in perſonam Domini Staphylei Decani Rotæ, qui & vir indifferens eſt, & hujuſmodi rei ob eruditionem accommodatus, nullo pacto omittentes Diſpenſationis expeditionem, ut dictum eſt; & hujus rei gratia Commiſſionem nunc ad vos mitto, in debita forma confectam & paratam, quæ ſignetur ad dictum Dominum Staphyleum directa, quam Sanctiſſimo Domino noſtro reddetis, caſu quo alia nequeat obtineri, rogabitiſq; ut cum dicta Diſpenſatione eam velit concedere. Et quoniam fieri poſſit quod dum fieret mentio de me excipiendo, forſitan ejus Sanctitas aliquem alium quam Dominum Staphyleum nominaret, ad quem Commiſſio hujuſmodi dirigeretur, hoc vero in loco tenaciſſime inſiſtetis, firmiterq; inhærebitis ei rei, nec in alium aliquem virum exterum ullo pacto conſentientes, ſed ſolum pro eodem Domino Staphyleio inſtantes, ejus Sanctitatem ſummis precibus vehementiſſime rogantes, & rationibus omnibus ſuadentes, ne alium ullum nominare velit, aſſerentes quod quum in Inſtructionibus veſtris non contineatur, nec de alio ullo fiat mentio, niſi illo, me recuſato, iterum atq; iterum ab eadem Sanctitate petetis, ut nomine hujus Auditoris Rotæ hæc fit & expediatur commiſſio, vos nec audere nec poſſe vobis præſcriptos fines tranſgredi.

De Regii vero deſiderii ac petitionis fruſtratione ſuper dicta commiſſione obtinenda dicetis unum & idem eſſe, hanc illi denegare, vel alii concedere quam in veſtris Inſtructionibus contineatur, non quod Regia Majeſtas de aliorum rectitudine aut indifferentia quicquam ſuſpicetur, vel quod judicet eorum aliquem affectibus obnoxium; ſed quod pro re certiſſima credidit, quod Sanctiſſimus Dominus noſter in neminem tam facile condeſcenderet, quam in dictæ Rotæ Decanum, ob idque de eo in Inſtructionibus veſtris mentionem fecit: ſed Commiſſiones in debita forma cum his nominibus fieri & conſcribi juſſit, quod ſi hic credidiſſemus, Dom. Staphyleum habitum iſtic iri pro ſuſpecto, affirmare poteſtis me fuiſſe omnino miſſurum conſimilem Commiſſionis formulam, ſpatio relicto pro aliquo alio inſcribendo nomine, aliquamq; aliam ſuper ea re Inſtructionem me daturum fuiſſe; & haud dubie, ſi de nominibus duntaxat fuerit controverſia, hæ rationes facile poterunt Pontificem attrahere, ut in me conſentiat, vel in Staphyleum. De aliis vero neminem admittetis, nec tamen Pontifici aperietis vos, ne id faciatis habere in mandatis, ſed ſuperius enarratas Cauſas in veſtram excuſationem allegantes, omnino ut vobis injungitur, ea in re inſiſtetis.

Quod ſi nullis modis dictam Commiſſionem, & Diſpenſationem impetrare poteritis, ad idq; nequiverit Pontifex adduci, niſi rem prius alicui ex Cardinalibus vel Officiariis communicaverit, in eo tunc caſu, ejus Sanctitati in memoriam reducite, quot & quam gravia mala ex hujus negotii propalatione poſſent provenire, ſi ex ea occaſione aliquæ contrarietates vel impedimentum ſuboriretur, unde Regiæ Majeſtatis expectatio poſtmodum fraſtraretur: Quo igitur, ſi ullæ injiciantur in hac re tractandæ difficultates, ut Pontifex etiam facilior ad Regium votum concedendum promptiorq; reddatur, alias etiam præter has literas ſeorſim ad vos ſcripſi, quas una cum his accipietis, in quibus copioſe aggeſſi, quam multas magni momenti rationes, ob quas ſententia judiciumq; meum eſt, ne ullo pacto Pontifex hanc petitionem Regiæ Majeſtatis deneget; quas literas, quum in eis argumentum vehemens eſt, nec ob prolixitatem tædioſum aut moleſtum quod legatur, modum aliquem ipſius Sanctitati legendi invenietis; ſpemq;

ſpemq; certam habeo, ſi earum ſumma, tenor, atq; ſententia profunde perpendatur, quam ſatis id eſſe poterit ad omnem tollendam difficultatem, quæ poſſit obverſari in dicta Commiſſione Diſpenſationeque obtinenda, in eis contenta ſigillatim exponetis adeo, quod hoc negotium confici queat, Arbitris aut Conſiliaribus ad id neutiquam accitis, ſi fieri poſſit: ſi tamen Pontifex ſperaverit ſe poſſe hæc omnia eos celare qui huic rei forſan voluerint refragari, & omnino decreverit aliquos Cardinales vel officiarios iſtius cauſæ participes facere, omnem tunc induſtriam ſtatim adhibebitis, ut his cognitis eorum gratiam & favorem ea in re vobis comparetis, partim eis reſpectus, & cauſas omnes in meis literis contentas, etiam in cauſæ commodum facientes, uberius exponentes, partim vero eam remunerationem illis dantes, quæ judicio veſtro conveniens habebitur, dummodo optatum res ſortiatur effectum. Et ut omnia queatis præſtare commodius cum his, meas literas accipietis quas ad Cardinalem Sanctorum Quatuor & Collegium Cardinalium ſcribo, eaſque reddetis ut expedire cenſueritis, plane confidens nihil a vobis omiſſum iri, ut hac in re eorum gratiam atq; favorem queatis obtinere, in quem eventum ea munera offeretis, quæ convenientia viſa fuerint, Regiaque Majeſtas quicquid ejus nomine promiſeritis, id fideliſſime, uberrimeq; præſtabit, pro quarum rerum expeditione, illis pecuniis uti poteritis per literas Cambii Venetias tranſmiſſis, quouſq; ſuffecerint, neceſſariumq; vos exiſtimaveritis rei impetrandæ. Et quum ambiguum ſit an vobis licuerit hoc tempore ad Pontificis præſentiam accedere, hujuſmodi acceſſus defectus, ſi aliæ rem ad bonum exitum perducendi rationes non excogitarentur, cauſa eſſe poſſet longioris moræ, & totius rei impedimento; proinde Regia Majeſtas, ut modos omnes experiatur, nec uni ſoli inhæreat; hæc eadem in mandatis dedit Domino Secretario, quem non procul ab Urbe eſſe intelleximus, quemadmodum in his aliiſq; meis brevioribus literis continentur, ita quod alter veſtrum, vel uterque, ſi fieri poſſit, ad Pontificis præſentiam acceſſum habeat, nihil tamen, ſub ſpe Domini Secretarii, veſtræ vos diligentiæ aut induſtriæ omittetis, nec ille ſub ſpe veſtra, in re hac modis omnibus promovenda, remiſſior erit, ſed nihil conjunctim aut diviſim intentatum relinquetis. Quod ſi uterq; veſtrum ad Pontificem admittatur, alter de altero neſcius, id non oberit, ſed multum proficiet, etiam ſi ante alterius adventum negotium hoc alter impetraſſet, ſed ſi aliquis veſtrum cognoverit cauſam hanc expeditam eſſe, omniaq; pro certo impetrata eſſe, tunc labori & ſumptibus Pontificem pro eadem re accedendi parcere poteritis, neq; in eam amplius ingerere; neq; neceſſarium aut opportunum erit; ut pro ulla alia re in præſentia quam pro hac apud Sanctiſſimum Dominum noſtrum agatis, ſed ſolum nunc procurabitis de Commiſſione & Diſpenſatione juxta formam ad vos miſſam obtinenda, necnon de profeſtinatione illa, quam compendio ad vos dedi; in quibus omnibus & ſingulis apte tractandis Regia Majeſtas magnam fiduciam in veſtra prudentia collocavit, in quibus, cum tam magni ſint momenti, ex Regiæ Majeſtatis ſententia nunc vobis maxime elaborandum eſt.

Deniq; quum intelligam Dominum Lautrek nonnihil mirari, quod Regiæ Majeſtatis iſtic agentes, nullam ſuorum mandatorum partem cum eo conferunt, ad eum nunc ſcribo, & nonnulla Domino Roberto Jernyngham ei exponenda committo concernentia actiones cum Ferrariæ Duce, & alia quædam eodem Domino Lautrek; ſignificans, vos miſſos eſſe ad dictas cauſas juvandas, & Pontificis liberationem promovendam, quemadmodum ex literarum ad Dominum Jernyngham exemplo cognoſcetis: expediens itaq; fuerit, ut præ ſe feratis, vos dictæ rei gratia miſſos eſſe, ne forſan Dominus Lautrek in falſam aliquam conjecturam aut ſuſpicionem incideret, quæ communibus rebus nocere poſſet, & in veſtrarum quoq; actionum impedimentum redundare.

Illud deinde reticere nolui, quod ſi ullo pacto vobis liceat ad Sanctiſſimi Domini noſtri Præſentiam accedere, nihil omittatis in favorem & gratiam Reverendi Domini Datarii, de cujus animo nihil dubitamus, comparandam, eiq; aſſeretis, quod quum in noſtris omnibus occurrentiis illius opera ac Patrocinio ſemper uſi fuerimus, ipſe vero tanta ſemper fide ac ſedulitate omnia effecerit quæ nobis grata & optata eſſe cognovit, ut noſtram omnem operam ſuis rebus reddiderit promptiſſimam, & ſuæ utilitatis & exaltationis cupidiſſimam. Quocirca hæc Regia Majeſtas hac in re, qua nullam magis cordi habet, nec gravioris momenti quicquam ſibi accidere poſſe judicat, ex animi ſui ſententia conficienda, poſt Sanctiſſimum Dominum noſtrum, in Domino Datario ſpem omnem collocavit, qui ex hac occaſione, ſi operam ſuam ad optatum uſq; exitum interponere non gravetur, Regiæ Majeſtatis animum & pectus, ſic omni ex parte promerebitur, ut dicta Majeſtas non ſolum omnia curatura ſit, quæ ex Domini Veronenſis commodo & ornamento fuerint, ſed eam etiam munificentiam & gratitudinem addet, quæ majorem vel integram partem, a captivate Redemptionis perſolvendæ compenſabit; In me vero non aliam fidem & amicitiam experietur, quam ab ullo fratre poſſet expectare. Et bene valete. Londini ex meis Ædibus. Die quinto Decemb. M. D. XXVII.

Veſtram tanquam frater Amantiſſ.

Ad cujus petitionem, dictus Reverendiſſi' Pater, Dominus Thomas Cantuar' Archiepiſcopus, juxta & ſecundum requiſitionem, ex parte ejuſdem invictiſſimi Principis, & dictorum Nobilium & Procerum, ut præfertur factam: nobis notarijs publicis, Subſcriptis, mandavit & præcepit, in Prelatorum & Cleri ejuſdem convocationis tunc & ibidem exiſtentium præſentia, nemine eorum reluctante, diſſentiente, contradicente, quatenus acta Originalia, hujuſmodi, diligenter & fideliter ſcrutaremur, ac de & ſuper compertis in eiſdem actis Originalibus, unum vel plura, publicum ſeu publica, Inſtrumentum ſive Inſtrumenta, conficeremus. Quare nos notarij publici ſubſcripti, mandatis dicti Reverendiſſ. Patris obtemperare volentes, Acta Originalia in dicta convocatione nobis præſentibus habita & facta, Scrutavimus, & per illud Scrutinium comperimus, & invenimus, quod nuper in dicta Convocatione Prelatorun & Cleri provinciæ Cantuar in domo capitulari Eccleſiæ Cathedralis D. Pauli London. prænominat', quinto die menſis Novembris, anno Dom. 1529. inchoato & de diebus in dies hactenus continuat' & propagat', propoſitæ fuerunt duæ quæſtiones, quarum unius deciſio & determinatio, Spectat ad Theologos, Alterius vero ad Canoniſtas & Juriſconſultos, ut Prelati & Clerus, eaſdem quæſtiones cum matura deliberatione, pro veritate in hac parte eruenda & habenda, quatenus ad eorum facultates reſpective attineret, diligenter examinarent. Et opiniones ſuas, quid ipſi de & ſuper eiſdem ſentirent, oſtenderent & declararent. Prima v. quæſtio ad Theologos pertinens, talis eſt, An ducere Uxorem cognitam a fratre, decedente ſine prole ſit prohibitio juris divini, indiſpenſabilis a Papa? Ad quam nonnulla argumenta & diſputationes hinc inde per prelatos & clerum prædict' diverſis & ſeparatis diebus, habita bita & facta, Prelati & Clerus antedictus, existent' Theologi, in numero lxvi personaliter tunc ibidem præsentes, habentes etiam procuratoria Episcoporum, Abbatum & aliorum prelatorum & clericorum absentium, ad numerum Clxxxvij, quibusdam in numero xix duntaxat exceptis, asseruerunt casum hujusmodi, de Jure Divino esse indispensabilem per Papam, prout ex actis Originalibus, in Registrario dict' Convocationis remanentibus, plenius liquet. Secunda v. quæstio ad Canonistas & Jurisconsultos pertinens, est hæc, An carnalis copula inter illustriss. Principem Arthurum & Sereniss. D'nam Catherinam Reginam ex propositis, exhibitis, deductis & allegatis sit sufficienter probata? Ad quam Prelati & Clerus, Canonistæ & Jurisconsulti, personaliter in dicta convocatione præsentes & numerum Xliiij facientes, quorum unus etiam habuit procuratorium pro tribus Episcopis tunc absentibus, (quinq; aut 6 duntaxat exceptis) affirmarunt se sentire ex propositis & exhibitis coram eis in convocatione prædict' carnalem copulam inter dict' ill'mum Principem Arthurum & Seren'mam D'nam Catherinam fuisse & esse sufficienter probatam: prout ex Actis Originalibus, in eadem convocatione, & a nobis notarijs publicis Subscriptis præsentibus, habitis & factis manifeste liquet & Apparet. Super quibus omnibus & singulis, prædict' egregius Vir Mag'r Johannes Tregunnell, nomine quo supra, nos notarios publicos subscriptos, unum vel plura, publicum seu publica, Instrumentum sive Instrumenta, exinde conficere requisivit. Acta fuerunt hæc omnia & singula, prout supra scribuntur & recitantur, sub Anno D'ni, Indictione, Pontificatu, mense die & loco, prædict', præsentibus tunc ibidem, mag'ris Willimo Bretteyne utriusq; Juris & Joh'e Barber, Legum Doctoribus, Testibus ad præmissa vocatis & Specialiter rogatis.

Et ego Willimus Potkyn, clericus Cant' Diocesis publicus, Authoritate Apostolica, Notarius, quia requisitioni & petitioni d'ti egregij Viri Mag'ri Joh'is Tregunnell sapradictiq; Rever'mi Patris, mandato & præcepto, necnon Actor' Originalium, de quibus superius fit mentio scrutinio, cæteriq; præmissis, dum sic (ut præmittitur) sub Anno D'ni, Indictione, Pontificatu, mense, Die & loco prædictis agebant'r & fiebant, una cum prænominatis testibus, qui tempore requisitionis & petitionis præsentes fuerunt, præsens personaliter interfui, eaq; omnia & singula sic fieri vidi, audivi inactitavi. Ideo hoc præsens, publicum Instrumentum, manu alterius me aliunde occupato, scriptum, exindeq; confectum, subscripsi, publicavi & in hanc publicam formam redegi. Ac signo & nomine, meis, solitis & consuetis, signavi, rogatus & requisitus in fidem & testimonium præmissorum.

Letter from Dr. Knight.

Coll. N°. 91. c. 9. B. III. E. Manuſ. Jameſ. 27.

HIS holineſs ſheweth tokyns and ſpeketh dayly of the grete repentaunce that he hath inwardly in his heart for graunting of the decretal, thinking and ſaijng verily that he is undone for ever, if the ſaid Decretal cum unto the knowledge of the Emperour. Moreover Meſſer Gregori de Caſſalis is informed of Salviati, which governeth the Pope juſt and holy, that if ſentence ſhould be geven according to the Decretal, it ſhuld not oonly take none effect, but alſo it ſhuld be cauſe of the Popes depoſition—— Vincent Caſalis ſaid allſo, that it is not ſufficient to put the Pope out of fere, ſuppoſing that then he will juſtifie the Kings deſire, but it is expedient ovyr and above the ſame, that the Ceſarians may be ſo handled, that they may drede the King and his Confederates. D. Knight going to Rome with Mr. Bennet concerning the divorce in a letter from Paris 8 Jan. An. 1529.

Extract of a Letter from Rome.

Coll. N° 92. c. 9. B. III. E. Mſ. Jameſ. 27.

IN comprobacion whereof ye ſhall underſtand that his holines inclined with as moch affection to do unto the Kings highnes all gratuite and pleaſure to him poſſible as can be imagined or deſired hath ſent hither a Gentleman one of his Chamberlains named Franciſcus Campana whoſe charge conſiſteth in theſe things following. Firſt to declare unto his Highnes the perfit aſſured and faſt Minde that the Popes holineſſe bereth towards his grace, And how propenſe glad and redy he is, and wol be, notwithſtanding any dainger or peril that may enſue unto him in his Perſon, Eſtate, or dignitie, to do not oonly all that of lawe, Equity, and juſtice may be deſired of him, but as moche as his holineſſe ex plenitudine poteſtatis may doe or excogitate to the furtherance of the Kings grete Cauſe and Matter, &c. Liter. Card. ad eoſd. reſponſiv.

Extract of two Letters from Secretary Knight at Rome.

Coll. N° 93. B. III. c. 9. E. Mſ. Jameſ. 27.

BUT albeit that every thing is paſſed according to your Highneſſes pleaſure, I cannot ſee but in caſe the ſame be put in Execution, at this Time, the Pope is utterly undone. So he ſaith himſelf the Imperialiſts do daily ſpoil Caſtles and Towns about Rome.

From Orvieti 1 Jan. 1528.

—— But his Holineſs being yet in Captivity, as your Graces eſteem him to be ſo long as the Spaniards and Almains continue in Italy, He thought, if he ſhould grant this Commiſſion that he ſhould have the Emperor his perpetual Enemy, notwithſtanding he was content to put himſelf in evident Ruin, and utterly undoing, rather than that the King or your Grace ſhould ſuſpect any Point

Point of Ingratitude in him, heartily deſiring cum ſuſpiriis & Lachrymis, that the King and your Grace which have allways been faſt and good unto him, will not now ſuddainly precipitate him for ever, which ſhould be done, if immediately upon Delivery of the Commiſſion, your Grace ſhould begin proceſs; He intends to ſave all upright thus: If Mr. De Lautrech would ſet forwards, which he ſaith daily that he will do, but doth not, at his Coming the Pope his Holineſs may have good colour to ſay, he was required by the Ambaſſadors of England of a like Commiſſion, and denying the ſame becauſe of his promiſe unto the General, He was eftſoons required by Mr. De Lautrech to grant the ſaid Commiſſion, In as much as it was but a Letter of Juſtice, and by this Colour he would cover the matter. So that it might appear to the Emperor, the Pope did it not, as he that would gladly do diſpleaſure to the Emperor; but as an indifferent Prince that could not deny Juſtice. Eſpecially, being required by ſuch Perſonages, and immediately he will diſpatch a Commiſſion bearing Date, after the Time that Mr. Lautrech had been with him, or near to it. The Pope moſt mightily beſeecheth your Grace to be a mean that the King's Highneſs may accept this in good part, And that he will take patience for this little Time, which, as it is ſuppoſed, will be but ſhort, and in Omnem eventum, I do bring a Commiſſion with me and a Diſpenſation which I truſt the King and your Grace will like well, we have given to my Lord Cardinal St. Quatuor two hundred Crowns, and unto the Secretary thirty Crowns.

Inſtructions by the Cardinal to P. Vannes.

THE King's not only for the moſt devout Obſervance and perfect Affection, that his Grace beareth to the Popes ſaid Holineſs and Perſon, but allſo for the continual Zeal which his Grace to give the way by one mean or other how Peace may be conduced in Chriſtendom, though the King's Highneſs have leſs Intereſt therein, and may have particular Peace with the Emperor at his pleaſure, that his Grace is content on his part and hath induced the French King to the Semblable, that his Grace and the French King will equally between them, furniſh the Charge for one thouſand, fifteen hundred, or two thouſand Men, to be in Guard at the Pope's Perſon, which Number being elected, picked and tryed of ſuch as may be found of the beſt ſhall not only ſuffice for the Tuition and Safeguard of his Holineſs and the College of Cardinals being about him, againſt the Malice of any that might intend to conſpire to his prejudice or danger; But allſo ſhall give great Authority to all ſuch things, as his Holineſs ſhall enterpriſe. And by this Means his Holineſs ſhall be ſure to be out of any Fear or Danger of the Emperor, 19 of Dec. 1528.

A Memoriall of ſuche Communication, as My Lord Legats Grace had with the Queens Almoner.

Coll. N° 100. B. III. c. 12.

FYRST My Lords Grace taking for Introduction & Commenc'ent of his Grac's purpoſes & devyſes excogitate by the ſame, for the totall extermination of ſuche Hereſies as daily increaſed in Cambrydge: & that his Grace thought more convenyent the ſame to be don by the Commyſſaries then the Byſops of Rocheſter or Elie, ſhewed his pleaſure & determination was to ſend hym thyther, as well for that he was of good reputation & credytt there, beinge a M'r of a Colledge in the ſame, as alſo for that he had in tymes paſſed uſed hym in lyke buſynes. To which the ſaid Mr. Almoner, fyrſt excuſinge the remiſſyon of his wonte & bonden offyce & dewtie in vyſitinge his Grace, & moſt humblie beſechinge the ſame, not to impute yt as proceding of any alienation of his trewe hart, & devotion he bare unto the ſame, anſwered, that he woold moſt gladly taike upon hym the ſaid Province & Jorney; deſyringe nevertheles his Grace, that he myght defer the ſame untyll 20 dayes were paſt & expired, in which ſpace he myght well performe his Reſydence at Wyndeſore. Unto which Petycyon his Grace condeſcendynge, & takynge the ſame as a full Reſolution in that behalfe, pretending alſo to have had noon other cauſe or matter unto hym, fyniſhed that Communication.

And ſodenly asked him what tydings he had hard of late in the Courte: To this he anſwered, that he hard noon, but that yt was moche bruted, that a Legat ſhuld come hyther into England. Whereuppon his Grace infarred what the Quene thoght of his comynge, & for what purpoſſe he ſhuld come. To this he ſaid, that ſhe was fully perſwaded & beleved that his comynge was only for the deciſion of the Cauſe of Matrimonie, dependinge betwene her & the Kinges Highnes.

Hereupon My Lords Grace taking juſt occaſion further to entre in this matter & fyrſt making reherſall of ſondrie excellent benefitts, with which his Grace had indewed hym, to th'end he ſhuld doo the Kings Highnes trewe and faithful ſervice, & ſithe adjuring him upon his fidelitie, his Othe, & ſub Sigillo Confeſſionis and ſuche other Obteſtations to conceale & kepe ſecrete, whatſoever his Grace ſhuld then communicate unto him, & never to propale the ſame to any man lyving oonles he had expreſſe Commandement by the Kings Highneſs or his Grace ſo to doo, deſyred hym that he wold faithfully, entierly & hoolye declare unto his Grace all & ſinguler ſuche things as he knewe of the Quenes dyſpoſicion, minde, ſaings, & Intent in this mattier.

To

To this the ſaid Mr. Almoner, fyrſt alleging and declairing of how ſinguler & perfytt devocyon he was towards the Kings Hyghnes & my Lords Grace & that he wold not oonly be mooſt redy to execute his Commandements, but alſo to kepe ſecrete ſuche things as his Grace ſhuld wyll him ſo to doo: anſwered, that he harde the Quene oft ſaie, that yf in this Cauſe ſhe myght attaine & injoye her naturall defence & Juſtice, ſhe diſtruſted nothing butt yt ſhuld taike ſuche effect, as ſhuld be acceptable both to God & Man. And that for theiſe Cauſes.

Fyrſt for that it was in the ieies of God mooſt plaine & evydent, that ſhe was never knowen of Prince Arthure. Secondly for that neyther of the Judges were competent, being bothe the Kings ſubjects, beneficed within his Realme, & delegate from the Pope at the contemplation of the King, ſhe being never hard, ne admytted to her defence. Thyrdly, for that ſhe ne had, ne myght have within this Realme any indifferent Counſaile. Fynally for that ſhe had in Spaine twoo Bulles, the oone beinge latter daite than the other, but bothe of ſuch Effycacie & ſtrengthe, as ſhuld ſone remove all Objections & Cavyllations to be maide, to thinfringing of this Matrimonie.

To this My Lords Grace replying ſaid, he marvelled not a lyttle of her ſo undyſcrete ungodly purpoſes & ſaings which cauſed him to conceyve that ſhe was neyther of ſuche perfection, ne vertue as he had thought in tymes paſſed to have been in her: & ſo entering the Refutation of all the premiſſes ſaid.

Fyrſt, where ſhe ſathe that ſhe was not knowen of Prince Arthure, verely it is a weake & muche unſure grounde for her to leane unto, being ſo urgent & vehement preſumptions, non ſolum Juris, ſed etiam de Jure to the contrarie, which & of congrewence ought to wey more in every equall Judges breſt, then her ſymple allegation. For it cannot be denyed but that bothe he & ſhe was then of ſuche yers, as was mete & hable to explete that act. It is alſo verey notarie, that thei dyd lye together, bothe here & in Waylles, by the ſpace of three Quarters of a yere. Furthermore nothing was ſo muche deſyred of bothe there parents, as the Conſummation of the ſaid act: Inſomuche that the Counſailers of Fardinando being reſident here for that purpoſſe, dyd ſend the ſheets they ley in, ſpotted with bloude into Spain, in full teſtymonie & prouf thereof. The Counſailers alſo of bothe parties moſt ſolemnely ſworne affearme in there treaties and ſaien, that the Matrymonie was conſummate by that Act. Forthermore the commen voyce through England is, that the ſaid Prince Arthure ſhuld ofttymes booſt oon Morning how oft he had beene the nyght before in the myddes of Spaine: Inſomuche that commonlye his ſo primature deathe was imputed only to nimio Coitu.

Fynally King Henry the VIIth of bleſſed Memorie wold not by certaine ſpace after the deathe of the ſaid Prince permytte or ſuffer, that the Kings Highnes ſhuld injoye the name & Tytle of Prince, only for that it was dowted by ſuche as than was moſt privye and ſecret abowte the Quene, whether ſhe was conceaved wyth Chylde or noo. And therefore theſe preſumptions being of ſuche ſorte & nature, My Lords Grace ſaid, the Quene ſhuld do lyke neyther wyſe ne vertuouſe Ladye, to adhere partinacely to the Contrarie.

To the Seconde his Grace replied ſaing, that yf ſhe ſhuld refuſe and decline the Judgment of thoſe parſons, unto whome the Popes Holines had delegated the Examination of this Cauſe, ſhe ſhuld not doo well, butt ſo doing rather incurr the Indignation of the See Apoſtolique, deſerve the oblyque & hatred of all good choſin people, & ingenerate in there hartes a perpetuall hate & enmitie againſt her. For ſythe the Popes Holineſs proceadythe in this Commyſſion at the Interceſſion or motion of no partie, but only ex mero motu & Paſtorali officio, & ſith that his Holines, notwithſtanding he being notoriouſly certyfied that they be the Kings Subjects, & benefyced wythin his Realme hathe approved there parſons as mooſt mete & worthie to have the hole deciſion of thys Cawſe commytted unto them: with that alſo theire parſons be qualifyed with ſo hyghe preemynence & dignitie, as by the Common Lawe cannot be refuſed as ſuſpect. Fynally ſythe the ſame parſons being ſtraitly commanded by the Kings Hyghnes, all affection of mede or drede ſett apart, onely to attend, waye, regard, & conſyder the Juſtyce of the Cawſe, as they ſhall therunto anſwere on perell of their owne Sowles, & his dreadfull Indignation, have no cawſe whic thei ſhuld varye or deflect their Sentence, otherwyſe than Juſtyce ſhall require, ſpecially in a Cawſe of ſuche wayght & Importance, & wherin they for unrighteouſe Judgement ſhuld acquire nothing els but theire owne dampnation, eternall Ignominie, & Indignation of theire Prince: yf ſhe ſhuld refuſe ſuche parſons as ſuſpect, It might well be ſaid, that ſhe geveth tytles honour to the auctoritie of the Churche, and that this Realme were marvelouſly deſtytute of Men of ſincere lernyng & conſcience, to the great ſlaunder of the ſame. And fynally his Grace ſaid, that yf this exception ſhuld be admytted as ſuffycyent cawſe of recuſation, for that they be benefyced by the Kings Hyghnes than this Cawſe of Matrymonie myght no where be ventylated or dyſcuſſed within Chriſtindome, for that there are no parſons of auctoritie & lernyng in any Region out of this Realme, againe whome the Kings Highnes might not alleadge in lyke maner lyke cawſe of recuſation & ſuſpicion. The Popes Holines & the holle Clargie of Ytalie, Flaunders, Spaine, Denmarke, & Scotland being now eyther confederate or in thraldome & Captivitie of the Emperors Tyranny. To the third concernyng Counſailors to be retayned on her behalf, My Lords Grace ſaide, that although he was ryght well aſſured of the Kings ſinguler propencyon & Inclination to Juſtyce, & that above all things his pleaſour was, Juſtyce ſhuld be equally myniſtred to eyther parte in this Cawſe, being alſo never wylling or in mynde at any tyme, but that ſhe ſhuld have aide & aſſiſtance of ſo well lerned men, ſo wyſe, & of ſo good conſcience, as might any be founde within this Realme; yet his Grace thought, that conſydering the nature of this Cawſe to be of ſuche ſorte, as neceſſarily impliethe the hole Tytle of ſucceſſyon of this Realme, lyke as yt were not expedyent, ne might in any wyſe be ſuffred withowt great dangier & perell which might therby enſue, to maike any aliene or ſtraunger prevaie herunto, ſpecially the Spaniards having now Intelligence with the King of Scotts; So his Grace thought, that the Quene wold not inſyſt in ſo fryvolous petition, which might never be graunted unto her, but be content to admytt & adhybyt ſuche lerned men, as be here in this Region her Counſailors, namely ſuche, as by theire othes ſolemnly maide & vowed, & by expreſſe Commandment, & optima gratia of the Kings Highnes, ſhuld withowt fraude or corruption ſhew unto her theire ſentence & openions: & deſyring the contrarie herof, his Grace ſaid ſhe ſhuld doe nothing but declare her owne ſenſuall affection to ſett forthe that, which all due prouff, bothe by Gods lawe & mans Law hath juſtly condemned. And thus ended My Lords Graces talke with Mr. Almoner.

Coll. N° 101. B. III. c. 12. (a) See Cook's inſtitutes, part 4. fol. 89. & deinc. Cotton Libr. Julius 1. fol. 24. (From Lord Herbert.)

CErtain Articles againſt the Cardinal were preferred in Parliament, the Original whereof found among our Records, I have thought fit to tranſcribe, And the rather for that our vulgar Chronicles miſreport them. "[a] Conſtrain'd by neceſſity of our fidelity & conſcience, complain & ſue to your moſt Royal Majeſty, We your Grace's humble, true, faithfull & obedient Subjects, That the Lord Cardinal of York, lately your Grace's Chancellor, preſuming to take upon him the authority of the Pope's Legate de Latere, hath by divers & many ſundry ways & faſhions, committed high & notable grievous offences, miſ-uſing, altering & ſubverting the order of your Graces Laws, & otherwiſe contrary to your high honour, Prerogative, Crown, Eſtate & Dignity Regal, to the ineſtimable great hindrance, diminution, & decay of this your Grace's Realm: As 'tis touch'd ſummarily & par-

" & particularly in certain Articles here following, which be but a few in " compariſon of all his enormities, Exceſſes & tranſgreſſions againſt your " Grace's Laws.

That is to ſay:

1. WHere your Grace and noble Progenitors within this Realm of England being Kings of England, have been ſo free, that they have had in all the World, no other Sovereign, but immediately ſubject to Almighty God in all things touching the Regality of your Crown of England, & the ſame Preeminence, Prerogative, Juriſdiction, lawfull & peaceable poſſeſſion, your Grace and noble Progenitors have had, us'd & enjoy'd without interruption of Buſineſs, therefore by the ſpace of two hundred Years & more; whereby your Grace may preſcribe againſt the Pope's holyneſs, that he ſhou'd not, nor ought not to ſend or make any Legate, to execute any authority Legantine, contrary to your Grace's Prerogative within this your Realm: Now the Lord Cardinal of York, being your Subject, & natural Liege born, hath of his high Orgullows & inſatiable mind, for his own ſingular advancement and profit, in Derogation, & to the great emblemiſhment and hurt of your ſaid Royal juriſdiction and Prerogative, & the long continuance of the Poſſeſſion of the ſame, obtain'd authority Legantine: By reaſon whereof, he has not only hurt your ſaid Preſcription, but alſo by the ſaid authority Legantine, hath ſpoil'd & taken away from many Houſes of Religion, within this your Realm, much ſubſtance of their Goods, & alſo hath uſurp'd upon all your Ordinaries, within this your Realm, much part of their juriſdiction, in Derogation of your Prerogative, & to the great hurt of your ſaid Ordinaries, Prelates, & Religious. Warham W. Archbiſhop of Cant.

2. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, being your Ambaſſador in France, made a Treaty with the French King for the Pope, your Majeſty not knowing any part thereof, nor named in the ſame; & binding the ſaid French King to abide his order and award, if any Controverſie or doubt ſhou'd ariſe upon the ſame, betwixt the ſaid Pope & the French King.

3. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, being your Ambaſſador in France, ſent a Commiſſion to Sir Gregory de Caſſalis, under your great Seal, in your Grace's Name, to conclude a Treaty of Amity with the Duke of Ferrara; without any Commandment or Warrant of your Highneſs, nor your ſaid Highneſs advertis'd or made privy to the ſame.

4. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, of his preſumptuous Mind, in divers & many of his Letters and Inſtructions, ſent out of this Realm to outward Parts, had joyn'd himſelf with your Grace, as in ſaying & writing, The King & I wou'd ye ſhou'd do thus: The King & I do give unto you our hearty Thanks: Whereby it is apparent that he us'd himſelf more like a Fellow to your Highneſs than like a Subject.

5. Alſo where it hath ever been accuſtom'd within this Realm, that when Noblemen do Swear their Houſhold Servants, the firſt part of their Oath hath been, that they ſhould be true Liege Men to the King & his Heirs Kings of England: The ſame Lord Cardinal caus'd his Servants to be only ſworn to him, as if there had been no Sovereign above him.

6. And alſo whereas your Grace is our Sovereign Lord & Head, in whom ſtandeth all the Surety and Wealth of this Realm; the ſame Lord Cardinal knowing himſelf to have the fowl and contagious Diſeaſe of the great Pox broken out upon him in divers places of his Body, came dayly to your Grace, rownding in your Ears, & blowing upon your moſt noble Grace, with his perilous & infective breath, to the marvellous danger of your highneſs, if God of his infinite Goodneſs had not better provided for your highneſs: And when he was once healed of them, he made your Grace to believe that his diſeaſe was an Impoſthume in his Head, & no other thing.

7. Alſo

7. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, by his authority Legantine, hath given by Prevention, the Benefices of divers Perſons, as well Spiritual & Temporal, contrary to your Crown & Dignity, & your Laws & Statutes therefore provided: By reaſon whereof, he is in danger to your Grace of forfeiture of his Lands & Goods, & his Body at your pleaſure.

8. Alſo the Lord Cardinal, taking upon him otherwiſe than a true Counſellor ought to do, hath us'd to have all Embaſſadors come firſt to him alone, & ſo hearing their Charges & Intents, 'tis to be thought he hath inſtructed them after his pleaſure & purpoſe, before that they came to your Preſence, contrary to your high Commandment by your Grace's Mouth to him given, & alſo to other Perſons ſent to him by your Grace.

9. And alſo the Lord Cardinal hath practis'd ſo, that all manner of Letters ſent from beyond the Sea to your Highneſs, hath come firſt to his Hands, contrary to your high Commandment by your own Mouth; & alſo by others ſent to him by your Grace: By reaſon whereof your Highneſs, nor any of your Council, had knowledge of no matters but of ſuch as it pleaſed him to ſhew them: Whereby your Highneſs & Council have been compell'd of very force, to follow his devices, which oftentimes were ſet forth by him under ſuch crafty & covert meanings, that your Highneſs & your Council have oftentimes been abus'd, inſomuch that when your Council have found & put divers doubts & things, which afterwards have enſued; He, to abuſe them, uſed theſe Words, (I will lay my Head that no ſuch thing ſhall happen.)

10. And the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath practis'd, that no manner of Perſons having charge to make eſpial of things done beyond the Sea, ſhould at their return, come firſt to your Grace, nor to any other of your Council, but only to himſelf: And in caſe they did the Contrary, he puniſh'd them there for ſo doing.

11. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath granted Licenſes under your great Seal, for carrying out of Grain & other Victuals, after the reſtraint hath been made thereof, for his own Lucre & ſingular Advantage of him & his Servants, for to ſend thither; as he bare ſecret Favour, without your Grace's warrant or knowledge thereof.

12. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal us'd many Years together, not only to write unto all your Ambaſſadors reſident with other Princes in his own Name, all Advertiſements concerning your Grace's Affairs, being in their Charge: And in the ſame his Letters wrote many things of his own Mind, without your Grace's Pleaſure known, concealing divers things which had been neceſſary for them to know; but alſo caus'd them to write their Advertiſements unto him; & of the ſame Letters he us'd to conceal, for the compaſſing of his Purpoſe, many things both from all your other Counſellors & from your ſelf alſo.

13. And where good Hoſpitals hath been us'd to be kept in Houſes & Places of Religion of this Realm, & many poor People thereby reliev'd, the ſaid Hoſpitality & Relief is now decay'd & not us'd; And it is commonly reported that the occaſion thereof is, becauſe the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath taken ſuch Impoſitions of the Rulers of the ſaid Houſes, as well for his favour in making of Abbots & Priors, as for his Viſitation by his authority Legantine: And yet nevertheleſs taketh yearly of ſuch Religious Houſes ſuch yearly and continual Charges, as they be not able to keep Hoſpitality as they were uſed to do; which is a great cauſe that there be ſo many Vagabonds, Beggars & Thieves.

14. And where the ſame ſaid Lord Cardinal ſaid before the Suppreſſion of ſuch Houſes as he hath ſuppreſs'd, that the Poſſeſſions of them ſhould be ſett to farm among your Lay Subjects, after ſuch reaſonable yearly Rent as they ſhould well thereupon live and keep good Hoſpitality: Now the Demeſne Poſ-

ſeſſion of the ſame Houſes ſince the ſuppreſſion of them hath been ſurvey'd, mete, & meaſur'd by the Acre, & be now ſet above the value of the Old Rent; And alſo ſuch as were Farmers by Cove'nt Seal & Copyholders be put out & amoved of their Farms, or elſe compell'd to pay new Fine, contrary to all Equity & Conſcience.

15. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, ſitting among the Lords & others of your moſt honourable Privy-Council, uſed himſelf, that if any Man wou'd ſhew his Mind, according to his Duty, contrary to the Opinion of the ſaid Cardinal, he wou'd ſo take him up with his accuſtomable Words, that they were better to hold their Peace than to ſpeak, ſo that he wou'd hear no Man ſpeak but one or two great Perſonages, ſo that he wou'd have all the Words himſelf, & conſum'd much Time with a fair Tale.

16. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal by his Ambition & Pride hath hinder'd & undone many of your poor Subjects for want of diſpatchment of Matters, for he wou'd no Man ſhou'd meddle but himſelf: Inſomuch that it hath been affirmed by many wiſe Men that Ten of the moſt wiſe & moſt expert Men in England were not ſufficient in convenient Time to order the Matters that he wou'd retain to himſelf: And many Times he deferr'd the ending of Matters, becauſe that Suiters ſhould attend & wait upon him, whereof he had no ſmall pleaſure, that his Houſe might be repleniſh'd with Suiters.

17. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal by his authority Legantine, hath us'd, if any Spiritual Man having any Riches or Subſtance, deceas'd, he hath taken their Goods as his own, by reaſon whereof their Wills be not perform'd; And one mean he had to put them in fear that were made Executors to refuſe to meddle.

18. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal conſtrain'd all Ordinaries in England yearly to compound with him, or elſe he will uſurp half or the whole of their Juriſdiction by Prevention, not for good Order of the Dioceſs, but to extort Treaſure; for there is never a poor Arch-deacon in England, but that he paid yearly to him a Portion of his Living.

19. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath not only by his untrue ſuggeſtion to the Pope, ſhamefully ſlander'd many good religious Houſes, & good virtuous Men dwelling in them, but alſo ſuppreſs'd, by reaſon thereof, above thirty Houſes of Religion. And where by Authority of his Bull, he ſhou'd not ſuppreſs any Houſe that had more Men of Religion in number, above the number of ſix or ſeven, he hath ſuppreſs'd divers Houſes that had above the number: And thereupon hath caus'd divers Offices to be found by Verdict untruly, that the religious Perſons ſo ſuppreſs'd had voluntarily forſaken their ſaid Houſes, which was untrue, & ſo hath caus'd open Perjury to be committed, to the high diſpleaſure of Almighty God.

20. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath examin'd diverſe & many Matters in the Chancery, after Judgment thereof given at the Common Law, in ſubverſion of your Laws, and made ſome Perſons reſtore again to the other Party condemn'd that they had in Execution by virtue of the Judgment of the Common Law.

21. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath granted many Injunctions by Writ, & the Parties never call'd thereunto, nor Bill put in againſt them; And by reaſon thereof divers of your Subjects have been put from their Lawful Poſſeſſion of their Lands and Tenements. And by ſuch means he hath brought the more Party of the Suiters of this your Realm before himſelf; whereby he & divers of his Servants hath gotten much Riches, and your Subjects ſuffer'd great Wrongs.

22. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, to augment his great Riches, hath caus'd divers Pardons granted by the Pope to be ſuſpended, which cou'd not be reviv'd till till the ſaid Lord Cardinal was rewarded, & alſo had a yearly Penſion of the ſaid Pardon.

23. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, not regarding your Laws nor Juſtice, of his extort Power hath put out divers and many Farmers of his Lands, & alſo Patentees of the Archbiſhoprick of York & of the Biſhoprick of Winchester, & of the Abbey of St. Albans, which had good & ſufficient grant thereof by your Laws.

24. Alſo the ſame Lord Cardinal at many Times when any Houſes of Religion hath been void, hath ſent his Officers thither, & with crafty Perſwaſions hath induc'd them to compromit their Election in him; and before he nam'd or confirm'd any of them, he & his Servants receiv'd ſo much great Goods of them, that in a manner it hath been to the undoing of the Houſe.

25. Alſo by his authority Legantine, the ſame Lord Cardinal hath viſited the moſt part of the Religious Houſes & Colleges of this your Realm, & hath taken from them the twenty fifth part of their livelyhood, to the great Extortion of your Subjects, & derogation of your Laws & Prerogative, & no Law hath been to bear him ſo to do.

26. Alſo when Matters have been near a Judgment by Proceſs of your Common Law, the ſame Lord Cardinal hath not only given & ſent Injunctions to the Parties, but alſo ſent for your Judges, & expreſsly by Threats commanded them to deferr the Judgment, to the evident ſubverſion of your Laws, if the Judges wou'd ſo have ceas'd.

27. And whereas neither the Biſhoprick of York, nor Winchester, nor the Abbey of St. Albans, nor the Profit of his Legation, nor the Benefit of the Chancery, nor his great Penſion out of France, nor his Wards & other inordinate Taking cou'd ſuffice him, he hath made his Son Winter to ſpend ſeven & twenty hundred Pounds by the Year, which he taketh to his own Uſe, & giveth him not paſt two hundred Pounds yearly to live upon.

28. Alſo whereas the ſaid Lord Cardinal did firſt ſue unto your Grace to have your Aſſent to be Legate de Latere, promiſing & ſolemnly proteſting before your Majeſty, & before the Lords both Spiritual and Temporal, that he wou'd nothing do nor attempt by the virtue of his Legacie contrary to your gracious Prerogative or Regality, or to the dammage or prejudice of the Juriſdiction of any ordinary, & that by his Legacie no Man ſhou'd be hurt or offended: And upon that Condition, & no other, he was admitted by your Grace to be Legate within this your Realm: This Condition he hath broken, as is well known to all your Subjects. And when that he made this Promiſe, he was buſie in his Suit at Rome to viſit all the Clergy of England both exempt & not exempt.

In this impeachment 'tis confeſs'd the Cardinal had the K's Licenſe to exerciſe his Legantine Commiſſion.

29. Alſo upon the Suit of the ſaid Lord Cardinal at Rome to have his authority Legantine, he made untrue Surmiſe to the Pope's Holineſs againſt the Clergy of your Realm; which was, that the Regular Perſons of the ſaid Clergy had given themſelves in reprobum ſenſum; which Words St. Paul, writing to the Romans, applied to abominable Sin; which ſlander to your Church of England ſhall for ever remain in the Regiſter at Rome againſt the Clergy of this your Realm.

30. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal had the more part of the Goods of Dr. Smith, late Biſhop of Lincoln, Biſhop Savage of York, Maſter Dalbye Arch-deacon of Richmond, Maſter Tonyers, Dr. Rothall late Biſhop of Durham, & of Dr. Fox late Biſhop of Winchester, contrary to their Wills, & your Laws & Juſtice.

31. Alſo at the Oyer & Terminer of York, Proclamation was made that every Man ſhou'd put in their Bills for Extortion of Ordinaries: And when divers Bills were put in againſt the Officers of the ſaid Lord Cardinal of Extortion, for taking twelvepence of the Pound for Probation of Teſtaments, whereof divers Bills were found before Juſtice Fitz Herbert & other Commiſſioners, the

ſaid Lord Cardinal remov'd the ſaid Inditements into the Chancery by Certiorari, & rebuk'd the ſaid Fitz Herbert for the ſame Cauſe.

32. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath buſied himſelf, & endeavour'd by crafty & untrue Tales to make diſſention & Debate amongſt your Nobles of your Realm, which is ready to be prov'd.

33. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal's Officers hath divers Times compell'd your Subjects to ſerve him with Carts for Carriage, & alſo his Servants hath taken both Corn & Cattle, Fiſh & all other Victual, at your Grace's Price, or under, as tho' it had been for your Grace, which is contrary to your Laws.

34. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal hath miſus'd himſelf in your moſt honourable Court, in keeping of as great Eſtate there in your Abſence, as your Grace wou'd have done if you had been there preſent in your own Perſon.

35. Alſo his Servants, by virtue of your Commiſſion under your Broad Seal by him to them given, have taken Cattle & all other Victual, at as low a Price as your Purveyors have done for your Grace by your Prerogative, againſt the Laws of your Realm.

36. Alſo where it hath been accuſtom'd, that your Purveyors for your honourable Houſhold have had yearly out of your Town & Liberty of St. Albans three or four hundred Quarters of Wheat; Truth it is, that ſince the Lord Cardinal had the Room of Abbot, your ſaid Purveyors cou'd not be ſuffer'd by him & his Officers to take any Wheat within the ſaid Town or Liberties.

37. Alſo he hath divers Times given Injunction to your Servants, that have been for Cauſes before him in the Star Chamber, that they, nor other for them, ſhou'd make labour by any manner of way, directly or indirectly, to your Grace, to obtain your Grace's Favour or Pardon, which was a preſumptuous Intent for any Subject.

38. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal did call before him Sir John Stanley Knight which had taken a Farm by Covent-Seal of the Abbot & Covent of Cheſter, & afterwards by his Power & Might, contrary to Right, committed the ſaid Sir John Stanley to the Priſon of Fleet by the Space of one Year, unto ſuch Time as he compell'd the ſaid Sir John to releaſe his Covent-Seal to one Leghe of Adlington, which married one Lark's Daughter, which Woman the ſaid Lord Cardinal kept, and had with her two Children; Whereupon the ſaid Sir John Stanley, upon diſpleaſure taken in his Heart, made himſelf Monk in Weſtminſter, and there died.

39. Alſo, on a Time your Grace being at St. Alban's, according to the ancient Cuſtom us'd within your Verge, your Clerk of the Mercat doing his Office, did preſent unto your Officers of your moſt honourable Houſhold the Prices of all manner of Victuals, within the Precinct of the Verge. And 'twas commanded by your ſaid Officers to ſet up the ſaid Prices both on the Gates of your honourable Houſhold, & alſo within the Market Place in the Town of St. Albans, as of ancient Cuſtom it hath been us'd. And the Lord Cardinal, hearing the ſame, preſumptuouſly, and not like a Subject, caus'd the aforeſaid Prices, which were ſeal'd with your Grace's Seal, accuſtomably us'd for the ſame, to be taken off, & pull'd down in the ſaid Market Place where they were ſet up, & in the ſame Places ſet up his own Prices ſeal'd with his Seal, and wou'd, if it had not been letted, in ſemblable manner have us'd your Seal ſtanding upon your Gates: And alſo would of his preſumptuous Mind have openly ſet in the Stocks within your ſaid Town your Clerk of your Market: By which preſumption & uſurpation your Grace may perceive, that in his Heart he hath reputed himſelf to be equal with your Majeſty.

40. Alſo the ſaid Lord Cardinal, of his further Pompous & preſumptuous Mind, hath enterpriz'd to joyn & imprint the Cardinal's Hat under your Arms in your Coin of Groats made at your City of York, which like Deed hath not been ſeen to have been done by any Subject within your Realm before this Time.

41. Alſo where one Sir Edward Jones Clerk, Parſon of Crowley in the County of Bucks, in the Eighteenth Year of your moſt noble Reign, let his ſaid Parſonage with all Tythes & other Profits of the ſame, to one William Johnſon by Indenture for certain Years, within which Years the Dean of the ſaid Cardinal's College in Oxford pretended Title to a certain Portion of Tythes within the ſaid Parſonage, ſuppoſing the ſaid Portion to belong to the Parſonage of Chichelly, which was appropriated to the Priory of Tykeford lately ſuppreſs'd, where (of Truth) the Parſons of Crowley, have been peaceably poſſeſs'd of the ſaid Portion Time out of Mind; Whereupon a Subpœna was directed to the ſaid Johnſon to appear before the ſaid Lord Cardinal at Hampton-Court, out of any Term with an Injunction to ſuffer the ſaid Dean to occupy the ſaid Portion. Whereupon the ſaid Johnſon appear'd before the ſaid Lord Cardinal at Hampton-Court, where, without any Bill, the ſaid Lord Cardinal committed him to the Fleet, where he remain'd by the ſpace of twelve Weeks, becauſe he wou'd not depart with the ſaid Portion. And at the laſt upon a Recognizance made that he ſhou'd appear before the ſaid Lord Cardinal whenſoever he was commanded, he was deliver'd out of the Fleet; Howbeit as yet the ſaid Portion is ſo kept from him that he dare not deal with it.

42. Alſo where one Martin Docowra had a Leaſe of the Mannor of Balſall, in the County of Warwick, for Term of certain Years, an Injunction came to him out of the Chancery by Writ upon Pain of a thouſand Pounds, that he ſhou'd avoid the Poſſeſſion of the ſame Mannor, & ſuffer Sir George Throckmorton Knight to take the Profits of the ſame Mannor to the Time the Matter depending in the Chancery between the Lord of St. John's & the ſaid Docowra was diſcuſs'd. And yet the ſaid Docowra never made Anſwer in the Chancery, ne ever was call'd into the Chancery for that Matter; And now of late he hath receiv'd a like Injunction upon Pain of Two thouſand Pounds, contrary to the Courſe of Common Law.

43. Alſo whereas in the Parliament Chamber, & in open Parliament, Communication & Devices were had & mov'd, wherein mention was by an Incident made of Matter touching Hereſies & Erroneous Sects: It was ſpoken & reported by one Biſhop there being Preſent, & confirm'd by a good Number of the ſame Biſhops, in Preſence of all the Lords Spiritual & Temporal then aſſembled, that two of the ſaid Biſhops were minded & deſir'd to repair unto the Univerſity of Cambridge for Examination, Reformation, & Correction of ſuch Errors as then ſeem'd, & were reported to reign among the Students & Scholars of the ſame, as well touching the Lutheran Sect & Opinions, as otherwiſe: The Lord Cardinal inform'd of the good Minds & Intents of the ſaid two Biſhops in that behalf, expreſsly inhibited & commanded them in no wiſe ſo to do. By means whereof, the ſame Errors, as they affirm'd, crept more abroad, & took greater Place; Saying furthermore, that 'twas not in their Defaults that the ſaid Hereſies were not puniſhed, but in the ſaid Lord Cardinal, & that 'twas no Reaſon any Blame or lack ſhou'd be arrected to them for his Offence. Whereby it evidently appeareth, that the ſaid Lord Cardinal, beſides all other his heinous Offences, hath been the Impeacher and Diſturber of due & direct Correction of Hereſies, being highly to the Danger and Peril of the whole Body, & good Chriſtian People of this your Realm.

44. Finally, Foraſmuch as by the aforeſaid Articles, is evidently declar'd to your moſt Royal Majeſty, that the Lord Cardinal by his outragious Pride, hath greatly ſhadowed a long Seaſon your Grace's Honour, which is moſt highly to be regarded, & by his inſatiable avarice, & ravenous Appetite, to have Riches & Treaſure without meaſure, hath ſo grievouſly oppreſs'd your poor Subjects with ſo manifold Crafts of Bribery & Extortion, that the Commonwealth of this your Grace's Realm, is thereby greatly decay'd & impoveriſh'd:

And

And alſo by his Cruelty, Iniquity, Affection & Partiality, hath ſubverted the due Courſe & Order of your Grace's Laws to the undoing of a great Number of your loving People.

Pleaſe it your moſt Royal Majeſty therefore, of your excellent goodneſs towards the Weal of this your Realm & Subjects of the ſame, to ſet ſuch Order & Direction upon the ſaid Lord Cardinal, as may be to the terrible Example of others to beware ſo to offend your Grace & your Laws hereafter: And that he be ſo provided for, that he never have any Power, Juriſdiction, or Authority hereafter to trouble, vex, & impoveriſh the Common-wealth of this your Realm, as he hath done heretofore, to the great hurt & damage of every Man almoſt high & low, which for your Grace ſo doing, will daily pray, as their Duty is, to Almighty God for the proſperous Eſtate of your moſt Royal Majeſty, long to endure in Honour & good Health, to the Pleaſure of God, & your Hearts moſt Deſire.

Subſcrib'd the firſt Day of December the 21ſt Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King Henry the Eighth.

FROM CERTAIN

Popular Imputations.

I HAVE incidentally conſidered ſeveral of thoſe popular Imputations, under which the Cardinal ſuffered, during the Courſe of his Miniſtry; and if he does not appear, in every Reſpect, perfectly acquitted, I have now, at leaſt, a Right to aſſume, that he has been very ill uſed, both by his Contemporaries, and by all the ſucceeding Hiſtorians, to the preſent Age, whether Popiſh or Proteſtant. For admitting, he really was guilty of the Crimes wherewith they charge him; yet, if the Facts, upon which he is charged, are not founded on any Evidence ſufficient to induce a rational Aſſent, their Manner of treating him is, notwithſtanding, altogether unjuſtifiable. There is no Miniſter, in any Court of EUROPE, who would be willing, the World ſhould make a Judgement either of his perſonal Qualities or Conduct, from mere fugitive Calumnies; even tho' they ſhould riſe ſo high, or ſpread ſo wide, that Articles of publick Impeachment might, at length, be founded upon them.

Why ſhould Cardinal WOLSEY ſubmit to be tryed by a Rule, which, his greateſt Adverſaries will allow, is very unjuſt, when applied to other Perſons under the like Circumſtances? Moſt of the Crimes objected to him, being founded merely on common Tradition, which one Author has taken up, by an implicit Faith, from another, without producing any ſuch authentick Memoirs or Records, in Proof of what they advance, as may be relied on by Men, who will aſſert a reaſonable Liberty of judging for themſelves, and not ſervilely follow a Train of partial or credulous Writers, by what Names ſoever diſtinguiſhed.

We may conclude, in particular, from the Effect of his Impeachment, what Kind of Aſſent is to be given to thoſe defamatory Reports, which have been ſo induſtriouſly propagated upon the ſole Credit of it, and without any other Reaſon, or good Authority to ſupport them,

But, that I may not incur the Imputation of Partiality my ſelf, or, which is on many Accounts equally culpable in a Hiſtorian, of a blind Credulity; I ſhall deſcend to ſhew, in this Chapter, by an Induction of ſeveral Particulars, how much the Cardinal has been injured in his Character; not by the common Tribe of low inſignificant Writers, but by certain Authors of Diſtinction, whoſe Works are of the greateſt Credit and Eſteem in our hiſtorical Libraries.

And that I may give the greater Force to what the Enemies of the Cardinal have objected to him, I ſhall conſider him, in the firſt Place, under the Circumſtances of an Impeachment; not, as being in the Height of Favour at Court, nor in thoſe Poſts of Honour and Authority, which might render all Attempts to ruin him dangerous to the Perſons engaged in them; but, as a Favourite declining in the Eſteem of his Prince, and repreſented, in many Reſpects, as an Enemy to his Country. This was a proper Time, had he been really obnoxious, for thoſe who envied his Power and Greatneſs, at once to inſult him, and to induce others, who were yet under no perſonal Prejudices againſt him, to approve their Proceedings.

It may be obſerved, on the other Hand, to the Cardinal's Advantage, That as he was then in Diſgrace with the King, ſo he had many Enemies near the Throne; had loſt much of that Eſteem, wherein he had formerly been, with the People, and ſtood condemned by the Lords. Cromwell, who undertook his Defence, was at that Time a Perſon of no Diſtinction, had been juſt introduced into the Houſe of Commons, where he owed the Honour of being a Repreſentative, not to any perſonal Intereſt of his own, but to the Favour, as Cavendiſh reports, of Sir Thomas Ruſſel, and by Occaſion of an accidental Interview with that Gentleman. Through what Means ſoever he came into the Houſe, it is highly probable, that as a Creature and Domeſtick of the Cardinal, he was heard there with greater Prejudice, on that Account.

The Cardinal's Acquittal, under ſuch Circumſtances, and upon the Defence made for him, by a Perſon, at that Time, ſo inconſiderable, and ſuſpected, as being partial to him, affords very reaſonable Grounds of Preſumption, that the Articles in general againſt him, had no very good or ſolid Foundation.

But I ſhall here deſcend to make ſome proper Remarks upon three or four of them, in particular, from which we may be able to judge, with what Temper, and Diſpoſition, the Reſt of them were drawn up.

In Anſwer to what the Cardinal is charg'd with in the firſt Article, more immediately upon the Statute of Premunire, his Council pleaded, and proteſted in his Name, that he did not know the Impetration of his legatine Powers to have been to the Contempt or Prejudice of the King, or that it was againſt any Statute of Proviſoes heretofore made: But this laſt Aſſertion, indeed, ſeems only a colourable Plea, if his Council had really any Inſtructions to make it. The Cardinal, who had ſo long preſided in Chancery, and, as Legate, at the Head of the Church, could not be ignorant of a Law ſo well known, and which principally concerned Eccleſiaſticks. And that he was not in Truth ignorant of it, appears from the Twenty eighth Article, wherein he is charged with Sueing to the King to have his Aſſent to be Legate de Latere. If he had not known the Law, what Occaſion was there for uſing this Precaution to guard againſt the Penalties of it? There is greater Probability, tho' he could not be unacquainted with a Law known to every Body, that yet he looked upon it as obſolete, the Offences committed againſt it having, for a long Tract of Time, eſcaped not only with Impunity, but without Cenſure. If the Cardinal, under the Reign of Henry the Eighth, entertained a Notion, that the King might on Occaſion exerciſe a diſpenſing Power, he wanted not ſome Appearances in Fact to ſupport it. But if the King was not believed to have formally a Power of diſpenſing with the Laws, yet as the Cardinal did nothing, but what He previouſly conſented to, and approved, it might reaſonably be preſumed, He would not take the Advantage of a Forfeiture incurred by the Cardinal; but would rather make uſe of his Prerogative to ſkreen a Miniſter from the Penalties of the Law, who acted in virtue of his own Commiſſion.

The Cardinal muſt have entertained Thoughts very injurious to the Honour of his Maſter, in ſuſpecting, that he could be capable of forſaking or giving up a Servant, who had no Crime, as to this particular Accuſation, but what he was privileged from the Throne to commit.

I know, many Inſtances may be given, to ſhew, That Miniſters have been puniſhed, even for executing certain poſitive Orders, wherewith they were charged by the Prince. Biſhop Gardiner, in a Letter to the Lords of the Council, has cited ſeveral Caſes to this purpoſe. It is ſometimes reaſonable there ſhould be Examples of publick Juſtice in this Kind, eſpecially where any any Commiſſion derogatory to the Honour of the Crown, or prejudicial to the publick Peace, Safety, and Intereſt, has been fraudulently obtained, or upon wrong Suggeſtions, and from a weak Prince, or has been afterwards executed after an undue or irregular Manner; the Cardinal is not chargeable in relation to any of the former Circumſtances; and as to the Latter, he is here formally accuſed of procuring, not of abuſing his legatine Powers, or for acting in purſuance, and according to the proper Tenour of them. So that if his Judges, which I will not diſpute, might in the Rigour of the Law condemn him, after he had, for ſo many Years, exerciſed his legatine Powers with the King's Licenſe, and without any Diſpute or Oppoſition; yet, it does not ſo clearly appear, how the King himſelf could take the Advantage of that Rigour, and after he had ſeized all the Cardinal's Effects, to his own Uſe, precipitate him at once from the Heighth of Power, of Honour, and the moſt opulent Fortune, into thoſe unhappy Circumſtances, which, for ſome Time, did not afford him the Supports and Conveniences of Life.

Whatever Miniſters of State have at any Time ſuffered, for acting by Conceſſion from the Prince, or in purſuance of his Inſtructions, there are few Inſtances in Hiſtory, if any one can be found, except in the Reign of Henry the Eighth, where the Prince appeared, in ſuch a Caſe, as a Party in the Proſecution, and to the End, if we may judge by the Event of this, that himſelf might reap the Spoils and Emoluments, which were to ariſe from it.

Theſe Reflections may not, however, be unuſeful to ſhew, with what Caution Miniſters ought to receive and execute the Orders of Sovereign Princes; of whoſe Inclination to protect them, they cannot always be ſecure, and who cannot indeed always protect them againſt the Attacks of popular Diſcontent, how much ſoever any Rules of Juſtice or Honour may oblige them to interpoſe in their Favour.

In the fourth Article, the Cardinal is charged with Want of Reſpect to the King, in the Style of his Letters, in many of which ſent out of the Realm, he had joined himſelf with the King, in Saying and Writing. The King and I. And, I would you ſhould do this. The King and I, give unto you our hearty Thanks. Uſing himſelf, as it follows in the Cloſe of the Article, more like a Fellow to his Highneſs, than like a Subject.

I do not here intend to apologize for a Manner of Expreſſion, in the Cardinal, which ſeems to have been too crude and familiar; and cannot be excuſed upon a common Pretence, that Cardinals are Companions to crowned Heads. The Meaſures of Diſtance between Princes, and Subjects of the firſt Rank and Quality, cannot be too nicely obſerved. But conſidering how numerous, and commonly how long, the Diſpatches of the Cardinal were, may it not be ſuppoſed, that in ſome of them, an Offence of this Nature might poſſibly proceed from meer Inadvertency or Negligence, or only from a Deſign of expreſſing himſelf more readily and in fewer Words. To what Cauſe or Origin ſoever we impute this Freedom, there certainly is in it, an Appearance of Indecency; but whether ſo flagrant, as to afford juſt Matter for a diſtinct Article againſt him, in a Charge of High Treaſon, I ſhall not preſume to diſpute: This, I think, is beyond diſpute, that Fox, by inverting the Order, and varying the Form of the Words (for he not only repreſents the Cardinal, as putting himſelf before the King, but as making the King his Property *) has given us an Inſtance of that Want of Candour, which is to be met with in his Monuments, on other Occaſions.

The Cardinal ſeems to be as little affected with the eighth and ninth Articles. He is charged in the Former, with cauſing Ambaſſadors to come firſt to him alone, before they were introduced into the King's Preſence; and in the Latter, with having practiſed ſo, that foreign Letters ſhould be delivered, firſt, into his Hands, that is, the Articles accuſe him of acting agreeably to the Nature of his Poſt, and the Truſt repoſed in him: And, according to the Methods, which, I conceive, ſtill generally obtain in all Courts, where there is a prime Miniſter: It is ſaid, indeed, that he acted herein contrary to the King's Commandment; but Cromwel, if there had been any good Proof of ſo heinous a Crime, muſt, of Neceſſity, have dropped his Defence.

* Ego & Rex meus. Wherein he is followed by Archbiſhop Parker.

In the twentieth Article, the Cardinal is charged with Reverſing Judgement againſt Common Law; that is, he is charg'd with the proper Execution of his Office, as Chancellor. Lord Herbert allows the Juſtice of his Adminiſtration in general, and particularly in his publick Hearing of Cauſes, (Hiſt. p. 342.) but gives an extraordinary Reaſon for it; For as he loved no Body, ſays that noble Hiſtorian, ſo his Reaſon carry'd him. I ſhall not diſtinctly enquire how far this Reflection may be improved, to ſhew, that an ingenuous Diſpoſition, and a univerſal Benevolence towards Mankind, are not requiſite to thoſe, who preſide in Courts of Judicature; or, whether the Cardinal really wanted theſe Qualities, which are the proper and brighteſt Ornaments of human Nature. His charitable and noble Foundations, in a human Way of Judging, diſcover a Temper of Mind, which does not appear perfectly reconcileable with this Animadverſion from a noble Author, who, if he be ſometimes more free, is always ſuppoſed candid, in the Judgements he makes, whether concerning Things or Perſons.

Whatever were the Motives, upon which the Cardinal regulated himſelf in the Adminiſtration of Juſtice, after ſuch a Manner, that he obtained ſo honourable a Teſtimony, as to that Part of his Conduct, from Lord Herbert; it was, however, a very unaccountable Way of proceeding, to bring an Accuſation here in the Article, againſt him, not only conſiſtent with a faithful Diſcharge of his Office, as Chancellor, but which did, in Effect, ſuppoſe it. For he is accuſed of having examined divers and many Matters in Chancery, after Judgement thereof given in Common Law; and of making ſome Perſons reſtore again to the other Party condemned, that they had in Execution, by virtue of the Judgement in the Common Law. It is added, indeed, in the Body of the Article, that this was done, in Subverſion of the Laws; but a general Charge, without any Specification of Fact, and, if we may judge from the Iſſue of his Impeachment, without any Proof, is only to be conſidered as Matter of Form, or a mere Circumſtance of Aggravation, in a criminal Caſe.

In the Twenty eighth Article, he is charged with Breach of Promiſe, in ſaying, he would do nothing, in the Exerciſe of his legatine Powers, to the Diſadvantage of the Ordinary's Juriſdiction, upon which Condition it is ſaid, thoſe Powers were allowed to be obtained and exerciſed. And it is particularly ſpecified, as a Breach of his Promiſe, That when he made it, he was buſy in his Suit at Rome, to viſit all the Clergy of England, both Exempt and not Exempt, But, there was, no Inconſiſtency between his Promiſe, and the Exerciſe of his legatine Powers. A Right of viſiting all the Clergy of England, both Exempt and not Exempt, being properly, as it had been formerly exerciſed, within the legatine Commiſſion, by which therefore the Ordinary's Juriſdiction was ſuperſeded.

In the Forty-third Article, he is accuſed of being an Impeacher and Liſturber of due and direct Correction of Hereſies. And the Ground of this Accuſation, as there ſpecified, is, That when two Biſhops were minded and deſired to repair unto the Univerſity of Cambridge, for Examination, Reformation and Correction of ſuch Errors, as then ſeemed, and were reported to reign among the Students and Scholars of the ſame, as well, touching the Lutheran Sect and Opinions, as otherwiſe. The Lord Cardinal informed of the good Minds and Intents of the ſaid two Biſhops, expreſly inhibited and commanded them in no ways ſo to do; by Means whereof the ſame Errors (as they affirmed) crept more abroad and took greater Place, that it was not in their Defaults that the ſaid Hereſies were not puniſhed, but in the ſaid Lord Cardinal.

I have cited the Words of this Article more at large, becauſe in the very Reaſon and Foundation of it we diſcover an ample Teſtimony of the Cardinal's good Temper and Moderation. He was ſo far from having Recourſe to any violent Meaſures towards obſtructing the Progreſs of the Reformation, that he is repreſented as one, who actually favoured and protected the Reformed: For they in the Language of the Article, and of that Time, were the Hereticks.

I do not hereby intend, that the Cardinal was in the leaſt inclined to introduce the Lutheran Principles. A Man may be very zealous for his particular Perſuaſion, and yet an Enemy to Violence and Perſecution; Methods, whether of introducing or eſtabliſhing Religion, with Chriſtians who know not what Manner of Spirit they are of, which Perſons of great and generous Minds, Minds, can never come into, or approve; and which always diſcover, that the Cauſe, they are apply'd to advance, either ſtands upon a weak Foundation, or has ſome very wicked Ends to ſerve.

Had the Cardinal, inſtead of his interpoſing to prevent, encouraged a religious Inquiſition, which might have been attended with unreaſonable Severities, a Cauſe of Complaint againſt him, for the Abuſe of his great Powers, had been much better founded. But what could induce his Enemies to cite an Inſtance of his abuſing his Powers, ſo very honorary to his Memory, and ſo eaſily capable, even at that Time, of a good Defence?

There are ſome few Perſons, indeed, that were brought to abjure, but none that were burned, where he was properly concerned, or had any direct Authority. There were no Fires in Smithfield, during his Legacy, unleſs one to burn Hunn after his Death. It was in the Sequel of Henry the Eighth's Reign they were kindled more frequently; and, even while that great Prelate Cranmer preſided at the Head of the Church, Perſecution began to rage, and the Blood of Engliſh Proteſtants to flow. When one Barnes, upon a Charge of Hereſy, was brought before the Cardinal, from Cambridge, he treated him with much Humanity and Tenderneſs, tho' he had been very free with the Cardinal's Character, in reflecting on his Pillars and his Pole-Axes, in a witty Sarcaſm, according to the Wit, which obtained in thoſe Days, calling carnal Affections, Cardinal Affections, openly in the Pulpit.

His good Opinion of Luther was no ſecret to Eraſmus, who in a Letter to that Reformer, has theſe Words, * There are Perſons in England, and thoſe of the firſt Diſtinction, who very much approve your Writings, meaning the Cardinal; to whom, in a long and flattering Epiſtle, in Praiſe of his Deſign for the Advancement of Learning, and the Reformation of the Clergy, he recommends Luther.

It may be farther obſerved, That the Cardinal was twice diſappointed in his Hopes of ſucceeding to the Papal Chair, when they appeared, upon that View, not to be ill-founded, and he had, in a Manner, all the Courts of Europe at command. It is not improbable ſome Jealouſy might be entertained at Rome, leſt he ſhould not be true at Heart, to the Intereſts of that Church; being ſo intent, as he was, upon a Reformation of the Clergy; we may therefore naturally ſuppoſe, that ſuch of the Clergy, who were moſt obnoxious, and apprehenſive of Danger to themſelves, upon the Execution of his Deſign, might endeavour to lay before the Conclave, what Obſtacles they could, in his Way; and ſo fruſtrate thoſe Pretenſions, wherein they knew him to be powerfully ſupported.

Had he been of a perſecuting, or rather, had he not been of a moderate Temper, it would be impoſſible to account for the Choice he made of Students to fill his new Seminaries at Oxford; moſt of them being ſuch as favour'd the Reformation, and afterwards diſtinguiſh'd themſelves by their great Zeal in Oppoſition to Popery; thoſe, eſpecially, who were tranſplanted from Cambridge, where he lodged the Power of Election with Dr. Shirton, Maſter of Pembroke Hall, a noted Lutheran himſelf, as the Society was eſteemed where Bradford and Ridley had their Education; who they were, to whom Shirton made an Offer of removing them to Oxford, and who declined or accepted his Offer, may be ſeen in Fuller and Stripe.

A Society ſo diſpoſed, would not, in all probability, long conceal or diſſemble their Principles; of which, Complaint being made to the Cardinal, and particularly againſt Taverner, remarkable afterwards for his Sermon at St. Mary's, when High Sheriff of the County; this Prelate endeavoured to divert the Information, with a Jeſt, ſaying, Taverner was only a Fidler, being indeed a Perſon, who much delighted in Muſick. As to others, who were impriſoned for their Opinions, he ordered their Enlargement, and, ſo far as it appears, without any farther Proſecution.

In the following and laſt Article, it is inferred upon the whole Matter, among other Conſequences, highly prejudicial to the State, that the Cardinal, by his outragious Pride, had greatly ſhadowed, a long Time, the King's Honour.

* Habes in Anglia qui de tuis Scriptis optime ſentiunt, & hi ſunt Maximi.

This

This Charge ſeems to be more particularly founded on the ſplendid and pompous State, wher in the Cardinal lived, and which has given Occaſion to a common Cenſure, that he was a Perſon of moſt extravagant Vanity. A Cenſure, which does not appear altogether without ſome ſpecious Foundation; there was ſomething, if we may give Credit to the concurrent Teſtimony of Hiſtorians, both in the Temper and Manner of the Cardinal, which too much diſcover'd an Affectation of Grandeur.

But if he was not perfectly free from a common Defect, incident to Men of aſpiring Thoughts, and extended Views, we may perhaps diſcover, upon Enquiry, ſome ſpecial Ingredients, proper to qualify that Defect; and which may ſerve, at the ſame Time, to ſhew, that if he had been really liable to ſuch a Cenſure, yet this was not the moſt convenient Place, wherein to mention it: For perſonal Failures, which do not immediately affect the Welfare of the State, and eſpecially where they may be rendered ſubſervient to it, as poſſibly they may be in ſome Caſes, are rather Matter of a private Admonition than of a legal Impeachment, which is only ſuppoſed to take Cognizance of publick Offenders, againſt the publick Good.

Now, whatever Pomp, or Oſtentation, the Cardinal affected in his Manner of Life, or Appearance, He always, if we may judge by the Uſe he made of his great Power and Fortune, not only deſigned the Credit and Advancement of Learning, but, what falls more directly under our Conſideration, the Honour of his Prince, and the Service of his Country. His Embaſſies, wherein he was moſt ſplendid and magnificent, and to a Degree, that drew the Eyes and the Envy of foreign Courts, and foreign Nations, upon him, contributed to give the greater Idea of the Power, the Wealth and Grandeur, both of his Maſter, and the Engliſh Empire. For, if ever England might lay Claim to that Title, it was under a Reign wherein it was raiſed, by the Counſels and Projects of Cardinal Wolſey, to a Power and Dignity unknown before; under a Prince, in whoſe Troops, his Imperial Majeſty of Germany, Maximilian, had ſerved, not as a Voluntary, or Auxiliary, but for Engliſh Pay; under a Prince, into whoſe Hand this Miniſter had put the Balance of Europe, and whom he rendered capable of giving Laws to all the Kingdoms and Potentates about him.

It may be queſtioned, Whether the Pomp and Luſtre, wherein the Cardinal appeared abroad, did not alſo tend very much to facilitate the Treaties, which he was employed to negotiate.

* In his Embaſſy to Bruges, he was received by the Emperor, with all the Honours which could well have been payed to a crowned Head. That great Prince met him at ſome Diſtance from the Town, and perſonally conducted him into it. Upon his Entry He was ſaluted by one after a Manner, and in † Terms that cannot be excuſed, as reflecting upon the Honour and Dignity of his Maſter. At his Departure, after he had been moſt ſplendidly treated, the Emperor accompanied him out of the Gates of the Town, and then returned, leaving the Prince of Orange and the Duke d'Alva to attend him ſomewhat farther on his Way. If the Magnificence of the Cardinal abroad, tended to expedite the Affairs which he had in Commiſſion, his Method of doing publick Service, was at once honorary to his Maſter, and advantagious to his Country. The Price of an Alliance would have riſen much higher than the Expence, to which a fine Equipage, or a Sett of rich Liveries, could amount. Biſhop Burnet * acknowledgeth, and it is an Acknowledgment very much for the Cardinal's Honour, That the King never engaged in any Alliance but what was for his Advantage.

* Hiſt. Ref. Vol. 1. p. 8.

And this may be one Reaſon, among many others, why the King generouſly attributes the Succeſſes of his Reign to the Cardinal's Adminiſtration. Luther had directly, and with great Decency, told the King, That his firſt Miniſter and Favourite, was a Perſon hated by God and Man, and the Plague of Europe. It is probable, his Majeſty was not much ſurpriſed at a Stile agreeable to that, wherein this warm Writer had formerly accoſted himſelf; if the Terms, which he uſed to his Majeſty, were not ſtill more ſhocking and offenſive.

However,

However, the King condeſcended to anſwer him, and in Vindication of his Miniſter, gave him the honourable Teſtimony before-mentioned. Lord Herbert, who is not much ſuſpected of Partiality to the Cardinal, found himſelf obliged to acknowledge, That during his Favour with the King, Things ſucceeded better than afterwards: But Biſhop Godwyn goes farther, and obſerves, That ſcarce any Thing ſucceeded well in the Sequel of that Reign.

Theſe curſory Obſervations, upon ſome few of the Articles, are ſufficient to anſwer my preſent Deſign; which is to ſhew, with what View they were principally formed; and that there is a certain Degree of Hiſtorical Pyrrhoniſm neceſſary to thoſe, who would be well aſſured concerning the Truth of Facts, which even ſometimes appear to be competently atteſted. The Reaſon of this Remark will be more evident, from what I am going to obſerve, in the next Place, concerning ſome Hiſtorians of the moſt eſtabliſhed Character among us, who have been, in one Degree or other, injurious to the Cardinal's Memory.

I ſhall take the Liberty, in the firſt Place, of citing Biſhop Burnet, in order to confirm what I ſay. That learned Hiſtorian directly charges the Cardinal with being lewd and vitious, and with having the French Pox, upon the Credit of thoſe very Articles, from which he was acquitted; for he produces no other Evidence, except that of common Report, for ſo very ſevere a Charge: Whereas the Preſumption, if any Conſequences in relation to the Cardinal's good or ill Fame are to be drawn from the Articles, ought certainly to lie the other Way; Not in Prejudice of the Perſon accuſed, but in Vindication of the Perſon abſolved; and eſpecially at a Time, and in a Place, where he was under Circumſtances, ſo little favourable to him.

For what Reaſon, I repeat it again, ſhould Cardinal Wolſey be condemned, by a Rule, by which no Perſon, attainted before his Time or ſince, ought to be concluded? But, above all, Why ſhould ſuch a Cenſure be paſſed upon him, by one of the ſame Function, and the ſame Order? It might be expected, where neceſſary Reaſons of Piety or Prudence, or ſome antecedent Obligation to the contrary, may not require, that Eccleſiaſticks ſhould rather endeavour to conceal thoſe Blemiſhes, in Perſons of their own Character, which are true, than either divulge ſuch as are falſe, or not ſufficiently atteſted. And yet the principal, and in a manner, the ſole Evidence upon which the Cardinal's Name is tranſmitted to future Ages, under a Note of ſo great Infamy, is only founded upon an Article of Impeachment, which, if we may judge from the Iſſue of it, had no Foundation itſelf.

I think it incumbent on me, where ſo proper an Occaſion offers, to do an Act of Juſtice to the Memory of another great Man, who was Cardinal Wolſey's Collegue, and has been repreſented by the ſame learned Hiſtorian, upon the Authority of an obſcure Libel, as leading, at that Time, a very diſſolute Life; Hunting and Gaming all Day long, and following Whores all the Night: As a vile, vicious Stranger and Prieſt: Who lived licentiouſly in England, in all Manner of Diſorders, of which both He and his Baſtard-Son were guilty. Hiſt. Reform. p. 67, 89. Append 264.

It is not eaſy to believe, that Campejus was the Perſon here deſign'd, if a Judgement may be formed, concerning his Character, both for Learning and Morals, and in regard to his Circumſtances.

1. In the firſt Place, it was not his Baſtard-Son, but his Legitimate Son, who was Knighted by the King. That Cardinal was firſt a Married Man, had a Wife, and five Children, but his Wife dying, he took Orders, and was promoted to the Purple.

2. Whether any Liberties, taken by the young Knight, or Compana of the Pope's Bed-chamber, then in England, might occaſion this Scandal, is not certain; it is, however, ungenerous to determine any Thing with Aſſurance, concerning the Matter, on the ſingle Evidence of a Traveller in a foreign Country, afterwards hang'd for Treaſon in his Own.

3. Neither does his Age, nor the State of his Health, at that Time, agree with this Character of Campejus. But, allowing our Engliſh Air ſo healthy and reſtorative, that it might contribute to make an old Gentleman, ſo violently afflicted with the Gout, upon his firſt coming over, that he could neither go nor ſtand, yet, in a few Months, ſo vigorous and luxuriant, that he followed his his Pleaſures without Intermiſſion, all Day long, and all the Night; it may ſtill become us, to conſider a little, what Sort of Character he bore in the World, among ſeveral Perſons of Probity and Credit. Hall, who lived at that Time in London, and was no Stranger to this Legate's Courſe of Life, and rarely ſuffers any Opportunity of expoſing the Clergy to eſcape him, only calls Campejus a Man of great Wit and Experience, better learned in the papal Law, than in Divinity. Father Paul ſtiles him a Man of Wiſdom, and Authority: Godwin, no bad Man, and a ſincere Speaker: Fuller, a good heavy Man. The Character given him by * Polydore Virgil, and eſpecially what Eraſmus ſays of him, in a high Strain and Addreſs of Eloquence, is very honorary and advantagious to him. (Reverendiſſime Domine, virtutum tuarum inſignium, & Eruditionis rariſſimæ Fama inflammatus, jampridem geſtio, & noſſe propius, & coram adorare,—Inſignem Heroa, & Eccleſiæ Romanæ Columen.) It is difficult, indeed, to reconcile any one of theſe Characters, with that, which is given of him, by our learned Prelate and Hiſtorian. The only Ground which Fox could find to charge him upon, was, on Occaſion of his Reply to thoſe of Strasburgh. This argues, at moſt, that he was firm to the Doctrine of the Romiſh Church, and more inclined to puniſh, than to encourage Incontinency in the Clergy: Which if he had ſo notoriouſly exemplified, as he is repreſented to have done, in his own Conduct, the Grounds of his Miſſion, twice into Germany, and once into England, had not only been improper, but from a Court ſo refined, and ſo cautious in its Meaſures, as that of Rome, altogether unaccountable.

If I inſtance in that very learned and excellent Hiſtorian Mr. Cambden, as an Author, who has alſo been injurious to the Character and Memory of Cardinal Wolſey; it is not, from any Want of juſt Reſpect to the Merit of that great Name, but with a Deſign of doing Juſtice to the Perſon injured; and of ſhewing, that we ought, in our hiſtorical, as well as in our natural or moral Diſquiſitions, always to ſuſpend our Aſſent, till a ſufficient Degree of Evidence ſhall oblige us to give it. It is neceſſary at leaſt, that Hiſtorians, if they do not produce authentick Vouchers for every Thing they relate, ſhould yet deduce ſuch Conſequences from acknowledged Facts, as evidently follow, in a juſt, and ingenious Way of Reaſoning upon them.

This celebrated Hiſtorian, in his Introduction to the Life of Queen Elizabeth, obſerves, that "After ſeventeen Years Marriage, the King, Henry the "Eighth, grew weary of Katherine his Wife, a Lady of very Religious Beha"viour, and Spaniſh Gravity—This he did, through the cunning Artifice of "Thomas Wolſey Cardinal, who being now in the Heighth of Power with the "King, had, in a Manner, no Command over himſelf. For bearing a Grudge "to Charles the Fifth, Son to the Siſter of Queen Katherine, for denying him "the Archbiſhoprick of Toledo, and becauſe he had not favoured him in aſpiring "to the Popedom, he cauſed a Scruple to be put in the King's Head, that his "preſent Marriage with Queen Katherine, who, before, had been his Brother "Arthur's Wife, was forbidden by the Law of God, notwithſtanding that "Julius the Second, Biſhop of Rome, had diſpenſed therewith."

It is not unuſual with Hiſtorians to account for the Springs of certain Facts which never happened; as we ſometimes obſerve Philoſophical Writers, inquiring into the Cauſes of Things, which never exiſted.

Now, whether it be really true, which is not improbable, That the Emperor did give the Cardinal formal Aſſurances of his Favour and Intereſt, towards advancing him to the papal Dignity, whenever there might be a Vacancy in St. Peter's Chair; whether the Emperor, by not obſerving his Engagements to the Cardinal, and by omitting to pay him a Debt of Honour, or by prevaricating with him, on any Account, in an Affair, which he had ſo much at Heart, might give Occaſion to the Reſentments of this Prelate, and alienate the Eſteem, which he had formerly entertained and profeſſed for his Imperial Majeſty; whether the Cardinal was provok'd to engage in Deſigns againſt a Prince, who ſhewed ſo little Regard to his Promiſe, and for that Reaſon: Whatever Determination may be made upon theſe Queſtions, what I contend for, is, That Mr. Cambden, with all Submiſſion to ſo great an Authority, ought not to have aſſigned the Treatment juſt or diſhonourable, which the Cardinal met with, from Charles the Fifth, as the Effect of a Thing, which was not.

For that the Cardinal did not cauſe this Scruple to be put into the King's Head, may be concluded from many clear and convincing Proofs. One of theſe Proofs is taken from the expreſs Declaration of the King himſelf, in open Court, upon a ſolemn Occaſion, where his Majeſty was perſonally cited, and where the Circumſtances of his Teſtimony, if the Faith and Honour of a King could have been otherwiſe ſuſpected, gave a ſtronger Sanction to what he depoſed. For when my Lord Cardinal humbly beſeeched his Majeſty to declare to the Court, whether he had been the firſt or chief Mover of this Matter, as he was ſuſpected, the King's Anſwer was, My Lord Cardinal, you have rather adviſed me to the contrary, than been any Mover of the ſame. [Cavendiſh.]

Then the King proceeds to declare, That what firſt occaſioned this Scruple, was a Difficulty propoſed to him by the Biſhop of Bayon, the French Ambaſſador, concerning the Legitimacy of Lady Mary; when that Prelate came to treat with the King about a Marriage between this Princeſs, and the Duke of Orleans, Son to the French King. This Scruple was farther confirm'd, by the Death of the King's Male-Iſſue, and not pretended, on Account of any perſonal Diſlike to the Queen, with whom the King affirmed, He could be as well contented to continue, if his Marriage might ſtand with the Law of God, as with any Woman alive.

His Majeſty afterwards acquits Longland Biſhop of Lincoln, who was alſo under a Suſpicion of having moved this Scruple, and wholly aſcribed it to the Light, and Force of his own Conſcience, which cauſed him to open his Caſe to that Biſhop in Confeſſion.

It may be farther obſerved, in Vindication of the Cardinal, upon this Head, That being preſſed by the King, to give his own Judgement in the Caſe, he excuſed himſelf from declaring it, the Matter being of too arduous a Nature for him. And therefore he deſired to conſult the Reſt of the Clergy upon it. This Excuſe would neither have been made, nor admitted, if the Cardinal had really, at any Time, taken the Freedom of delivering his Opinion to the Diſquiet of the King's Conſcience, in the Manner, he was pretended to have done.

It ſeems unaccountable for theſe Reaſons, (others are mentioned relating to this Article, in a proper Place) That Biſhop Burnet ſhould cite Saunders to ſhew, the Cardinal was the Firſt, who infuſed theſe Scruples into the King, and cauſed Longland Biſhop of Lincoln afterwards to poſſeſs the King's Mind with them in Confeſſion.

If this learned Hiſtorian had wanted an Authority, towards ſupporting the Grounds of this common Suſpicion againſt the Cardinal; one would have thought, the Name of Mr. Cambden might have ſtood much more conveniently, in the Margin of his Hiſtory, than that of an Author, whom he has treated with ſo much Contempt, and expoſed as a Writer, to whom no Manner of Credit ought to be given.

But, indeed, whatever Occaſion Biſhop Burnet might have for this Teſtimony, to do his Lordſhip Juſtice, he profeſſes himſelf, in the Sequel of this Story, inclined to think, That the Scruples of the King were much ancienter. And, in a few Pages after, he acquits the Cardinal, in reſpect to this Article, upon the Evidence and Allegations which I have before employed. I ſhall not preſume to enquire, upon what Motives, he ſeems willing in his laſt Volume, that his Readers ſhould credit a Story, which in his firſt, he had ſo well and effectually confuted.

Cavendiſh alſo has advanced ſome Things, but certainly without any ſiniſter End or Deſign, derogatory to the Honour of his Maſter, and upon falſe Grounds. This Writer, if we may judge from the pious and moral Reflections which he occaſionally makes, appears to have been a Man of Probity, who lived under a Senſe of Religion, and ſpake from the Heart. If he had not all the great Talents, requiſite in a Hiſtorian, he is yet much to be valued for thoſe Qualities. His Fidelity may be depended upon concerning Things, which he relates upon his perſonal Knowledge, or which fell more directly within the Compaſs of his own Obſervation. His Stile is clear, and, for the Time wherein he lived, ſignificant and polite enough. He writes with the free and negligent Air of a Gentleman, which much becomes him; and he is ſometimes happy, without appearing to have any ſuch Deſign, in addreſſing himſelf to the Imagination and Paſſions. There are ſome Paſſages in him, whereby a Reader who has any true Taſte, will find himſelf agreeably moved. He writes with great Impartiality, and tho' he had an Honour and Eſteem for his Maſter, he does not conceal or diſſemble his Failures, nor fly out into any indecent Heats or Expreſſions, againſt thoſe, who uſed him very ill.

With all theſe good Qualities, he did not take care to inform himſelf, as he ought to have done, concerning certain foreign Affairs, of which he has given an Account, in his Life of the Cardinal. In what he relates concerning the Siege of Pavia, he not only aſſerts ſome Things, without ſufficient Warrant, but againſt the common Faith of Hiſtory, that are very diſadvantagious to the Cardinal, and which, had they been true, muſt have left an indelible Stain upon his Memory.

When he ſpeaks, concerning the Diſtreſs, to which the Imperial Army was reduced, under the Command of Charles Duke of Bourbon, before the Siege of Pavia was raiſed, he imputes the ill Circumſtances of that General and his Troops, to the Want of Moneys, which ought to have been paid to him, according to Contract, by Sir John Ruſſel, who was commiſſioned by the King to that End, and had ſpecial Inſtructions from the Cardinal, for executing the Truſt repoſed in him.

But it will appear, from Extracts of Letters added in the Appendix, relating to the publick Negotiations at that Time, the Court of England was not juſtly chargeable with any Neglect or Prevarication, on that Account.

Even, if Sir John Ruſſel had omitted to make Payment, according to Contract between the two Courts; yet, the Extremities to which the Army under the Duke of Bourbon was reduced, ought not to have been imputed to any Infidelity on this Side of the Water; but to a plain Remiſſneſs, on the Part of his Imperial Majeſty, who did not pay the Moneys, which he had obliged himſelf to advance, according to the Time, or in the Manner ſtipulated.

It was unreaſonable, in an Expedition, where the Emperor was principal, and who expected in a Manner all the Spoils and Advantages, which were to be reaped from it, that the Engliſh, who only engaged as Acceſſories, and at moſt in Regard to a common Cauſe, ſhould bear the whole Burthen of the War. And therefore, Directions were, indeed, given to Sir John Ruſſel, that he ſhould uſe proper Precautions in diſpoſing of the Money, with which he was charged; and that upon Payment of it, he ſhould ſee it appropriated to the Ends, and Uſes, ſpecified in the Contract.

So that whatever Inconveniencies might have happened, to the Imperial Troops, in Caſe the Engliſh had really withdrawn their uſual and ſtated Contributions, tho' it does not appear, that, in Fact, they did withdraw them; Thoſe Inconveniences could not, in Juſtice, be charged upon any Breach of Faith in the Engliſh; the Conditions on the Emperor's Part, having been firſt violated, and no Reparation being made, by the Imperial Court, after repeated Inſtances of the Engliſh Miniſters, to that End.

What follows in Cavendiſh, relating to this Siege, and to the Conſequences of it, is ſo groundleſs and extraordinary, that it is not eaſy to imagin, where he could have his Memoirs, ſo much to the Diſadvantage of the Miniſter, in whoſe Service he was, at that Time.

We are told, by this Author, That the Duke of Bourbon commanded in the Town of Pavia; That both Officers and Soldiers began to mutiny, for Want of Pay, and neceſſary Proviſions; That they moved and importuned the Duke to ſurrender; upon which, he expoſtulated with them, and, in concluſion, animated them ſo much by a Speech he made, which indeed is drawn up in Terms, becoming a brave and gallant Commander, that, upon their ſallying out, as he adviſed, by Night, they obtain'd a glorious and compleat Victory over the Enemy.

But the Misfortune is, this fine Speech, which is ſaid to have done ſuch Wonders, is here owing to an Occaſion that never happened; tho' Inſtances of this Kind, are not unuſual in Hiſtory.

The Duke of Bourbon did not command in the Town, but marched at the Head of the Imperial Army, to relieve it. The Battle was not fought, by Night, Night, but by Day. The Garriſon did not ſally out, till the two Armies were engaged. We are not to be ſurprized after this, if Cavendiſh tells us, That when the Imperialiſts came to rifle the Tent of Francis the Firſt, King of France, who was taken Priſoner in the Battle, the Duke of Bourbon found a League in the Cabinet of that King, under the Great Seal of England, newly made between him and the King of England, "Whereby he perceived the Im-"pediment of his Money, which ſhould have come to him from the King, "having, upon due Search of this Matter, farther Intelligence, that this was "deviſed by the Cardinal of England."

We may juſtly admire, that among ſo many Calumnies, grounded upon precarious Conjectures, or uncertain Reports, whereby the Enemies of the Cardinal have endeavoured to defame him, they have ſeldom or never produced an Inſtance of ſo black a Treachery, atteſted by a Gentleman, who was in his Favour, and one of his Retinue.

That Cavendiſh was impoſed upon, in this Particular, appears from Extracts out of ſeveral Letters referred to in the Appendix, particularly from a Letter of Inſtructions to our Ambaſſadors, reſiding at the Imperial Court, after Francis was taken Priſoner: Which Letter I have therefore ordered to be printed at large, not only to vindicate the KING and Cardinal from a heavy and unjuſt Imputation, but becauſe it gives a great Light into the State of Affairs, both Foreign and Domeſtick, at that Time.

I beg Leave to obſerve, That the noble Hiſtorian, beforementioned, has alſo, in certain Reſpects, miſrepreſented the Cardinal; and, particularly as prevaricating in the Affair of the Divorce. An Imputation that appears, not only contrary to the Tenour of his Conduct in that Affair; but may be effectually confuted, ſo far as the moſt ſolemn Aſſeverations can be of any Force to perſuade, from two Letters, of the Cardinal, to the King's Agents at Rome; and from one to the Pope.

In theſe Letters, all the Topicks of Invention and Eloquence are, in a Manner, exhauſted, which may be proper to ſhew, That a Man's Heart is full of what he ſays, and that he deſires to make an Impreſſion upon others. It is impoſſible to know the Sincerity of any Man's Intentions, from the moſt expreſs Aſſurances he can give, or the moſt moving Arguments he can employ, if the Cardinal did not act ſincerely with the King, on this Occaſion.

Morrery has diſcovered the ſame Prejudice; "Wolſey, ſays he, wrote to the "Pope to refuſe the Diſpenſation, the King ſought for, which his Majeſty ha-"ving Advice of by his Agents at Rome, confiſcated all the Cardinal's Riches, "and outed him of all Places, except the Archbiſhoprick of York, and the "Biſhoprick of Winchester."—Biſhop Burnet, who was not very much diſpoſed to favour the Cardinal, being ſenſible this was an unjuſt Accuſation, vindicates him, after a very generous and excellent Manner, from the Scandal of it. Hiſt. Ref. Vol. 1. p. 53.

I have endeavoured to ſhew how ill founded ſeveral of thoſe Calumnies were, by which the Cardinal has been thought to be moſt nearly affected. But whether he was charged upon true or falſe Suggeſtions, we are not to be ſurprized, that they expoſed him to publick Cenſure, and at laſt to Diſgrace with his Sovereign; who in the Heat of his Reſentments, had not all the Regard either to perſonal Qualifications, or the Merit of publick Services, which became ſo great a Monarch, and near whoſe Perſon the Cardinal had ſome very warm and powerful Enemies.

The Court, where the Maxims of true Greatneſs, and the moſt ſublime Notions of Virtue and Honour are ſuppoſed to obtain, is not always free from that mean and ignoble Paſſion of Envy; and Vanity, the common Character of Mankind, is apt to repreſent every Thing invidious; even thoſe ſuperior Endowments which ſhould ſerve to correct the Errors, into which it is apt to betray, tend only, on certain Occaſions, and in a higher Scene of Life, to feed and inflame it. We may reſolve the Origin of thoſe Schemes, which were formed at Court againſt the Cardinal, into this one Principle, that has ſo often proved fatal to the greateſt Favourites; and conclude, without examining too minutely all the hiſtorical Cauſes of his Fall, That it was Envy which put his Enemies ſo vigorouſly in Motion to effect it. Yet all their other Deſigns to this End, would, probably, have been impracticable and abortive, if a new Scene had not opened at Court, which gave them a Proſpect of effecting it, by a Method they had not thought of before.

The King's Love to Ann Boleyn, was no great Secret any where, before the Proceſs, in order to his Divorce from Katherine of Arragon, could be perfected. His Majeſty was ſo far poſſeſs'd, that he did not uſe the neceſſary Precautions to diſſemble his Paſſion: This new Star was obſerved to ſhine ſo bright, and to have ſo powerful an Aſcendant, that it was eaſy to calculate the chief Movements at Court, from the Aſpect and Influence of it.

I ſhall not preſume to determine by what Means, or by Occaſion of what Incidents, this Lady captivated the Heart of ſo great a Monarch: Or, Whether the Impreſſions, he had received, were owing to her Beauty, to her Wit, to her Addreſs, or, in general, to the Charms of her Converſation: Or, Whether ſhe were not Miſtreſs of thoſe ſeveral Qualities in conjunction, which are proper to attract Love, and to give it all the Force, whereof it is capable.

Saunders, indeed, repreſents her, not only as having an irregular Shape, but as being remarkably deformed. It is not eaſy to conceive, what could induce this Writer, prejudiced as he was, to calumniate her Perſon, without having the common Faith of Hiſtory, or the natural Probability of the Thing to ſupport him. It is not reaſonable to believe that ſuch a Creature, as Saunders deſcribes Ann Boleyn, ſhould have been ſo much admired in the Court of France, ſucceſſively in an honourable Attendance on two * Queens; and aftewards on Margaret of Alanſon the French King's Siſter. Neither is it probable, that Henry, King of England, whoſe principal Deſign in ſollicing the Divorce, was to marry a Lady, by whom he might hope for Male-Iſſue to ſucceed to the Crown, ſhould have choſen to this End, a Conſort, who had neither Beauty, Shape, nor, if we may believe this Author, Vertue to recommend her.

It is far more credible, that Ann Boleyn attached this Prince by the Beauties of her Perſon, as well as of her Mind, and, eſpecially of her Manner, wherein ſhe excelled. And her Superiority in this Reſpect, when ſhe made her Appearance at the Engliſh Court, might be much owing to the Advantages of her Education, for ſo long a Time, in the Court of France. Mr. Cambden gives this Account concerning the Origin, and Effect of the King's Paſſion for her. "She being returned into England, and being admitted Maid of Honour to the "Queen, the King, in the Thirty-eighth Year of his Age, for her Modeſty, "mixed with a French Grace, and Pleaſantneſs, fell in Love with her; and "when he could not overcome her Chaſtity, he ſought to make her his Wife, "in hopes of Male-Iſſue by her." [Pref. to the Life of Queen Eliz.]

This is an honourable and ingenuous Account of her Conduct, by that excellent Hiſtorian. But Mr. Bayle, to gratify a luxuriant, ſatyrical Genius, has made a Reflection upon it, which appears injurious to her, and puts the Matter in a very different Light. "She behaved herſelf, ſays this free Writer, "with ſo much Art, that by refuſing to ſatisfy the King's Paſſion, ſhe made "him think of marrying her. That Prince, deceived by her Artifices, "thought he ſhould never enjoy her, unleſs ſhe was his Wife; which engaged "him to puſh forward the Affair of the Divorce, and to execute it at laſt, with "all the Noiſe, that every Body knows. That, which would be very praiſe-"worthy, on another Occaſion, is Ann Boleyn's chief Crime; her refuſing to "comply with an amorous King, unleſs he would divorce his Wife, is a much "more enormous Crime, than to have been his Concubine. A Concubine "would not have dethroned the Queen, nor taken her Husband from her: "Whereas the crafty Ann Boleyn, by pretending to be chaſte and ſcrupulous, "aimed only at the Uſurpation of the Throne, and deſigned to exclude Ka-"therine of Arragon, and her Daughter, from all the Honours due to "them."

We may reaſonably conclude, what has a more immediate Reference to my Subject, that it was judged by the Cardinal's Enemies, there was no other Way to ruin him, with the King, and afterwards to remove him from Court, but by Means of the Power, which Ann Boleyn was now known to have with his Ma-

jeſty: And the Event ſhewed they were not miſtaken. Lord Herbert has obſerved, That the Cardinal might have ſubſiſted longer, if other than Women had oppoſed him. His Lordſhip ſubjoins a Reaſon, concerning the Force and Propriety of which, the Reader may determine for himſelf: For, as they are vigilant and cloſe Enemies; ſo, for the moſt Part, they carry their Buſineſs, in that manner, that they leave fewer Advantages againſt themſelves, than Men do.

Yet we cannot certainly diſcover what was the particular Occaſion of that Diſtaſte, which this Lady had taken againſt the Cardinal. Some are of Opinion, ſhe retained a deep Impreſſion of the Injury done to her, and of the Pain, which perhaps ſhe ſuffered, by his oppoſing her firſt Inclination, and cauſing the Contract between her, and the young Lord Piercy, to be diſſolved: Tho' the Cardinal did nothing herein, but at the Inſtance, and by Order of the King, and what prepared the Way for her Elevation to that high Dignity, to which afterward She ſo much aſpired.

Others have thought, She favoured the Cardinal's Enemies, in Revenge to him, for diſſuading the King from making any farther Addreſſes to Her, when He was firſt let into the Secret of this Affair, by the King himſelf; with whom he was ſo earneſt in his Expoſtulations, that He repeated them on his Knees. It is poſſible, this Oppoſition of the Cardinal, might give ſome Umbrage to a young and reigning Beauty, at Court, who does not appear to have wanted Spirit, or the decent Ambition of her Sex.

Yet if we may draw Conſequences from two original Letters, in the Cotton Library, written by her, which Biſhop Burnet has publiſhed, but without citing his Authority, the Cardinal had not really incurred her Diſpleaſure, upon any of the foregoing Grounds. In the former of theſe Letters ſhe acknowledgeth her ſelf incapable of recompenſing his great Services, but only in loving him next to the King's Grace, above all Creatures living. In the Latter, ſhe declares to him, all the Days of my Life, I am bound, next to the King's Grace, to Love and Honour your Grace. There are Sentiments and Expreſſions in both Letters more ſuited to the Simplicity of thoſe Times, than to the nicer Addreſs and Manner of Writing in the Preſent.

There is one Letter, indeed, ſuppoſed to be written by her in the Tower, that has been publiſhed more than once, under her Name, as an Original, which, for the Beauty and Spirit, the Sentiments, and, conſidering the Age when it was penn'd, the Diction of it, will be admired in all Ages. But then it muſt be confeſſed, the Hand, the Manner, the Style, and Spelling of it, are ſo very different from three of her Letters in that Library, which are undoubtedly Originals, that ſome new Rules of Criticiſm muſt be diſcovered to aſcertain her Claim to it, after a Manner, that may not be diſputed.

It is probable, the true Reaſon why ſhe was irritated, to ſuch a Degree, againſt the Cardinal, might proceed from his being ſo dilatory, in the Matter of the Divorce, which ſhe deſires in thoſe Letters may be expedited, and in ſo free, and undiſguiſed a Manner, that I dare by no Means preſume to defend the Regularity of her Inſtances.

Whatever might be the true Cauſe of her Reſentments, it is ſufficiently evident, this Lady did make uſe of her Intereſt in the King, to facilitate the Operation of thoſe Meaſures, which had been projected, by the Cardinal's Enemies, againſt him. But the Effects of her Combining with them had never appeared ſo openly before, as they did at Grafton in Northamptonſhire; to which Place Ann Boleyn accompanied the King in his Progreſs, after he had given Orders, the Queen ſhould be removed from Court, to ſome other Place. Here it was, the Cardinal and his Collegue Campejus went to attend the King, but found upon their Arrival, a very cold Reception. Some Marks of Diſtinction, indeed, were ſhewed to Campejus, as a Stranger, and a Perſon of publick Character. But the Cardinal of England, after he had waited on this Legate to his Apartment, thinking to go directly to his own, was told, that no Appointment had been made for him in the Court; at which he was much ſurprized, having never been treated, near to the King's Perſon, with any ſuch Neglect before.

Yet Sir John Norris, after a very obliging Manner, made an Offer to him of his own Lodgings, till ſome Proviſion could be made for him, and where he might ſhift his riding Habit. However when he came afterwards into the Preſence, the King received him graciouſly. Cavendiſh, who was then Gentleman-

Uſher

Uſher to the Cardinal, and in Waiting, obſerves, That his Face, when he kneeled to the King, was amiable; That the King took him up in his Hand, led him to the Window, and there talked with him a good While; to the great Diſappointment of many Lords, who believed, and had laid Wagers upon it, that the King would not ſpeak to him.

Yet neither of the Legates, after all, dined with the King. His Majeſty dined with Ann Boleyn, tho' the Cauſe relating to the Divorce was then depending, in her own Chamber. Theſe were thought innocent Freedoms at that Time, which it would be difficult to reconcile with the ſtrict Maxims of Behaviour, which obtain among young Ladies of the firſt Diſtinction, at preſent.

Cavendiſh expreſſes the Manner of that Lady, when ſhe was at Dinner with his Majeſty, in Terms ſignificant enough. Mrs Ann Boleyn, ſays he, was offended, as much as ſhe durſt, that the King did ſo graciouſly entertain my Lord Cardinal. He afterwards deſcends to acquaint us with the Charge, in particular, which ſhe took that Opportunity of exhibiting againſt the Cardinal. What he ſays, is on the Credit of thoſe, who waited at Dinner, and reported, what had paſſed in Converſation there between the King and Ann Boleyn, to himſelf.

The King notwithſtanding, after Dinner, had a long and ſerious Diſcourſe with the Cardinal, and then took him by the Hand, and led him into the Privy-Chamber, where he was for a conſiderable Time along with him. Upon which his Enemies, about the Court, were much intimidated, but ſtill repoſed ſome Hopes in the Sollicitations of Ann Boleyn; and ſhe did not deceive them; tho' it was not without great Conflict within himſelf, that the King appeared, at laſt, to ſacrifice an old and faithful Servant, to her Inſtances. But Love prevailed over other Conſiderations, and this Lady had Power enough, by one artful Inſinuation or other, to divert the King next Morning from having any Converſation with the Cardinal, though his Majeſty had then commanded his Attendance, and ſaid he would talk farther with him. For when the Cardinal came in Obedience to that Command, the King was juſt ready to take Horſe, and, without any farther Notice of the Cardinal, coldly ordered him to conſult with the Lords, in his Abſence. Ann Boleyn rode to take the Air with the King, and to prevent his Return before the Cardinal's Departure, had taken Care to provide an Entertainment for his Majeſty in Harewell Park.

This ſeemed a deciſive Conqueſt over the Cardinal; and ſo it proved, in the Event. He was too wiſe, after this, to expoſe himſelf to the Raillery of the Court, by waiting for the King's Return, which Ann Boleyn had taken ſo effectual a Precaution to retard. He too plainly ſaw himſelf neglected, and judged very right, there was no contending for him, againſt the Power of this Lady, in a Place, where ſhe had already, and, in ſo triumphant a Manner, eſtabliſhed her Empire. And therefore immediately, after Dinner, he departed with his Collegue Campejus, preſaging the great Calamities, which were ſhortly to follow.

There are other Calumnies, beſides thoſe I have endeavoured to obviate, under which the Cardinal's Name has been moſt injuriouſly tranſmitted to Poſterity; and they have been occaſionally conſidered, as the Order, and Circumſtances of Life required: Yet, leſt it ſhould be inferred, that this Work, was deſigned rather as a Panegyrical Eſſay, than a faithful and juſt Hiſtory; I here take the Occaſion to declare, that I have been far from propoſing to exhibit in it, a perfect Character. It ſeems agreeable to the ſettled Diſpoſitions of Providence, that there ſhould be certain Ingredients in the Tempers of very great Men, proper to humble them; by leſſening the Homage, and Veneration, that Mankind would otherwiſe be apt to pay to them; and which might give them a greater Power and Influence in Society, than the ſupreme and all-wiſe Governor of the World has thought fit to deſign for them. What would not that Man be capable of effecting, who ſhould, in a Manner, have the Hearts and Affections of all Men at command?

We are not, in profane Hiſtory, and, but in one Inſtance, upon ſacred Record, to ſeek for a Character, without Allay or Defect. We do not find it; in the Hiſtory of two Kings, Father and Son, ſucceſſively, one of them reputed the Beſt and moſt Pious, the other, the Wiſeſt of Men. Much leſs is it to be found found, in the Hiſtory of the two celebrated Heroes, Alexander and Cæſar; who were both of them endowed with many ſublime, and extraordinary Talents: Nature ſeems, particularly, to have diſtinguiſhed the Latter of them, by a Profuſion of the great and generous Qualities, with the leaſt Mixture of the Mean and Ignoble: Yet he diſcovered too violent a Paſſion for Glory and Empire, and tho' his Love for the Fair Sex carried him to ſome Exceſſes, he never ſacrificed to it the Opportunities of puſhing his Fortune.

I have had Occaſion, in this Hiſtory, to obſerve ſeveral Things relating to the Character and Conduct of Cardinal Wolſey, which I dare by no Means undertake to juſtify, or defend.

I might have cited more Inſtances, than one, of his being inclined to Superſtition; I do not mean Superſtition, in reſpect to the Rites of religious Worſhip, but to groundleſs Conjectures, and Preſages, concerning future Events, from certain Appearances, that, in common Opinion, have been thought ominous. This Weakneſs, tho' incident to many great Men, ariſes from an impatient Deſire of diſcovering, what Conſequences are to follow, from mere Accidents, that have no viſible Connection with them, nor the leaſt conceivable Power to produce them.

Secondly, Tho' he was a generous Friend and Patron; an Enemy to all Prevarication, with his Dependants, and to the little Arts of miſleading thoſe, who had any Expectations from him, into Meaſures fatal to themſelves, and injurious to others, by doubtful and inſidious Promiſes; yet, it cannot be diſſembled, that in his Reſentments, he ſometimes diſcovered a Temper, which is not to be too ſtrictly examined by the Evangelical Rules of Charity and Forgiveneſs. His Paſſions were naturally ſtrong, and lively, and having himſelf an open Heart, and a great Mind, his Indignation might probably riſe the higher, and betray him into ſome irregular Heats, under the Apprehenſion of any baſe or ungenerous Uſage.

Thirdly, Nothing can be ſaid in Defence of his being ſo great and notorious a Pluraliſt. One Man, whatever his Merit or Abilities may be, will generally find it ſufficient for him to fill, as he ought to do, one Epiſcopal Chair. The Cardinal held ſeveral Biſhopricks at the ſame Time, in Propriety, and ſome in Farm. Not only to the Neglect of Order and Diſcipline, which cannnot be ſo well maintained without the Peſence and perſonal Interpoſition of the Biſhop, but to the Scandal and Offence of many Chriſtians; and, I add, to the Prejudice and Detriment of thoſe Perſons, whoever they might be, that were excluded from the Seats, whereof he was poſſeſs'd, whether by Favour of the Crown, or any other Diſpenſation whatever. For tho', poſſibly, there may be ſometimes Reaſon for annexing two, or more Cures, even in the firſt Poſts of Authority and Truſt, in the Church, where the Revenues are not ſeparately ſufficient to ſupport that Eſteem, without which no Authority can be long regarded, nor any Truſt duly executed: Yet, as this was not the Cardinal's Caſe, He ought not to have made Uſe of any Privilege, where, in the principal Reaſon and original Foundation of it, it could not be preſumed to extend.

Neither is it a ſufficient Vindication of the Cardinal, in reſpect to this Charge, tho' an alleviating Circumſtance of it, that he applied the Revenues ariſing from the Eccleſiaſtical Patrimony to the Service of the Church; ſeeing the beſt Ends and Deſigns, conſidered ſimply as ſuch, can never authorize any irregular, or unjuſt Means in order to effect them.

Fourthly, In the Entertainments which He made for the King, conſidering his own Order and Character, there appeared to be, on certain Occaſions, a Levity of Behaviour, not eaſily reconcileable, with his Epiſcopal, his Archiepiſcopal, and his Legatine Dignity. The * higheſt Dignity, next to the Papal, in that

* Theſe are the Terms, wherein Dr. Bullock complements the Cardinal, before a very great, and ſplendid Audience in Cambridge. " Summus Pontifex, ob ingentia in Eccleſiam Catholicam Merita, that Church, which then assumed, and still continues to assume, the Name of Catholick. To see a Father of the Church, and in the first Station of it, regulating the Ceremonial of a Ball, or an Enterlude, could not fail of exciting, in many Persons, an Idea of Indecency very unbecoming both his Person and his Place.

Something more may, perhaps, be offered in Defence of the Cardinal's Advice to the King, upon his first Accession to the Throne, that neglecting State-Affairs, and trusting them to his Administration, He should follow his Studies, and his Pleasures; provided they were such, as he might innocently follow, and without any Diminution of his Royal Character. The Cardinal had early observed, his Majesty was of a resolute Temper, very tenacious of the first Impressions, he had received, and impatient of all Opposition. And if we may judge from the great Success and Glory of his Reign, while the Affairs of it were directed by the Cardinal, and from the many and great Disorders which happened after the Cardinal's Disgrace, when the King took the Reins of Government into his own Hand, the Grounds of this Advice to him, at an Age, when the Passions are more strong, and precipitate, may still appear to have had some specious, and reasonable Foundation.

Fifthly, Tho' it is acknowledged the Cardinal had certainly a great Mind, yet he seems to have discovered, in his Disgrace, a Despondency and Lowness of Spirit, not perfectly reconcileable, with that Character. His falling, in the open Road, upon his Knees, in the Dirt, before a Gentleman, who brought him a comfortable Message, from the King, was a Submission (whatever Allowances are to be made to human Frailty, in Circumstances of very great Distress) that does not tend to give us any Idea of his Magnanimity.

Yet his free and just Reproof of the Duke of Suffolk, at a Time when this Duke was in the highest Favour with the King, and, that in open Court, shews, he did not, on a proper Occasion, always want Courage. His Expostulations with that Lord, and the Duke of Norfolk, when they went to demand the Seals of him, and particularly the excellent Representation he made to Judge Shelly, against alienating the Rights and Revenues of the Church; the generous and just Reply, which he made to a weak Argument urged by that Judge, to induce him to a Compliance; plainly discover, that he was not of so mean a Spirit, as some Persons have endeavoured to represent him. It is true, he was over-ruled at last to make a Cession of Whitehall, the Seat, in Town, belonging to the Archbishops of York; and tho' no Cession, under any Circumstances whatever, can be justified to an arbitrary, unjust, and sacrilegious Demand, yet certain Circumstances may admit, and that is all which can be pretended here in the Cardinal's Defence, of more favourable, and mitigating Constructions. The Submission, which Cranmer made, sometime before his Death, lost much of that Reproach, which would otherwise have attended it, on account of his subsequent Behaviour and Repentance: Why may it not consist with that Candour and Charity whereby we ought to judge, concerning human Actions, to believe, that the Cardinal was truly penitent for a Fact, which he certainly committed with the greatest Reluctance.

" Merita, hisce Insignibus donavit; & quia videbat illum omnibus hujus Dignitatis Cardinalitiæ numeris absolutissimum, adjecit & alteram Dignitatem, secundum pontificiam, supremum; creavit " Legatum, &, id quidem, a Latere." I have added the Speech, at length, in the Appendix, as being very scarce, and transcribed from one of the first Pieces printed at Cambridge, in the Year 1521, in a fair and large Character. The Author of this Speech was thought worthy of a particular Share in the Confidence and Friendship of Erasmus, with whom he contracted an Intimacy, in Queen's College of that learned University, of which Dr. Bullock was admitted Fellow, in the Year 1507, when Fisher, Bishop of Rochester, *was Master of it. Mr. Doctor Collet Deane of Polles made a brief Collation or propoſition in which eſpecially He touched thre things That is to witt the name of a Cardinal and whearof it is ſaid Alſoe the highe honour and dignitie of the ſame, And as keeping the Articles due and belonging to it and by what meanes he obtained to this high honour chieflie as by his own merits theare naminge divers and ſundrie vertues that he hath uſed which have been the Cauſe of his high and joyous promotion to all the Realme. The ſecond Cauſe of his promotion was through our Sovereigne Lord the King, for the great Zeale and favour that our holy father the Pope hath to his Grace. The ſecond thing is touching the digditie of a Prince as having power Judicial, The third of a Biſhop ſignifying both the old and newe lawe and havevinge the power of them, And alſo the highe and great Power of a Cardinal and howe he betokenth the free beames of wiſdome and Charitie, which the Apoſtles received of the holie ghoſte on Whitſundaie, and a Cardinal repreſenteth the order of Seraphin which continually brenneth in the love of the glorious Trinity, And for thies conſiderations a Cardinal is melie apparrelled with redd which Collour onelie betokenth noblenes, And howe theſe three Eſtates before named be collocated and placed in heaven, Alſoe he exhorteth theare my Lord Cardinal ſaying to him in this wiſe. Non Magnitudo ſuperbum extollat Nobilitatiſſimum honoriſq; dignitate, But remember that our Saviour in his owne perſon ſaid to his diſciples, Non veni miniſtrari ſed miniſtrare, & qui minor inter vos hic Maior regno Celorum, Et qui ſe exaltat humiliabitur & qui ſe humiliat exaltabitur, my Lord Cardinal be glad and enforce your ſelfe always to doe and execute righteouſneſs to riche and poore, and mercy with truth and deſired all people to praie for him that he might the rather obſerve theſe poynts and in accompliſhinge the ſame what his reward ſhall be in the Kingdom of Heaven and ſo ended, the Bull was read by Doctor Vecy Deane of the King's Chappell, and Exceſtre and at Agnus Dei came forth of his Travers my Lord Cardinal and kneeled before the middle of the high Altar wheare for a certayne tyme he laye gravelling his hood over his head during benedictions and prayers concerning the highe Creation of a Cardinal, ſaid over him by the right reverend Father in God the Arch-Biſhop of Canterburie which alſoe ſett the hatt upon his head Then Te Deum was ſung, All ſervice and Ceremonies finiſhed my Lorde came to the Doore before named led by the Dukes of Norffolk and Suffolk where his grace with all the noble Men attended uppon their horſes, and in good Order proceeded to his place by Charing-Croſſe next before him the Croſſe proceeding it the Mace ſuch as belongeth a Cardinal to have, and then my Lord of Canterbury havinge no croſſe borne before him with the biſhop of Winchester, before them the Duke of Norffolk and Suffolk together and in like Order the reſidue of the noblemen as the Biſhop of Durham with the Popes Orator then the Marqueſs Dorſett with the Earle of Surrey The Earle of Shrewsburie, the Earle of Eſſex the Earle of Wiltſhire The Earle of Derby the Lord of St. Johns, the Lord Fitzwater the Lord of Burgaveny, the Lord Dawbeny the Lord Willoughby, the Lord Haſtings, The Lord Ferrers, the Lord Lattimer the Lord Cobham, and the Lord Darcey, Sir Henry Marney Sir John Peche, Sir Thomas A Parr, Sir Nicholas Vaux and ſo all other Banneretts, Knyghts and Gentlemen before after their degrees, and following his grace the Arch-Biſhop of Armachan and Develyn, The Biſhops of Lincolne and Norwiche Exceſter Ely and Rocheſter and thee after them, my Lords Cardinalls place being well ſorted in every behalfe and uſed with goodlie Order, the Hall and Chambers garniſhed very ſumptuouſlie with riche Arras, A great feaſt kept as to ſuche a highe and honourable Creation belongeth, At the which were the King and Queene and the French Queene with all the Noblemen above ſpecified alſoe preſent at the Creation the Lord Fineaux the Lord Read, the Barons of the Exchequer with other Judges and Serjeants at Lawe.

O Glorious Trinitie encreaſe in One Cardinal the Flouers green and ſoffe, ſoffe of vertuous Lief and ſober Direction ſo that his Soul may have in Subjection his mortal Body, for his ghoſtly Helth, and after this Lief grant him your endleſs welth.

Fol. 105. WYthe moſt humble & lowly commendation unto your grace. In conſideration off the greate rumor that is nowe continually here, for the miſerable dethe off my late Lorde Cardinal, i thoght itt verraye neceſſari to certifie your your highneſſe in whatt cace the matier ſtondithe. Aftir that the priſt that poyſonidde my late lorde hadde kyllydde hymſelfe for hys deteſtable deade, itt was neceſſari that alle the hole matier ſchulde be committidde to the lawe & juſtice, for the puniſchement off ſuche as were accuſidde as autors off the ſayde poyſonynge, viz. the buſhoppe off wurceſtre & oon of hys chambrelayns. And ſo evyr ſynſe the ſayde priſtis dethe, proceſſe haithe bene made accordynge to the lawe agaynſt them boithe; and itt is concludidde bi alle doctors and lernidde men, that the furſt confeſſion made bi the ſayde priſt, muſt be bilevidde & none odre. Wherfore it is alſo determinidde by the juggis in this cauſe, that the ſayde buſhoppe ſchulde not oonly be put in priſon, but alſo ſuffre tormentis & be compellidde to ſchewe the troithe. And he hadde bene put in priſon affore thys tyme, yffe i wolde have conſentidde therunto: but in no cace i wolde condeſcende therto, havynge reſpecte unto hyme, as your gracis orator; & wyllyng to have knowliege off your ſayde gracis mynde & pleaſor, affore that i do agree to any ſuche thynge; thoghe that the lawe doithe exclude alle maner off dignities in thys cace. Notwythſtondinge thys my demeanor, the ſayde buſhoppe doithe imagyne boithe in wurde & deade, the wurſt he can agaynſt me; preſuppoſynge ſuerly to have your gracis favors in thys cauſe & bi that to avoyde alle thynge nowe imputidde unto hym. Wherfore i muſt moſt humbly deſyre & praye your highneſſe to ſchewe your favors equally in thys cauſe accordynge to juſtice. And thus doynge your grace ſchalle moſt reaſonably reſolve us boithe. For yffe the buſhoppe can bi juſtice purge hymſelfe from thys crime, he ſchall ſave hys honor, & my poore honeſtie ſhalbe ſeen in lyke maner evidently to alle men; & it ſchall appere that i intende nothinge but to ſchewe my ſelfe oon true and faytheful ſervante to my maiſter dedde, as i was unto hym beynge in liffe. For yffe i aftre the ſayde priſtis evident confeſſion hadde not uſidde alle diligence to cerche owte alle ſuche as were privey to the poyſonynge off my ſayde late Lorde every man myght reaſonably have thoght that i hadde condeſcende unto the ſame, & bene conſentiens wythe the ſayde buſhoppe therunto, wherby i ſchulde have bene put to greate rebuke wythe oute faulte. oon thynge doith aggreve me ryght ſore, that the ſayde buſhoppe doithe yett infame my late Lorde beynge dedde, in falſe & untrue thyngis, wherin is nodre honeſtie nodre goodde chriſtianitie; as it is manifeſte by the holy preceptis off our faythe. And nothynge but reaſon, honeſtie perfecte love & fidelitie to your grace my prince & my natural cuntre, doithe move me to be ſory for thys unnatural deade. For thoghe my late Lorde hadde (I cannot denye) ſum vices, yett (i do take Godde to my jugge) he was the moſt faytheful man to your grace hys prince, that evyr was borne; & moſt vehemente in the defenſion of your gracis cauſis, when none odre man durſt opyn his mouthe to ſpeke ſave he alone: thoghe (i do welle knowe) boithe your grace & odre my Lordis off your moſt honorable counſeyle, haithe hadde contrari relation off hym frome henſe bi ſuche that nodre intendidde goodde to your highneſſe nor them; but uſidde crafty maners for there owne exaltation & prlvate profyte. And thoos that were ayders & ſupporters here off ſuche iniquitie doith nowe ryght welle knowe that my ſayde Lorde was oon faytheful man, & be verraye ſorry that they didde not uſe in there moſt arduuſe motiers, boithe hys faythe & counſayle. Itt ſchall pleaſe your grace to undreſtonde that the ſayde buſhoppe off wurceſtres labors & myne be verraye different in the controverſie dependynge betwixte hym & me: for he doithe ſeke nothynge but favors, & procurithe the ſame bi effuſion off mony & large promiſis: I do deſyre nothynge but equitie & juſtice, wherby itt doithe appere that i do nothynge agaynſt hym, but that as boithe honeſtie & the lawe doithe require, & hys deadis agaynſt me to procede oonly off malice, whyche to uſe agaynſt me, he haithe no cauſe. For i have evyr lovidde hym, untyl nowe off late. when he was opynly accuſidde off my late Lorde & maiſters dethe. And alſo itt was opynly noyſidde & ſeen bi certayne ſignes, that he nodre was true nor lovynge to your grace & realme; but rather procuridde your ennemys honor & profecte. And ſuche men can not be lovydde off ony conſcience. For the holy lawe doithe nott oonly excommunicate, interdicte, curſe & banne men off ſuche demenor; but alſo commaunde the ruine & deſtruction of alle there progenie; as knowithe Alle myghty Godde, whoo preſerve your gracis moſt royalle & noble aſtate in longe helthe & continual proſperitie.

ſperitie. Frome Rome the 25. off Septembre. By your gracis moſt humble & faytheful Servaunte & Subjecte Tranſcripts from Mr. Maſter.

LEtter of Antonio Cavallery to the Cardinal, That for guilding the Part of his Tomb, which is already done (being the half) He hath layed out 380 l. 13 s. Sterling. He ſeems to doubt, whether the Cardinal meant to have the reſt of his Tomb perfected, which if he do not mean, he would have him to order the Guilder Leave to go Home to Antwerp, and alſo to Benedict a Carver to return into Italy.

255. The Cardinal ſendeth Ralph Sadler to Cromwell with Inſtructions how the ſaid Cromwell ſhall deal for him being now in Diſgrace; Among other things to procure the ſending hither (i. e. to York) of mine Image, with ſuch part of the Tomb, as it ſhall pleaſe the King that I ſhall have; to the Intent that now being at my Church of York, I may order and diſpoſe the ſame for my Burial, which is like, by Reaſon of my Heavineſs, to be ſhortly.

Item, To intreat Mr. Cromwell to be a good Friend to his Colleges, & nunquam permittere Opus Manuum ſuarum perire, nor to ſuffer the Lands by the Pope's and Kings Aſſent applyed thereunto to be converted to profane Uſes.

He ſends to Cromwell two Geldings, and intreats him to perſuade himſelf, that ſive vivam, ſive moriar, I ſhall requite his Friendſhip and good Will, as He and all his ſhall know, quod non repoſuit operam apud Hominem Ingratum.

It ſeems when the Cardinal ſubmitted and made a Free Gift of all he had to the King (which he did at the perſuaſion of divers Noblemen) it was promiſed him, that the King would take Order for the payment of his Debts, and Maintenance of his Eſtate; Now he writes he is in great want and deſires Relief.

Q. Anne. Cromwell to the Cardinal. That he hath diſcovered lately ſome, who favour Luther's Sect, and read his Books and Tindalls, the Books he hath taken are the Revelation of Antichriſt and Supplication of Beggars; Peſtiferous Books, and, albeit, they are ſcattered among the common People to deſtroy deſtroy the whole Obedience and Policy of this Realm; He exhorteth the Cardinal to ſtop this Doctrine.

p. 261. Cardinal Wolſey in his Diſgrace employed Cromwell in Solliciting his Affairs at Court, to get his Pardon, &c. And thanks him for his Care therein in many Letters in his own Hand. When he was commanded to York he deſired the King's Letter of Recommendation to the Nobility in the North, which he would have favourably indyted, and Mr. Secretary to be moved therein, of whom he expects ſome Help for his old Deſerts.—— Theſe Letters, were ſo favourably penned, that the Cardinal in a Letter of the King to the Lord Dacres, is called our right truſty and right wellbeloved the Lord Cardinal.

When He was at Aſhur he writes thus to Cromwell, My Fever is ſomewhat aſwaged, and the black Humour alſo, Howbeit, I am entering into the Kalends of a more dangerous Sickneſs, which is the Dropſy, ſo that if I am not removed into a dryer Air, and that ſhortly, there is little Hope, &c.

He intreats Cromwell to ſollicit the King to be gracious to him and to practiſe, that the Lady Ann may mediate for Him.

From Aſhur the Beginning of 1530.

He writes to Cromwell. He hopes, that for his Maintenance and to do good to his Servants, and beſtow Alms, which York will not do, the King (if he take from him Wincheſter) will allow him a Penſion out of it. "For, God be "my judge, I never thought, and ſo I was aſſured at the making my Submiſ"ſion, to depart from any of my Promotions. For the Rigour of the Law, "for any Offence that can be arrected to me, deſerveth no ſuch puniſh"ment, And ſo truſting in the King's Goodneſs, I am come to this Point. "I hope his Grace will conſider the ſame accordingly. I have had fair "Words, but little comfortable Deeds. Thoſe Noblemen did otherwiſe pro"miſe on their Honours to me. Upon Truſt whereof I made the Frank "Gift of my whole Eſtate.

p. 262. In another Letter. "As touching the Articles layed unto me, "whereof a great part be untrue, and thoſe which be true are of ſuch Sort, "that by the doing of them no Malice or Untruth can be juſtly arrected unto "me. Neither to the Princes Perſon, nor to the Realm. This may be urged "to the King.

As touching the Coyn at York, with the Letters and Badges in the ſame. You may commune with Pawlet, &c. Officers of the Mint, How the uſage hath been of the Mint.

He hopes, that the King to whom he hath given all his Goods, and Revenues will pay his Debts, which may be done by his Arrears of Penſion out of France, for the Year by paſt.

Cromwell to the Cardinal July 12.

As touching the Proceſs againſt your Grace out of the Exchequer, and all other Matters and Suits brought againſt you, I have pleaded your Pardon, which is allowed in all the King's Courts, and by the ſame your Grace is diſcharged of all manner of Cauſes at the King's Suit.

Cromwell tells the Cardinal this Solliciting his Cauſe hath been very chargeable to him, and he cannot ſuſtain it any longer without other reſpect than he hath had heretofore.—— I am a 1000 l. worſe than I was when your Troubles began.—— As touching your Colleges the King is determined to diſſolve them. And that new Offices ſhould be found of all the Lands belonging to them newly to entitle his Highneſs, which be already drawn for this purpoſe. But whether his Highneſs after the Diſſolution of them mean to revive them again, and found them in his own Name, I know not. Wherefore I entreat your Grace to be Content, and let your Prince execute his Pleaſure.

Rafe Sadler to the Cardinal July 12.

That his Maſter (i. e. Cromwell) hath accepted his Token, which yet was not ſo great a Reward as he expected (the Cardinal alledged his Neceſſity.)

May 17. Cromwell to the Cardinal.

p. 263. That the King hath received his Letters, and is very ſorry that he is in ſuch Neceſſity, yet that for Relief his Majeſty hath delayed it, till he ſpeaks with the Council. The Duke of Norfolk promiſeth you his beſt Aid, but he willeth you for the preſent to be Content; and not much to moleſt the King (concerning payment of your Debts.) For, as he ſuppoſeth, the Time is not meet for it. His Grace (the King) ſhewed me, how it is come to his Knowledge, that your Grace ſhould have certain Words of him, and other Noblemen to my Lord of Norfolk, ſince the Time of your Adverſity, which which Words ſhould ſound to make Sedition betwixt him and my Lord of Norfolk.

Mr. Page received your Letters directed unto my Lady Ann and delivered the ſame. There is yet no Anſwer; She gave kind Words, but will not promiſe to ſpeak to the King for you. Certain Doctors of both the Univerſities are here for the Suppreſſion of the Lutheran Opinions, the King's Highneſs hath cauſed the ſame Doctors at divers Times to aſſemble and hath commoned with them, the Fame is, that Luther is departed this Life, I would he had never been born.

Cromwell writes to Cardinal Wolſey entreating him to have Patience.—That there ſhall be ſome Offices ſent unto York and Nottingbamſhire to be found of his Lands, belonging to his Archbiſhoprick. This will be very diſpleaſant, but it is beſt to ſuffer it. For if they ſhould not be found, you could not hold your Biſhoprick quiet, notwithſtanding your Pardon. For your Reſtitution made by your Pardon is clearly void: For that the King did reſtitute your Grace, before he was entitled by Matter of Record. When theſe Offices ſhall be found, your Pardon ſhall be good and ſtand in perfect Effect.

He tells him that his modeſt Behaviour and Humility hath gained him the Love and good Report of the Country where he now lives, and alſo in the Court; but his Enemies deprave all. Sir, ſome there be that do alledge, that your Grace doth keep too great a Houſe, and Family, and that you are continually a building. For the Love of God therefore have a Reſpect and Refrain.

Cromwell writes to the Cardinal. I am informed your Grace hath me in ſome Diffidence; as if I did diſſemble with you, or procure any thing contrary to your Profit and Honour. I much muſe that your Grace ſhould ſo think or ſuſpect it ſecretly, conſidering the Pains I have taken, &c. Wherefore I beſeech you to ſpeak without Faining, if you have ſuch Conceit, that I may clear my ſelf, I reckoned that your Grace would have written plainly unto me of ſuch thing, rather than ſecretly to have miſreported me. But I ſhall bear your Grace no leſs good Will.—Let God judge between us.—Truly your Grace in ſome things overſhooteth your ſelf; there is Regard to be given, what things you utter, and to whom.

It appears from theſe Letters, that Cromwell kept certain Scholars in Cambridge. For he entreats the Cardinal to prefer them to Benefices, which ſhould fall in his Archbiſhoprick.

The Cardinal ſtrives to clear himſelf to Cromwell, proteſting that he ſuſpects him not, and that may appear by his Deeds, ſo that he uſeth no Man's Help nor Counſel but his Complaint indeed hath been made to him, that Cromwell hath not done him ſo good Offices, as he might, concerning his Colleges and Archbiſhoprick; but he hath not believed them; yet he hath asked of their common Friends how Cromwell hath behaved himſelf towards him; and to his great Comfort, hath found him faithful.—Wherefore he beſeecheth him with weeping Tears to continue ſtedfaſt, and give no Credit to the falſe Suggeſtions of ſuch as would ſow variance between them, and ſo leave him deſtitute of all Help.

None dare now ſpeak to the King on his part, for Fear of Madam Ann's Diſpleaſure.

He takes the ſuppreſſing and diſmembring his College very heavily.

He heartily and earneſtly ſollicits Cromwell and others to aid the Cardinal, that what the Pope and the King have done and confirmed may not be made Void, which thing would be againſt all Laws of God and Man.

He writes to the King. Humbly and on my Knees I recommend to your, &c. Charity and Goodneſs, the poor College of Oxford.

This Letter was to be preſented by the Dean and Canons thereof.
